THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

LONDON.

PUBLISHED BY WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, STRAND.

[JANUARY 10, 1846.

SUPPLEMENT, GRATIS.]

INDEX TO ENGRAVINGS.

ADELPHI THEATRE, Scene from the Pantomime at the, 416
Agricultural Implements, Exhibition of—(See "Smithfield Club Prize Cattle Show")
Agricultural (Royal) Society of England—(See "Shrewsbury")
Aix-la-Chapelle, Fountain of Elise, 148
Albert, H. R. H. Prince, Enamelled Pearl, Glass, and Papier Maché Chess Table Presented to, 381; St. Mary's Hospital, Paddington, Laying the Foundation Stone of, 5
Aldgate, Hutchison's Market, in the Rear of Aldgate Church, View of, 268
Algeria, The War in—Abd-el-Kader, from an Authentic French Portrait, 241; Bugeaud, Marshal, from a Picture by Vernet, 248; Kabyles, Encounter of, with French Troops, 248; The French in—"Iron Gates," The Passage of the, by the French Troops, 256
Alison, The Late Dr., Monument to, at Edinburgh, 380
Arab Mounted Courier, 296
Argentine Squadron, The, Capture of the, off Monte Video, by H.M.S. Melampus, Salcille, Eagle, and Comus, 285
Arundel Castle, The Keep and Norman Gateway; Arundel Castle and Tower, 189; The Quadrangle, 181
Astley's, Scene in the Circle, 176
Automaton Chess Player at New York, 369
Avenger, Launch of H.M.S. Steam Frigate, The, at Devonport, 112

BALLINASLOE, View of, 224
Ballinhassig, The Conflict at, 17; The Dispensary, 16
Banwell, Cottage of the late Bishop of Bath and Wells at, 157
Barolliet, M., Portrait of, 13
Beckford Collection—Sale of the Rare Venetian Glass, Rare Chinese Coffee-Pot, Persian Drinking-Cup, Etruscan Vases, Chinese Vessels, &c., 344; China Bird and Japan Sugar Basket, Marble Statue of St. Anthony at Padua by Rossi, Rare Old-Irish China Stork, 345; Vase with Chinese Poems, Etruscan Library, Exquisitely-carved Eastern Ivory Vase and Cover, 364; Alabaster Tazza, Crystal, Agate, and Jasper Vases; Chalcedony Tazza, &c.; Rare Three-Lobe-Lipped Etruscan Vase; Etruscan Vase, presumed to be unique—(See also "Lansdown Tower")
Bedford and Birmingham Railway, Railway Speed used by the Duchess of Bedford in raising the First Sod, 396
Beethoven Festival at Bonn—(See "Bonn")
Belstein, on the Moselle, View of by J. D. Harding, 12
Bilson, European at the British Museum, 297; Head of ditto, 297
"Black Dwarf, The," The Cottage, and the Grave of, 84
Blacker, Esq., William, Portrait of, &c., 41
Blackfriars, The Conflagration at Sir Charles Price's Wharf, 181
Bolton, Scene at, after the Late Steam-boiler Explosion, 412
Bonn—Beethoven Festival at, Birthplace of Beethoven, Statue and Bas-Reliefs, 101, 102; Inauguration of the Statue, 116; Beethoven Hall, Concert in, 117; Prince Albert's Residence at, 117
Borneo, Brunai, or Borneo Proper, View of, from a Sketch by a Correspondent, 373
Borneo Pirates, The British Admiral's Attack on the, View of, and Plan of the Attack, 340
Brainworm (Mr. Mark Lemon as), 348
Brandon Railway Station, 76
British Archæological Institute, Meeting of, at Winchester—(See "Winchester.")
British Museum, The present state of the, 260; New Room at the, 237; View of the Façade of the New, 357
Bruhl, Arrival of the Queen at, 117; Grand Military Concert at, 120
Buckland, D., The Very Rev. the Dean of Westminster, Portrait of, 336
Bugeaud, Marshal, Portrait of, from a Picture by Vernet, 248
Bushmen Children, Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly, 16
Byron, Lord, Statue of, by Thorwaldsen, 293

CAISTOR CHURCH, Norfolk, Font in, 37
Calcutta, St. Paul's Cathedral at, View of, 252
Cambridge Election—The Nomination, 40
Cambridge Railway Station, 73
Canrel Coal Vase, 4
Canterbury, the Late Viscount, Portrait of, 53
Capel Court—Railway Speculators, 189
Cartoons in Westminster Hall, Exhibition of, 45—(See "Fine Arts")
Certio, in the "New Pas de Quatre," with Taglioni, C. Grisi, and L. Grahn, at Her Majesty's Theatre, 33
Charlecombe Church, near Bath, 221
Charlton House, Fete Champetre at, The North American Indians encamped in the Park, 9
Chess, Automaton Player, at New York, 369
Chess, Engraved Problems for, 16, 20, 48, 64, 77, 93, 118, 160, 176, 192, 208, 224, 255, 267, 272, 289, 305, 352, 368, 387, 411
Chesterford Railway Station, 73
Chinese Youths, Portraits of A. Shing and A-Yow (exhibiting at the Chinese Collection), with their signatures, 209
Chiswick Church, View of, 405
Christmas—Bringing in Christmas (drawn by William Harvey), 392; A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year (Drawn by Kenny Meadows), 393
Christmas Tree, 405
Christmas Eve — Poulterer's Shop, Holborn Hill — Newgate Market, 408; Leadenhall Market; Norfolk Coach, 409
Christmas Home; an English Song and Chorus, by Eliza Cook; the Music by V. Wallace, composer of the Opera of "Maritana," 409
Christmas Pantomimes, 416
Cirencester, the Royal Agricultural College at, 89
Coblentz, her Majesty passing, 113
Coburg and Gotha: Coburg, Gotha, Schloss Kalenburg (from Prince Albert's Drawings), 104, 105
Coburg—(See "Queen's Visit to Germany")
Cologne — (See "Queen's Visit to Germany")
Collingwood, Lord, Colossal Statue of, at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, 380
Cork and Bandon Railway, The Earl of, turning the First Turf for the, 209
Cork Temperance Institution, Opening of the, 37
Court Martial, A, 61
Cranbourne street (London Improvements), 245
"Cricket on the Hearth," The, Scene from, Mr. Keeley as Caleb, Miss M. Keeley as Bertha, 413
Cymreigyddion Festival, Procession through Abergavenny, Chorus Singing, by the Rev. T. Price, 264; Harpers, Interior of the Cymreigyddion Hall, Abergavenny, Statue in the Hall, 265

DESIGN, The Government School of, Architectural Portion of the, in Oil, by Miss Filmore; Candelabra, Mr. Pierse's Design for a; Chandeliers, Mr. Pierse's Design for a; Mr. Strudwick's Design for a Gothic Chandelier; Vases, Emblematic Vase, Miss Arcell's Design for a, Mr. Wilde's Design for a, 80; Vase, Mrs. J. Bragg's Design for a Peruvian Vase, Modelling, by Mr. C. O'Reilly, 85
Design, School of, Spitalfields—Prize Design for Figured Garment, Prize Design for Figured Waistcoating, Prize Design for Damask Furniture, 24; Prize Design for Parasol Border, 25
Doncaster Races (1845)—Doncaster Cup, 193; "The Baron," the winner of the Great St. Leger, 193; "Sweetmeat," the winner of the Doncaster Plate, 193; "Mayor," the winner of the Yorkshire Handicap at Doncaster, 221
Drury-Lane Theatre, Scene from Pantomime at, 416
Dumbarre, Mdlle., Portrait of, in the "Marin Mariée," 216
Dunkerque, The Statue of Jean Bart at, 213

EAST COWES, The New Landing-Place at, built for her Majesty, 341
Eastern Counties Railway—Opening of the Line to Cambridge and Ely, 73, 76
Echo Schooner, Slaver in the St. Katherine's Docks, 348
Eclair, H. M. Steamer, and the Lesperviere off the Motherbank, 293
Edinburgh, Trinity Hospital, 16; The "Cupping" of Doctors of Medicine, 64; The Physicians' Hall at, 232; View of, with "The Martyrs' Obelisk," 232
Egremont Castle, Cumberland, View of, 256
Elliot, Mr., Portrait of, 41
Elsie, Railway Station, 73
Ely from the Railway Station, 65
Ely Cathedral, The South-West Transept of, restored, 69
Emerald, Gravesend steamer, and the John Bull, steamer, Collision of, in the River, 356
"Enchantress," The Scene from the Opera of, at Drury-Lane Theatre, 297
Esty, Esq., R.A., William, Portrait of, 89
Eureka, The, A Machine for Composing Hexameter Latin Verses, 37
Experimental Squadron, Her Majesty's, 36

"FAIRY OAK," The Scene from the New Opera of, at Drury-Lane Theatre, 369
Farren, Mr., as Sir Simon Sage, 349
Fashions, English and Parisian, 69, 142, 236, 333, 412
Fine Arts, The :—
Albson, Dr., Monument to, at Edinburgh, 380
Collingwood, Lord, Colossal Statue of, at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, 380
Belstein, on the Moselle, from a Painting by Harding, 12
Holbein, The New, at the National Gallery, 89
Pilgrims to the Holy Well, from a Picture by Topham, 97
Portland Vase—Drawing of the Sarcophagus in which it was discovered, 381
Raphael, at the age of 15, painted by himself—from the Louvre Gallery, 297
Rembrandt, painted by himself—from the Gallery of the Louvre, at Paris, 277
Sketches, The Exhibition of, at Westminster Hall:—Champion of England Against all Comers, by E. B. Corbould, 84; Chivalry, The Spirit of, by D. Maclise, R.A., 93; Justice, the Majesty of, by Mr. Tenniel, jun., 93; Religion, by Horsley, 24; Religion, The Spirit of, by E. Armitage, 77
Royal Academy Prizes Awarding Prize—"Finding the Body of Harold"—by Mr. C. Hook; Sculpture Prize—"The Horses Leading the Horses of the Sun," by Mr. A. Brown, 368
Fleet-street Sewer—Deepening the Sewer, 213
Follett, Knt., M.P., the late Sir William, Portrait of, 5
Framlingham Castle, View of, 229
French Protestant Episcopal Church, Bloomsbury, 405
Fry, Portrait of the late Mrs., 256

GEOLOGICAL Phenomenon at the Stone Quarry of Twintwaite, in Nottinghamshire, 336
German Hospital and Grounds, at Dalston, 252
Gillespie Monument at Comber, The Inauguration of the, 4
Glasgow City Theatre, Burning of the, 349
Godmer Nunnery, near Oxford, 348
Goldsmith's House, at Lissoy, 189
Goliah Aratoo, New Bird, The, 257
Goodwood Races, Scene on the Grandwood Cup, Steward's Cup, Entrance to the Park, 72
Grahn, L., in the "New Pas de Quatre," with Taglioni, C. Grisi, and Cerito, 33
Grantham, Mr., Portrait of, 40
Great Britain Steam-ship, The Arrival of, at New York, 157
Great Western Railway, Swindon Station, and View of New Swindon, 249
Grey, Earl, the late, Portraits of, 57, 60
Grey Column, Newcastle, The, 60
Grisi, C., in the "New Pas de Quatre," with Teglioni, L. Grahn, and Cerito, at her Majesty's Theatre, 33
Gutenberg, The Statue of, at Mayence, 132

HAMBURG, The New Church of St. Nicholas at, 92
Hames, Bencrait's Patrnt, for Horses, 84
Hamlet, Mr. Macready as, at the Princess' Theatre, 253
Handley, Esq., Henry, Portrait of, 40
Hardwicke, The Right Hon. the Earl of, Portrait of, 41
Harewood House, Festivities at, Triumphal Arch, Procession of Tenantry, &c., Rustic Sports in the Park, North View of Harewood House, 308; Races at Wheat Croft, Col. Thompson's "Hamlet" winning the Lascelles Cup; The Nobility's Ball in the Banqueting-room, 309
Hartshill Church, Warwickshire, 181
Haymarket Theatre, Scene from Pantomime at, 416
Hesketh Freehold, Testimonial to, 160
"Holbein," The New, at the National Gallery, 89
Holland, His Majesty the King of, Portrait of, 49
Holland, Rear of Hyde Park Review, Portrait of his Majesty at, 81
Holland, His Majesty the King of, Osborne House, the Isle of Wight, His Majesty's Arrival at, 69
Hong-Kong, View of the Victoria Barracks, from a Sketch by a Correspondent, 597
Horn Fair, Opening of, at Charlton, in 1746, 261
Howick Hall, 69
Hudson, M.P., Mr. George, "the Railway King," Portrait of, 157
Hyde Park, Grand Review in, on 30th of June; Skirmishing Party, 13

ICELAND, View of an Eruption of Mount Hecla, in, 237
Ilderton Railway Station, 73
Ilkley Church, near Oxford, View of, 261
"I'll be there," Song, Written by Fitzhall, Composed by Rodwell, with Music and Vignette, 56
Impersonations, The Russian, 74, with his Imperial Highness the Grand Duke Constantine on board, Saluting the Admiral, at Plymouth, 321
Ipswich New Hall of Commerce, 61, Ireland, Sketches in—Newport Mayo, 238; Kilkenny, View of, 261
Iren a Macria Mieczyslaska, Superior of the Convent of St. Basil, Portrait of, 256
Isle of Wight Royal Victoria Yacht Club Yacht Race, 93; Wood against Iron," First Regatta of the Club, 85

JACKSON, The late General, Portrait of, 25; Hermitage, the Residence and Burial-Place of, 28; Procession in honour of, at New York, 36
Johnson, John, Portrait of the Right Hon. (Lord Mayor), 320
Julien's Promenade Concerts at Covent Garden Theatre, 361

KEIGHLEY Agricultural Show — Prize Medal of the Keighley Agricultural Society, 232
Kelly, M. P., Mr Fitzroy (the Solicitor General), Portrait of, 268; "Key to the Kingdom, The," Scene from, at the Princess' Theatre, 413
Knowell, Mr. H. Mayhew as, 348

"LADY OF LYONS, The," Scene from, at the Haymarket Theatre, 269
Lahore, The Death of the Wuzeer of, Jowahir Singh, 24
Lansdown Tower—The Tower and Garden, Interior of the Lantern, The Sanctuary, Monument to Tezza, 324; The Vestibule, The Crimson Drawing-Room, 325; The Scarlet Drawing-Room, 345
"La Partie de Chasse de Henri Quatre," Scene from, at the St. James's Theatre, 317
"Le Diable à Quatre," Scene from the Ballet of, at the Princess' Theatre, 261
Leeds Castle, Kent, View of, 261
Leicester, New Baptist Chapel at, 268
"Leicester" Column, The, Monument to the late Earl of, at Holkham, with Bas-Relief representing Lord Leicester superintending Improvements in Marshy or Boggy Land, Do. Presenting a Free Lease to the Grandson of his Tenant Mr. Hudson, Do. Showing his Improved Breed of Sheep, &c., 312
Lemon, Mr. Mark, as Brainworm, 348
Lewes, Interesting Discoveries at, Excavation in which the Cists were found, The Mount and Priory Ruins, The Cist in, West Bourne Church, Southover Church, William de Warenne's Remains, Remains of Gundreda, Tomb of Gundreda, with Nave of Southover Church, 256
Lincoln's Inn, New Buildings, and The Queen's Visit to, Plan of, 275; Entrance Gateway, Lincoln's Inn Fields, The Kitchen, Statue of Queen Victoria on the Great South Gable, The Great Hall Lantern, 276; The Great Hall, South End, Western Oriel in the Great Hall, 277; The Octagon Vestibule, Drawing Room Chimney-piece, Her Majesty's State Chair, Great Hall, The Presentation of the Address to Her Majesty, 277;

INDEX.

ABD-EL KADER, Portrait of, from an Authentic French Print, 241; Reported Death of, by the Fall of his House, 326
Abingdon Election, 23
Abrahams, Mr., of Kew, Sudden Death of, 923
Accidents and Offences, 3, 23, 39, 59, 75, 87, 99, 119, 131, 155, 166, 183, 195, 227, 259, 274, 311, 325, 343, 355, 375, 385, 403
Adelphi Pantomime, Scene from the, 416
Adey, Colonel, Sudden death of, 256
Adolphus, Death of the Late Mr. J., 35; Memoir of, 64
Agricultural College at Cirencester, The Royal, 59
Agricultural Implements at the Smithfield Club Cattle Show—(See "Smithfield Club Prize Cattle Show")
Agricultural Society, Royal, of England, Meeting of the, at Shrewsbury, 403
Agriculturists, The, and the Corn-laws, 379
Aix la Chapelle, Fountain of Elise, at, 148
Albert, H.R.H. Prince, Laying the Foundation Stone of St. Mary's Hospital, at Paddington, 5; Enamelled Pearl, Glass, and Papier Mache Chess-table presented to, 381
Albert's, H.R.H. Prince, Farm at Windsor, Rating of, 371
Albert's, H.R.H. Prince, Gamekeeper, Attempt to Assassinate, 67
Aldermanbury, Fire in, and Great Loss of Property, 119
Aldgate, Hutchison Market at, 268
Algeria, The French in—Burning of Arabs, by the French Troops, 34; Passage of the Iron Gates, 356
Algeria, the War in—Bugeaud, Marshal, Portrait of, from a Picture by Horace Vernet, 248; Encounter of French Troops with Kabyles, 248
Algiers—El-el Kader, Portrait of, 241; Remarks on the Late Disaster to the French Troops in, 241; Affairs of the French in, 319, 355
Alison, Dr., Monument to the Late, at Edinburgh, 380
America, English Theatricals in, 235
Amphionic Society, 283
Andover Union Inquiry, 147, 177, 179, 182, 203
Andover Union Workhouse, The Late Case of the, 246
Andover Union Inquiry—Dismissal of Mr. Parker, the Assistant Poor-law Commissioner, 262; Case of Mr. Wentzake, and his Re-appointment, 326
Anglophobia in France, Remarks on, 193
Annexation, Our Remarks on the Texan Question, 225
Anti Corn law League Meeting at Manchester, 279
Antwerp, Her Majesty's Reception at—Holding the Standard on the Cathedral, 97; Panorama of the City of, and the Environs, Arrival of Her Majesty, 109; Illumination of, on her Majesty's Return, 161; Reuben's Chair at, 181
Arab Courage Mounted, 292
Aratoo, The Goliah—New Bird, 237
Argentine Squadron, Capture of the, off Monte Video, View of the, 285
Artificial Stone, Invented by Herr Steiermann, 235
Arundel Castle and Town; the Keep and Norman Gateway, 180; the Quadrangle, 181
Assize Intelligence, 107, 119
Astley's—Scene in the Circle, 176
Atcherley, Esq., The Late David Francis, 25
Athens, The New Panorama of, 39
Attorney General, Funeral of the Late, 28
Automaton Chess Player at New York, 389
Avenger, H.M. Steam-frigate, The Launch of, 111, 112
"Awakener in the Desert, The," from the German, 360

BAIL COURT, 379
Balloon, Night Ascent of Mr. Green from Vauxhall Gardens in his, 87; Ascents by Mr. Green, 138; Ascent and Steeple Chase at Vauxhall Gardens, 199; Night Ascent from Cremorne Gardens, 203
Bankruptcy Court, 27, 35, 119, 343
Banwell, Cottage of The Late Bishop of Bath and Wells, 197
Barbican, The Late Fire, 386
Baroilhet, Mr., Portrait, &c. of, 13
Bartholomew Fair, 150
Baseyi, Esq., The Late George, 275
Bateman, The Late Lord, 78
Bath and Wells, Demise of The Right Rev. Dr. Law, the Bishop of, 198
Baths and Washhouses in St. Pancras, Commencement of the Society's Operations, 362
Battle Church, Discovery of Old Paintings in, 321
Beckford Collection, Sale of The, 344, 345, 364, 365
Bedford and Birmingham Railway, Railway Scale used by the Duchess of Bedford in Raising the First Sod, 396
Beethoven, Portrait of, 116; Festival at Bonn, 101, 115; Birthplace of, Statue of, Bas Reliefs, Fantasia and Steeple Chase at Vauxhall Gardens, 199; Inauguration of the Statue at Bonn, 116; Concert at Beethoven Hall, 117; Monument, Correspondence in 1837 between the Bonn Committe and Lord Burghersh, 363
Beinstein on the Moselle, View of, 19
Benbow, Death of The Late General Francis Slater, 251
Bencraft's Patent Hames for Horses, 94
Birmingham, Free Trade Dinner at, 311
Birmingham and Bristol Railway, The Recent Fatal Accident on the, Verdict of the Coroner's Jury, 183
Birmingham and Gloucester Railway, Fatal Accident on the, 147, 315
Births, 11, 30, 46, 63, 78, 94, 110, 123, 143, 158, 174, 190, 206, 222, 238, 254, 270, 286, 302, 318, 331, 350, 366, 382, 399, 414
Bishopsgate, Fire in, 371
Bishopswearmouth Iron Works, Dreadful Explosion at, 343
Bison, European, at the British Museum, and Head of Do., 237
"Black Heart," The Cottage of the, The Grave of, 84
Blacker, Esq., W., Portrait of, 41
Blackfriars, Conflagration at Sir C. Price's Wharf, 181
Blackfriars Bridge, Opening of the New Pier at, 263
Blackfriars Pier, Affrays at, 286
Blackwall, Fire at, Eight Houses Burned, 43
Bloomsbury, New French Protestant Episcopal Church, 405
Bodkin, Capt., M.P., and Mr. Bonham, Remarks on the Cases of, 56
Bolton, Frightful Explosion at, and Loss of Life, 386; View of the Scene, &c., 412
Bonn, Beethoven Festival at, 101, 109, 115, 117; Prince Albert's Residence at, 117
Bonn and Cologne, Sketches on Her Majesty's Route, Prussian Officers, &c., 141
Borneo, Brunai, or Borneo Proper, View of, 372; Gallant Defeat of Malay Pirates on the Coast of, 389; The British Admiral's Attack and Plan of Attack, 340
Botsler, Esq., Q.C., William Fuller, The Late, 275
Bourne, Esq., J. G. H., 355
Bow, Fire at, 155
Brainworm, Mr. Mark Lemon as, 348
Brazilian Slaver, Echo, Particulars Respecting, 269
Breadalbane, The Late Dowager Marchioness of, 299
Breaking Stones in Oxfordshire, A Woman Employed in, 142
Bredin, Major-General, The Late, 299
Brentford, The History and Antiquities of, 345
Brighton and Chichester Railway, Accident at the Opening of the, 343
Brighton Police, Promotion and Conduct of William Cochrane, a Jeweller, 386
Bristol Channel Regatta, 21
Bristol Chess Club, Souvenir of the, 10
Bristol, Redcliffe Church, Repair of, 195
Bristol and Birmingham Railway, Fatal Accident on the, 295
British Archæological Association, 157, 188
British Archæological Association, Meeting of the, at Winchester, 173
British Museum, 199; Present State of the Building, 200; The New Room at the, 207; The New—Facade of, View of, 357
British Musicians, The Society of, 283
Broughton, Lord, in France, 346; Handsome Legacy to, 359
Browning, Martha, Committal of, for the Murder of Elizabeth Mundin, 370; Conviction of, 386; Confession made by her, 403
Brühl, Arrival of her Majesty at, 117; Grand Military Concert at, 120
Brussels Company at Drury-Lane Theatre, 42, 58
Buckland, Dr., The Dean of Westminster, Portrait &c. of, 336
Bugeaud, Marshal, Portrait, from a Picture by Horace Vernet, 248
Bull Dog, H. M. Steam-frigate, Launch of, 215
Bushmen Children, at the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly, 159
Bushmen, Remarks on the Extinction of, 48
Buxton, Sir Fowell, Portrait of, 28
Cambridge Election and the Nomination, 47, 48
Casey, Miss, The Case of, Strange Delusion, 204
Cassel Coal Vase, 4
Canterbury, The late Viscount, Portrait &c., of, 53; Funeral of, 69
Canterbury, The late Viscountess, 323
Capel Court—Railway Speculators, 189
Carrier Pigeon, Singular Fact Respecting One, 135
Cartoons, &c., Exhibition of, at Westminster Hall, 10, 45
Cathedrals, &c., Free Admission to, Observations on the Policy of, 118
Central Criminal Court, 183, 294, 385
Certo, Mdlle., in the New Pas de Quatre, at the Queen's Theatre, 39
Charlecombe Church, near Bath, 221
Charles Edward's (Prince) Pistol, 121
Charlton Fair, Account of the Origin of, &c., 261
Charlton House, Grand Fête Champetre at—North American Indians Encamped in the Park, 9
Chat, Rambles in the Realms of, 36, 42, 58, 74, 186, 115, 130, 183, 187, 202, 215, 231, 266, 298, 315, 330
"Cheap Defence," The, Observations respecting the Application of Officers engaged in the Peninsular War, 49
Chess, 16, 20, 48, 54, 77, 93, 115, 160, 170, 192, 208, 224, 235, 256, 267, 275, 290, 350, 356, 352, 366, 378, 387, 417
Chess Player, An Automaton, at New York, 389
Chess in America, 15
Chetwode, Bart., The Late Sir John, 404
Child Murder, Frightful Case of, 320
China, Correspondence relating to the Hong Kong Merchants and the Government, 290
Chinese Youths at the Chinese Collection—A-Shing and A-You, 289, 309
Chiswick Church, View of, 405
Christ's Hospital, Exclusion of the Lord Mayor from, 262
Christmas, 408, 409; Bringing in Christmas (Drawn by William Harvey), "A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year" (Drawn by Kenny Meadows), 393, 394; Poulterer's Shop on Holborn Hill, 408; Leadenhall Market on Christmas Eve, 409; Newgate Market on Christmas Eve, 408; Norfolk Coach, 409; A Gossip of Christmas, 409; Christmas Carol, 410
"Christmas Home," An English Song and Chorus by Eliza Cook, Music by V. Wallace, 400
Christmas Eve in Cripplegate, 405
Christmas Tree, 405
Christmas Pantomimes, 416
Christmas Pieces, 413
Church, Universities, &c., 7, 35, 54, 70, 86, 118, 135, 150, 166, 183, 199, 211, 227, 243, 263, 278, 290, 315, 347, 358, 370, 402
Cirencester Election, 106
City Antiquities (London Institution), 325
City Improvements, 311
"Cloud in the West, The"—Remarks on the Present Aspect of Affairs, 257
Cloyne, The Very Rev. the Dean of, John Thomas Burgh, 179
Coach Accident on Barnstal, 403
Coblentz, Her Majesty Passing, 113
Coburg, Views of, from H. R. H. Prince Albert's Drawings, 105, 165; Molsdorf Palace, Palace of Tenneburg, 164; Her Majesty's Entree into, 199; The Government House, 196; Ehrenburg Palace and Schloss Rosenau, near, from Prince Albert's Drawings, 157; Rosenau, and Chapel at Kalenberg, from Prince Albert's Drawings, 140; St. Gregory, Festival of, 145, 148; Theatre at, 148; Sketches from, 148; Luther's Bed-room in the Citadel of, 149; Rosenau, The Celebration of Prince Albert's Birthday at, 149; Rosenau, The Royal Banquet at, 152
Coburg-Gotha, Saxe, Portraits of the Reigning Duke and Duchess of, 136
Colchester, Roman Remains at, 397
Collard, Monsieur Royer, 187
Colliery Explosion, and Loss of Fifty Lives, 119; and Great Loss of Life, 131
Collingwood, Lord, Colossal Statue of, at Tynemouth, 350
Collingwood, Her Majesty's Ship, 299, 300—(See "Man-of-War, Economy of") Cologne, Grand Entrée of her Majesty into, 120; City of, from Deutz, 121; City of, Illuminated, 121; the Queen's Visit to the Cathedral at, 144; Bayen Thurm, 144
Combustibles in warehouses in the heart of the City, The danger of, 182
Common Pleas, Court of, 294
Conspicuous, Observations on the Anniversaries of, 289
Constantine of Russia, His Imperial Highness the Grand Duke of, Arrival of, 332; The Ingermanland, 74, with his Imperial Highness on board saluting the Admiralty, Portsmouth, 321; Departure of his Imperial Highness from Plymouth, the Fleet saluting, 337
Converted Jews, Solemn Baptism of, 130, 162
Copeland, Colonel, The Case of, in the Bankruptcy Court, 119
Cork and Bandon Railway, The Earl of Bandon Cutting the First Turf, 200
Corn Laws, Lord John Russell's Manifesto respecting the, 337; Address of Lord John Russell to the Electors of London, 343; Reported Intention of the Government to Repeal the, 363
Coroner's Inquests: Remarks on the Inquiry into the late Fire in Aldermanbury, 134
Correspondents, Notices to, 6, 22, 38, 54, 70, 86, 102, 118, 134, 150, 166, 182, 198, 214, 230, 246, 262, 278, 294, 310, 326, 342, 358, 374, 390, 406
Country News, 14, 23, 35, 51, 67, 81, 166, 119, 131, 147, 171, 179, 203, 215, 230, 250, 273, 290, 314, 330, 358, 379, 390, 403
Court and Haut Ton, 6, 22, 38, 54, 75, 86, 103, 118, 138, 150, 166, 182, 199, 214, 246, 262, 278, 294, 311, 323, 342, 358, 370, 394, 403
Court Martial, 61
Coverdale Bible at Holkham, 227
"Cricket, The, on the Hearth," a Fairy Tale of Home, by Charles Dickens, 324; Scene from the Lyceum Theatre, Mr. Keeley as Caleb and Miss Mary Keeley as Bertha, 413
Cripplegate, The late Fire in, Coroner's Jury of Inquiry into the Cause of, 371; Christmas Eve in, 405
Cromwell's Statue, Remarks on the Controversy respecting, 340, 341
Crown, The, Accident to, on her Majesty leaving the House of Lords, 163
Croydon Assizes, 107
Croydon Atmospheric Railway, Fatal Accident on the, 167, 183
Custance, Esq., The late Hambleton Thomas, of Weston House, county Norfolk, 379
Custom House, Remarks on the Inconvenience sustained by Passengers arriving by foreign Steamers, in respect to the Examination of their Baggage, &c., 262

DAHRA, in Algiers, Massacre of Arabs by the French Troops, 59
Dartmouth Election, 14
Davis, Esq., Thomas Osborne, 198
Deaths, 11, 30, 46, 63, 78, 94, 110, 123, 143, 158, 174, 190, 206, 222, 238, 254, 270, 286, 302, 318, 331, 350, 366, 382, 395, 414
De Boeie, The Baron, v. the Queen, Case of, in the Bail Court, 370
Deer Killing in Germany, 167
Design, The Government School of, 80, 85
Design, School of, Spitalfields, 24, 25
Dickens, Mr. Charles, as Captain Bobadil, 329
Dillon, Viscount, Charge of Assault against, 27
Dillon, Bart., The late Sir Arthur Richard, 35
"Doncaster Cup," The, 1845, 180
Doncaster Races —"Sweetmeat," Portrait of the, Winner of the Cup, 220; "My Mary," Winner of the Yorkshire Handicap, 221
D'Oyley, Bart., The late Sir Charles, 243
Drachenfels—The Royal Yacht passing, The Seven Mountains, and the Drachenfels, from Godesberg, 124
Dramatic and Musical Chit Chat, 59, 74, 315, 330, 351
Drury-Lane Theatre—The Brussels Company at, 42, 58; Pantomime at, Scene from the, 416
Druses and Maronites, Observations on the War between the, 17, 134, 167
Dudley, Destructive Explosion near, 119
Dumilâtre, Mdlle., Portrait of, in the "Marble Maiden," 216
Dundas, Death of the Right Hon. William, 323
Dunfermline, &c., Serious Riots in, 131
Dunkerque—The Statue of Jean Bart at, 213; Inauguration of the Statue, 213
Dunmore, The late Earl of, 78
Dunstable Railway, 131
Duvernay, Mdlle., Marriage of, 35

EAST COWES, New Landing Pier Built for her Majesty, 341
Eastern Counties Railway, Serious Accident on the, 311
Eastern Counties Railway—Opening of the Line to Cambridge and Ely, 73, 76
East India House, Affrays at the, 151, 199
Echo, Brazilian Slaver, the, Some particulars respecting, 269; in St. Katherine's Docks, 348
Eclair, H.M.S., Frightful Mortality on board of, 215, 231, 247, 293
Eclair Steamer, and The Lauzerette, off the Motherbank, 232
Eclipse of the Moon, 326
Economy of a Man-of War, H.M.S. Collingwood, 299, 300
Edinburgh—The Martyrs' Monument, 332; Lord John Russell at, 290; The New Physicians' Hall, 231, 232; "Camping" of Doctors of Medicine at, 84; Trinity Hospital, 16
Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway, Fatal Accident on, 166
Eel—a very curious one—very like a whale, 159
Egremont, The late Earl of, 227; Castle, View, &c., of, 396
Egypt, The Present from the East India Company to the Pasha of, 150
Ehrenbreitstein and Coblentz, 125
Elstedtdodd—The Celebration of, at Abergavenny, 241, 263
Eldon, Lord, Accident to, 374
Election Changes Contemplated, 131
Election Prospects, 419
Elliott, Mr., Portrait of, 41
Ely, The Late Marquis of, 219
Ely, Loss of Fishing Station, 65
Ely Railway, Accident at, 131
Ely Cathedral, 197; South-west Transept of the Cathedral, 197
Emerald, Gravesend Steamer, and the John Bull, Hamburg Packet, Collision between, 295, 326
"Enchantress, The," Scene from the Opera of, at Drury Lane Theatre, 317
Epitome of News, Foreign and Domestic, 7, 23, 35, 52, 78, 94, 107, 123, 143, 151, 167, 190, 206, 222, 238, 243, 270, 279, 295, 318, 322, 338, 355, 379, 395, 407
Essex, Extraordinary Charge of Murder in, 403
Etty, R. A., William, Portrait of, 29
"Eureka," The, a Machine for Composing Latin Hexameter Verses, 37
Every Body's Column, 14, 19, 42, 74, 91, 107, 123, 139, 191
Exchequer, Court of, 407
Execution in France of Jaques Burbau, 141
Exeter, Conflagration of Fifty Houses near, 179
Exeter Assizes, 79
Exeter Election, 23
Experimental Squadron, 163, 247; View of Her Majesty's, 56; The Departure of the, 55

FAIRLOP OAK, The, 6
"Fairy Oak, The," Scene from the Opera of, at Drury-Lane Theatre, 269
Farren, Mr., as Sir Simon Sage, 349
Fashions, English and French, 69, 143, 207, 288, 352, 412
Fasting Man, Another, 215
Felix on the Bat (Cricket), 10
Ferrier, Mr., Suicide of, 119
Fine Arts, 10, 12, 24, 25, 54, 77, 89, 93, 234, 297, 377, 390, 391, 393
Finsbury, Fire and Loss of Two Lives in, 323
Fire-Damp Explosion in Wales—Loss of Twenty-nine Lives, 91
Fire, Melancholy Death by, 266
Fires, 23
Fleet-street Sewer, 213; Deepening the, 213
Fleetwood, Hesketh Testimonial, 160
Floods in the North, 231
Follett, M.P., the late Sir William, Portrait of, &c., 5, 6; Funeral of, 20; Monument to the late, at Exeter, 105
Foreign Grain, Admission of, 374
Foreign Intelligence, 2, 19, 34, 50, 66, 82, 98, 114, 130, 146, 162, 178, 194, 210, 226, 242, 258, 274, 290, 306, 322, 338, 354, 370, 371, 386, 402
Foreign Railways, Information respecting, 250
Foreign Railways—(See "Railways Foreign")
Forester, M.P., the Hon. Cecil, Accident to, 374
Forfar, Frightful Occurrence at, 391
Forgeries on the South Midland, Northampton, and Leicestershire Railway Company, 139
Forgeries on Railway Companies, 171
Forgery upon New York Merchants, 257
Foster, Mr., as Kitely, 329
France, The Ironmasters of, Depressed Condition of, &c., 198
Frankfurt, The Royal Party Changing Horses, Die Ziel, 132; Luther's House at, 133
Freeling, Bart., Sir Francis, 187
French, New Protestant Episcopal Church, Bloomsbury, 405
Free Trade and Anti Corn-law Movements, 359
Frost in Lancashire on 29th and 30th September, 215
Fruitsellers, The War against the, 195
Fry, Mrs., Portrait, &c., of the Late, 256; Biographical Sketch of, 267; Funeral of, 266

GAME LAWS, The, Committee on the, 93
Gaskell, Mrs., of Thornes House, 355
Gazette, The, London, 11, 30, 46, 63, 78, 94, 110, 123, 143, 158, 174, 190, 206, 222, 238, 254, 270, 286, 302, 318, 331, 350, 366, 382, 395, 414
Geological Phenomenon, 336, 342
German Hospital at Dalston, Opening of the, 252; View of the, and Grounds, 253
Germany, Her Majesty's Visit to, Question raised by Lord John Russell, 86
Gibbs, Mr., Case of—Refusal of a Certificate, 119
Gillespie Monument at Comber, The Opening of the, 4
Glasgow, Destruction of Cooke's Circus at, 355
Glasgow Theatre, Destruction of, by Fire, 339, 349
Glasgow University, Election of Lord Rector of, 330
Godstone Nunnery, near Oxford, View, &c., of, 348
Goldsmith's House, Lissoy, 189
Goliah Aratoo, New Bird, 237
Goodwood Races, 71; The Course, Entrance to Goodwood Park, The Goodwood Cup, The Steward's Cup, 72
Gosport Railway at, for her Majesty's Use, 178
Gothe, Her Majesty Entering, 152; Her Majesty at, 145; Gotha (from H. R. H. Prince Albert's Drawing), 104
Government, The New Prospects of the, 363
Graham, Sir James, Portrait of, 40
Gravesend, Fatal and Alarming Fire at, 278
Gray's Elegy, The Manuscript of, 366
Great Britain, The Steam Ship, perilous Situation of, on the Sands of Nantucket, 286; Arrival at New York, 135, 157; Return of the, from New York, 187
Great North of England Railway, Serious Accident on the, 230
Great Western Railway, Swindon Station and View of New Swindon, 249; Accidents on the, 343, 347, 355, 359
Great Yarmouth Suspension Bridge, The Accident on the, Coroner's Enquest, 331
Green, Mr., the Aeronaut, Accident to 119; Perilous Ascent in the Albion Balloon, 114
Greenall, Esq., Peter, 198
Greenock, Munificent Gift to, 359
Grey, Portrait &c. of the late Earl, 57; Portrait of the late Earl, 60; Column, Newcastle, The, 60; The late Earl, The Will of, proved in the Consistory Court of Durham, 343
Grindale Murders, The, 7
Grisi, Mdlle. C. in the new "Pas de Quatre," at the Italian Opera House, 23
Gundreda, The Daughter of William the Conqueror, Discovery of the remains of, at Lewes, 263

HAMBURG, St. Nicholas (New) Church, 91, 92
Hamlet, Mr. Macready as, at the Princess' Theatre, 253
Handley, Esq., H., Portrait of, 40
Hanoverian Prince, Birth of a, 199
Hardwicke, The Earl of, Portrait of, 41
Harewood House, Grand Festivities at, 309
Hartland, Lord, 323
Hartshill, New Church, Warwickshire, 181
Haymarket Theatre, Pantomime at, Scene from the, 416
Hengler, Madame, Accidental Death of, 246
Highlands, Influx of Visitors to the, 121
Hill, Mr Benson, the Comedian, Death of, 219
Holland, The King of, Portrait of, &c., 49; Arrival of, 54; Visit of, to her Majesty, at Osborne House, Isle of Wight, 69; Equestrian Portrait of, 81; The King of, at the Review in Hyde Park, 4th Aug., 81, 92
Holland, The late Dowager Lady, 323
Hong Kong, View of Victoria Barracks at, 297
"Horn Fair," at Charlton, in 1745, The Opening of, 261
Hounslow Barracks, Lamentable Occurrence at, 211
House of Lords, Accident at the, 347
Houses of Parliament, The New, 193; Decorations of; The Cromwell Statue, 347
Howick Hall, 60
Hoxton, Fire at, 195
Hudson, M.P., Mr. George, "The Railway King," Portrait of, 137; Dinner to, at Sunderland, 263
Hudson, Mr., and the Railways, 334
Hull and Hamburg Steamer, and Loss of 19 lives, Shipwreck of a, 286
Hungerford Suspension Bridge, Leap of Mr. H Kenworthy from, 103
Hunt, Henry, Funeral of, the Son of the late Henry Hunt, 99
Hunterian Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons, 209, 210
Huntingtower, Lord, The Case of, 27
Hutchinson, K.C.H., General Sir William, 155
Hutchison Market, The, Aldgate, 268
Hyde Park, The Improvements in, 163; Grand Review in, on 30th June, 1845, 13; Grand Review in, by the King of Holland, 81, 82
Hydrophobia, Deplorable Case of, 87; Case of a Horse attacked with, 66
Another Death from, 311

IFFLEY CHURCH, View, &c. of, 261
"I'll be There," written by E. Fitzball, the Music by G. Herbert Rodwell, (with an Illustration), 96
Incendiarism, &c., 67, 179, 231, 327, 358
Income Tax Oppression, Case of Mr. Fielden, &c., 65
India and China, Arrival of the Half Monthly Mail, 402
Ingermanland, The, Russian 74-gun Ship, with His Imperial Highness the Grand Duke Constantine on board, Saluting the Admiral at Plymouth, 321, 332
Insolvent Debtors' Court, 366
Inverness, Great Fire at, 250
Ipswich Corn Hall of Commerce, 61
Irby, Capt. the Hon. Charles Leonard, The late, 279
Ireland and Irish News, &c., 7, 17, 18, 37, 38, 39, 51, 54, 67, 87, 119, 135, 162, 187, 211, 224, 245, 247, 250, 253, 254, 263, 279, 291, 294, 301, 307, 334, 350, 354, 371, 390, 403
Irena Macrina Mieczyslaska, Superintendant of the Basilian Convent at Minsk, Portrait, &c of, 356
Irvine, Esq., M.P., John, Death of, 318
Isle of Wight, Royal Victoria Club Yacht Race—"Wood against Iron," 63
Italian Opera House (Her Majesty's Theatre), 32, 33

JACKSON, The Late General, Portrait, &c., of, 25; Last honours to, 36; Hermitage—Residence, and Burial place of; processions in Honour of, at New York, 36
Jenny Lind, the celebrated Swedish Vocalist, Portrait, &c., 232, 233
Jerrold, Mr. Douglas, as Master Stephen, 329
Jersey, Murder at, 391
Jerusalem, The Bishopric of, 394; Death of the Late Bishop of, 395
John Bull, The Ministers of, 4
Johnson, John, Portrait of the Right Hon. (Lord Mayor), 326
Johnstone, the Late Case of Westerhall, 353
Johnstone, Captain George, Re-examination of, on a Charge of Murder on Board the Ship Tory, 354; Fifth Examination of, 386
Jones, Bart., The Late Sir Laurence, 395
Jullien's Promenade Concerts, at Covent Garden Theatre, 351
Jullien! What has he done for Art? 365

KABYLES, Encounter of French Troops with, 249
Keeley, Miss, as Bertha, in "The Cricket on the Hearth," 413
Keeley, Mr., as Caleb, in "The Cricket on the Hearth," 413
Keighley Agricultural Society Show —Prize Medals, 223
Kelly, M.P., The Solicitor-General, Mr., 48
Kennington lane, Murder in, and Examination of the Murderer, Samuel Quennell, 343; Committal of the Prisoner, 354
Kenyon Junction Railway, Accident on the, 218
"Key of the Kingdom," The, Scene from, at the Princess' Theatre, 4, 13
King Rail! Lines to, 218
Kirkcudbright Election, 118
Knight, Dean of Llandaff, The Very Rev. William Bruce, 126
Knowle, Mr. Farrow as, 348
Knowle, Warwickshire, Murder at Robbery near, 327

LADIES' Watch Protector (Watchguard) Manufactured for the Queen 349
"Lady of Lyons," The, Scene from, at the Haymarket Theatre, 395
Lahore, Death of Jowahir Singh, the Wuzeer of, 237, 338
Lancaster and Carlisle Railway, Accidents on the, 147
Langfort, Bavaria, The Queen Crossing the Maine at, 133
Lansdowne Tower, 194, 325—(See, also," Beckford Collection, Sale of the")
"Le Partie de Chasse de Henri Quatre," Scene from, at St. James's Theatre, 317
Laughing Leader, A, 99
Law Intelligence, 27, 35, 55, 75, 119, 294, 370, 386, 407
Lawrence, Mrs., of Studley Park, Yorkshire, 83
Laws of War—Remarks on the Late Proceedings of the French in Algeria, 33
"Le Diable à Quatre," Scene from the Ballet of, at the Princess' Theatre, 301
Leech, Mr., as Master Matthew, 329
Leeds Castle, Kent, View of, &c., 261
Leger, The Lay of the, 186
"Leicester" Monument, The, 111, 119
Leicester, The Hon. Capt., Death of, 295; Funeral of, 320
Leicester, The Murder at, 106; Baptist Chapel at, 268
Lemon, Mr. Mark, as Brainworm, 348
Lewes—Interesting Discovery at, 263; Antiquarian Discoveries at, 293, 295, 322

Lewin, The late Sir Gregory, 267
Liability of Shareholders in Public Companies, 97
Lincoln Assizes, 55
Lincoln's Inn—The Opening of the New Hall in, 251, 261, 275, 276, 277, 280, 281, 282
Linlithgowshire Election, 134
Lisbon, The New National Theatre at, 333
Literature, Magazines, &c., 10, 77, 154, 218, 234, 235, 275, 298, 315, 330, 346, 359, 379, 405
Liverpool—Affray at, 23; Assizes, 119; Fatal Explosion at, 299; Fire at, 406; Murder of Mr. Peacop, at Rock Ferry, near, 179
Liverpool Railway Tunnel, Fatal Accident in the, 179
Locomotive New Agency Discovered by Mr. W. Evans, of Philadelphia, 155
London, The Narrow Escape of the Mayor and Corporation of, 213
London and Birmingham Railway—Collision on the, 75; The late Fatal Collision on, Verdict of the Coroner's Inquest, 93
London and Croydon Atmospheric Line of Railway, 140, 151
London and York Railway—Mr. Brice's Petition 87
London Docks—Improvements in the, 183; The New Tea Warehouses at the, 203, 205; Bird's-eye View of the Docks, 204; The Kiln; The Great Wine Vault 205
London Electors and the Corn-laws—Great Meeting at Guildhall, 387
London Improvements, 246; Cranbourne street and New Coventry-street, 245
London Sewage Company, 269
Longford Castle, near Salisbury, View of, 293
Lord Mayor—The Election of the, 314; The Right Hon., The Portrait of, 320
Lord Mayor's Day (1845)—The Stationers' Company's Barge at Lambeth Palace, 305 306
Lord Mayor's Show (1845)—The Lord Mayor Taking Water at the New Pier, Blackfriars-bridge, 312, 313
Lothbury, View of—Metallon Improvements, 53
Louis Philippe, Medallion Portrait of, 85
Lucerne, The late Investigation at, Respecting the Death of M. Leu, 250
Lucky Discovery of Bank Notes in an Old Chest of Drawers, 235
Lucy, Esq., The late George, 62
Ludlow Castle, View of, &c., 316
Lunar Rainbow, 407
Lunar Rainbow as seen near Nantwich, in Cheshire, 396
Luther's House at Frankfurt, 133
Luther's Bed-room in the Citadel of Coburg, 149
Luther's Chamber and Luther's House at Wittenberg, 260
Lyceum, Pantomime at the, Scene from, 416
Lynch, Judge, on Railways, 140
Lyttelton, Lord, The Installation of, as Principal of Queen's College, Birmingham, 378

MACREADY, Mr., as Hamlet, at the Princess' Theatre, 253
Madagascar, Combined Attack upon, by the French and English, 227; Tamatave Fort, 228
Madeira, The Vintage and the Voyage, 195; Madeira and the Azores, 198; London and Madeira Packet brig Dart, entering Funchal-roads—Garden in the Azores —Madeirese Villa, near Funchal, 196; Madeirese Costume, 197
Madras, Visit of the Rajah of Travancore to Quilon, 356
Maid, The, and the Spider, a French Story, 93
"Maiden Aunt," The Scene from the New Comedy of, at the Haymarket Theatre, 349
Maitland, Admiral, Monument to, 398
Manchester, Opening of the New Theatre Royal, at, 217
Manchester and Birmingham Railway, Collision on the, 311
Manchester Public Parks, 358
Man of War, Economy of a (H.M.S. Collingwood), 299, 309
Mansfield, Attempted Murder and Robbery near, 263
Manslaughter by a Police Inspector, 322
"Marble Maiden," Scene from the New Ballet of, at Drury-lane Theatre, 216
Margaret Steamer, Shipwreck of the, 286
"Maritana," Mr. H. Phillips and the Opera of, 365
"Maritana," Scene from the New Opera of, at Drury-lane Theatre, 333
Maritime Warfare, Powerful Agent for (Lord Dundonald's Invention), 356
Markets, The, 11, 30, 46, 62, 78, 94, 110, 123, 142, 158, 174, 190, 222, 238, 254, 270, 286, 302, 318, 330, 350, 366, 382, 398, 414
Marmora, The American Screw Steamer Bark, at Liverpool, 200
Marriages, 11, 30, 46, 63, 78, 94, 110, 123, 143, 158, 174, 190, 206, 222, 238, 254, 270, 286, 302, 318, 334, 350, 366, 382, 414
Mary, The, Shipwreck of, from Sydney, 259
Massachusetts, The Screw Auxiliary Vessel, from New York 238
Massey, Colonel Cromwell, 197
Match Against Time, Mr. Lilly's, 324
Mathews v. Webster (Vice-Chancellor's Court), 75
Matricide, A Case of Alleged, 355
Maunsell, C.B., Captain Robert, 170
Mayence, Torchlight Concert at; Gutemburg's Statue at, 132
Mayhew, Mr. H., as Knowell, 348
Medical System, The Scandalous State of our, 311
Mehemet Ali, The Presentation of the Portrait of her Majesty Queen Victoria to his Highness, 322
Melancthon's House at Wittenberg, 260
Mersey Royal Yacht Club—the Grand Challenge Cup, 189
Metcalfe, Lieut.-Col., of the Royal Horse Artillery, Fatal Accident to, 243
Metropolis, Churches in the, 293, 341
Metropolis, Improvements in the, 33, 53, 55, 150, 214; Remarks on the subject of, 305
Metropolis, Mortality in the, 38, 70, 86, 103, 138, 182, 199, 214, 227, 247, 262, 279, 295, 323, 342, 358, 390
Metropolitan Fancy Rabbit Club, 398
Metropolitan News, 2, 22, 38, 55, 70, 86, 103, 114, 128, 150, 165, 183, 199, 214, 230, 247, 262, 278, 294, 311, 322, 342, 358, 379, 387, 403
Meyerbeer, Portrait of, 45
Miall, Mr., the Candidate for Southwark, Portrait of, 176
Michelmas Term, The Opening of the, 294
Middlesex Sessions—An Odd Exchange, 163
Midland Railway, Alarming Accidents on the, 119, 183, 286, 374, 302, 327, 343, 355
Military Punishment at Windsor, 46
Militia, Calling out of the, 371
Minaé's Mr. Pen and Ink Drawing, &c., 293
Ministerial Changes, Rumours of, 359
Ministerial Arrangements, Progress of the New, 371
Ministerial Crisis, The Second, 402; O'Connell upon the, 403
Ministry, The New, Reported List of, 370; Reception of, Observations on, 391; Reconstruction of, 401, 407; Probable Results of the Change of the, in France, 391; The Fall of, Observations on, 369; Sir Robert Peel's Late, showing the Division in the Cabinet, 385; The New Whig, 391
Minsk, Irena Macrina Mieczyiaska, Superior of the Basilian Convent of St. Basil, at, 356; Portrait of, 356
Missouri, The Fetters on board the American Steamer, Explanation respecting, 339
Molesworth, Sir W., M.P., Sir William, Portrait of, 176
Monetary Transactions of the Week, 11, 30, 46, 78, 94, 110, 123, 142, 158, 174, 190, 206, 222, 238, 254, 270, 286, 302, 318, 331, 353, 366, 382, 395, 414
Montagu, The Late Lord, 299
Mordaunt, Bart., The Late Sir John, 219
Mortality in a Family, Mysterious Case of—Coroner's Inquest 343
Mount Ellicombe, Torquay, &c.—View of, &c., 257, 258, 346
Mount Zion, Designed Protestant Church on, 39; Present State of Building, 20
Mulready, R.A., William, Portrait of, 9
Mummy found at Possession Island, 90
Mundell, Elizabeth, Murder of by Martha Browning, 370
Murder and Suicide near Chelmsford, 151
Murray, The late Mr. Alexander, 78
Mushrooms, Death from Eating, 87
Music in France and Italy, 324
Music, New, &c., 12, 42, 74, 90, 106, 202, 234, 251, 282, 298, 314, 333, 345, 362, 378, 394, 411
Musical Season of 1846, 365
Mutiny, Serious Charge of, on board the Ocean Pauplein, 275
"My Mary," Winner of the Yorkshire Handicap, Portrait of, 231
"My Wedding Ring," Song, with Music and Illustration, 272

NAIRNE, The Late Dowager Lady, 315
Napier, M.P., Sir Charles, Presentation of the Freedom of the City of Edinburgh to, 359
Nassau Balloon, Ascent of the, from the Gardens of Cremorne House, 69
National Defence, Our Remarks on, 353
National Gallery, Portrait in the, attributed to Hans Holbein, 89
Naval Architecture, 10, 59, 71, 91, 107, 118, 134, 155, 163, 179, 203, 219, 237, 243, 263, 284, 299, 315, 323, 347, 349, 371, 389
Naval and Military Intelligence, 10, 58, 98 142, 158, 195, 219, 247, 323, 339, 371
Nelson, Relics of Lord, 56
Newcastle and Carlisle Railway, a Man Beheaded on the, by an Engine, &c., running over him, 375
Newcastle Boat Race between Claspar and Pocock, 352
Newington, The Murder in Kennington-lane, 355—(See also "Kennington-lane")
Newmarket New Betting Room, 233
Newmarket in the Olden Time, Training Ground, View of Newmarket, 384
Newmarket Races—The Cambridge Stakes, 395
News-Agents and Newspaper Supplements, 265
New York, Terrific Fire in, Map of the Burnt District 127; Broadstreet after the Fire, Bowling-green and Broadway, Bowling-green and Marketfield street, 128
New Zealand, 19, 34, 54; Scene of late Conflict in, 18; Plan of Russell, &c., 51; Kororarika Beach, Bay of Islands, Peace Maker, Bay of Islands Church, 52; Repulse of the British Troops, 327, 338; Remarks on our Government of, 342; The recent Conflict in, and View of, from a Sketch by a Correspondent, 372; St. Paul's Church, Auckland, View, &c., of, 403
Nickels's New System of Railway Locomotion, 358—(See "Railway Locomotion")
Nooks and Corners of Old England, 37, 189, 221, 229, 261, 293, 316, 348, 396
North America, Map of, 228
Northern and Eastern Railway, Lamentable Accident on the, 83; The late Accident on the; The Verdict of the Coroner's Inquest, 106; Another Accident on the, 119
Northfleet, Fire at, 275
North Midland Railway, The late Accident on the, 394
Northumberland, His Grace the Duke of, Portrait of, 41
North Union Railway, Collision on the, 403
Norwich Musical Festival, 185, 202
Nottingham, Conflagration at, 350
November, Vignettes Illustrative of the Month of, 316

OBITUARY of Eminent Persons lately deceased, 6, 25, 62, 78, 83, 126, 139, 155, 171, 187, 198, 210, 229, 243, 267, 275, 299, 315, 323, 347, 355, 379, 395, 404
Oregon and Texas, Map of North America, showing the Relative Positions of, with the United States, 228
Oregon Claimant, a new one, 327
Osborne House, Isle of Wight, New Wing of, 276; View of New Lodge, 281
Ossory, The late Catholic Bishop of, 395
"Otello," a Tale of the Opera, 92, 122, 138, 157, 173, 186, 205
Out of Town—Michaelmas in May-Fair, with Illustration, 245; "Been to Brighton?" with Illustration, 283, 284
Overland Indian Mail, 2, 59, 66, 114, 195, 195, 215, 327, 354
Oxford, The Lord Bishop of, Portrait, &c., of, 336; The Confirmation of, at Merton Church, 341
Oxford, "Gown and Town Row" at, 317

PADDINGTON, St. Mary's Hospital at, Prince Albert laying the Foundation Stone of, the Wards, Square, and Trowel used by his Royal Highness, 2
Page, Admiral Benjamin William, The Late, 243
Palmer, Mr., Case of, Repeated Attempts at Suicide, 323
Panic, The, Remarks on, &c., 273
Pantomimes, The Christmas, 416
Paris: Celebration of the Fêtes of July in; The Mat de Cocagne, Place de la Concorde, 68; Fireworks, sketched by Harrison, 88; Trifling Disturbance in, 372
Parisian Journals, System of Advertising (Journaux des Débats), 6
Parker, Mr., The Late Assistant Poor-Law Commissioner, and the Andover Union, 379
Parliament, The Prorogation of, by her Majesty, 103; Close of the Session of, 103; Progress of Business in, 6, 22; Proposed Alteration in the Hours of Sitting of, 70; The Present, 241; The Meeting of, 307; The Prorogation of, 326, 342
Parliamentary Portraits, 317
Parliamentary Proceedings, 2, 37, 55, 59, 67, 82
Parricide, Suspected Case of, near Morpeth, 403
Peacop, Murder of Mr., at Rock Ferry, near Liverpool, 179
Peel, Sir Robert, Deeds to be used by him, in Raising the First Sod of the Trent Valley Railway, 275
Peel, Sir Robert, The Resignation of, 371
Peel's, Sir Robert, Residence, Whitehall Gardens, 401, 403
Pelletan, The Late M., 155
Pen and Ink Drawings, by Mr. Minasi, 293
Penzance, Frightful Murder at, 23
Pepys, Bart., The Late Sir William Weller, 243
Philadelphia, The Destruction of the Academy of Fine Arts at 3, 37
Philippe, Monsieur, Exhibiting at the Strand Theatre, 221
Phillips, Mr. H., and the Opera of "Maritana," 365
Picture, Singular Discovery of a, 139
Pigeon, Singular Fact of a Carrier Pigeon sent from Ichabee, 135
Pigeon Flying, Remarkable Case of, 363
Pilsree's Atmospheric Railway, 192
Pilcher, Mr., the Candidate for Southwark, Portrait of, 176
"Pine-Apples, a Penny a Slice O," 109
Pirates, Trial of, at Exeter, for the Murder of Two Englishmen, 135
Pirate Slaver, Gallant Capture of a, by the boats of H.M.S Pantaloon, 149
Pirate Slaver, View of the Capture of, on the Western Coast of Africa, 132
Pirates, Case of the Spanish, 326
Pianet, A New One, 410
Poachers, Affray with, 403
Police Offices, Cases at, 23, 55, 66, 139, 151, 171, 195, 219, 227, 294, 305, 311, 317, 354, 370, 385, 406
Police Disguises, 315
Portland Vase, The Repair of, 46
Portraits of Eminent Living Painters, 38
Portsmouth, The Keys of the Fortress of, 341
Postage Labels, Directions for Affixing, 384
Postage to Switzerland, 345
Postmaster General, the New, 318
Post-office, Early Delivery, 78
Postscripts, 7, 23, 39, 54, 71, 78, 103, 119, 135, 151, 167, 182, 199, 215, 231, 247, 263, 279, 295, 311, 327, 343, 359, 371, 391, 407
Potato Crops on the Continent, 195
Potato Disease, The, 163; Cure, &c., of the, 260, 291; in Ireland, 247
Potato Famine, Opinion of the Duke of Cambridge respecting, 359
President's Message, The, 403, 407
Press, The, and the Tone adopted by the Leading Journals, 374
Prestonpans, The Centenary of the Battle of, &c., 201
Prince Charles Edward's Plaid, 151
Printed Books, Way the Ancients had none, 331
Prison Discipline, Defects in our System of, &c., 39
Privilege, Case of, in the House of Lords, &c., Our Remarks on, 38; Privilege of the House of Commons, Remarks on the late Case of, &c., 22; Howard v. Gossett, Knt., 7; Procter, The late Rev. Dr., 323
Prosser's New Wooden Guide-Wheel Railway, 394
Protestant Church on Mount Zion, 20
Public Wealth and Public Works, Observations thereon, 11
Pulmonary Consumption, Statistics respecting, 195
"Puritani, I," Scene from, at her Majesty's Theatre, 32
Pusey, Esq., Philip, Portrait of, 40

QUEBEC, The late Dreadful Fire at, 3; St. Rock's, after the late Fire, 4
Queen, The, Her Most Gracious Majesty Victoria, Enamelled Pearl, Gass, and Paper Machê Screen, presented to her Majesty, 331
Queen, The, Her Majesty's Progress and Visit to Germany, &c., 97, 99, 100, 101, 109, 104, 105, 108, 109, 113, 115, 116, 117, 120, 121, 124, 125, 129, 132, 133, 135, 137, 140, 141, 144, 145, 148, 149, 151, 152, 153, 156, 157, 164, 165, 168, 169, 172.
Queen, The, Present to her Majesty, from Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeeboy, of Arabian Horses, &c., 295; Watchguard manufactured for her Majesty, 349
Queen's College, Birmingham, Installation of Lord Lyttelton as Principal of, 275
Quennell, Samuel, Committal of, for the Murder in Kennington-lane, 354 Conviction of, 386

RABBIT CLUB, Metropolitan Fancy, 395; Prize Fancy Rabbits, 396
Radnor New Church, 234
Railroads in Ireland, 235
Railway Accident, Fatal, 131; at Defford—Verdict of the Coroner's Jury, 383; at Ely, 131; near Salisbury, 179
Railway Accidents, Observations on the Frequent Occurrence of, 70, 150
Railway Committees, Refusal of the Irish Members to Attend, 3
Railway Companies, Forgeries on, 171; Frauds on, 403; Improper Use of Names by, 370
Railway Deeds, Foreign Signatures to, 183
Railway Directors, Improper Use of Names by, 294
Railway Disagreeables, 331
Railway Express, Extraordinary, 114
Railway Extension, 249
Railway Facts, Summaries of, 7, 39, 55, 70, 86, 103, 119, 135, 151, 167, 183, 195, 213
Railway Locomotion, Nickels's New System of, 395
Railway Mania, Lines on the, 165, "Railway Mania," written and illustrated by Alfred Crowquill, 233, 253, 253, 268, 269, 288, 301, 302
Railway Manœuvres, 407
Railway (New) Projects, 249
Railway Plans, Observations on the Desecration of the Sabbath on the 30th Nov., 358; Correction at a Tavern on the Eve of 30th Nov., 361; Deposit of, with the Board of Trade, 343; Deposit of, Scene at the Office of the Board of Trade on the 30th Nov., 353, 356
Railway Progress, The, 240, 259, 283, 291, 307, 334, 339, 353, 375, 398
Railway Regulation, Remarks on, 193
Railway Responsibility (Cases of Paton and Mc Nab), 320
Railway Robberies, The late, 219, 294; on a large Scale, 199
"Railway Shares," with Seven Illustrations, Plate of, 178
Railway Speculations, 159, 262; Speculators, Scene before the London and York Railway Committee, 59
Railway Stags, New Device by, 227
Railway Statistics, 311, 362; Surveying, 362
Railway, Wooden, at Wimbledon.—(See "Prosser's Wooden Railway.")
Railways, Foreign, Information respecting, 250, 259, 283, 291, 307, 334, 339, 363; Irish, Information respecting, 259, 259, 334, 339
Railways, Locomotives on, 307
Railways, New, 289, 293, 291, 307, 339; Projected List of, 362
Railways, Scotch, Information in respect to, 250, 259, 339
Rangoon, The Principal Port of the Birman Empire, View, &c. of, 357
Ransome, Mr., Portrait of, 40
Raphael, Newly Discovered Fresco by, 315
Reading, Taste for, among the People, 243
Reay and Co.'s Case in the Bankruptcy Court, 343
Rebow, The late General Francis Slater, 267
Recess, a Song of the, 302
Reconstruction of the Ministry, 401, 407
Reformation in Germany, The Second —Johannes Kongy, 177, 193
Regent's Canal, The Purchase of the, for a Railway, 221
Reid, M.P., Col., Portrait, &c., of, 317; Retirement of, upon Half pay, 387
Reid, Bart., the late Sir William, of Barra 379
"Reminiscence of a City Remembrancer, long since Forgotten," illustrated by Alfred Crowquill, 217, 218
Renbens' Chair at Antwerp, 191
Revenue, State of the, 22
Rhine—The Song of the, from Schenkendorf, 170; Illumination of the, from Stolzenfels, 124; Panorama of the, 107, 108, 109; St. Goar, on the, 121; Steamer the Fairy on the, 156
Roman Remains at Colchester, 309
Roman Tariff, Modification of the, 150
Rouge, Johannes, Portrait of, 177
Rosas and Buenos Ayres, 299
Rouen, Great Loss of Life at from a Whirlwind, 139
Royal Academy Prizes, Distribution of, 387, 388
Royal Agricultural College, Cirencester, 89
Royal Agricultural Society of England—(See "Agricultural, Royal, Society of England")
Royal Bounty, 411
Royal College of Surgeons, The Museum of the, 229, 243
Royal Exchange, The, 199; Bells, 311; Buildings, 215, 216; Marble Statue of her Majesty at the, 273, 274; Inauguration of her Majesty's Statue in the, 262; Statue of Sir Thomas Gresham, by Bidnes, fixed in the niche in front, 262
Royal Tour, Close of the Remarks on, 161
Royal Yacht Promotions, 247
Rugby, Football at, 389, 399
Russell, Lord John, at Edinburgh, 299; Manifesto of, on the Corn laws, 337
Russell's, Lord John, House, Chesham place, View of, 385
Russia, The Emperor of, Some Details Respecting, 99; and the Greek Church, 310; Causes of his Imperial Majesty's Anxiety to Negotiate a Marriage between his Daughter and the Archduke Stephen, 342
Russia, Marriage of the Grand Duchess Olga of, 326
Russia and Circassia, Another Defeat of the Russians, 215
Russian Navy, The, &c., Remarks on the Condition of, 278
Russia and Poland, Boundary Line between, 269
Russian Campaign in the Caucasus, 182
Russian Great Railway, 195
Russian Men-of-war in Plymouth Sound, 363; Departure of with the Grand Duke Constantine of Russia, 377

ST. BENET'S FINK CHURCH, City, 341
St. Germans, the Earl, Appointment of, as Postmaster General, 318
St. James's Theatre, The Amateurs 329, 348, 349
St. John's Gate, Clerkenwell, 70
St. Katherine's Docks, New Foreign Baggage Warehouse at, 269
St. Leger Great Stakes, 194; "Baron," the Winner of the, 193
St. Mary's Church, Islington, 393
St. Petersburgh, The Stupendous New Bridge at, 256
Salford House of Correction, Murder of a Prisoner in, 91
Sale, Sir Robert, Silver Vase presented to, by the Corporation of London, 53
Salisbury and Bishopstoke Railway, Accident near, 179
Salomons, Mr. David, Munificent Gift of, to the City of London School, 291
Samuda's Atmospheric Railway, 240
Schillynck Marie, 139
Scientific Expedition, Melancholy Fate of Mr. Douglas, 234
Scotch Railways, Information respecting, near, 179
Scotland, Serious Riots at Dunfermline, &c., 131
Seaford, the Late Lord, 26
Seasons, The Mildness of the, 315
Secret, Important Explanation from Valparaiso, 235
Selegna, M., 139
Session of Parliament, Close of the, Observations on, 81, 197
Session, The Coming, Our Remarks on, 321
Sheffield and Manchester Railway, Opening of the, 403
Sheffield and Rotherham Railway, Fatal Accident on the, 356
Sheila and Grenadier, New, the discovery of Capt. Billette, 199
Shinney, The, the Club of the True Highlanders, on Blackheath, 33
Shipwreck of a Dutch Indiaman, 39
Shipwreck of the Mary from Sydney, 259
Shipwrecks and Loss of Life, 407
Shrewsbury—View of, from the Severn, Tower on the Town Wall; Grammar School; Gateway of the Castle, 33; and Market place, 39
Shrewsbury Agricultural Show, Lines on the, 39
Shrewsbury, Oswestry, and Chester Junction Railway, Frightful Accident on the Works of the, 275
Sir Simon Segg, M.P., Farren as, 349
Slave Shackles raised from the Missouri, United States steamer, 292
Smithfield Cattle Club Dinner, 371
Smithfield Club Prize Cattle Show, &c., 359, 371, 375, 376, 394, 397, 398
Smiths, The Exeter, Prosecution against the Messrs., 55
Smith, Esq., The Late John William, 404
Smoking in Bed, The Danger of, 3
Smyrna, Great Destructive Fire at, 263; View of, 264
Snow in July, between Bangor and Bethesda, 87
Somes, Esq., M.P., Will of the late Joseph, 26
South Eastern Railway and the Board of Ordnance, 319
South Eastern Railway, Alarming Accident on the, 75; Accident on the, 165
Southend, Fatal Collision off, 195
Southey, Monument to, at Bristol, 291
South Midland, Northampton, and Leicestershire Railway Company, Forgeries on, 139
Southwell Minster Church, Interesting Discoveries at, 293; View of the Church and the Cists found in, 296
Southwark Election, 138, 151, 167; Return of Sir William Molesworth, 175
South Western Railway, Accident on the, 119
Spain, Our Treaties with, Slave-Grown Sugar, 38; Political Condition, &c., of, 198
Spain, Visit of the Prince in—The Prado at Madrid, Spanish Ladies, Manolas, Spanish Dancers, 194; Madrid, Grand Review at, 195; Going to the Ball Fight, 195; Andalusia, Balcony Scene at, 213; Madrid, The Royal Palace, Priests, 212; Madrid, The Queen passing La Buena Vista, in La Alcala, 244; Returning from Market, 244; Madrid, Prado and the Palace at, Costumes of the Prado, the Royal Palace, the Armoury, 273
Spanish Costumes, 244
Spencer, The Earl, Portrait of, 49; Spencer, the late Earl, Portrait of, from a recent Photograph, 229; Funeral of, 234; Memoir of, 239; The Will of, 266
Staffordshire, Frightful Murder at Alsager's Bank, 327
Stag Song, a Carol of Capel-court, 189
Stanhope, Earl, and the Corn-Laws, 353
Steam-boat Accident and Explosions, 75
Stock Broking Extraordinary, 27
Stolzenfels, The Palace of, on the Rhine, 124
Stuart de Rothsay, The late Lord, 315
Sudden Death (Case of Mr. Abrahams, of Kew), 324
Suicide, Extraordinary Attempts at (Case of Mr. Marpin), 263
Suicide by a Young Girl, 115; By Hanging to a Gun, 246; From Excessive Study, 155; Of a Young Lady in the Regent's canal, 231
Sunderland Election, 51, 67, 166, 119
Sunderland, Extraordinary Railway Express from, 114; Grand Dinner at, to G. Hudson, Esq., M.P., 263
Superstition in the Nineteenth Century, 119
Sussex (East), The Representation of, 131
Sutherland, His Grace the Duke of, Portrait of, 41
"Sweetmeat," The Winner of the Doncaster Plate, Portrait of, 229
Swindler, A Dashing one, 409
Swindon Railway Town, New Church at, 239
Swindon Station on the Great Western Railway, and View of New Swindon, 249

TAGLIONI, Mdlle, 7; Portrait of, 8
Taglioni's Farewell (by Kenny Meadows), 9
Taglioni, C. Grisi, L. Grahn, and Ceritto, in the New Ballet, La Quatre," at her Majesty's Theatre, 33
Tait, Rear-Admiral James Haldane, 126
Talbot, The Earl, Portrait of, 40
Temperance, The Progress of the Movement in Favour of, 165
Texas and Mexico, 118
Thames Royal Yacht Club—Fitzhardinge Cup Match, The, 11
Theatres, &c., 10, 26, 32, 42, 58, 74, 88, 90, 106, 122, 138, 155, 171, 186, 202, 215, 234, 253, 267, 282, 301, 314, 317, 330, 345, 348, 349, 366, 378, 394, 413
Thiers, M., Arrival of—Visits to the British Museum, Woolwich, &c., 251; Portrait of, &c., 225, 226
Tichborne, Bart., The Late Sir Henry, of Tichborne, Hants, 62
Tide, Lamentable Effects of the Late High, 371
Tierney, Bart., The Late Sir Matthew 275, 410
Tobacco Temperance Society, 209
Tollet, Esq., George, Portrait of, 41
Tom Thumb, General, 411, 412
The Disappearance of, 188; A Successor to, 195
Tory, The Ship, Drawing of, in the West India Docks, 333; Alleged Murder and Mutiny on board the Ship, 366, 331; The Alleged Murders on board the Ship, Fifth Examination of Capt. Johnstone, 385; Discharge of the Seamen, 391; Re-examination &c., of the Captain, charged with Three Murders, 391, 354, 406
Transportation, A Candidate for, 347
Travancore, Visit of the Rajah to Quilon, Madras, and View of the Procession, 356
Trent Valley Railway, 275, 311, 316, 327, 338
Trident, Her Majesty's Iron Steam-Frigate, the, 404
Trinity Church, Bishop's-road, Paddington, 208

UNEXPECTED FORTUNE, The Singular, 371
United States, Oregon and Texas, 228; Map of North America, 228; The President's Message, &c., 407
Upcott, The Late Mr. William, 219
Urban, Christian, the Late, 315

VALIANT, The Late Major General Sir Thomas, K.C.B., 6
Vallance v. the Duke of Brunswick (at the Croydon Assizes), 107
Vallance v. the Duke of Brunswick (at Nisi Prius), 324
Vauxhall Gardens again for Sale, 55; Balloon Ascent and Steeple-chase at, 199
Vectis, Yacht, Loss of the, off Bognor, 208
Venezuelan Minister, Sudden Death of the, 286
Verulam, The Earl of, 223
Volunteer Movement, The, 407
Vice Chancellor's Court, 55, 75
Villiers, Lady Adela, Mysterious Disappearance of, &c., 295; Elopement and Marriage of, 307

WADE, D.D., The late Rev. Arthur Savage, 323
Wade, Portrait, &c., of the late Mr. J. Augustine, the Poet and Composer, 45; Memoir of the late J. A., 58; the late J. A., 74
Wagborn, R.N., Lieut., Portrait of His Race with the Bombay Mail from Alexandria to London, Travelling Carriage, 293; Public Testimonial to, 384
Wales, the Prince of, Lines on the Birthday of his Royal Highness, 314
Wallace, Mr., the Composer of the New Opera of "Maritana," Portrait of, 333
Walworth, Another Fatal Affray at, 263
Ward, The Rev. Richard, 139
Warwick Assizes—Embezzlement by a Clerk, 379
Warwick Election, 259
Wasp, Murder and Piracy on Board the Brig, 323
Watch (Ladies'), Protector—Watch Guard manufactured for the Queen, 349
Watts, Dr. Bally's Statue of, 188
Watts, D.D., The Memorial of Dr., at Stoke Newington, 213
Weather, State of the, 103
Weather of 1845, in Connection with the Disasters of the Crops, 326
Webb, Esq., Jonas, Portrait of, 40
Week's Gossip, A, 363, 378, 387
Wellington-square, Fall of three Houses in, 3
Wellesley, The late Marquis of, Statue by Weekes, 246
Wellington, Silver Statue of the Duke of, 404; Statuette of his Grace by Count D'Orsay, 1, 2
Westminster Hall, Opening of the Cartoon Exhibition in, 45
Westminster Improvements, 199
Westminster School, Scene from "The Andria" of Terence, 359, 370
Western Super Mare Regatta, from the Sea, the Gasymede, the Lily of Doner, the Champion winning, 21
West Suffolk Election, 14, 23
Wharncliffe, Lord, Death of, 291, 402, 405; Portrait of, 404
Whirlwind at Rouen, Great Loss of Life from a, 130
Whitaham, Esq., George, Portrait of, 40
Wilde, Knt., The Marriage of Sir Thomas, 315
Will Forgers, The (Barber, &c.), 202
Winchester, Conflagration near, 147; View of the City of, Hospital of St. Cross, "The Hundred Menne's Hall," 173; Ruins of Wolvesley Castle and Palace, the St. John's, Meeting of the British Archæological Institute, 188
Window Frames, The (From the German of Freiligrath), by Lewis Filmore, 346
Windsor Election, 231, 250, 263, 295; The Affray at, 314, 323
Wiseman, Bart., The late Sir William Hoste, 149
Wittenberg, Luther's House, and Chamber at, 260; Melancthon's House at, 183
Wood, Esq., M.P., Benjamin, 125
Wood, The Late Sir Gabriel, 299
Woodcock, 324
Woodstock Election, 231, 250
Woolwich, The Lash at, Flogging of Marines at, 243
Woolwich, Terrific Accident in the Royal Arsenal at, Seven Persons Killed, 183
Woolwich Marshes, Experiments in, 346
"Woo-wou," or Silver Gibbons, 16
Wurtemburg, Summer Palace at, 164
Wurzburg, The Royal Palace, 133; Napoleon Saal and the Grand Staircase in the Palace at, 172
Wuzeer of Lahore, Death of Jowahir Singh, the Late, 338

YOUTHFUL Preacher at Liverpool 39
Yates, D.D. The Rev. William, 155

ZEDEKAUER, Maurice, 139

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 166.—Vol. VII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JULY 5, 1845. [Sixpence.
WITH SUPPLEMENT, GRATIS.

PUBLIC WEALTH AND PUBLIC WORKS.

"We have thrown away one of the finest sites in Europe," is the acknowledgment very recently made by Sir Robert Peel of the architectural meanness of that national disgrace, the National Gallery, in Trafalgar Square. The Premier spoke of some alterations which, he said, "might," perhaps, diminish its deformity; but the defects are beyond the reach of amendment: the whole structure is a failure, and, except total demolition and reconstruction, there is nothing, or so little that it is next to nothing, to be done with it. We should be afraid, too, if the improvements were trusted to the Government, or those the Government allows to mismanage this department, they would rather tend to make a bad matter worse. We look at the present, and cease to wonder at the past; what is being done now is done as badly as that which preceded it; the taste that could approve Fountains like dumb-waiters is not likely to soar much above Turrets like pepper-boxes. Well may Sir Robert Peel regret this throwing away "of the finest site in Europe;" looking at the Column, stunted of its proper height from fear or niggardliness, or perhaps a mixture of both, though there were no good reasons for either—the Fountains, which look like magnified squirts set on end in a cistern—and the National Gallery, which, to its external meanness, adds total unfitness for its purposes in all the internal arrangements—the Head of her Majesty's Government may well deplore the results of that carelessness and want of taste which make England the laughing-stock of Foreign nations in nearly all cases in which the Executive interferes in superintending public improvements.

But why, if Sir Robert Peel is so alive to the defects of these works, did he not speak the "word in season" that would have gone far towards ensuring a very different result? Was it that he "was not regularly called in," and, therefore, would not give "an opinion? Certain we are that if men of such immense influence as those who are called to form our Governments of both parties, were to interfere on such points—whether they are in office or out—they could do a great deal of good. Would Sir Robert Peel or Lord John Russell have allowed such a frittering away of money, had the works been at their own expense? Not for a moment. Then is it too much for the people, whom they are supposed to lead—or to wish to lead—to expect that they should interpose, in some degree, to protect them against the deplorable effects of parsimony, for which the public is never grateful, and the tasteless expenditure of the little appropriated to such improvements? "A blunder in stone and mortar" is not to be rectified, and the regret expressed after it is perpetrated, comes too late to be useful.

We allude to this subject because it is connected with that portion of the duty of a Government, which, in this country, no matter what party may be in power, is more inefficiently discharged than in any country in Europe. It has been brought under notice again by the recent motion of Mr. Wyse in the House of Commons; and though his object refers rather to the preservation of our historical and ecclesiastical antiquities than to the improvement of the system pursued by those who have the present management of our public works, still the utter indifference of our Legislators to anything but party contests or individual controversies, in which party interests may be involved, is the great cause of the deficiency of the Government in matters relating to Art generally, whether ancient or modern; it is this indifference which Mr. Wyse has frequently made very able attempts to awaken, and, we are willing to hope, with increasing success. For instance, it is something gained to find the Premier acknowledging the mischief that has been done in one case; it is the first step towards improvement for the future. With that negative consolation, we drop this part of the question, and turn to the other, which has great interest, though of a different kind—the preservation of our monuments of Antiquity, and the establishment of some museum for a collection of specimens of national Art.

Mr. Wyse, in his speech, gave a striking sketch of the destruction that has fallen on the beautiful monuments of antiquity, both in France and England. Here, the religious zeal of the Puritans—in France, the revolutionary fanaticism that took the form of hatred of all things connected with the Church or Monarchy, have swept away much that can never be restored. But the Vandalism of more modern times has, in England, been almost as mischievous. Many a sad destruction of gems of architectural skill may be traced to the labours recorded in the inscription that tells how such a church was "repaired and beautified" under the direction of the farmers or tradesmen who chanced to be churchwardens—well-intentioned, but utterly ignorant of what they were doing.

It is only lately that the Church itself has began to interest itself in Ecclesiastical Architecture and Decoration, and the effects are visible, rather in the improvement of the style of new fabrics, than the rescuing of our old specimens from decay. The finest restoration of an ancient church, as well remarked by a modern writer, is not the work of the Clergy, but of men of a pre-eminently worldly calling—the Lawyers of the Temple.

It is to inculcate a feeling for, and a knowledge of, National Art, as developed from the earliest ages down to the present time, that the Government is urged by Mr. Wyse to imitate the example of France, and found a Museum, in which a properly classified series of specimens of each age might be deposited, and, in connexion with it, to establish a commission, charged with the duty of preserving the historical monuments of the country from needless and wanton destruction, by seeing that the ruins of abbeys and halls, the tokens of the skill and wealth of our ancestors, are not used for quarries, as the Turks are said to have applied the ruins of the Greek temples—cutting their pillars up into millstones, and burning their marble for lime—for things quite as barbarous have been done in England, which is considered a highly civilised country. The proposition is of course rejected, with all the Parliamentary courtesies in which total indifference disguises itself, by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who bristles up as the defender of the public purse, whenever a demand is made on it for a purpose in which the people have an actual interest. Then the State is bankrupt, and has nothing to give. Better streets, improved buildings, more ventilation and drainage—for all these no money can be spared; to begin a public work, to carry it on generously and with credit, nay, even to finish it when begun—these things are impossible. Public walks and gardens, for the health and recreation of the pent-up denizens of the "million-peopled" cities and towns of the kingdom, are things scarcely to be thought of—the nation is poor, and must be economical.* Yet it is marvellous what sums can be poured out for any purpose the Government chooses to think necessary. Millions are wasted in an Affghan war to purchase disgrace and disaster, but ill redeemed; millions more are sunk in a contest with the Ameers of Scinde, and more millions still were ready to have been spent in a squabble about Oregon, a region that, it seems, cannot support even the few emigrants who have ventured on its bleak barrenness. For all these purposes it becomes a duty to be extravagant; for social improvement, for the encouragement of art, for the patronage of literature, the same Government cannot find any funds at all adequate; when an object is generous or magnificent, it cannot be attained. Now, as the money is the people's, we cannot see why Governments should be so reluctant to spend it for purposes of which the people would approve. Half a million properly bestowed, would produce a visible result, showing the nation something in exchange for it far better than a return of killed and wounded. But the art of using wealth at home is one our Governments have yet to learn; they are all skilled enough in raising it—there is no want of new taxes, no very great disposition to remit old ones; but they have no notion that national wealth can be better spent than in gunpowder. Hence the failures of public works, partly from needless parsimony, partly from mismanagement of the little given; and hence the summary dismissal of such a proposition as that of Mr. Wyse, which is nevertheless a good one, and will yet be carried into effect.

* We are even behind Spain in this respect. In "Cook's Sketches in Spain," we find this passage:—"There are steps taken in every part to keep up and augment those most useful appendages to large cities, the paseos, or public walks. There is scarcely a place where additions or new plans are not carrying on, amid all the distresses of the times. And what is done is executed with a degree of taste, combined with grandeur and solidity, which are admirable and peculiar to the country. A failure or badly-executed plan is never seen; and the public have the full benefit of everything that is done." Yet at the time this was written the Government of Spain was bankrupt and the country ravaged by a civil war!

STATUETTE OF THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON.—BY COUNT D'ORSAY.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

EQUESTRIAN STATUE OF THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON, BY COUNT D'ORSAY.

The Statuette, of which we this week present our readers with an engraving, has been for some little time on inspection at Messrs. Howell and James's, in Regent-street, and has attracted considerable notice, no less from its high merit as a most beautiful work of art, than from the circumstance of its being the production of Count D'Orsay, who has thus given another proof of the almost marvellous versatility of his genius. Although not more than two feet in height, the statue scarcely deserves its diminutive appellation; since there is a dignity pervading the entire composition which forces the spectator entirely to lose sight of its comparatively small proportions; indeed the subject has been treated in a manner so singularly effective, and at the same time so purely artistic, that we opine no fitter or more imposing design could be selected for a colossal statue of "the hero of a hundred fights." It would command general admiration.

The Duke is represented as watching the progress of a battle. He holds the reins in both hands, which are in repose, although ready to be put in muscular action at an instant. In the right hand he also holds a telescope. The entire pose of the figure on the horse evinces consummate power of conception. The steed may be supposed to have become wearied with remaining for some in one position, and is straining his legs for ease, as he paws the ground with the off fore-one. This arrangement, whilst it is purely natural, assists the pyramidal outline of the composition. By the bending of the head another great effect is also gained—the animal becomes more spirited in the man: in no point can the statue be regarded so that the Duke does not at once rivet the attention, even immediately in front and below the figures. The likeness is admirably preserved; taken, of course, at the period of the most active campaigns in which his genius was concerned; and, we understand, the resemblance is highly extolled by all those who can readily call his features, at that time, to mind. But, perhaps, the greatest point of excellence in this performance is the talent which Count d'Orsay has shown in overcoming the ill effect, as regards elegance, usually produced by the costume of modern times. The Duke is here habited in his plain military undress frock and sash—the manner, by the way, in which all statues should be executed—and yet nothing can be more purely classical than the handling of the subject.

His Grace has expressed himself in terms of the highest admiration of the statue; and a cast from it, in silver, is nearly perfected for the gallery at Apsley House—as well as of the companion statue of Napoleon, also by Count d'Orsay, and which, our readers may remember, appeared in the Exhibition of the Royal Academy two years ago.

We trust that means will be taken to place copies of this charming work of art within the reach of all who admire the genius displayed in its production, or the illustrious individual whose resemblance it so excellently produces.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

Among the many assertions made by members of the Chambre des Pairs, in the matter of the Bibliothèque du Roi, the abstraction of a distinguished literateur that an autograph of Molière had disappeared, has excited much controversy in the salons. The assigned cause of its loss is that it must have been amongst the old papers consigned to be sold by the Minister in 1825. The fact is that the decision of 1829 authorised the sale, after examination, of parchments supposed to be valueless. The sale was effected by persons whose honour and probity are known to be above suspicion, and the signature of Molière could not have been confounded with writings "placed in the basket." It is asserted that four manuscripts bearing his signature were carefully placed in safety, and among these was the one alluded to by M. Lherbette. The Administration has determined to vindicate itself by all legal means. Things here are so intensely dull, that even this affair has tended to promote a slight diversion in the circles still left in society. I stated to you in my last letter, that the chief adherents of the Duc de Bourdeax had been arraigned for the distribution of political tracts and sums of money to produce recruits. The trial is now finished, and the verdict has been given against the ancien regime. The Duc des Cars, the Prince de Montmorency, the Chevalier de Lépenois et Charbonnier de la Guesmerie, have been condemned to pay severe fines, and to be imprisoned for one year; and that the society of which they were leading officers, Œuvre de Saint Louis, be considered illegal. The defendants have moved for a new trial in the Cour Royale.

Another religion has been started, which has gained several proselytes: faiths here are as plentiful as blackberries: no danger to true religion ever results from the various novel doctrines. A new apostle appeared last week; no wonderful event preceded his advent. His name is Jean Journet—his beard is short and curled, slightly strung with silver—his general appearance is striking—his dress is a brown gabardine; this imparts a dignified air, and should he fail in his present mission, he might make a very comfortable living by sitting as a model to artists. Owenism is the basis of the new creed, but there are, as usual with all new religions, still laws of

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

The Irish Banking Bill was read a third time and passed

GAME-LAWS.—The Earl of HARDWICKE intimated, on behalf of Lord DACRE, that it was not his intention to proceed this session with his Bill for altering the Game-laws.

THE COAL TRADE.—The Marquis of LONDONDERRY moved for some returns relative to the coasting trade, with a view of calling the attention of the Government to the danger of that nursery for seamen being destroyed by the cheap rate at which coals might be carried by railways.—The Earl of DALHOUSIE said that, if the coasting trade were in danger, it must be very remote; and the returns would show that the coasting trade had increased. There was, however, no doubt that coals would be delivered in London at a cheaper rate, as railroads would increase new sources to be opened.—After a long discussion, the returns were granted.

The Gaming and Wagers Bill went through Committee; and the house adjourned at eight o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

THIRD READINGS OF RAILWAY BILLS.—The following bills were read a third time and passed:—The London and South Western (No. 1) Metropolitan Extension Railway Bill; the Erewash Valley Railway Bill (No. 2); the Irish Great Western Railway Bill; the Norwich and Brandon Railway Bill; and the Glasgow Junction Railway Bill.

COMMONS INCLOSURE BILL.—LORD LINCOLN having moved the order of the day for going into Committee on this bill, Mr. SHARMAN CRAWFORD moved as an amendment that the house should go into Committee on the bill that day three months. Mr. HUME opposed the bill on the ground that it was an invasion of the rights of the poor. A long discussion ensued, and LORD LINCOLN, in reply, argued that the bill protected rather than infringed the rights of the poor. A division took place, and the house resolved, by 121 to 11 to go into Committee on the bill. The discussion in Committee occupied the remainder of the night. Nothing of importance occurred up to the adjournment, which did not take place until a late hour.

MISCELLANEOUS BUSINESS.—COMMONS.

NEW WRITS.—A new writ has been moved for the borough of Abingdon, vacant by the acceptance of Sir F. Thesiger of the office of her Majesty's Attorney General. Also for the city of Exeter, in consequence of the death of Sir William Follett, late Attorney-General.

THIRD READINGS OF RAILWAY BILLS.—The following bills have been read a third time and passed:—The Scottish Midland Junction Railway; Cockermouth and Workington Railway; Wear Valley Railway; Edinburgh and Northern Railway (No. 2); Middlesborough and Redcar Railway; Wakefield, Pontefract, and Goole Railway; Newport and Pontypool Railway; Preston and Wyre Railway Branches; London and South Western Railway (No. 2); the Runcorn and Preston Brook Railway; and the Irish Great Western Railway.

FOREIGN LOTTERIES BILL.—This bill has been read a second time.

DOG STEALING BILL.—This bill has been read a third time and passed.

ALLEGED CORRUPTION ON THE PART OF THE BOARD OF ORDNANCE.—A Select Committee has been appointed to inquire into an allegation to the effect that an officer of the Board of Ordnance had corruptly used the influence of his office in regard to the disposal of some shares in the South Eastern Railway

PROPERTY INVESTED IN RAILWAYS.—An interesting Return has been published of the amount of property invested in Railways. There are no less than 5100 names of persons who are supposed to have subscribed £2000 or more. The aggregate sum subscribed by these persons amounts to £61,603,707. The average is, consequently, about £10,000 for each. This is correct to the nearest hundred pounds. The subscribing to such large subscriptions are invariably made up of several sums subscribed to different railways. Thus, the largest sum in the list standing opposite one name is £670,300 (Francis Mills, Esq.); but the amount of thirteen subscriptions to different railways, varying in amount from £8900 to £287,400. It is to be remarked, that many of the men whose names are put down for large sums are the representatives of smaller ones supposed to have subscribed £2000 or more. The aggregate sum subscribed by these persons amounts to £61,603,707. The average is, consequently, about £10,000 for each. This is correct to the nearest hundred pounds. The subscribing to such large subscriptions are invariably made up of several sums subscribed to different railways. Thus, the largest sum in the list standing opposite one name is £670,300 (Francis Mills, Esq.); but the amount of thirteen subscriptions to different railways, varying in amount from £8900 to £287,400. It is to be remarked, that many of the men whose names are put down for large sums are the representatives of smaller ones supposed to have subscribed £2000 or more. The aggregate sum subscribed by these persons amounts to £61,603,707. The average is, consequently, about £10,000 for each. This is correct to the nearest hundred pounds. The subscribing to such large subscriptions are invariably made up of several sums subscribed and the investment of their savings. Many knelt in prayer to the Great Disposer of Events, seeking his protection and succour, and as the clergy passed, rows of humbled and desolate beings fell at their feet, craving their blessing.

ST. ROCKS, QUEBEC, AFTER THE LATE FIRE.—SKETCHED BY A CORRESPONDENT.

The writer of a letter from Quebec, in the Montreal Track, says:—"I rode this morning through the ruined suburbs—a sight mastering all description. A vast tract of land, with standing walls and chimneys only to be seen. Upwards of twelve hundred houses are supposed to have been burnt, and the estates of these are not only houseless but pennyless too. All the space (including the Queen's wood-yard and St. Paul's Market) burnt eighteen years ago, has been again laid in ruins."

One of our own Correspondents writes from Battlefield:—"Unfortunate Quebec has been visited with a sad calamity. St. Rock's Suburb, which had gone a-head so enormously, is now a solitary plain, reduced to ashes, with nothing remaining except the chimneys."

To another Correspondent we are indebted for the annexed sketch of the scene of desolation, it was taken by W. S. Sewell, Esq., Sheriff of Quebec.

OPENING OF THE GILLESPIE MONUMENT.

On Tuesday week (the 24th ult., St. John's Day) the Monument lately erected to Major General Sir Robert Gillespie, at Comber (his native town), in the county of Down, was opened, with a very interesting ceremony. It may be necessary to explain that the first intimation of erecting a Memorial to this eminent officer was warmly received and responded to by the Marquises of Londonderry and Downshire, Lord Castlereagh, and the leading nobility and gentry of the county of Down, of which Gillespie was a native a splendid array of whom not only subscribed handsomely, but agreed to become patrons. None, however, took up the project more warmly and enthusiastically than the Military Secretary, Col. Elliot Cairnes, K.H., to whose indefatigable exertions its completion is mainly attributable. Great attention has also been manifested by Percy Boyd, Esq., Civil Secretary, and by the Treasurers, the Rev. R. F. Jex Blake, and John Andrews, Esq., J.P., the respected agent of the Noble Marquis in whose estate Comber is situated, and which can now boast of a specimen of artistic skill and taste not inferior to that displayed in any town in the province. The Masonic body, of which the late General Gillespie was a member, had, both in this country and elsewhere, extended their patronage and assistance in forwarding this tribute to the memory of their brother.

After the examination of various designs, the Committee decided in favour of that of Mr. Johnston, of Belfast, and which, now when finished, fully bears out the sound judgment and good taste evinced by the Committee in their selection. The Monument itself is a beautiful Grecian pillar, fifty-five feet high, tastefully divided into compartments, on each of which is sculptured a representation of one of the principal scenes of Gillespie's brilliant career, and surmounted by a statue of the hero himself, standing in a graceful attitude, with his sword in his right hand. On the one side of the monument, near the base, is the following inscription:—

"Robert Rollo Gillespie, Major-General, and Knight Commander of the Most Honourable the Military Order of the Bath, born at Comber, A.D. 1766, after a brief but glorious career, fell in battle, before the fortress of Kalinga, on the 31st of October, 1814. His last words were—'One shot more for the honour of Down.' A Monument at Meerut, in the East, marks the grave where his ashes rest. A Statue, in the Cathedral of St Paul, in the City of London, voted by both Houses of Parliament, attests the gratitude of the nation. His own countrymen, proud of the achievements which have shed lustre upon his native land, with a few of his old companions in arms, have raised this Column, within that county which claimed his latest remembrance, to perpetuate his memory at the place of his birth."

On the South Panel is sculptured, in bas relief, various Masonic devices, beautifully grouped; and on the East, also in bas relief, are the Gillespie Arms, quartered with the Ribbon and Badge of the Most Honourable Military Order of the Bath, with the motto, "Tria Juncta in Uno," and surrounded by military trophies. The North Panel is blank; it is in contemplation, however, to have a sculptured one inserted there, commemorative of Gillespie's funeral, if sufficient funds can be raised for the purpose.

Early on the morning of Tuesday, rain fell in torrents; but, as the day advanced, the sky cleared up, and the weather became more propitious. The town of Comber was crowded, and yet, notwithstanding, Lodge after Lodge of Masons, (35 were present) accompanied by large multitudes of persons of the craft, continued to pour into the town, until the Square, and every street which gave a view of the Monument, became completely blocked up.

It was calculated, by military men and others, that there was not fewer present than between 25,000 and 30,000 people, and this dense mass, though composed of persons of various shades of religious and political opinions, met and separated without the slightest disturbance: indeed, the greatest harmony prevailed throughout the proceedings. The Newtownards amateur band was present, and enlivened the scene by playing several Masonic and other airs in a very creditable style.

About three o'clock, Colonel Cairnes, and several of the gentlemen who had been most active in raising the Monument, having ascended the platform, the Rev. Townley Blackwood proposed the first Resolution, declaring the pleasure and pride of the County Down men in having completed the work they were assembled to inaugurate. Colonel Cairnes, who appeared in the insignia of a Freemason, seconded this Resolution in a speech, and was loudly cheered. Alexander Grant, Esq., of Derry, then addressed the assembly in an eloquent speech. The thanks of the meeting to the Marquis of Londonderry, for his assistance, were then proposed by Percy Boyd, Esq., seconded by Colonel Cairnes, and carried with acclamation. The vast crowd were then addressed by Quartermaster J. Mansley (Half pay, 8th Hussars), W. M. Hamilton, Esq., of Dublin, and Carew O'Dwyer, Esq.; each speaker advocating, with heart-felt eloquence, the claims of "The Illustrious Gillespie."

The Rev. R. F. Jex Blake, after alluding at some length to the successful termination of the labours of the Committee in the erection of such a Memorial to the actions of their departed townsman, to the harmony and good feeling that had characterised the proceedings of the day, cautioned the multitude against indulging in ardent spirits, and advised them to leave the town for their homes without delay.

The proceedings were then terminated by the Newtownards band playing the National Anthem; after which the immense assemblage gradually dispersed.

INAUGURATION OF THE GILLESPIE MONUMENT, AT COMBER.

CANNEL COAL VASE.

The fine variety of Coal known as "Cannel," is now employed, at a moderate cost, as a substitute for black marble, for the pedestals of statues, plinths, inkstands, time-piece cases, &c. It is worked with comparative ease; being turned out of the block by means of the lathe, and the tools are similar to those employed in cutting wood or brass. We have engraved a specimen of this artistical manufacture, which is of much higher merit than any yet named. The material was obtained from the Coal-works on the Rotherham-road, about one mile and a half from Sheffield. The design is an elegant Vase, or rather patera, placed on a fluted column of the same material; the whole being eleven inches in height, and the Vase nine and five-eighths inches in diameter: in the centre of the interior is a small circular plate of silver, bearing the following inscription:—

CANNEL COAL VASE.

"This Vase, made of Cannel Coal, found on an estate of his Grace the Duke of Norfolk, is submitted for the inspection of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, by the Maker, John Dalaway, 1845."

A few days since, in answer to an application made in the proper quarter, Mr. Dalaway received permission to forward the Vase to Buckingham Palace for Prince Albert's inspection; and his Royal Highness was so pleased with this beautiful specimen of native material and manufacture, that he caused it to be placed in the Palace; and the artist has since received a cheque for an amount which he considers a handsome purchase, coupled with high commendation of his genius. The Vase is certainly a most beautiful work; and we are happy to chronicle this additional instance of the Prince's well-directed patronage of British art.

PRINCE ALBERT LAYING THE FOUNDATION STONE OF ST. MARY'S HOSPITAL, PADDINGTON.

LAYING THE FOUNDATION STONE OF ST. MARY'S (MARYLEBONE AND PADDINGTON) HOSPITAL, BY PRINCE ALBERT.

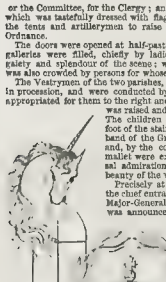
On Saturday last, the ceremony of laying the foundation stone of St. Mary's Hospital was performed by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, that day (the anniversary of Queen Victoria's Coronation) having been named by the Prince for the occasion. The site of the intended building is at the North end of Cambridge-place, Cambridge-terrace, not far from the Terminus of the Great Western Railway, and until lately it formed a part of one of the reservoirs of the Grand Junction Water Works Company; an area of 200 feet by 230 feet, being appropriated for the purposes of the Hospital. The portion of the building about to be erected will accommodate 150 in-door patients, and is so planned as to admit of being extended to receive three times that number; whilst, there will be, besides, extensive accommodation for the dispensing, or out-door departments.

MALLET.

The arrangements for the reception of visitors to witness the ceremony were planned by the Honorary Architect to the Hospital, Mr. Thomas Hopper; and were carried out under the superintendence of Mr. George Russell French, Architect. Advantage was taken of the steep bank of the reservoir to construct the seats in the form of galleries for upwards of 1400 spectators; and a spacious platform was also erected, capable of accommodating several hundreds more; the whole of the vast area being protected from the weather by an immense marquee raised upon lofty poles (supplied by Mr. Edgington, who handsomely contributed 30 guineas to the charity), and decorated with the Royal Standard, Union, and other rich flags. On the top of the bank next Cambridge-place, and on a level with the street, were raised the tents for the entrance of the visitors, or the Committee, for the Clergy; and, lastly, the reception-tent for the Prince, which was tastefully dressed with flags and standards kindly lent (as were also the tents and artillerymen to raise them) for the occasion, by the Board of Ordnance.

The doors were opened at half-past one o'clock, and soon after that hour the galleries were filled, chiefly by ladies, whose presence added greatly to the gaiety and splendour of the scene: whilst the open space beyond the platform was also crowded by persons for whose accommodation benches were provided.

The Vestrymen of the two parishes, headed by their respective beadles, arrived in procession, and were conducted by members of the Committee to the seats appropriated for them to the right and left of the platform, the centre of which was raised and parted off in front of the foundation-stone.



TROWEL.

The children of the charity schools were ranged at the foot of the staircase. Until the arrival of the Prince, the band of the Grenadier Guards performed various pieces, and, by the courtesy of the Committee, the trowel and mallet were exhibited to the visitors, and excited universal admiration at the elegance of the design, and the beauty of the workmanship.

Precisely at three o'clock, the arrival of the Prince, at the chief entrance, accompanied by the Marquis of Exeter, Major-General Sir Edward Bowater, and Mr. G. E Anson, was announced by the hoisting of the Royal Standard over the Prince's pavilion, and responded to by the band striking up the National Anthem, and by the cheers of the numerous persons assembled outside to witness his Royal Highness's arrival

The Prince and his suite came in two of the Royal carriages and four, with outriders, and grooms in state liveries.

The Prince, on alighting from his carriage, was received at the entrance by the chairman of the day, Earl Manvers, the Earl of Beverley, and the honorary secretary, Mr. William Tatham, by whom his Royal Highness and suite were conducted into the reception-tent, where were assembled the Lord Bishop of London (a zealous friend of the charity, and his Lordship's chaplain, the Rev. C. B. Dalton; the Dean of Chichester, Mr. Bagot Cockburn, the Rev. A. M. Campbell, and Mr. H. M. Kemshead, trustees (the remaining trustee, Capt. Madan, being prevented by illness from attending); Mr. Charles Wardell, Mr John Cox, and Mr. Charles Harrison, Vice-Presidents; the Rev. J. S. Boone, the Rev. E. Sedbell, Mr. G. L. Baker, Mr. J. B Brown, Mr. S. Lane, and Mr. Spencer Smith, forming the Committee of Arrangement; and Mr. Thomas Hopper, the Honorary Architect.

His Royal Highness remained some time in the Pavilion, inspecting the different plans, which were explained to him by the Noble Chairman, the Hon. Secretary, and the Hon. Architect, to whom the Prince was graciously pleased to express his approval of the designs as well as of the trowel, mallet, and square, intended to be used in the ceremony. In compliance with a request conveyed through the noble Chairman, the Prince condescended to permit one of the male wards to be named after his Royal Highness; and also promised to endeavour to obtain the sanction of her Majesty's name to be given to one of the female wards.

The Prince was then conducted by the Earls Manvers and Beverley, the Hon. Secretary, and the Hon. Architect, and followed by the Bishop and the gentlemen previously named, to a large outer tent, in which were assembled the Acting Committee of the Hospital and the Clergy of the two parishes, including the Hon. and Rev. Robert Walpole, the Rev. Dr. Knapp, the Rev. George Pocock, the Rev. W. J. Hutching, the Rev. D. A. Beaufort, the Rev. J. Miles, the Rev. —— Hayward, the Rev. F. H. Newenton, Rev. P. J. Ouvry, Rev. — Buckley, Rev. H. J. Phillips, and many others, and deputations from the vestries of the two parishes, and Mr. William Bird, the Contractor. These gentlemen formed in procession after the Prince and his suite, who proceeded very slowly down the broad staircase leading to the central platform, amidst the enthusiastic cheers of the assembled thousands, which the Prince most courteously acknowledged, the band playing the Coburg March.

Having arrived at the Foundation-Stone, the noble Chairman, addressing the Prince, said, that the pleasing task devolved upon him to express his utmost gratitude for the condescension of his Royal Highness in consenting to lay the first stone of the Hospital about to be erected, which he sincerely hoped might prove a blessing to the poor of the districts for which it was intended.

The Bishop of London then delivered an eloquent and impressive address, in which he also expressed the sense of gratitude felt by that large assembly at the presence of the Consort of her Most Gracious Majesty in aiding them in the great work of Christian charity, then about to be commenced, for the relief of the sufferings of those who laboured under an aggravation of ills when poverty was allied to sickness. In regard to the funds, his Lordship observed, although a sufficient sum had been collected to commence the building, yet much more remained to be done to carry out and maintain the good work before them; and his Lordship trusted that all who were assembled would assist to promote the cause of the Charity. At the conclusion of his address, the Right Reverend Prelate read a prayer appropriate for the occasion, followed by a Collect and the Lord's Prayer, in which the Prince and the assembly joined.

The Honorary Secretary, with the permission of his Royal Highness, then read aloud the inscription cut upon the stone:—

THIS STONE WAS LAID
BY HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS
PRINCE ALBERT,
CONSORT OF HER MAJESTY
QUEEN VICTORIA,
ON THE 24TH OF JUNE, 1845

The trowel was then handed by the Hon. Architect, Mr. Hopper, to the Prince, who proceeded to spread the mortar, which was presented on a polished mahogany board by Mr. G. R. French, architect; and the stone, a block of grey granite, weighing one ton and a half, was lowered into its place amidst loud applause, the band at the same time playing "God save the Queen," which was sung by the children of the schools and the persons present, the Prince and the Bishop joining in the anthem.

The Hon. Architect then placed the square upon the stone and assisted the Prince to ascertain that it was correctly laid; and, having also presented the mallet, the Prince struck with it the four corners of the stone; and a bottle, containing coins of the present reign, and an inscription, having been presented by the Hon. Secretary, was placed by his Royal Highness in a cavity formed in the stone, the Hon. Architect proclaiming aloud that it was "properly laid." The 41st Psalm was then given out by the Bishop, and admirably sung by the children and those present; after which his Lordship pronounced the benediction; and the appeal of Mr Hopper to the vast assembly for three "hearty English cheers for the Queen and her illustrious Consort," was answered by three times three cheers, and "one cheer more."

His Royal Highness was conducted, on his return from the platform, with the same procession and ceremonies as on his arrival, and was attended to his carriage by the Noble Lords and Mr. Tatham; and on his Royal Highness graciously signifying his acceptance, the box, containing the trowel, square, and mallet, was placed in one of the Royal carriages. The Prince, who looked remarkably well, was loudly cheered on his departure.

In the evening, the subscribers and friends of the Institution dined together at the Freemasons' Tavern, Prince George of Cambridge kindly taking the Chair; and the efficiency and condescension which his Royal Highness evinced on the occasion, prove that he is following the excellent example of his illustrious parent, in being ever ready to come forward to the call of charity.

We are happy to add, that, since the meeting, the Earls Beverley and Manvers have doubled the amount of their subscriptions.

DESCRIPTION OF THE TROWEL, MALLET, AND SQUARE.

These very beautiful implements were designed by the Honorary Architect, Mr. Hopper; and were most ably executed by Messrs. Garrard, of the Haymarket.

The Trowel is silver gilt, some of the parts being delicately relieved. The ornament at the end of the handle is the symbol of sovereign power and command, the handle itself is composed of the oak, shamrock, and thistle—their union indicating strength; the handle and blade are connected by the Nautilus, the symbol of creation; and on the blade are, raised in slight relief, two cornucopiæ, filled with healing and medicinal herbs; the Anchor, which unites the horns of plenty, is the emblem of security, under the star of Prince Albert. At the back of the blade is an inscription.—"St. Mary's Hospital, 24th June, 1845."

The Mallet is made of ebony, having at the end of the handle, the Crown, and around the neck is the Echinus, the symbol of productiveness: this ornament is in silver.

THE LATE SIR WILLIAM FOLLETT M.P.—(SEE NEXT PAGE).

The SCHARE (made of oak) is the instrument of correctness, and bears on it the supporters of the Royal arms, in silver, united by a laurel crown (silver), encircling the coronet (gilt) of Prince Albert.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS, RECENTLY DECEASED.

SIR WILLIAM WEBB FOLLETT.

In our late impression last week, we communicated the painful intelligence of the death on that day (Saturday, June 28) of the Right Hon. Sir William Webb Follett, M.P., her Majesty's Attorney-General; an event that has deprived society of a most exemplary man, the Legislature of an eloquent and valued member, and the Bar of its brightest ornament. Protracted illness and long suffering, which neither change of climate nor relaxation could alleviate, had prepared the public for the melancholy result. At the period of his decease, Sir William was in his 47th year, having been born at Topsham, in Devon, on the 2nd December, 1798, the son of Benjamin Follett, Esq., by his wife, the daughter of John Webb, Esq., of Kinsale. His father, Mr. Benjamin Follett, held, in early life, a Captaincy in the 13th Regiment; but ill health, the consequence of much arduous service in the West Indies, causing him to leave the army, he became a timber-merchant at Topsham, and there resided, in the highest respectability, until his death, at the age of 70, in 1833, just after his son had obtained the rank of King's Counsel.

The education of Sir William Follett, interrupted by indications of the fatal malady which embittered his life, was commenced under Dr. Lempriere, the well-known author of the "Classical Dictionary," then Master of the Exeter Grammar School, followed up by the private tuition of the Rev. Mr. Hutchison, Curate of Heavitree, and completed at Trinity College, Cambridge, where Mr. Follett took the degree of B.A., in 1818. In Michaelmas Term 1814, he had entered himself of the Inner Temple; in 1821 he commenced practice as a Pleader, and in 1824 was called to the Bar.

His rise to professional distinction was rapid, and at a very early period of his forensic career we find him successfully opposing Mr. Baron Parke, then in the meridian of his fame, in a case of great importance respecting the right of the Coroner to exclude the public from the deliberations of his court.

In equity, as well as in common-law, and on the Western Circuit, Mr. Follett's practice became very extensive, and there was scarcely a case of importance in which his advocacy was not sought by one side or the other. In 1833, as we have already mentioned, he obtained a silk gown; and, in the following year, on the formation of Sir Robert Peel's brief Administration, became Solicitor-General, receiving likewise the honour of knighthood. In 1835, he was first returned for the city of Exeter, which he had contested at the election occurring immediately after the Reform Bill. In 1841, he resumed the duties of Solicitor-General; and, in 1844, succeeded Sir Frederick Pollock in the Attorney-Generalship.

Forensic distinction is seldom the precursor of parliamentary success, but it was otherwise with Sir William Follett. His first speech, delivered on the occasion of Lord John Russell's resolution for appropriating the surplus revenues of the Irish Church, at once gained him the consideration of the House of Commons; and many a subsequent display, fraught with eloquence and erudition, extended his senatorial reputation.

Sir William married, in 1830, Jane Mary, niece of Dr. Giffard, so long connected with the Standard newspaper; and eldest daughter of Sir Ambrose Hardinge Giffard, Chief Justice of Ceylon, the representative of the Giffards of Brightley, one of the most ancient families in Devon; and by that lady, who survives him, he has left a family.

Though long anticipated, the death of this eminent lawyer and estimable man is not the less regretted. At the Bar, in Parliament, with the public, he was a general favourite. He was a most striking instance that it is possible to attain to eminence without incurring the dislike of those who are outstripped in the race. It is not always true, that

> "He who surpasses or subdues mankind,
> Must look down on the hate of those below."

Sir W. Follett could not have a public enemy; there was something so engaging in his whole demeanour that it disarmed even envy. He was favoured with many natural advantages, among which, unhappily, good health could not be reckoned; his countenance was excessively pleasing, his action graceful, and his voice one of great sweetness; this, united to his legal acquirements, and his singular power of making the statement of the most intricate circumstances clear, precise, and intelligible to every one, rendered him one of the very best advocates of the day. In logical arrangement and perspicuity he was equal to Lord Lyndhurst. The law, as a profession, has sustained a great loss by the death of the Attorney-General. We subjoin a feeling tribute to his memory:—

SIR WILLIAM FOLLETT.

BY GEORGE RAYMOND, ESQ.

Gloria Romanæ, Quantillaque, togæ.

Brilliant and brief, thy mortal course is run;
And all that earth could yield thee, nobly won!
Matured honours deck'd thy vernal day,
And human sceptres could no more repay;
Grace still be thine, at Heaven's behest, to share
Diviner glories which await thee there!

Beam still, thy bright example from the skies,
On young ambition, that would nobly rise, —
That, heaven-inspired, now are bursting o'er thy tomb,
And vainly question thine untimely doom,
May pay thee worthier honour than the tear,
And strive to emulate thy life's career.

In vain invoke we the forensic gown,
To walk with spirits mightier in renown;
Whether undaunted Somers we retrace;
Whether recall accomplished Murray's grace;
Whether on Scott, the erudite, we gaze,
Or radiant Stowell of our peaceful days.

Wide of all limit was thy proud report,
The antique Hall, the Senate, or the Court;
Nor to thy native land alone confined
Was the rich yielding of thy fruitful mind,
But like a bird which on its wing sustains
Th' Arabian perfume to the Arctic plains.

Though not in sight, success will yet await
The minds that labour—hearts that emulate;
Nature instructs us; for the new-born day
Is faint and feeble in his orient way,
But constant to his path, his course fulfils,
And sheds his glory o'er exulting hills.
As one by one, the lesser bodies pour
Their crescent light when once the day is o'er,
So, Follett, now shall each thine leader train,
Start into being, and divide thy reign.

What, though unseen, to thine example still,
The young shall exercise and shape the will,
As to the breeze bow down the waving fields,
Or to the viewless wind the cedar yields.

So must be caution'd, 'tis the part of lore
To make us better—happier than before;
Not stored alone, but wise as we discern;
Nor wise alone, but holier as we learn.

Then, let not youth be careless of to-day,
As soulless insects in the sunbeams play;
Let him be sure he would misuse
Time, as allotted only to amuse;
Wary its loss—the treachery, the pow'r,
The thankless dalliance of one single hour.

MAJOR-GENERAL SIR THOMAS VALIANT, K.C.B.

This gallant officer died of cholera at his residence, in Fort William, on the 22d May. His was a distinguished career for upwards of forty years. He entered the army in 1804, became Lieutenant in 1805, Captain in 1817, Major in 1821, Lieutenant-Colonel in 1828, and Colonel in 1838. In 1805 and 1806, he was engaged in active service in Guzerat; and in 1809, participated in the campaign against the Sikh Chief, Sayland, the Naval Commander-in-Chief, took the Fort of Kurrachee. He subsequently served throughout Lower and Upper Scinde, and in Affghanistan; the distinguished part he played in the Gwalior Campaign, is yet fresh in the memory of our readers.

Now Ready, Price Eighteen Shillings, Vol. VI. of THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

Elegantly bound in cloth and gold, gilt edges, rich in illustrations of the Passing events of the last Six Months, forming a most complete and valuable ILLUSTRATED CHRONOLOGY; together with a mass of useful and highly interesting articles on Art, Literature, and Science.—May be obtained, by order, of all Booksellers, &c., in the Kingdom, as also all the previous Volumes. Vol. I., 21s.; Vols. II., III., IV., V. and VI., 18s. each.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, July 6.—Seventh Sunday after Trinity—Old Midsummer Day.
MONDAY, 7.—Thomas à Beckett.—Watches invented, 1477.
TUESDAY, 8.—Fine Insurances cease.—6—9, Shrewsbury Wool Fair.
WEDNESDAY, 9.—Earl Grey retired from the Ministry, 1834.
THURSDAY, 10.—Length of day, 16h. 18min.—Calvin born, 1509.
FRIDAY, 11.—Old St. Peter's.—All day, or twilight continued.
SATURDAY, 12.—Erasmus died, 1563.—Confederation of the Rhine, 1806.

HIGH WATER at London-bridge, for the Week ending July 12.

Monday		Tuesday		Wednesday		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday.
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
3 39	3 57	4 12	4 29	4 44	5 2	5 21	5 38	5 56	6 16	6 41	7 4

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"J. P."—Runcorn, should consult the "Penny Cyclopædia," art. "Civil List". We have not space for quotation.

"Gobet" states that he and a friend saw the comet on Saturday evening, June 7, at half-past 9 p.m., between Thornton and Halifax; the day previous to that on which Mr. Jones saw the comet at Chelsea. It had, however, been previously seen by M. Colla, at Parma, on the 2nd.

"Peter Puzzlewig."—The Zoological Society has not named the day for the show of domestic poultry, in 1846.

"Inquirer."—See our Number of last week. The first named author is in good health.

"A Subscriber," Southend.—We have not room, at present, for the illustration.

"H. A. G.," Cambridge.—The portrait was copied from the print after Pickersgill's painting. In the other case we relied upon the artist whom we dispatched to Cumbridge.

"A Cork Subscriber."—It is stated that the odour of Russia leather shavings will keep away the bookworm from books; or camphor, cedar, or either of the dispellents of insects, generally.

"A Subscriber."—Our "Edinburgh Journal" first appeared in Feb. ruary, 1832, nearly ten years subsequent to the commencement of "The Mirror."

"Three Subscribers."—We do not voluntarily decide wagers, but, we consider that neither A nor B has named the best singer.

"Enquirer."—Neither A nor B will be liable to the Income Tax, as each possesses but £160 per annum.

"A Subscriber," Westwald, is thanked for the plan of Quebec.

"Charles," Newark.—A Parliament ceases to exist after seven years, under the Statute of George I., commonly known as the Septennial Act. The present Parliament was elected in June and July, 1841, and, unless previously dissolved, will cease to exist in 1848.

"J. D."—We will not cease to advocate "the preservation of peace, especially between England and America;" and we are happy to learn from our correspondent 'Merchants' Exchange, New York' that the pacific spirit is spreading throughout the masses of the United States.

"A Reader," Sunderland.—The late Lord Byron had glossy dark brown hair, which hung in long curls; but, at the period of his death, his hair had become thin and almost grey.

"A Traveller," Highgate.—Camberwell lies three miles south from London; the parish contains some 40,000 inhabitants, among whom are many persons of the Statist of George I., commonly known as the Septennial Act. The present Parliament was elected in June and July, 1841, and, unless previously dissolved, will cease to exist in 1848.

"J. D."—We will not cease to advocate "the preservation of peace, especially between England and America;" and we are happy to learn from our correspondent 'Merchants' Exchange, New York' that the pacific spirit is spreading throughout the masses of the United States.

"A Reader," Sunderland.—The late Lord Byron had glossy dark brown hair, which hung in long curls; but, at the period of his death, his hair had become thin and almost grey.

"A Traveller," Highgate.—Camberwell lies three miles south from London; the parish contains some 40,000 inhabitants, among whom are many persons of wealth and consideration. Grove and Denmark Hills are pleasant localities.

"Chronologicus" is correct.

"V. S."—The hair may be dyed black by either of the following substances boiled in wine; the leaves of the mulberry, myrtle, fig, senna, or walnut bark, or gall nuts, a leaden comb being used during the application. Colley's preparation will destroy the beauty of superfluous hairs, but the only method of eradicating is by the use of tweezers.

"A. B.," Barnstaple.—See a good receipt for preserving Flowers during winter in our "Every Boy's Book" for 1844.

"A Junior Aeronaut."—The account of the Balloon Ascent came too late.

"W. M. M.," Limerick, is thanked for the sketch, but we have not room for it.

"Hipkins," Ipswich, is thanked.

"W. H. C."—We do not understand the note.

"A Constant Reader."—Pepperment—Peppermint, according to De Candolle, a prevalent species, which attacks the crury of grasses, destroying them when young, and protruding from them in a lengthened form, in rye and other European grasses.

"An Old Subscriber," Bromley.—The book may be had, by order, of any bookseller; the price is trifling.

"An Ardent Admirer," Knaresborough, is thanked, but we have not room.

"Armiger."—The arms of an heiress are inherited by her descendants, but the crest of her family is not; every person entitled to arms bears a helmet befitting his degree.

"A Subscriber."—An heiress, heraldically speaking, is, as we said before, a lady who has no brother, or whose brothers have died without issue. The inheritance or the loss of an estate does not, in any way, affect the descent of heraldic honours. The husband of an heiress is entitled, from the time of his marriage, to bear his wife's arms on an escutcheon of pretence.

"Lucifer."—There is, at present, no Heraldic Office in England. The best means of acquiring a knowledge of heraldry is a reference to the many works of authority on the subject of heraldry published at various periods in France. Several of our most ancient families have no motteos.

"An Inquirer."—The Grand Duchess Stephanie of Baden is widow of the late Grand Duke of Baden, Charles Louis Frederick. We have referred to the Almanach de Gotha, the best authority on all matters connected with Continental Sovereigns and Nobles, but we do not find mention of her Highness's parentage.

"E. F."—Mr. Burke includes in his Heraldry as well those who are entitled to bear arms as those who carry ensigns merely from prescriptive right.

"Agnes."—The work entitled "The Confessions of an Opium Eater" is by Mr. De Quincy

"A. G. F.," Clonmel.—We think not.

"C. F.," Forfar.—The Engraving of the "Inch of Perth" was from a drawing, made for the occasion, by an accredited artist at Edinburgh.

"Legatus" should address a letter to the Secretary of the General Post Office.

"Juriseonsultus," Kendal.—Probate will be granted of the latter will.

"F. F.," Dublin.—The eldest sons of Marquises bear a title by courtesy, and should be addressed in the same manner (except in public or legal documents) as if they possessed such title by creation.

"A Subscriber from No. 43."—Address any law-bookseller and music-seller.

"Bob," Bishop's Castle.—The establishment named is respectable.

"V. X."—The case would depend upon the form of the agreement.

"G. J. Loughborough.—The charge would be illegal.

"M. D.," Elgin.—Our correspondent's paper not forwarded from our office. We insert, from time to time, memoirs of distinguished military officers deceased.

"Zeiglius"'s letter has been sent to our artist.

"J. B. B.," Bandon.—The matter would be out under the circumstances stated.

"A Subscriber."—We fear that our space will not allow our correspondent's suggestion to be carried out.

"A Retired Officer," Frome, is thanked for the correction, which had not been made.

"S. E. H.," Surrey House.—A servant can be taken before a magistrate in case of leaving a situation without due notice.

"T. H. H."—The best work on archery is that by Hansard, but it is expensive. We do not know the day of the York Meeting.

"Vapid," Shrewsbury.—The first syllable is pronounced "Sh."

"H. D.," Exeter, should order "The Chess Player's Chronicle," published monthly. "The Chess-board Companion," by Lewis, is a good rudimentary little work.

"L. J. F."—The authorship of the old English ballad of "Chevy Chase" has been satisfactorily traced by the Rev. Mr. Comyns to Richard Sheale, who dwelt at Tamworth, about, or soon after, 1540; but Percy and Ritson have agreed to consider Sheale as the transcriber only of the copy in the Ashmolean Museum at Oxford.

"Alpha," Coventry.—Apply at Christ's Hospital.

"H. F. L."—We have not room.

"Wessex."—The "broad R," marked on Crown property, is very ancient: it is, properly, a broad arrow, and is believed to have been the mark on the game of the Royal forests under the Norman Kings.

"Chrononhotonthologus."—The number of scholars at present at Eton is between 600 and 700.

"A Subscriber" must pay the rent in arrear.

"B. C. V."—A marriage cannot be solemnized after 12 o'clock, unless by special license.

"P. B. S.," St. Austell.—The notice to quit will be legally given during the day. Ineligible.—"The Changes of Weather."—"The Nymph of the Down."—"A Weresuth," by Florence.

 We this day present to our Subscribers, gratis, the Title-page, Preface, and Indexes to Vol. VI.

All the numbers are reprinted, and our subscribers can make up their sets from No. I. to the present time.

Covers for binding Volumes I., II., III., IV., V., and VI., may be had at the Office, and of all agents, price 3s. each.

Portfolios, price 4s., for preserving the numbers for binding.

The Monthly Part, XXXIII., price 2s. 6d., is now ready.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 5, 1845.

THE week has been occupied in Parliament by the desultory discussions in Committee on various measures, which, though they have not the interest of debates, have a far greater effect on those details which are so important to the working of a legislative enactment. The changes made in a bill during this stage of its progress are often astonishing; additions and omissions are made by any one who sees a defect, or fancies he can make an improvement, and is able to persuade the Committee to adopt his views, till the act is hardly to be recognised as the same, even by its author Thus the Field Gardens Bill of Mr. Cowper, underwent such a mangling on Wednesday, that it is reduced to a very innocent measure indeed, and might as well not pass at all. Sir J. Graham ruthlessly struck out clause after clause, and furnished another striking instance of what any single member must submit to in order to obtain the countenance of the Government to any part of a proposition that has not originated with the Executive. Practically, no measure has a chance of success that is not brought in by the Government; an independent Member at best only obtains its conditional permission to proceed with one, that condition being the free use of the Ministerial pruning knife to any portions of a bill to which it may object.

Lord Ashley has made considerable progress in his measure for the better management of Lunatic Asylums; he made out a strong case for legislative interference, particularly with respect to the treatment of pauper lunatics; he meets much less opposition on this subject than he did on his Factory Bill; even the Government which so strongly opposed him on that measure, give him efficient support on the present.

The House of Commons commences its day sittings at twelve o'clock on Wednesday next,—and on the part of the Government several measures have been abandoned; both symptomatic of the approaching close of a laborious session.

DURING the past week a new system has been commenced by one of the leading French journals, the Débats; it has for so me time been increased in size; it is now intended to develop in France the system of advertising, which is so extensively adopted in England. The Débats has let or farmed its advertisements to a Company, which will have no sort of control or influence over any other department of the journal, but will confine its exertions to extending and increasing its advertising connexion. We are disposed to think a desire to imitate the appearance of the English journals has led the Paris papers a little too far in advance of the Commercial requirements of the day. Our journals have gradually increased in size from the pressure both of intelligence and advertisements, the latter appearing in such vast numbers from the multiplicity and extent of commercial transactions. At present two columns of the Times or Herald would contain all the advertisements of a French paper, some of which are so "displayed" that the sheet is more like a hand-bill than a newspaper, and could almost be read across a street.

Our contemporaries on the other side of the Channel should bear in mind that our papers are not full of advertisements because they are large; they are large because an immense proportion of their surface is obliged to be devoted to advertisements. In increasing their size before they have that demand on their space which the conductors of English journals have to provide for, we fear our Parisian brethren have made a miscalculation, though we sincerely hope the new plan will succeed; it came into operation on Tuesday last.

THE FAIRLOP OAK.

An "Old Correspondent" writes from Claydon Lordship:—"Nearly 80 years ago I was born in Hainault Forest, within two miles of the Oak; from the inside have driven three to four horses in a hot day; and remember measuring it several times, at breast high, by spanning 24 lengths from hand to hand, when from 13 to 14 years old. I well recollect to have heard my father say the evening shade of Fairlop Oak covered an acre, and that he witnessed the first 'Bean-feast' Day the boat-builder gave his men under it, and thus commenced the future Fair. To this, allow me to add, that I used to attend an Archery Meeting under it 55 years ago, and there were six or seven immense marquees, with bands of music playing; when in the wide Forest of mery Hainault (Sherwood) they wound the bugle-horn."—T. B.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE QUEEN'S COURT AND PRIVY COUNCIL.

On Monday the Queen held a Court and Privy Council at Buckingham Palace.

An investiture of the most Honourable Military Order of the Bath having been appointed, the Knights Grand Crosses assembled wore their mantles and collars.

Her Majesty, who wore the mantle and collar of the order, having entered the Throne-room, the Knights Grand Crosses were conducted to the presence of the Sovereign.

Admiral Sir Robert Waller Otway, Bart., was introduced, and her Majesty, assisted by Prince Albert and the Duke of Cambridge, invested Sir Robert with the ribbon and badge of a Knight Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath, and also presented him with the star of a Military Knight Grand Cross of the order. Sir Robert having kissed hands, then retired.

Her Majesty was pleased to command an Investiture to take place of the Knights Commanders of the Bath.

Colonel Sir James Dennis was introduced by Bath King of Arms and the Gentleman Usher of the Order, and, kneeling near the Queen, had the honour of Knighthood conferred upon him by her Majesty, with the Sword of the Gold Stick in Waiting. Colonel Dennis was afterwards invested by her Majesty with the ensigns of a Knight Commander of the Order of the Bath.

Rear Admiral Sir Edward Chetham Strode was invested by her Majesty with the ribbon and badge of a Knight Commander of the Bath.

Immediately after the Investiture of the Bath, the Queen held an Investiture of the most distinguished Order of St. Michael and St. George.

The Knights Grand Crosses and Knights Companions of the Order having entered the Throne-room, his Royal Highness Prince George was introduced between Sir Howard Douglas and Sir Patrick Ross, the two Junior Knights Grand Crosses present, when her Majesty was graciously pleased to invest his Royal Highness with the Ensigns of a Knight Grand Cross of the most distinguished Order of St. Michael and St. George.

Her Majesty afterwards held a Privy Council.

Mr. Henry Lytton Bulwer, her Majesty's Minister Plenipotentiary to the Queen of Spain, and the Hon. William Bingham Baring, Paymaster of her Majesty's Forces, were, by command of the Queen, sworn of her Majesty's most honourable Privy Council, and took their respective places at the board.

THE PROPOSED VISIT OF THE KING OF HOLLAND TO ENGLAND.—A letter from the Hague mentions that the King of Holland intends shortly to pay a visit to her Majesty the Queen of England.

FETE AT SION-HOUSE.—On Tuesday the Duchess of Northumberland gave an elegant fête champêtre at Sion-house, the ducal residence at Isleworth, when a limited but brilliant circle of the aristocracy assembled. Their Royal Highnesses the Duchess of Cambridge and Prince George of Cambridge, attended by Baron Knesebeck and Lady Augusta Cadogan, arrived at a quarter-past four o'clock, and left shortly after six.

The MARQUIS OF NORMANBY.—The Marquis of Normanby has left England for the German baths, for the benefit of his health, and is not expected to return before the next Session of Parliament.

LORD AND LADY STANLEY'S ENTERTAINMENT TO THE ROYAL FAMILY.—On Wednesday evening Lord and Lady Stanley gave a magnificent entertainment, at their house in St. James's-square, to their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge and Prince George of Cambridge. Their Royal Highnesses arrived at eight o'clock, and Prince George came shortly before that hour. The party at dinner comprised, in addition to the noble host and hostess, and their Royal guests, his Excellency the Austrian Ambassador and Countess Dietrichstein, the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch, the Marchioness of Ailesbury, &c. Lady Stanley afterwards had an assembly, the visitors being invited to meet the Royal Family. The suite of rooms thrown open for the reception of company were all brilliantly illuminated, and tastefully decorated with the choicest flowering plants.

ILLNESS OF THE HON. AND REV. DR. GERALD V. WELLESLEY.—We learn that the Hon. and Rev. Dr. G. V. Wellesley, younger brother of the Duke of Wellington, is suffering from indisposition at Viscount and Viscountess Chelsea's villa at Putney.

MARRIAGE IN HIGH LIFE.—On Tuesday the nuptials of the Duke del' Albanelo F. Prato Palacchio, and Miss Caroline Vanneck, daughter of the late Hon. Gerard Vanneck, and cousin of the present Lord Huntingfield, were celebrated at St. George's Church, Hanover-square, in the presence of a select family circle

ACCIDENT TO LADY ELIZABETH DE BURGH.—We regret to hear that Lady Elizabeth De Burgh, elde' daughter of the Marquis and Marchioness of Clanricarde, met with an accident on Tuesday afternoon, by being thrown from her horse while riding on Constitution-hill. It appears that her ladyship, in company with Viscount Lascelles, to whom she is about to be married, was riding on horseback in the park, and that on reaching Constitution-hill, her horse stumbled and threw her forward on her head, by which fall her ladyship received some contusions about the head. Happily, they are not of a serious character.

DEATH OF LORD SEAFORD.—Lord Seaford died rather suddenly on Tuesday last at Wood end, near Chichester. His lordship was in his 74th year.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

OXFORD. June 30.

This day the Rev. Henry Low, M.A., of St. John's College, Cambridge, was elected a Fellow of Exeter College, on King Charles's foundation.

This day Mr. Thompson Podmore and Mr. Christopher Cookson were admitted Actual Fellows of St. John's College; and Mr. Edward Forster Neale, from Merchant Tailors' School, was admitted Scholar of that college.

CAMBRIDGE. July 1.

The following gentlemen were admitted to the degree of M.A. yesterday —

Trinity College. E. Alanford, G. H. Duffell, G. Norman, W. Crouch, S. Charles, J. C. L. Newnham, N. Bridges, R. B. Bowes, T. Leighton, R. C. Campbell, E. J. Wallace, G. D. W. Ommaney, C. J. Thrupp, A. W. Mactier, G. D. Dawes, R. W. Sheldon, C. M. M'Niven, J. B. Turner, J. G. Lonsdale.

St. John's College. W. H. Johnson, J. Langdon, J. Bangster, C. T. Simpson, J. Green, J. R. Pitman, C. L. Maltby, J. P. Beauchamp.

Emmanuel College. S. K. Webster, W. L. Onslow,.G. Ridout, C. Parker, E. Gillett.

St. Peter's College: A. F. Baucher, A. W. Hall, S. Cumming, H. V. Broughton, W. Wright.

Corpus Christi College: Thos. R. Drake, D. S. Hodgson, G. C. Gordon.

Caius College. W. S. Chalk, W. B. Turner.

Queen's College: W. Elliott.

Clare Hall: B. W. Wright, J. Taddy.

Catherine Hall. W. Shackleton.

July 3.

At a congregation just held the following degrees were conferred

M. A. ad eundem—Stanley, Trinity College, Dublin; Banrow, University College, Oxon; Brancker, Nevinson, Wadham College, Oxon

D. D.—Haynes, St. Peter's College; Laying, Sidney College

B. C. L.—Cooper, Howell, Marshall, Oxford.

LL. B.—Catherine Hall; Gillbanks, St. John's College. St. Peter's College: Pocock, Fuller. Clare Hall: Wolfe, Atkinson, Broughton, Matthews. Pembroke College: Woodford. Caius College: Hamilton, Smith, Walpole, Armstrong, Harker, Brett. Caftin, Leete, Montagu. Trinity Hall: Rackham. Corpus Christi College: Bishop, Booth, Fenwick, Jarvis, Johnson, Ragland. King's College: Williams, Witts. Queen's College: Chevallier, Catherine Hall: Parr, Jesus College: Peter, Ridley. Westmorland, Blake, Lloyd. Christ's College: Baily, Swann, Vaughan, Griffin. St. John's College: Anger, Bickham, Charlton, Clubbe, Cook, Bruce, Fleming, Greenwell, Marshall, Oxford, Rumsey, Morgan, Mott, Rowson, Vincent, Fenwick, Hewson, Inchbald, R. B. Mayor, Metcalfe, Rothery, H. C. Rothery, Wilson. Magdalene College: Stevens. Trinity College: Babington, Bulwer, Hallowell, Sandys, After Hutchins, Kinder, Leigh, Leighcross, Mills, Smith, Tenison, Blunt, Brimley, Cayley, Denman, Felgate, Fenn, Irving, Mansfield, Sherer, Wagner, Munro, Newbould, Webb, Yeoman. Emmanuel College: Grassett, Green, Hogg, Kornthal, Nuball, Young, Carter, Castlehowe. Sidney College. Clarke. Downing College. Conybeare.

B. A.—St. John's College: Howarth, Jefferson, King.

MR. OAKELEY'S CASE.—On Monday Sir Herbert Jenner gave judgment in the Arches Court, in the case of Mr. Oakeley, the particulars of which have appeared in our paper. The learned Judge, after stating the circumstances of the case, and citing the authorities, pronounced its sentence, that the Rev. Mr. Oakeley refrain from all the services of the Church, in church or elsewhere, until he is penitent, and conforms to the Church of England. The license, in the meantime, to perform holy offices, to be suspended.

IRELAND.

MURDER IN ATHLONE BARRACKS.—On Thursday night week a horrible murder was committed in the barracks of Athlone, by a soldier of the 32nd Regiment, one of his comrades. It appears that the latter, in a state of intoxication used some language derogatory to the wife of the murderer, who got out of his bed about eleven o'clock, and strangled him before any assistance could be rendered, though the room was occupied at a sleeping apartment by twenty or thirty men at the time.

FATAL COLLISION BETWEEN THE POLICE AND PEASANTRY OF THE COUNTY CORK.—Accounts have been received of a melancholy collision between the police and the peasantry, which took place on Monday evening at the fair of Ballinhassig, near Cork, when eight of the latter were killed, and about twenty five wounded. Numerous persons engaged in the fighting, arrested one, who would not be appeased; they confined him in the village dispensary; when his friends collected in great numbers, and demanded his release, which was refused. A scuffle ensued, and the police commenced firing upon the building, and some of the police were struck with stones. The police fired, and, shocking to relate, eight persons were killed, and the above number wounded.

IMPORTANT TO ANGLERS.—By the new Fishery Act, all rivers in England and Wales are to be closed on the 13th September in each year, and any person catching, or having in his possession, any trout measuring in length less than seven inches from eye to fork, will subject himself to a penalty not exceeding £5 nor less than £2.

THE PRIVILEGE OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS QUESTION. -HOWARD S. GOSSETT, KNT.—Up to the present time no steps have been taken on the part of the solicitor for Sir W. Gossett, the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Commons, the nominal defendant, in fact, in this action, to issue and obtain the allowance of a writ of error for the reversal of the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench upon the demurrer in this case, notwithstanding the resolution of the House, passed by a majority of thirty four. On inquiry, it appears that some difficulty exists, whether, notwithstanding the resolution of the House, the writ, if issued and allowed, can be available, in consequence of the proceedings after the judgment on demurrer having been allowed to go on to trial, judgment and execution issued and levied, and the judgment by payment of the amount of the levy satisfied, as the writ of error, according to the practice of the Courts, ought to have been issued before; at all events, if the writ issues, a reversal of the judgment only could be obtained on record, the plaintiff quietly keeping the amount of his verdict and costs in his pocket.

SUMMARY OF RAILWAY FACTS.—A return has just been published of all the Railway Bills applied for during the present session, from which it appear that the estimated expense of the 188 schemes projected amounts to the sum of £91,221,779, the money proposed to be borrowed being £30,275,883.——Last week produced no fewer than fourteen new railway schemes. Amongst them are the Birmingham, Oxford, and Reading; the Dublin and Belfast Western, with, and Central Wales; the Great Sicilian, to skirt the north-west coast of Sicily; the Bengal Great Western, 426 miles, from Calcutta to the Interior; the Carlow and Kilkenny; the Manchester, Liverpool, and Great North of England; the Auxerre, a branch of th. Paris and Lyons; the Bremen and Bremenhafen, 40 miles from Bremen to the harbour on the Weser; the British Guiana, for connecting Demerara, Essequibo, and Berbice; the Direct West of England, a broad gauge line from Reading and Newbury to Taunton, the Birmingham, Thame, and Buckingham; the Birmingham, Warwick, and Daventry Junction; the Great Northern, and the Regent's Canal line, from Paddington to Limehouse.——The opening of the Eastern Counties and Norwich and Brandon lines is put off until the 9th——The Committee have decided that the preamble of the London, Chatham, and North Kent line was not proved; and that the preambles of the three bills of the Croydon (Atmospheric) line were not proved.——On Wednesday, the Chairman of the Committee, on North Kent district, announced the formal decision of the Committee; namely, that the preambles of the London, Chatham, and North Kent Bill, the London and Croydon (Chatham and Chilham; the London and Croydon (Chatham to Gravesend), and the London and Croydon (Orpington Branch) Bills were not proved.——The Committee determined to proceed with the Ashford and Hastings line, which is a competing line with the Brighton, Lewes, and Hastings, and the Rye and Tenterden lines; and they were of opinion that at this advanced period of the session the better plan would be to let the other lines stand over until another session.——The preambles of the following Bills were declared to be proved —The London and Croydon Railway Enlargement; the South Eastern (Dunbridge to Tunbridge Wells); and the South Eastern (widening of the London and Greenwich Railway).——The Midland Great Western Railway and Royal Canal Company, better known as the Dublin and Mullingar line, has passed standing orders in the Lords, and will receive the Royal Assent in a very few days. This undertaking is the largest railroad in connection with canal navigation in the three kingdoms

THE GRIMSDALE MURDERS.—The investigation into the circumstances connected with this horrible case of double murder, by the poisoning of his father and wife, by John Graham, of Kirkandrews, near Carlisle, yeoman, was brought to a close last week, after a long inquiry, and no less than nine adjournments. After having returned a verdict of "Wilful Murder against Graham for administering poison to his wife," the inquiry as to the death of Mr. John Graham, of Grimsdale, the father of the prisoner, was resumed.

After hearing other evidence, the jury found "That the deceased died from the effects of poison, but by whom administered there was not evidence to show." He was then committed for trial at the ensuing Carlisle assizes on the former verdict.

POSTCRIPT.

FUNERAL OF SIR WILLIAM WEBB FOLLETT.

The mortal remains of this distinguished lawyer and advocate were, on Friday morning, consigned to their last resting-place, in the vaults under the eastern portion of the Temple Church. The whole of the Judges (with the exception of Lord Denman, who was unable to attend), the Lord Chancellor, Lord Brougham, Sir Robert Peel, Sir James Graham, the Right Hon. the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Vice Chancellor of England, Earl Carnarvon, Vice-Chancellors Wigram and Knight Bruce, Lord Campbell, Mr. Greene, M.P., Chairman of the House, W. Brougham, Esq., W Wingfield, Esq., the Attorney-General, Lord Langdale, Mr. Baron Parke, and upwards of 200 of the principal members of the common law and equity courts, being present to pay the last token of respect to the lamented deceased, and assisted in the funeral ceremony.

The funeral cortège, which consisted of a hearse, containing the body, and three mourning-coaches, each drawn by four horses, in which were relatives of the deceased, left Cumberland-terrace at eleven o'clock, and arrived at the Temple exactly at half-past twelve, when the procession was formed on the terrace in front of the garden, and proceeded in the following order.—The Master, the beadles and attendants of the Inner and Middle Temple, the Benchers of the Inner Temple, the Benchers of the Middle Temple, two by two, wearing black silk scarfs and hatbands. The bid of feathers and porters; the choir, consisting of ten boys and twelve male voices; the reader; Archdeacon Robinson; the Master of the Temple; the coffin, on the right of which Mr. Burge, Q.C., as Treasurer of the Temple, Chief Justice Tindal, Sir James Graham, the Chancellor of the Exchequer; and on the left, Mr. Crowder, Q.C., Principal of the Temple, Lord Lyndhurst, Sir R. Peel, and the Vice Chancellor of England, acted as pall bearers. The chief mourner, R. Follett, Esq., and the brothers and immediate relations of the deceased, followed by upwards of one hundred gentlemen, forming nearly the whole of the Queen's Counsel, and the serjeants-at-law. The rear was brought up by the Judges, two by two. They proceeded round the terrace into King's Bench-walk, through Tanfield-court, to the western entrance of the church, and up the centre.

The body being deposited on a her, the persons forming the procession filed off to the places allotted to them. The body and gallery of the church being filled by the various members of the profession, the Funeral Service was chaunted by the whole choir; at the conclusion of which, the body was deposited in the catacombs, between those of Mr. Joy and Mrs. Warre, and immediately beneath the remains of the late Lord Tenterden. The service was altogether one of the most impressive and solemn appearance, as there could not have been less than 5000 persons present on the occasion.

WINDSOR, Friday Evening.—(From our own Correspondent.)—It has been considered very probable, for some time past, in consequence of the extensive alterations and renovations which were proceeding throughout the Castle, that the Court would not pay a visit to Windsor before the autumn next; indeed, not until after the return of her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert from the Continent. This question has just been set at rest by the arrival of a messenger from Buckingham Palace, with instructions for the works originally contemplated (the commencement of which had been delayed until the Royal determination was finally known) to be proceeded with forthwith, and to be completed early in the month of September next, as the private apartments will not be required for the use of her Majesty until that period. An increased number of workmen, consisting of carvers, gilders, painters, &c., have consequently been engaged. The whole Court will leave England for the Continent immediately after the prorogation of Parliament.

ROYAL VISIT.—The Queen and Prince Albert, and their Majesties the King and Queen of the Belgians, went on Thursday afternoon to Ealing Park, to honour Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence with a visit.

REPRESENTATIVE PEERS.—The House of Lords sat yesterday morning in a Committee of Privileges, Earl Shaftesbury, Chairman. Their Lordships decided that the Marquis of Sligo and Lord Fitzgerald had established their claims to vote in the election of Irish Representative Peers.

THE LATE FIRE AT QUEBEC.—A numerous meeting of merchants and bankers was held yesterday at the London Tavern, the Lord Mayor in the chair, at which it was agreed to promote a subscription for the sufferers by the late fire at Quebec. There were several subscriptions given to the amount of £200 and £100.

MR. FERRAND AND THE PROTESTANTS OF DUBLIN.—On Monday evening there was an "open air soirée," at the Rotunda, Dublin, to commemorate the anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne. As far as numbers are concerned, it was a failure. The Freeman's Journal, in describing it, says—"It would be exaggeration to say that eight hundred persons, of all sexes, were present—ladies and little boys formed by far the most numerous portion of the assembly. There were three or four Orange banners and some Orange sashes exhibited on the occasion, and a band composed of some half dozen of performers was in attendance." The meeting was, however, remarkable for a tirade from Mr. Ferrand, M.P., in his own peculiar style. In the course of his speech, that gentleman said: "Since he had last the honour of addressing them the foulest attempt was made by the Parliament to crush the Protestant feeling in this country. But such could not be and would not be the Protestants spoke the truth. He had a right, as a free-born Englishman, to stand up for that privilege, and he had stood up in the House of Commons against the worst blow that was ever aimed at the Protestant faith. In a letter which he addressed to Sir James Graham he had vindicated the same principles, and that letter was widely circulated; he had also sent a copy to Sir James himself (cheers), but that would not avail to crush them by a lying and infamous report. (Loud yelling and Kentish fire.) But the next election would prove an answer to that lying and infamous report." (Cheers.)—A Voice: We will not be taxed at the next election.—Mr. Ferrand continued to say that the Ministers were traitors to their Queen, their country, their sovereign, and their God. (Several rounds of the Kentish fire followed the exclamation of Mr. Ferrand.) —A Voice: Peel is an impostor. (Cheers, and loud cries of "Yes, he is.")—Another Voice: Peel is a common traitor. (Cheers.)—Mr. Ferrand: He is the worst traitor that ever lived. (Kentish fire and cheers.) Mr. Ferrand continued to say that Peel was the Marotto of Conservatism, and he had betrayed the party whom he was solemnly pledged to support, and the religion he was sworn to maintain; and he (Mr. Ferrand) would prove that Sir Robert Peel was a traitor to his country and his Sovereign. (Cheers.) A Voice: Peel is an infidel. (Tremendous yelling and Kentish fire.—Another Voice: We will put out the traitor (Cries of "Order, order.")—Mr. Ferrand then again argued that Sir R. Peel was a traitor; and, after some resolutions in support of Protestantism had been agreed to, a vote of thanks was passed to Mr. Ferrand, and the meeting formed into a procession, and marched round the gardens, the band playing appropriate airs.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE.—The Chamber of Deputies after passing the Tours and Nantes, and Paris and Strasburgh Railroads Bills, voted them for the Railway from Aix to Avignon, and from Dieppe and Fecamp to the Havre line, by large majorities. All the articles of the bill for authorising the Bank of France to establish a branch bank at Algiers were carried. 74,486,974f.: in credits and various items, 85,168f.; rentes, public securities, and reserved fund, 84,240,97 4f.; making a total of 823,161,897f. (!) to other banks, the amount of bank notes in circulation was 328,4..,.., in accounts current, 176,793,005f.; in capital and reserve, 81,900,000f. in different items, 5,326,640f. The discounts, advances, and loans made during the quarter, amounted to 293,036,227f. The movement of accounts current (private), 3,907,035,735f.; ditto (public), 928,259,071f.; general movement of the caisses, 3,573,327,950f. In the Chamber of Peers on Wednesday, the Prince de Montpensier presented the Report of the Committee on the bill for the bill demanding credits to the amount of 14,787,000f., for various items connected with the war service in Algeria. It recommended that the bill should be adopted in its present form. The Duke and Duchess de Nemours were to make their public entry into Bayonne on the 16th of August They were expected to lay the first stone of the bridge over the Adour.—The Presse announces the death of M. Constant Wairy, chief valet of the Emperor Napoleon, better known under the title of "Constant," at Breteuil (Eure), on Saturday last, in the 67th year of his age.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

On Saturday afternoon last Margate was visited by a whirlwind. It came from the west, and for a few minutes stood upon the water round the inside of the harbour; at last, dashing across in a direct line, it carried a large timber from a vessel laden with it several yards, and the boat of the same vessel was held some seconds from the ground by the fearful violence of the gale, and was lodged on the sand, keel upwards. The whirlwind dislodged letters from the General Steam Navigation Company's office, and smashed several windows at the York Hotel, and most extraordinarily removed a skylight from a house in King-street, 300 or 400 yards in the very direction whence the wind came.

Cape of Good Hope papers to the 25th of April, contain accounts from Graham's Town, stating that a collision had taken place between the Dutch emigrants and the Griqua tribe on the north-eastern frontier, in which the latter had the advantage. The Griquas speak confidently of success, and only ask English troops for the protection of Griqua property. A good deal of bloodshed is expected, and should the Dutch within the boundary join their countrymen, the aborigines will speedily be defeated.

Intelligence has been received of the complete destruction by fire, of the Liverpool packet-ship Adams, 400 tons burden, in Maranham harbour, on the morning of the 9th of May last. All the crew and passengers saved themselves by taking to the boats, but were unable to save any part of their clothes, &c. The ship burnt for several hours, and was totally consumed. There cannot be a doubt that the fire originated from spontaneous ignition among the cotton. Her loss, with cargo, is reported to be 10,000.

The Augsburg Gazette announces the death of Cardinal Capaccini, one of the most eminent diplomatists of the Papal See.

A letter from Berlin, of the 25th June, says:—"The King of Prussia has returned in perfect health from his journey to Copenhagen. His Majesty has expressed himself much pleased with the cordial reception shown him by the King of Denmark, and with the delicate attentions of which he was the object on the part of all the Royal Family at Copenhagen."

The installation of the Rev. Dr. N. M. Adler as Chief Rabbi of the united congregations of Jews of the British empire, is to take place in the Great Synagogue, on Wednesday next, the 9th of July.

A very extraordinary self-murder has much excited the city of Prague, in Bohemia, which was committed on the 9th ult., by an old man, upwards of 80, a superannuated priest, shooting himself with a pistol. He was blind.

A parcel of coffee, imported from Madras, the produce of the Mysore district, has within these few days been admitted at the low duty of 4d. per pound.

It is the intention of Government to form a penal settlement on the northern coast of Australia. The exact spot has not been fixed upon. Halifax Bay is spoken of as likely to form an advantageous position for the purpose. The first ships, with convicts on board for the new settlement, are expected shortly to arrive at Sydney.

The German journals give the following instance of summary justice in Hungary. In the early part of last month, a poor man and woman stole some articles of food from a house in the village of Kavago Cers. A little time after the thieves were discovered, and the principal inhabitants of the place met, and, without form or process, condemned them to death. They were taken out of the village to the side of a pit, dug for the purpose, and there knocked on the head like dogs. The two bodies were thrown into the pit, which was filled up with stones.

The latest accounts from Syria are very unsatisfactory. An armistice, which had been agreed to at Beyrout on the end of June, by the chiefs of the contending parties assembled for that purpose, was broken by the Druses on the 12th, and several of the Christian churches and convents had been pillaged, and the priests murdered. Civil war was again raging in all parts of the country, and food was so scarce that thousands of people were literally starving in the neighbourhood of Beyrout.

Later arrivals fully substantiate the first appalling accounts of the fire at Quebec. It originated in the bursting of a boiler. From 1500 to 2000 buildings were burned, and 18 schooners. The loss of moveables and buildings will not be less than £400,000—insured perhaps £60,000. The whole loss may be £700,000. The bodies of 12 persons have been recovered. They perished in the fire. £7600 was immediately subscribed for the relief of the sufferers, and bakers and others sent to distribute provisions to the destitute.

The Southern States of Germany have concluded a treaty for the adoption of a uniform monetary system.

According to the Dusseldorff Gazette, letters from the frontiers of Poland state that the latest intelligence from St. Petersburgh contains alarming accounts of the health of the Emperor. It is greatly feared that her Imperial Majesty will not be able to go to Berlin. The same letters add that the Emperor is suffering again from the liver complaint. It is right to remark that the Dusseldorff Gazette was the paper which some time ago spread a report of the dangerous illness of the Emperor of Russia.

Jacques Vignal, condemned to death for robbery and attempted assassination, was guillotined at Aix on Tuesday week. Some difficulty occurring in taking off his irons, he showed the man how to do it, and expressed his pleasure at being freed from these incumbrances. The fatal hour having arrived, he bade adieu to his fellow-prisoners; and, although they seemed much affected, he on his part evinced scarcely the slightest emotion. Having received absolution, he laid his head on the fatal plank. In two seconds he had ceased to live.

An Algiers journal (the Courrier de l'Afrique) of the 21st ult. has the following from Oran:—"The negotiations with Morocco, which appeared to have been interrupted, on account of the treaty of commerce being connected with the main treaty, which had for its object the regulation of the limits of the territories, and the relations of the two contracting powers, have, we are assured, just been resumed on the old bases, and the dread of hostilities appears to be entirely at an end."

On Monday last 600 baskets of French cherries of excellent flavour arrived at the St. Katherine's Wharf from Havre, and were sold in the metropolitan markets on the following day.

On Tuesday afternoon the Perth Company's steamer Sovereign, Mann, master, was struck by lightning off Cromer, and an apprentice named Littlejohn was killed by the electric fluid, and the master was considerably injured. The vessel's topmast was carried away, but was not otherwise seriously injured.

HARLOW, ESSEX.—(From a Correspondent).—Tuesday last was a merry day at Harlow. Previous to the Eastern Counties Railway reaching this town, the Turnpike Trust put up three extra gates, one in Harlow, one at Potter Street, and one near Bishops Stortford. This was a great annoyance to the whole neighbourhood, and it considerably injured the trade of the various places in the locality. But the Trust having agreed to remove the obnoxious barriers, Tuesday was the day appointed for the pleasant operation, which was speedily accomplished, without the assistance of "Rebecca and her Daughters," amidst the general rejoicing of the inhabitants. Two sheep being roasted whole — one at each end of the principal lane attracted thousands of spectators. A band of music assisted in enlivening the assembled company. A match of cricket was played by the gentlemen of the Harlow Club, after which about thirty-five gentlemen sat down to a substantial dinner at the Green Man Inn, where a whole sheep, embellished with a wreath of roses round its neck, became an object of considerable attraction. One of the gates which was removed was opposite this very inn; and the payment of the toll there had been a severe tax upon the inhabitants in going from one part of the town to another.

MDLLE. TAGLIONI.

A peculiar interest is attached to this danseuse above her sisters in art, not only on account of the transcendant perfection to which she, individually, has attained, but because it is to her that must be ascribed the glory of having created the style of dancing which, now, is the only one that can please our more refined and elevated perceptions of her art; and because it is in imitating her alone that a ballerina may hope to give to dancing that poetry and intellectuality which is now considered to be its most essential attribute.

Maria Taglioni is a descendant, on the mother's side, of the celebrated Swedish tragedian, Karsten; her father, a Neapolitan, was, in his time, a dancer and choregraphist of much merit. She did not derogate from her parentage. At the age of fourteen she made her début at Vienna, in an allegorical ballet of her father's composition, entitled "Reception d'une Jeune Nymphe à la Cour de Terpsichore." This was in the year 1822. Neither the title nor the matter of this ballet were calculated for much success, but the "Young Nymph" created universal admiration. Bewildered by the applause she met with, she forgot her steps, but she remedied this contretemps by a pas composed on the spur of the moment, which took the audience by storm. At fifteen years of age, Mdlle. Taglioni went to Stutgard: here she was in the highest favour: she was received at Court, and was much noticed by the Queen Dowager of Wurtemberg, that on the departure of the young Sylphide she was dissolved in tears. At the Bavarian Court the same honours awaited her; she was treated as an equal; and it is said that, on her first arrival, the King presented his wife to the already celebrated danseuse with this abrupt formula—"Mademoiselle, I present you my wife."

It was on the 23rd of July, 1829, that Maria Taglioni first dropped, as if from the clouds, amongst the old-fashioned dancing-masters, revelling in pirouettes and petits battus, which had not altered in style since the days of the Grand Monarque, and the allegorical ballets, in which the deities of Olympus figured in company with kings, hermits, and mesmériens. These antiquated personages were now forced to hide their diminished heads; one of the flying aerial steps of the Sylphide dispersed her would-be rivals in every direction. From this time, her visits to the capitals of Europe were so many triumphs. Every one remembers the extraordinary sensation she produced in London; every where it was the same. At length, the enormous salary offered by the Emperor of Russia tempted Mdlle. Taglioni, in 1840, to St. Petersburg. There she remained for three years, surrounded by universal homage, loaded with brilliant presents by the Czar and his Royal Consort; whilst, at the Russian capital, Mdlle. Taglioni was the object of numerous diplomatic negotiations. Count Nesselrode was besieged by applications for her presence from the Ministers of other countries; while the Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Schwerin wrote a letter of entreaty to her sister, the Empress of all the Russias, in order to obtain the favour of her presence for three weeks at Krosello, and her performance for three nights at Dobberon! On one of her visits to Vienna, La Taglioni, who was performing at the "Porta Carinzia," was called twenty-four times before the curtain; and, on leaving the theatre, her carriage was drawn home by a bevy of the beaux of this [illegible]. In spite of all these honours, however, the thoughts of the unrivalled [illegible] were often directed to her villeggiatura at Como. She has wavered for some time betwixt the love of applause, which is to an actor as the breath of one's nostrils, and the longing for quiet retirement. Her choice has been finally made; she has paid her parting visits to all the Italian theatres, and has just left Venice, where her performance has been the object of the most enthusiastic admiration, to give the English public, some of her earliest and warmest admirers, her last adieus.

Taglioni

GRAND FETE CHAMPETRE AT CHARLTON HOUSE.

On Wednesday, this long-announced fête champêtre, in aid of the funds of the Royal Kent Dispensary, was given in the park and grounds of Charlton House; the benevolent proprietor, Sir Thomas Maryon Wilson, having generously granted their use for that purpose. The Fête was to have taken place on Tuesday; but the unpropitious weather induced the Committee to postpone it until the following day, when, unfortunately, it rained without intermission from half-past one until nearly five o'clock. Nevertheless, there was a great concourse of company from the neighbourhood, and from the metropolis; and, at different periods during the afternoon, there were between 4000 and 5000 persons present.

The Programme of the day included Promenades Musicales; Mr. Lumley, of her Majesty's Theatre, had kindly given permission to the Danseuses Viennoises to perform their most favourite pas at stated hours; Mr. Batty's artistes and troop of horses, with their French auxiliaries, varied the pedal amusements; the nobility and gentry of the County contributed a grand Floricultural Exhibition; there was classic equestrianism from old Rome; an encampment of Canadian Indians, with their feats and dances; and an almost countless variety of other pastimes, the programme of which was a yard in length.

Refreshments were provided in great abundance in tents and in the conservatory: and their enjoyment seemed to make up for the damper thrown upon the al fresco amusements; and, as the sale of tickets last week was very great, and the attendance considerable, we hope the Fête may prove profitable to the funds of the excellent Charity on account of which it was produced.

The park and grounds of Charlton House are exquisitely picturesque; and our artist has sketched two of the scenes, à la Watteau, during the Fête; introducing a portion of the fine old mansion. A Correspondent has obligingly communicated the following interesting details of this noble domain:—

"Charlton (in Domesday Book, Cerletone) lies in the manor of Blackheath, about two miles east of Greenwich. Lysons, in his 'Environs of London,' Vol. IV., p. 326, says:—'The manor of Charlton, in 1604, was, by King James, granted, in fee, to John, Earl of Mar, who, in 1606, sold it, for £2000, to Sir James Erskine. Sir James, the next year, sold it, for £4800, to Sir Adam Newton. His son, Sir Henry (who had taken the name of Puckering) alienated it, in 1659, to Sir William Ducie, afterwards K.B., and Lord Viscount Downe, who died at his manor-house here, in 1679. His representatives sold it, in 1680, to Sir William Langhorne, Bart. Sir William Langhorne then entailed it on his nephew, Sir John Conyers, of Horden Hall, County Durham, Bart., who was the son of his sister, Elizabeth, wife of Sir Christopher Conyers, of Horden, Bart. Charlton remained in this branch of the Conyers family until 1731, when, on the death of Sir Baldwyn Conyers, Bart., it reverted, according to entail, to Wm. Langhorne Games, Esq. (another nephew of Sir Wm. Langhorne), and his heirs male, with remainder to his widowed kinswoman, Mrs. Margaret Maryon, and then to her son John, and to his heirs for ever. Mr. Maryon left it, by his will, to his niece, Margaretta Maria; married, firstly, to John Badger Weller, Esq., of Romford, and, secondly, to John Jones, Esq.; with remainder to her daughter, Jane, who married Sir Thomas Spencer Wilson, Bart., of Eastbourne, County Sussex, a Lieutenant-General (who died in 1798), and to her heirs general. It is in right of this lady, his grandmother, that the present Baronet enjoys Charlton House; he is unmarried, and his brother, John Maryon Wilson, of Fitzjohns, Essex, Esq., is his heir presumptive.

"'The mansion of Charlton is considered a fine specimen of the style of building in vogue in the reign of James the First. In the room adjoining the Saloon is a chimney-piece, of black marble, so exquisitely polished, that Lord Downes, when possessor of the manor, is said once to have seen, reflected in it, a robbery committed on Blackheath!—and that, having dispatched his servants, they were able to apprehend the thieves.'"

The mansion is placed upon a hill of gradual ascent, and commands a noble prospect of the Thames: it is of red brick, with stone finishings, and an open balustrade round its summit; above which rise stacks of chimneys, and two small towers that surmount the projecting wings of the principal front and agreeably diversify the general outline. The centre and the entrance porch are elaborately embellished.

THE FETE CHAMPETRE AT CHARLTON HOUSE.—SKETCHED BY G. HARRISON.

SUDDEN TURN OF FORTUNE.—One of those sudden accessions of fortune that occasionally happens has lately occurred to a poor woman, named Caroline Boothby, living in Earl-street, Seven Dials, who has been discovered to be the rightful owner of valuable freehold property near Betnal-green, which she will shortly be put in possession of, the estimated value being £30,000. She was previously gaining a precarious living by needle-work, and at times was unable to procure the common necessaries of life.

FETE CHAMPETRE AT CHARLTON HOUSE.—THE NORTH AMERICAN INDIANS ENCAMPED IN THE PARK.—SKETCHED BY G. HARRISON.

LITERATURE.

THE FALLS, LAKES, AND MOUNTAINS OF NORTH WALES. By LOUISA STUART COSTELLO. Longman and Co.

Every lover of the sublime and the picturesque, be he tourist or stay-at-home traveller, will thank Miss Costello for this delightful pocket quarto, wherein the accomplished authoress has succeeded, a marvaille, in presenting "a graphic and correct portraiture of this beautifully and historically important portion of Great Britain;" in giving "to every site its legends and poetical associations;" in reviving the recollections attached to it; and in doing for the region of the Harp and the Bard what has been done (by the same gifted hand) for its brotherland of Brittany. The work starts with a postulate, which each of its pages affirms:—"It would seem as if that part of the country called 'The Principality' had been created by Nature, in a holiday humour, expressly for the recreation and delight of English tourists, whose limited time did not allow them to seek for beauties abroad, for collected into a small space, more that is graceful, beautiful, and romantic may be found in North Wales than in any other spot in Europe."

The volume, we need scarcely tell the reader, is not in the every-day guide-book style: it is, from first to last, a pleasant narrative, interspersed with just enough antiquarianism to prevent the reader being misled; a poetic appreciation of the celebrated localities in his route; and very charming descriptions of its most sublime scenes and objects. Thus, we have the utilitarian worth of the itinerary combined with the romantic intellectuality of the authoress' best productions. The pages are crowded with attractions and associations of the higher class of thought—in the stronghold of former ages, and the crumbling ruin of to-day—the decaying handiworks of human art contrasted with the sempiternal sublimity of all-glorious Nature.

Meanwhile, in the work before us, authoress and artist have worked in a kindred spirit. It is illustrated with sixteen admirable lithographic sketches, and some fifty exquisite vignettes on wood: the whole executed by Thomas and Edward Gilks, from original drawings by D. H. M'Hewan. The vignettes, especially, have an artistical spirit which is rarely attained in wood-engraving; though, in this instance, it has been materially aided by the most careful printing.

BLACK'S PICTURESQUE TOURIST OF SCOTLAND. Fourth Edition. A. and C. Black.

BLACK'S PICTURESQUE GUIDE TO THE ENGLISH LAKES. Second Edition. A. and C. Black.

The bibliopoles of Scotland have long been famed for the excellence of their "guide books." In the Preface to the first of the volumes before us, the publishers state their conviction that the public science is often needlessly expended in ambitious eulogiums on the beauty or grandeur of natural scenery, of which no adequate idea can be conveyed to the mind by any written description, however graphic and minute. They have, accordingly, avoided such attempts, and have substituted plain and intelligible accounts of the finest scenery, incorporated with a large amount of traditionary, historical, and literary illustration.

This is, certainly, an improvement upon the usual guide-book attempts at fine writing; and its superior practical value must have been extensively tested in the above instance, seeing that the Scottish Tourist has passed through three editions; and the Lake Book is in its second. Both works are beautifully but economically printed; and their pages are closely packed with information and illustrative anecdote, the plan being in distinct tours. The illustrations are likewise of a very superior class: they consist not merely of views of scenery on copper and wood, but include maps, charts, and outline views, some of them most ingeniously constructed for aiding the tourist's immediate cognizance of the respective localities.

DR. NASH'S EDITION OF HUDIBRAS, by SAMUEL BUTLER. Illustrated. 2 vols. Washbourne.

The edition, in three quarto volumes, of "Hudibras," edited by Dr. Nash, in 1793, having become a book of high price and uncommon occurrence, has led to the production of this economical reprint. Its appearance is extremely gratifying; for we think with the Editor (W. N.) that, even "in this enlightened age," the poem is not to be deemed too far wholesome. A man will take a glance of recognition of himself if there be a glass in the room, and it may happen that some indication of the nascent symptoms of treason, of the crow's-feet of fanaticism, of the drawn-down mouth of hypocrisy, or of the superfluous hairs of self-conceit, may startle the, till then, unconscious possessors of such germs of vice, and afford to his honest qualities an opportunity of stifling them ere they start forth in their native hideousness, and so, perchance, help to avert the repetition of the evil times the poet satirizes, which, in whatever point they are viewed, stand in the annals of Britain."

True it is that the characters in "Hudibras" have passed away; but so great was Butler's knowledge of human nature, that many of his distiches have become proverbial. Dr. Nash, by his scholarly notes, has, unquestionably, added to his celebrity; though he modestly professes only to remedy the inconvenience arising from fluctuations of language and disuse of customs, and to "point out some of the passages in the Greek and Roman authors to which the poet alludes, in order to render 'Hudibras' more intelligible to persons of the commentator's level, men of middling capacity, and limited information."

To these Notes, the printer of the present edition has made some trifling additions. The illustrations, besides the portrait of the poet, his tenement, autograph, and tomb, are some sixty portraits of the characters most distinguished in the immitable satire. By-the-way, how singular it is that all known words except Butler—perhaps the most witty writer in our language—is, that he was poor, and was buried at the expense of a friend, who had rescued him from absolute starvation! Yet, his wit is in men's mouths, almost familiar as "household words."

SOUVENIR OF THE BRITISH CHESS CLUB, containing One Hundred Original Games of Chess. R. Hastings.

The appearance of this acceptable little work is strikingly indicative of the onward march our delightful recreation has made in popular esteem during the last few years. We have here a collection of games emanating from a provincial Chess Society, the majority of which are highly meritorious, and all sufficiently interesting and instructive to well repay the student for the labour he may bestow upon their examination. Our limits, unfortunately, deny us the gratification of quoting even a single game on the present occasion of alluding to the selection; but, we have marked two or three of the best for publication in our usual Chess column hereafter.

THE BOOK OF FAMILY CRESTS. 2 vol. Washbourne.

This useful work is in its fifth edition, a popularity warranted by the comprehensiveness of its plan. It comprises nearly every family bearing, properly blazoned and explained, and illustrated by more than 4000 engravings. It likewise contains the surnames of the bearers, mottoes, a glossary of terms, &c. The mottoes, by the way, are translated; and, the Editor assures us, form such a collection as has never before appeared in print.

FELIX ON THE BAT. Bailey Brothers.

This work is termed, by the Author, "A Scientific Inquiry into the Use of the Cricket Bat;" or, in other words, it is Cricket in Sport made Science in Earnest. The arrangement is very lucid and systematic; and it is aided by some clever illustrations of the several positions in the game, and several humorous tail-pieces of "What you ought not to do." Appended is a chapter on the Antiquity of the Romans to the purposes of Cricket, which was first made at the suggestion of the Author: then follow the Laws of the Marylebone Club, &c. Altogether this treatise may safely be recommended as a very superior work of its class, combining sound theory with excellent practice. It is printed and got up in handsome style.

The State Gazette of Lucerne having said that the Government of Zurich had ordered Dr. Steiger to quit that Canton, the New Zurich Gazette contradicts the statement, and adds that Dr. Steiger is at Wiberthur, where he will remain until he shall have decided as to his future place of residence. It appears that in some of the Liberal Cantons, subscription lists have been opened for Dr. Steiger.

A notice is to be seen at the Mairie of the second arrondissement of Paris, of the intended marriage of Mr. Stephen Lyne Stephens with Mdlle. Yolande Louise Duvernay. Mdlle. Duvernay is a native of Paris, where she made her first appearance as a danseuse at the Académie Royale de Musique in 1831. She broke her engagement with the manager of the Italian Opera house, in London, in 1836, and retired from the stage, when, according to the Constitutionnel, "she devoted her heart and life to the rich foreigner who is now about to marry her." The marriage ceremony is to take place in London, but it is published in Paris.

EXHIBITION OF CARTOONS, SKETCHES, AND FRESCOES, IN WESTMINSTER-HALL.

THE Exhibition, which was opened to the public on Monday, is the result of the following notice, issued after the Exhibition of Frescoes last year:—

"ROYAL COMMISSION OF FINE ARTS.

"Her Majesty's Commissioners have received, with the sanction of the Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, that six arched compartments in the Houses of Lords shall be decorated with Fresco-paintings: that the subjects of such Fresco-paintings shall be selected by the Commissioners, the Lords of the House of Lords, and of the relation in which it stands to the Sovereign: that the subjects of three of the said Fresco-paintings shall be personifications or abstract representations of Religion, Justice, and the Spirit of Chivalry; and that the three remaining subjects correresponding with such representations, and expressing the relation of the Sovereign to the Church, to the Law, and, as the fountain of honour, to the State, shall be, 'The Baptism of Ethelbert;' 'Prince Henry, afterwards Henry V., Acknowledging the Authority of Chief Justice Gascoigne;' and 'Edward, the Black Prince, Receiving the Order of the Garter from Edward III.'

"The following eminent artists, viz., Richard Redgrave, A.R.A., William Cave Thomas, Charles West Cope, A.R.A., John Calcott Horsley, William Dyce, and Daniel Maclise, R.A., selected by the Commissioners from among the present exhibitors in Westminster Hall, to paint the Cartoons, Colored Sketches, and specimens of Fresco-painting for the subjects above mentioned. But the Commissioners, not binding themselves to employ such artists on the Fresco-paintings in the House of Lords, and being desirous of giving a further opportunity to artists, other than the above artists, to exhibit specimens of their ability in Cartoon-drawing and Fresco-painting, hereby give notice:—

1. "That the six subjects above mentioned are offered for general competition.

2. "That three premiums of £200 each will be given to the artists who shall furnish specimens which shall respectively be deemed worthy of one of the said premiums by judges to be appointed to decide on the relative merit of the works.

3. "Each artist is required to prepare a Cartoon, being a design for one of the aforesaid subjects. The size of the Cartoon is to be 5 feet 3 inches wide by 16 feet high to the point of the arch (outlines in Ethography, showing the form of the arch in the compartments referred to, may be obtained at the architect's office in New Palace Yard). Each artist is further required to prepare a coloured sketch, not less than 18 inches in its shortest dimension, of the entire design represented in his Cartoon, and a specimen of Fresco-painting, not less than three feet in its shortest dimension, representing a part of the design in the full proportion."

A few words, as to the general character of the Exhibition, before proceeding to a more detailed notice of the particular works.

We find, as might be expected, a number of indifferent productions, with a proportion of highly meritorious ones, larger than might have been anticipated, from the want of encouragement and demand for large and severe designs that has hitherto prevailed in England. A school of historical painting is not to be formed in a year, and we mention this, because the visitors to the present Exhibition seemed, from the way in which they came on the days we were in the Hall, either to have lost sight of this fact, or to be ignorant of it. The country has every reason to be pleased at the result of the encouragement given by the Government to the revival of sculpture, and we trust that the six artists selected for the notice quoted above, are commissions from the Government, and we have to record the names of Edward Armitage, John Tennisl, jun., and J. Noel Paton, as selected for the three premiums of £200 each.

First on the list of works to be noticed, are the Cartoon, Sketch, and Fresco (Nos. 41, 42, 43) of Maclise. He has chosen the subject of Chivalry, and the following description of the design is quoted from the Catalogue:—

"The Spirit, or 'personification' of Chivalry, is surrounded by men of various pursuits—religious, military, and civil, who represent, as by an upper court or house, the final acquisition of the labours and rewards. Beneath, are not having obtained, though within reach of, the crown, a young Knight vows himself to chivalric services, attended by his Page, and invited by his lady's favour. Below, or around him, in various grades, other figures are introduced; to connect the subject of representation' of Chivalry, with its general recognition of intellectual pursuits. Among them the Painter, Sculptor, and Man of Science; the Bard, inspiring genius by his notes; the Troubadour and his Minstrel; the Painter from the Holy Land; and the Poet-historian, from whom future ages must derive their knowledge of the spirit and the deeds of Chivalry."

The composition illustrates the characteristic merits and faults of its author. Nothing can be finer in drawing, or more finished in execution than the individual portions of the Cartoon, nothing more lucidless, confused, and scattered than the general effect with reference to the intended position and purpose of the work, in a panel 30 feet from the ground at one end of a hall 100 feet in length, it is a failure. At that height, and from that distance, the Fresco would be unintelligible, and so much from the numbers of the figures—from the want of a leading and distinct purpose in their arrangement, and concentration in the chiaro scuro. The intensity of the reflected lights gives to the figures the brilliancy and hardness of metal, and this defect is even more apparent in the Sketch and Fresco than in the Cartoon. We are the more vexed at this, as the extraordinary execution and firm positive manner of the artist probably lend the public, if it do not the artists, to over-estimate the merits of [illegible] the Sketch (which is in water colour [illegible] and pure, and the combination of architectural form with the figures is well understood. Also[illegible]

[illegible] The Sketch is also rich and dexterous in colour, though we doubt if it be so much the sketch for a Fresco as for an Oil Picture.

Of the "Prince Henry" Cartoon we cannot speak favourably. It is weak in composition, shapeless, and feeble in drawing. The colour of the Fresco is better; but the work is altogether inferior to one on the same subject by Bridges (Nos. 82, 83, 84).

The "Justice" of William Cave Thomas is one among the many instances in this Exhibition, of forgetfulness of the conditions under which these works, if executed, would be seen by the public. It is overcharged and unintelligible in design, and not redeemed by any remarkable skill or expressiveness in parts.

This reproach cannot be extended to the "Religion" of John Calcott Horsley (Nos. 36, 37, 38), though it would be more appropriately entitled "Worship." There is much simplicity and breadth in details and general treatment in this Cartoon, while the Fresco is one of the most decorous in the room.

We have now completed the circle of the commissioned works, and pass to the productions of the successful competitors for premiums.

First in merit comes the "Religion" of Edward Armitage (N. 46, 47, 48). The Cartoon is thus described in the Catalogue:—

"46 The Spirit of Religion (Cartoon), Edward Armitage.—Religion, unfolding her mantle, reveals herself to mankind. The Clouds of Error recede before the Star of Truth. Faith tastes the Sacrament, bolding in one hand the cup, the emblem of martyrdom. Hope, with one hand on the Gospel, and the other pointing to the Cross, bids the Captive, the Dying, and the Broken-hearted look up to Religion; and Charity, represented by human prejudices, extends her protection to the Helpless and Outcast."

We should be inclined to select this, with Mr. Dyce's, as the Cartoons which best fulfil their purpose in the exhibited works. There is no unnecessary minuteness of execution. It combines perfect simplicity of composition with originality and concentration in the distribution of light and shadow, while the drawing is firm, manly, and correct. We have seen few more beautiful designs than the "Charity" of Mr. Armitage; while the head of the girl in the lower part of the Cartoon, who guides her aged father to the consolations of religion, and the head and arms of the decrepit slave, are masterpieces of drawing and expression. Go to the end of the Hall and you will still understand the purport of the Cartoon, and catch the effect both of the whole and the separate parts where is hardly another work of note in the Exhibition of which so much can be said. Mr. Armitage's Fresco is marred by a coppery tone in the flesh, though the handling is bold and successful

Second of the rewarded artists comes John Tenniel, junior, a name new to the public, but no more to remain unknown in art. His subject is "Justice" (Nos. 88, 86, 87). Though deficient in simplicity, the composition is pregnant with invention. It is circular. The figure of Justice occupies the highest point; her [illegible] hand grasps the sword of punishment, and is interposed between an innocent agent of crime and his seducers. On the right are ranged those whom Justice overtakes and punishes, on the left those whom she protects and purifies. These two classes are united at the bottom by the executioner leaning on his axe, and by those who have sinned from ignorance. This Cartoon is in outline, firm, and most correct, thereby to perfection in its beauty of design. The Sketch is one of the most successful in the Hall, and the sketch in water colour good though not very vigorous in colour. As to the merits of this work and Mr Armitage's Cartoon as the best of the commissioned works, we should place those of three, at least, of the commissioned artists—Messrs. Horsley, Thomas, and Redgrave, leaving Mr. Maclise out of the question, on the ground at once of his merits and defects. We cannot say as much for Mr. Noel Paton's "Spirit" (Nos. 11, 12, 13). The description of it in the Catalogue is worth extracting, as a sample of erroneous conception of the subject

"The human soul is typified under the influence of the Spirit of Religion, fighting the good fight of Faith,' and 'pressing towards the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.' The Christian soul is assailed by the three great principles that oppose the spiritual life—the pride of unbelief, and lawless domination, the lust of pleasure, and the mysterious tendency towards ill; (scripturally) the world, the flesh, and the devil. Fame, on his right, strives to allure him from his enterprise, by the phantasmal pageantry of earthly glory—the victory in the battle field—the triumph in the city—and the apotheosis in the sacred place; but he has overcome the Spirit of the World, and tramples him under foot. Pleasure—the insidious parasite—still clings to him; but he spurns her from his side. The fetters of sensuality are broken; his aim is a higher destiny; his course is upward and onward, and he is alike regardless of her lures, and of the scenes of revelry and voluptuousness which her attendant Bacchanal presents to him; his utmost energies are concentrated to repel the assault of the Evil One, who interposes between him and the realisation of his hope, while 'The Lamb, slain from the beginning—the Alpha and Omega,' extends his helping hands; the angelic swords are bared—the fiend is baffled—and the soul is rescued."

This is not "Religion," but a description of the struggle between good and evil in man's nature, which Religion determines; and, as might be expected, the Cartoon seems rather intended for "Warfare" than the subject whose name it bears. The drawing is dexterous, and the finish and labour great; but in every other respect the Cartoon, instead of rewarding a premium, should have been classed among the worst in the exhibition; and it is lucky for Messrs. Armitage and Tenniel, that the surpassing merit of their works renders the choice of them for rewards independent, in public opinion, of any trust in the competence of the judges who awarded the premiums. In choosing Mr Paton's work for reward, they have done injustice to Messrs. Bridges, Wallor, Hurlstone, obviously, and perhaps to others of the exhibitors.

Mr. Waller's "Justice" is simply and grandly conceived, and his Fresco one of the best in the Hall. The same may be said of Mr. Hurlstone's. There are faults of drawing in the works of both, but they have had a proper conception of the work to be done, and have not fallen far short in doing it. The same praise may be bestowed on Mr. Bridges, whose Cartoon of "Prince Henry," the [illegible] somewhat weak, is very much superior to Mr. Redgrave's.

Mr. Ford Brown has a Cartoon of "Justice," which, though grotesque and deficient in simplicity, shows that the artist possesses vigour of conception and hand.

Mr. Severn's Cartoon of "The Baptism of Ethelbert" is weak to feebleness, but his Fresco is a beautiful bit of mellow colouring

Mr. Shakespeare's two Cartoons of "Edward's Court and Chivalry" should not have been admitted, so paltry are they in conception, and so slovenly in execution; and Mr. Corbould's "Champion of England" (what business has it here?) is equally mindless in conception, and theatrically skilful in drawing and costume.

Mr. Agllo's Fresco is as good as his Cartoon is bad, which is saying a great deal, and we could extend the criticism to Mr. Butler Morris. Of the rest, the less said the better.

In the sculpture the first place is claimed by Mr. Bell's admirable Portrait Statue of Shakespeare, which, from the quiet unconventionalism with which Rouhillac invested the great dramatist, stands out pure and life-like. Mr. M'Dowell's "Girl Reading" is very pretty and graceful, though not of a high order of plastic art.

On the whole, despite obvious defects of conception and great forgetfulness of the purpose and conditions which in these Cartoons should have been kept in mind, the good exceeds the evil, and the weakest fragments of the previous state of the arts in England, there is matter for cheerfulness and congratulation in this Exhibition. We only hope that the Government, instead of hastily employing artists in the Houses of Parliament, will go on educating them for the work by premiums judiciously bestowed, and adequately remunerative, and that every year we shall have an Exhibition in Westminster Hall, freed from the influences which limit the attendance of that in the National Gallery, and forming, in time, a National, instead of a Royal, Academy.

Next week we shall be enabled to give engravings of some among the most interesting of the Cartoons and Frescoes.

THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

The novelty of the past week, at this Theatre, has been the performance of Mercadante's "Gotramento." This opera is one of that class which now nearly engrosses the Italian Operatic stage in other countries. Marked by no striking or characteristic features, possessed of little or no originality of thought, and displaying a want of unity in the design—yet, on the whole, the impression it produces is agreeable. The attention is kept up by the recurrence of pleasing, if not original, melodies—and harmonious, if not conventional, combination of voices—while full scope is given to the singer to display his taste and fancy in altering or embellishing the score.

Such operas as this have afforded, till lately, the only alternative against the constant repetitions of those chef-d'œuvres of bygone composers, which, splendid as they are, have yet been heard and reheard to satiety

But a better week, in the variety of things is, however, approaching. The appearance of a composer of so much originality of genius as Verdi, heralds, it may be hoped, that of a new and more ambitious school, whose masters will not be satisfied with the mere tickling of the ear and pleasing the fancy, but will seek for the more permanent and legitimate sources of effect.

Victor Hugo has again furnished the materials for the plot of this opera, in his tragedy of Ruy Blas, which Signor Maffei has cut down in the libretto in order so to suit it for lyrical purpose, has made it inexplicable and involved: the scene and circumstance are constantly changing, while the idea and purpose of the drama, which has been completely lost sight of. This seems to us a point till lately considered as unimportant, are not misplaced or hypercritical, is most strongly proved in this very opera: for the only situation of real interest and dramatic effect, is also, in a musical point of view, the gem of the opera. The composer has expended on it all his resources, while it elicits all the powers of the two great artists who take the principal parts. We allude to the beautiful duet, "L'Esterna qual s'adora."

As regards the execution of Mercadante's music, Grisi's usual volume and power of voice failed her, as we thought, in her first aria, "Del Superbo Vinnidar," though in the duet with Lablache she gave it with much pathetic expression. The latter amply redeemed, however, in the scene where she pours forth her reproaches on Bianca and her faithless lover, and where her bursts of voice corresponded admirably to the feeling of the moment.

We have already mentioned her performance of the last duet, and her death-song. Warmed by the beauty of the music, she sang with a depth of feeling and truthfulness of expression, in which she was most ably emulated by Mariani, who seemed to have concentrated his power on this point. In the workings of revenge and indignation, and the succeeding heartrending remorse, all his energies were called forth, and he was the finest tenor singer in the opera, with the exception of the air he introduced, we thought that he lacked his usual spirit and animation. Bramhilla sang, on this occasion, with more than her wonted spirit and energy. The aria which followed the duet of Grisi and Lablache—"Era Stella del mattino," was charmingly given by this gifted singer. Nothing could exceed the delicacy and tasteful feeling of her fioriture, and the striking skill with which she avoided the doubtful notes of her voice, resting only on those which were pleasant to the ear. This was enthusiastically encored, as well as the duet, "Dolce Conforto," by well known amateur performers, in which her voice blended most harmoniously with that of Grisi. These two arrestes, accordingly animated by the same feeling, held the audience entranced by their sweet current of melodious sound that issued from their lips. It was one of the most effective moments of the opera: Buenos and Ebnisi, the two heroines, forgetting their rivalry, were pouring forth their griefs in unison, and all was breathless attention in the house, when an unwonted sight appeared to disturb the quietude of the most decorous and absorbed. An unfortunate cat, certainly one of the least [illegible], if the most ambitious of its kind, forced its way into public notice and [illegible] arrived at the front of the stage; apparently desirous, however, of an audience turned tail, and after performing several rapid evolutions round the stage, finally disappeared, to the intense amusement of the audience; while the two fair cantatrices, suddenly rescued from the very verge of tragedy, were making the vigorous efforts to restrain the suppressed laughter that burst forth in despite of themselves. Forsooth, who had been very ill the day previous, was unable to appear, and Mdlle. Dumilatre, who undertook the part of his sorely treath and certainty of intonation was occasionally perceptible. We cannot dismiss the subject of this night's entertainment without adverting to the performance of Lindley, the "Prince of Violoncellos," as one of his witty colleagues has named him. One of the merits of this opera, and one we had omitted to remark, is the occasional beauty of the instrumentation, in which some of the most delicate effects are produced by the violoncello, and, certainly, we never had them greater justice: his performance was, as usual, marked by a delicacy and certainty of touch which age has been unable to impair.

On the occasion of the performance of the Grand Ballet, the presence of the whole Royal Family, including the Queen and King of the Belgians; these assembled dilettanti remaining till the very last, and testifying, in every possible manner, their appreciation of the performance.

The choreographic triumphs of the past week now claim our attention. In spite of evil prognostics, of doubts as to the still-continuing ascendancy of the fair Sylphs, Taglioni has appeared, and with more than her most prejudiced have been forced to admire and to applaud. The lapse of time, and the appearance and popularity of other ballerinas, have not taken from Taglioni the pre-eminence that she has never ceased to maintain. She shows us, more clearly than any of her fair rivals, that there is something more in dancing than the philosophy of the ballet before her time had dreamt of; and that it is only another expression of that essential feeling of the beautiful which characterises all the higher styles of art, and is its true aim and essence. Her light aerial motions and her exquisite grace seem not to belong to earth; she is rather the "embodiment of a vision"—a realisation of what the poet has dreamt, the painter sketched, and of the floating ideas that music is intended to convey. "The Sylphide," although the subject is taken from a poem of Charles Nodier, and although it was put in a ballet form by Nourrit, is yet the creation of Taglioni, it is identified with her. It was one of the first and best of that series of poetical ballets which has displaced the allegorical absurdities that had till then formed the highest efforts of the ballet masters.

COVENT-GARDEN.

Several difficulties in obtaining a suitable house from the Lord Chamberlain being overcome, "Les Huguenots" was produced at this theatre on Monday evening, by the Brussels Company, and with complete success; Mr. Laborde performing the part of Raoul de Nangis—the part first played by Nourrit, and afterwards by Duprez; and Mr. Zelger the sturdy Protestant, Marcel. Madame Laborde was the Queen, and Madame Julien Valentine: and it is scarcely necessary to add, that the manner in which all the music was executed was unexceptionable

This is the first time we have ever seen the opera satisfactorily produced in this country, recollecting, as we do, the perfection which characterised it at the Académie Royale. It was represented, as our readers may remember, by the German Company during their season two or three years back, when Standigl played Marcel: but, in other respects, its production was not sufficiently effective to command much popularity. We shall be mistaken, however, if in its present state it does not prove attractive.

The song at the commencement of the second act, was deliciously given by Madame Laborde; and Mr. Zelger was enthusiastically applauded in his "Piff Paff!" song, one of the most effective morceaux in the entire opera. The same care and unanimity of purpose were observable in the orchestra, which we have several times had occasion to notice · and, in spite of the extreme length of the opera, the audience applauded with the same warmth towards the end as they had done at the commencement. This length might, however, have been considerably curtailed had less time been allowed for the entr'actes, which were protracted to an unpardonable duration, and may be altered with advantage. There is a report that, after the close of the Drury-Lane season, which was announced for Thursday, this company will be transferred to that theatre for a limited number of representations. If this be true, poor Covent-Garden will once more be consigned to the dust and cobwebs of deserted loneliness.

PRINCESS'

The matrimonial squabbles of Mr. and Mrs. Caudle, with which every body is now perfectly acquainted, through the disclosures of Mr. Douglas Jerrold, have furnished this theatre with a laughable interlude, which was performed for the first time on Saturday evening. A little mild burlesque to our Uncle's "Curtain Lectures," relative to some Gravesend flirtations, which will not bear analysis; and a few very improbable situations and intrigues carry on the attention until Mrs. Caudle is discovered in bed, soundly lecturing her hapless husband, whom she has found out in the enjoyment of a holiday "unbeknown to herself," as Mrs. Gamp would say, having given false reasons for leaving home.

Mr. Oxberry was immensely funny as Mrs. Caudle, convulsing the house with laughter; and Mr. Compton, as the sponse, was equally droll; indeed, these two gentlemen had all the merit of the piece to themselves. There was loud applause at the conclusion, mingled with considerable disapprobation; this latter arose, we expect, from one or two situations which had more equivocal breadth than humour to recommend them.

Next Thursday we shall once more have an opportunity of hearing that delightful opera, "Anna Bolena," and of admiring the lyrical and dramatic powers of each of the admirable representatives of the characters of that eventful period. The cast is perfect, for it includes Grisi, Brambilla, Tedesco, Rosetti, Mariani, and Lablache. After the opera, the whole strength of the company will combine to give effect to the magnificent "Pregbiera" and other of the best passages from "Pietro l'Eremita," or "Mosè in Egitto. In the ballet department are included the three greatest ballerine of the day—Taglioni, Carlotta Grisi, Cerito, and Lucile Grahn; Taglioni having consented, for the sake of the beneficiaire, Signor Fusati, to add one night's performance to her last sdieus.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

July comes in far more "fat and unprofitable," in the matter of out-door festivities, than seasons justified by the nature of the season. The opening week has given us no racing of account, but one sailing match, elsewhere dealt with, and one cricket match -so far, that is, as relates to the metropolitan districts. In the dearth of sport, it is well there is some gratifying news to announce connected with the greatest of our metropolitan galas—we allude to Epsom Races. While the convenience of visitors, and the improvement of the general details, have, at almost every meeting in the kingdom, been greatly advanced during the last few years, at Newmarket and Epsom things remain in statu quo; pretty much as they were "when George the Third was King." By exclusive charter, the former is licensed to be dull and gentlemanlike; the latter, having stood still very nearly too long, at last sees the necessity for putting its best foot forward. Probably human ingenuity could not conceive anything—as far as turf business goes—more out of joint than the mass en masse of the racing at Epsom. Take, for instance, the crowning need of all: every man who goes to the Surrey Downs on the Derby Day, desires to see that race run for: that, we take it, is granted. He also has his affairs to settle—great or little: he must needs seek the betting mart. Now the ring is so placed as to be just the most difficult place to get access to whence to reach the grand Stand. We will suppose there are some few drawn thither merely by the spectacle; but they are fain to participate in the overture—to see the immortal steeds caparison. These must go to the utmost extent of the course from the Stand if they would see the saddling and preparatory canter; and they may get back before the race comes off—if they can—with the contingency of a spot to stand on, at 100 to 1 that they can see. Who is the worst placed of all having any accommodation provided for money or love? The Judge of the races, undoubtedly. He [illegible] till it is round Tattenham Corner, and in the straight [illegible] and [illegible] with [illegible] forty or fifty [illegible] those persons—I [illegible] pleasure in Hong Kong. Were we justified in assuming that such arrangements were without parallel on the turf? It is proposed to reform this altogether, by a series of alterations, which, if carried out, will make the metropolitan meeting what it ought to be. By means of a large raised lawn in front of the Grand Stand, accommodation will be there found for the ring, and facilities for viewing the race, for many hundreds more than the building itself can provide for. That most interesting ceremony, the saddling, shall also be performed in front of the lawn—the coming down of the race also. The race itself, from its commencement to its close, will be under the eye of the most aristocratic gathering, to witness the match between the Gentlemen of England and the Gentlemen of Kent. On that day, when the wickets were struck, England had lost six men for 93 runs; the score being—Kent, 116; England, 93. Tuesday was anything but a cri. day, so far as the forenoon went, and further. The play, however, proceeded; and ended with Kent 190 to England's 186. On Wednesday the game was resumed; but the ground from the previous rain was dreadfully bad for bowling; and, as it began to pour soon after two o'clock, the match was finally drawn by mutual consent; the score being for Kent 333, and England, without a wicket down, 45 runs upon their second innings. All bets are consequently off. The Winchester races occupied Wednesday and Thursday; but were without interest, save for those who witnessed them.

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—The ring at the Corner continues in a healthy state, thanks to the extraordinary luck that has attended the "fields" from the commencement of the season. At present there are no less than six races in the market, money is plentiful, and in the aggregate, although not overwhelming, speculation is considerably brisk. It would scarcely be possible to enter into the minutiæ of the business transacted on "the day of the date" of this notice: suffice it, that out of the 131 horses handicapped for the Liverpool Cup, Winsecur, Trueboy, Milton, and the Ironmaster, are already found as being remarkably well in. The first two were backed at the odds quoted, and 18 to 1 would have been taken about each of the others. For the Goodwood Stakes, the Libel, Pythia, Warp, Jet, and the Ironmaster, are already found as being remarkably well in. So only horses upon whom money is laid out with anything like spirit. The St Leger betting is steady at the old averages, nor, beyond a disposition in one or two quarters to back Malcolm, is there anything new or noticeable in the Derby closing quotations.

JULY STAKES.
5 to 1 agst Smuggler Bill

LIVERPOOL CUP.
9 to 1 agst Winsecur | 10 to 1 agst Trueboy

GOODWOOD STAKES.

The field agst twelve	20 to 1 — Jet	25 to 1 agst Boarding School Miss (t)
13 to 1 agst The Libel	20 to 1 — John O'Gaunt (t)
16 to 1 — Pythia (t)	20 to 1 — Lanercost	25 to 1 — Ironmaster (t)
16 to 1 — Fire Apple	20 to 1 — Milton	30 to 1 — Roderick
18 to 1 — Warp (t)	20 to 1 — Queen Mab (t)	30 to 1 — Bent Bower (t)
20 to 1 — Queen Mab (t)	20 to 1 — Glossy (t)

GOODWOOD CUP.
5 to 2 agst Foigh-a-Ballagh | 6 to 1 agst Ironmaster (t) | 16 to 1 agst Arundo

GOODWOOD CUP.

7 to 1 agst The Merry Monarch (t)	10 to 1 agst The Baron (t)	30 to 1 agst Kedger (t)
	25 to 1 — Connaught Ranger (t)	40 to 1 — Conical Boy (t)
9 to 1 — Mentor (t)		50 to 1 — Scythian (t)
9 to 1 — Weatherbit (t)	25 to 1 — Pantaca (t)	50 to 1 — Foremast (t)
11 to 1 — Old England (t)	25 to 1 — Comte de Lyon

DERBY.

33 to 1 agst Rizzo (t)	33 to 1 agst Malcolm	50 to 1 agst Rev. to the Merry Monarch (t)
33 to 1 — Arundo	33 to 1 — Bran

THURSDAY.—A busy day on the Goodwood Stakes, the only race upon which the metallics were used with any effect. The "great guns" were "the mares," viz. Pythia, Queen Mab, Sigh, Venus, Rowena, Wee Pet, Miss Cheyne, Miss Europa, Extravagansa, and Glossy—a very formidable lot to stand against. The leading features were Glossy, Queen Mab, and Pythia, and upon them the outlay was considerable. Several horses were also backed, but without any material impression in the prices. The following were the final quotations:—

LIVERPOOL JULY CUP.

10 to 1 agst Winsecur	15 to 1 agst Milton (t)	[30 to 1 agst Ironmaster (t)]
	25 to 1 agst Rowena (t)

GOODWOOD STAKES.

12 to 1 agst The Libel	15 to 1 agst Queen Mab (t)	25 to 1 agst Boarding School Miss (t)
12 to 1 — Pythia (t)	20 to 1 — Rowena
15 to 1 — Fire Apple	20 to 1 — Glossy (t)	30 to 1 — Roderick (t)
15 to 1 — Warp	15 to 1 — Venus	25 to 1 — Extravagansa
15 to 1 — Sigh (t)	15 to 1 — Wee Pet (t)	25 to 1 — Europa
20 to 1 — John O'Gaunt (t)	20 to 1 — Lightning	25 to 1 — Extravagansa (t)

GOODWOOD CUP.

5 to 2 agst Foigh-a-Ballagh,t	5 to 1 agst Ironmaster (t)	15 to 1 agst Arundo

DERBY.

5 to 1 agst Weatherbit	9 to 1 agst Mentor	[20 to 1 agst Pantaca
7 to 1 — Merry Monarch	12 to 1 — Annandale	25 to 1 — Kedger
	The others as on Monday.

THE FITZHARDINGE CUP MATCH, BY VESSELS OF THE ROYAL THAMES YACHT CLUB.

Lord Fitzhardinge is a good practical sportsman himself, and he would fain be the cause of a like proficiency in others. To this intent, he presented a very handsome Cup, to be sailed for by craft of the R.T.Y.C., exclusively handled by members of that Club. Now the term, "good sportsman" is as applicable to a good yachtsman, as a crack rider, or a crack shot; for yachting, to all intents and purposes, has become one of our National Sports. This match was won on Monday last, under more favourable circumstances than proverbially attach to water parties in general. The day was fine and breezy—just the fashion of wind suited to pleasure galleys—and the whole affair went off with great éclat. Seven prizes originally entered for this match, but only four went—for various reasons—but not among the causes for want of crews, as there were volunteers enough to man a frigate. As the tide flowed the whole fleet came down, the four remaining for that very reason; and, in consequence of the strong leading wind which the vessels would have—which would enable them to round the buoy at Coal-house Point long before the young flood began to make—the ebb set up. Coal-house Point lays between Erith and Greenhithe. The wager fleet consisted of the following clippers, and passed the goal in this order

	Tons		Owners
The Belvidere	90	..	Lord Alfred Paget.
The Prima Donna	85	..	C. R. Tatham, Esq.
The Phantom	90	..	A. O. Wilkinson, Esq.
The Widgeon	94	..	T. E. Snook, Esq.

As the hour for getting under way approached, the river between Greenwich and Blackwall was alive with pleasure craft of every description. There was the Flirt, the symmetrical fore-and-after belonging to the Squadron schooner, belonging to Sir Bellingham Graham; the Pearl, Lord Anglesey's jewel of a cutter; the Imogen, steered by her owner—the lord of the revels—Earl Fitzhardinge; the Intrepid—the Duke of Beaufort's cutter—a build to be admitted more of the useful than ornamental class; Lord Wharncliffe's Romulus (and remies as regards sightliness in the matter of her standing gear); besides a shoal of less dignified barks. When the signal-gun boomed, there was a down-stream affair, hotly pressed by the wager boats; the whole (to a poetical imagination) furnishing materials for comparing the scene to a flight of white-winged sea-birds.

The amateurs had their weather eyes wide open; for, in anticipation that it might come on to blow—as, of course, it always may—they had each a reef of his mainsail down, small canvas for'ard, and everything snug. Thus they went all safe, despite of the fact that full sail was carried by the Woolwich down to the—now with a breeze, now without—to Coalhouse-point, which the Belvidere was the first to reach, rounding the buoy at ten minutes after three -a manœuvre in which she was followed by the rest in due rotation, by the time that the last was compassed the match were of opinion, some, that the Prima Donna drew best to windward; some, that the day suited the Phantom; but all the while my Lord Alfred Paget was slipping away from them; and, by the time that the match was won, he was trying his hand in sailing episodes—now with the Vixen, and anon with some other young lady in stays; for it was a dead roser, and now enough of it. So much had it frozen, that all the cruel bitter cold had not been sufficient before reaching Erith : one of them had saved the crew that trouble by carrying hers away. In the reaches between Erith and Woolwich—though all the interest in the match was over, as having the carried the mast away, the Belvidere had won—the sight was one of the most animating that can be conceived. From forty to fifty pleasure vessels, of one class or other, were all boating up : some of them—the Flirt, for instance—at a speed not often witnessed by old Father Thames.

It was seven o'clock as the Belvidere, to the sound of cannon and martial music, passed the goal, boating the Prima Donna by three minutes. The Cup was presented with the usual honours by the Commodore to Lord Paget, who returned thanks very gallantly by proposing, at the close of his speech, the health of the ladies who honoured the match with their presence. Other toasts were drunk, including the health of the Commodore, who, in matter of popularity on the Thames, is a fitting Viceroy of the Cinque Ports. It was a very happy day; and let us hope for a better match of the season, on Wednesday, the 16th inst., may have as propitious an anniversary

WINCHESTER RACES.
WEDNESDAY

Handicap Stakes of 5 sovs each, and 25 added.

Captain Delme's Bedelia, 4 yrs, 8st 5lb	..	.. (Nat)	1
Mr. Shepherd's f by Glaucus, out of March First, 3 yrs, 7st 12lb	..	..	2

The Original Hampshire Stakes of 25 sovs each

Mr. R. Etwall's Sigfa, 5 yrs, 8st 7lb	..	.. (Kitchener)	1
Mr. Herbert's Ajax, aged, 7st 12lb	..	..	2

The Great Produce Stakes of 50 sovs each, h ft. New mile.

Mr. Etwall's Witticism, allowed 3lbs	..	.. walkover

The Queen's Plate of 100 guineas. Heats.

Mr. Payne's Queen Mab, 6 yrs	..	.. (Nat)	1
Sir J. B. Mills' Pugilist, 4 yrs	..	..	2

Betting.—4 to 1 on the mare, who won the first heat in a common canter, and walked for the second.

THURSDAY.

The Two-year-old Stakes of 10 sovs each, and 20 added.

Mr. Wreford's West Countryman	..	.. (A. Day)	1
Sir J. B. Mills's The Slot	..	..	2

[illegible] Members' Plate of £50; heats, two miles

Sir J. B Mills's [illegible] 3 yrs	..	.. (A. Day)	1
Mr H [illegible] yrs	..	..	2

The Winchester Stakes of 10 sovs each; heats.

Mr [illegible] Medwell, 6 yrs	..	.. (Wakefield)	1
Mr. Greville's Sir Francis, 3 yrs	..	..	2

£50 given by the Steward, added to a Sweepstakes of 10 sovs each.

Captain Delme's Redskin, 4 yrs	..	.. (Nat)	1
Mr. Kingston's Sparsholt, 3 yrs	..	..	2

EARTH REGATTA.—The great meeting at Erith, at which the gentlemen of the various aquatic clubs and the "crack" London watermen will again have an opportunity of exhibiting their prowess, will take place on Thursday next. The regatta has been, as usual, got up on an exceedingly liberal scale, and the following brilliant entries give promise of first-rate sport:—A Presentation Cup, value seventy guineas, for four-oared boats; gentlemen amateurs. The Neptune Club, the Herne, the Ariel Cutter Club, the Thames, the Royal Artillery, St. George's Boat Club, the Thetis, the Argonauts, the Leander, the Nautilus, and the Guy's. Three fine heats must result from such a first-rate muster. Four-oared race with London watermen; for a purse of £30 for the first heat, £20 for the second, £10 for the third, and £5 for the fourth. Another race, with watermen at Erith and below, for funeral prizes, and a grand sweepstakes match with gentlemen, complete the very attractive bill of fare.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—The show of wheat of home produce here to-day was very limited, owing to which holders were firm, and, in some instances, obtained a trifling improvement in the quotations of last week. Foreign wheat was in good request, where we had a fair demand for it, and the rates had an upward tendency. Grinding barley moved off at previous rates In other kinds very little was doing For fine malt we have a retail demand, but at no more money. Oats were steady, but other articles commanded very little attention.

ARRIVALS (English): wheat, 2693; barley, [illegible] 500 quarters. Irish: wheat, — barley, — oats, 17,190 quarters Foreign: wheat, 600, barley, 1480; oats, 1440 quarters Flour, 6,000 sacks; Meal, no quarters.

ENGLISH.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 44s to 51s; ditto, white, 47s to 54s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 40s to 50s; ditto, white, 46s to 52s; rye, 30s to 32s; grinding barley, 22s to 24s; malting ditto, 30s to 32s; malting ditto, 33s to 35s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 50s to 53s; brown ditto, 43s to 50s; Kingston and Ware ditto, 52s to 55s; Chevalier ditto, 55s to 57s; potato ditto, 48s to 50s; oats, Yorkshire and Scotch, 22s to 24s; Youghal and Cork, black, 20s to 21s; ditto, white, 21s to 23s; Limerick, 20s to 22s; beans, old, 34s to 36s; ditto, new, 30s to 32s; pease, old, 34s to 36s; ditto, new, 30s to 32s; flour, town-made, 42s to —; Suffolk, 35s, white, 32s to 34s; baskets, 30s to 32s, per quarter. Town-made flour, 42s to —; Suffolk, Norfolk, and Yorkshire, 33s to 35s, per 280 lbs. Barley, 30s to 32s; malt, 52s to 56s; oats, 22s to 24s, per quarter. Linseed cakes, English, £11 to £11 5s, per ton; ditto, foreign, £7 7s to £7 10s per 1000 : Rapeseed cakes £6 7s to £6, per ton Canary, 46s to 52s, per quarter English Coyer seed, 42s to 52s; ditto, foreign, 42s to 52s; rye, 28s to 30s; tares, 28s to 30s; hempseed, 36s to 38s, per quarter. Carraway seed, 22s to 24s, per cwt. Coriander, 12s to 14s, per cwt. Brown Mustard seed, 8s to 12s; white ditto, 12s to 14s. Tares, 6s 6d to 7s 6d, per bushel. English Rapeseed, £38 to £39, per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £11 to £11 5s, per ton; ditto, foreign, £7 7s to £7 10s per 1000 : Rapeseed cakes £6 7s to £6, per ton Canary, 46s to 52s, per quarter English Clover

"PILGRIMS TO THE HOLY WELL."—BY F. W. TOPHAM.—FROM THE NEW WATER COLOUR EXHIBITION.

PILGRIMS TO THE HOLY WELL.

This is one of the most masterly pictures in the Exhibition of the New Society of Painters in Water Colours. The reader need scarcely be told that the scene is from the Green Isle, so exquisitely characteristic are the portraitures of Irish life. The devotion of the two figures kneeling at the Well—one drinking of the "holy water," and the other in fervent prayer—is admirably contrasted with the vacancy of the seated girl; the intervening and the distant figures, too, are equally expressive in their way. This picture, which is of somewhat large size, has been sold for sixty-five guineas.

NEW MUSIC.

HE WANDERS ON THE GOLDEN SANDS. Words and music by S. N. ELSINGTON, Jun. Willis and Co., Lower Grosvenor-street.

This is a ballad founded on the life of Lord Nelson, and illustrating three epochs of his glorious career: as a child, sailing his boat on his native stream; as the youth, serving his country as a midshipman; and as the naval chief, falling at the moment of victory. The music is simple, but effective, and capable of great dramatic effect, for producing which the words, which we subjoin, are also well adapted:—

He wanders on the golden sands,
His little boat to guide,
Which he hath made, with gentle hands,
To launch upon the tide.
The breeze expands its snowy sail,—
And none more proud than he
Hath ever led, in strife or gale,
A bark upon the sea.

Next—on the deck where heroes tread,
His country's sword he wears;
Her flag is streaming o'er his head,
Her glorious badge he bears.
None bolder ever dared the storm,
None braver met the foe,
No firmer heart and finer form
Could o'er the Ocean go.

Now white upon his breast appears,
The star his country gave,
He meets amid her blood and tears,
His death wound on the wave.
Swift from the foes' unerring gun,
The fatal bullet flies,
A shout proclaims the battle won
And with a prayer he dies.

BEILSTEIN, ON THE MOSELLE.

We spoke of "the elegant handling and graceful colour" of this picture, by Mr. Harding, a few weeks since. It is, certainly, one of the most exquisitely finished drawings in the Gallery of the Society o Painters in Water Colours. The scene has many of the characteristics of the system of the Rhine (to which the Moselle belongs), so nobly sung by Byron:

The negligently grand, the fruitful bloom
Of coming ripeness, the white city's sheen,
The rolling stream, the precipice's gloom,
The forest's growth, and Gothic walls between,
The wild rocks heaped, as they had towers been
In mockery of man's art; and there withal
A race of happy faces as the scene,
Whose fertile bounties here extend to all
Still springing o'er thy banks, though Empires near them fall.

This charming picture—a small one—has been purchased for thirty guineas. By the way, the Gallery will close on Saturday, the 12th instant.

"BEILSTEIN, ON THE MOSELLE."—BY J. D. HARDING.—FROM THE NEW WATER COLOUR EXHIBITION.

GRAND REVIEW IN HYDE PARK, ON MONDAY LAST.

GRAND REVIEW IN HYDE PARK.

On Monday forenoon, the long promised Review of the household troops took place in Hyde-park, in the presence of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, his Majesty the King of the Belgians, their Royal Highnesses the Duke of Cambridge and Prince George of Cambridge, his Grace the Duke of Wellington, the Marquis of Anglesey, Marquis of Londonderry, Viscount Combermere, Lord Fitzroy Somerset, and a brilliant and numerous staff.

The troops reviewed were the 1st Regiment of Life Guards, 2nd Regiment of Life Guards, 1st and 3rd battalions of the Grenadier Guards, and the 1st and 2nd battalions of the Scotch Fusilier Guards, the ground being kept by the 4th Light Dragoons.

About eight o'clock, the 4th Light Dragoons, under the command of Colonel Paley, entered the park by the Kensington-gate, from Hounslow Barracks, and proceeded immediately to the Review ground, with the exception of two squadrons, who were appointed to take part in the sham fight about to take place, and who took up a position amongst the trees on the north bank of the Serpentine, near the Royal Humane Society's Receiving house.

At ten o'clock, the 1st and 3rd battalions of Grenadier Guards, from Portman and St. John's Wood Barracks, entered the Park by Cumberland gate, and about the same time the 1st and 2nd battalions of Scotch Fusilier Guards, from the St. George's and Wellington Barracks, also entered the Park from Hyde-park Corner, and were shortly followed by the 1st Regiment of Life Guards, under Colonel Reid, from Knightsbridge Barracks, and the 2nd Regiment of Life Guards, under Col. Hon. G. Cavendish, from Regent's-park Barracks. About the same time, a large party of the Grenadier Guards, from the Tower, in white fatigue dresses, entered the square for the purpose of assisting the squadrons of Light Dragoons in the sham fight, and took up a position on the south side of the square, near the Serpentine.

Precisely at eight minutes to eleven o'clock, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, with the King of the Belgians, attended by Major-General Sir Edward Bowater and Colonel Wylde, and accompanied by the Duke of Wellington, entered the square on horseback, followed by a most brilliant staff, and took up their position at head-quarters, the flag denoting which was placed directly opposite Grosvenor gate.

His Royal Highness Prince Albert wore his uniform as Colonel of the Scotch Fusilier Guards, and the Duke of Wellington, that of Colonel of the Grenadier Guards; while, his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, who, accompanied by Prince George, did not arrive until the Review had begun, wore his uniform as Colonel of the Coldstream Guards, Prince George of Cambridge being habited in an hussar uniform. Amongst the other officers present were Lord Viscount Combermere, Sir Willoughby Gordon, Lord F. Somerset, Sir Charles Dalbiac, Sir F. Trench, Sir James Kempe, Sir John M'Donald, Colonel Wood, M.P., &c.

The Royal and illustrious party were received by the troops with presented arms, the bands playing, "See, the Conquering Hero Comes;" they immediately proceeded to pass along the front and rear of the line, returning to head quarters.

The Review then commenced, the cavalry under the command of General Lygon, marching by, in squadrons, the bands playing, followed by the infantry under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Drummond (Equerry to her Majesty of the Grenadier Guards, their bands also playing, and after again passing at quick time, and going through several evolutions in perfect military order, the sham fight commenced by the Grenadiers advancing from the Bayswater side of the Park, covered by the Life Guards, and throwing out skirmishers to attack the outposts of the enemy, which were stationed amongst the plantations on the bank of the Serpentine. The contest between the belligerent forces was kept up with great spirit and military precision for nearly half an hour; the usual attacks, retreats, advances, deploying, firing in solid squares, line firing, volleys, &c., taking place and giving the almost countless spectators a kind of panoramic picture of the doings on the field of battle.

At the conclusion of the sham fight, the troops again formed into line, the bands playing "God save the Queen." His Royal Highness Prince Albert, with the Duke of Wellington, Duke of Cambridge, &c., then advanced, the troops presenting arms, and congratulated the officers on the excellent appearance of the troops, and the correct and soldier like manner in which they had performed the duties assigned them, and precisely at half past 12 o'clock the brilliant Royal and illustrious cortège quitted the Review ground.

M. BAROILHET.

There is no art that can boast more enthusiastic votaries than music, and in no other does their vocation appear more decided and irresistible. Musical genius, in spite of obstacle, always forces its way into light. Of this, examples are offered by almost all those who have attained pre-eminence in the art—the bent of their minds developing itself with the earliest dawning of intellect; and it is further exemplified by the subject of this slight sketch.

Paul Baroilhet was born at Bayonne on the 22nd of September, 1816. His family were flourishing merchants, highly respected in their native place; and the young Baroilhet was brought up to the calling of his fathers. It proved, however, uncongenial to his mind, and every moment that he could steal from the uninteresting duties of the counting-house was devoted to the study of music. He had been powerfully struck from his earliest childhood with the effects of harmony, and he spent much time, while still at an age when study of so grave a kind is usually unwillingly enforced, in seeking acquaintance with its laws, and endeavouring to form fresh combinations. Every evening, after a day of busy employment, found him at the Opera House, whence he brought back in his memory all the most striking morceaux that had been performed, giving them a fresh charm by his manner of execution. Without a master, and with no aid whatsoever, he had thus attained great proficiency in his favourite pursuit; but he was not destined for ever thus to struggle alone. Some fortunate circumstance brought to Bayonne a friend of Rossini, an experienced musical critic. The voice of the young baritone, whom he accidentally heard, made such an impression on him that he formed the determination of taking him to Paris, there to forward his musical education. A struggle ensued, for the parents of our artist were at first utterly averse to such a proposal; but, at length, the decided inclination of their son, and the brilliant auguries of his new friend, induced them to consent. He set off, and in a few days he was brought to Rossini himself, to give a specimen of his powers. The immortal maestro himself accompanied Baroilhet, who sang, with all the fire and expression that the excitement of such a trial imparted, an air from the "Ingarmo Felice," one of Rossini's operas. The composer was much impressed by the talent of the young singer. "I can warrant," said he to his friend, "to this young man a brilliant career. Write to his friends that his fortune is made; we will take charge of it." Through the advice and assistance of Rossini—for whom he has ever since entertained the liveliest attachment and gratitude—Baroilhet soon became a pupil of the Conservatoire; he was then eighteen years of age, and he studied for two years under Banderali. His voice by this time had become formed, and his style and taste acquired that delicacy and purity which now distinguish his singing. But he was determined to perfect himself in Italy, and there to make his début. Rejecting, therefore, the most tempting offers from the Italians, he departed, and speedily obtained an engagement at the Teatro Carcano at Milan, where, at that time, Pasta, Ronconi, and Galli were creating a furore of enthusiasm such as only Italy could witness. The appearance of Baroilhet, in spite however of the brilliant stars which might have been expected to engross public homage, was hailed in the most flattering manner. Brilliant offers were made to him by all the Italian impresarii, and he was soon again en route. Genoa, Verona, Brescia, Bergamo, Trieste, Turin, Palermo, Rome, and, finally, Naples, were scenes of real triumph to the young artist. At Naples he remained sometime, and enjoyed the most enthusiastic favour. Here he formed a strong friendship with the unfortunate Nourrit, who had, a short time before, quitted his native country in despair at the fickleness of a public who had bestowed his justly earned laurels on a new competitor for their favour. Duprez! His approaching performance of Cornette's sublime tragedy, "Polyeucte," set to music by Donizetti under the title of "I Martiri," was to have given these two great artists the opportunity of appearing together, but the Neapolitan Government put a stop to the rehearsals on religious grounds. Nourrit had studied this part with the greatest care; he had brought all the resources of his voice and genius to bear upon it, and this proved the last drop in the cup of disappointment and mortification. One morning he put an end to his days, and Baroilhet thus lost his dearest friend. Grief at this catastrophe brought on a dangerous illness, and the report of his death, circulated at Milan, at length reached his family at Bayonne. His father was then on a sick bed, and this rumour accelerated his end. Baroilhet, thus visited at the same time by two of the severest losses that can fall to the lot of man, for a while withdrew to his native town and gave himself up to grief.

M. BAROILHET.

On the 2nd of December, 1840, Baroilhet returned to France and made his début at the Académie de Musique, in the part of King Alphonse, in "The Favourite." That beautiful air, "Pour tant d'Amour," sung by Baroilhet with that depth of expression and delicacy of feeling which distinguish him, was applauded in the most rapturous manner. His voice, his style, and method, were all subjects of the highest admiration. "Guillaume Tell," "Don Juan," "La Reine de Cheypre," "Don Sebastian," "Charles VI.," were successively performed, and in all Baroilhet had maintained his high reputation; his habit of singing in Italian, which gave a peculiarity to his accent, wore off, and he became a standing favourite of the Parisian public. Since then he has only left Paris to spend a short time at his native town—at Brussels and at Rouen, to each of which places he has been accompanied by universal admiration and applause. He has now, after a long illness, made his début in London, and our readers have had occasion to judge for themselves of the justice of the brilliant reputation which heralded his arrival.

THE REVIEW.—A SKIRMISHING PARTY.

EVERY BODY'S COLUMN.

EVENING MELODIES NO. XI.

The Last Serenade.

I've watched that lamp gleam oft and long,
But all such folly's past.
I've strained the canary a foolish song,
But this shall be the last.
And now my spirit burns to brave
The wonders of the sea,
I'll put my trust in wind and wave,
But never more in thee!"

A fair Venetian blushed to hear
These words at dead of night,
She rose but, ah! the gondolier
Was rapid in his flight.

She watched the foam his prow had shed,
She heard his plashing oar;
And then that lady bent her head,
And never raised it more

Oh! how the lover knows the gloom
His words left on her brow,
Both might have lived and loved in bloom—
While both lie buried now!
To ladies' lips caprice imparts
So strange, so frigid a tune,
That first they break our foolish hearts,
And then they break their own!

B. R. S.

CONSUMPTION OF TEA IN ENGLAND

In 1740, 1,498,625 lbs. of tea were retained for home consumption. Two years afterwards the quantity fell to 479,868 lbs.; and, in 1767, only 313,010 lbs. were retained. Next year the amount increased to 3,150,817lbs. In 1795, it was 9,114,845 lbs.; in 1795, 21,362,845 lbs.; and, in 1836, 40,142,236 lbs.—the largest amount in any one year retained for home consumption in the United Kingdom. In 1843, the quantity was 45,293,393 lbs.; and last year, 41,363,770 lbs.

THE PASSION FLOWER.

This flower, Passiflora cærulea, a native of the Brazils, was introduced into England in 1699, and was called Flos Passionis, till altered by Linnæus. Its name was derived from the fancied resemblance of the different parts of the flower and plant to the instruments of Christ's suffering. The five stamens were compared to his five wounds; the three styles to the nails by which he was fixed to the cross; the column which elevates the germen, to the cross itself; the rays of the nectary to the crown of thorns; and the petals to the ten apostles, Judas and Peter being rejected.

DEGREES OF HAPPINESS

If you wish to be happy for a day, get well shaved; if for a week, get invited to a wedding; if for a month, buy a good nag; if for half a year, buy a handsome house; if you would be always gay and cheerful, practice temperance.

THE MARCH OF CIVILISATION

The Ottoman Porte continues to appropriate to itself the customs of Europe. It has just made known, by a circular addressed to the various foreign legations, that it was about to prescribe the use of stamped paper for all commercial transactions which might take place in future between Europeans and subjects of the Sublime Porte.

ASTRONOMY

Pray what is a remarkable "latitude"?—Walking into a strange gentleman's house, ringing for claret, and desiring the butler to bring it from bin 33.

HOOD'S LAST NOTE.

To Dr. Moir, Musselburgh.—13th March.—Dear Moir,—God bless you and yours, and good bye. I drop these few last lines, as in a bottle, from a ship wrecked tonight, and on the brink of foundering, to tell you I am in the stage of dropsical debility; but, although suffering in body, serene in mind. So, without reversing my Union Jack, I await my last lurch; till which, believe me, dear Moir, yours most truly, T. HOOD.

ETERNITY.

An American clergyman, in one of his sermons, exclaimed to his hearers —"Eternity! why, you don't know the meaning of that word, nor I either, nor any body else, and ever and ever and ever everythings atop of that. You might place a row of figures from here to sunset, and cipher them all up, and it wouldn't begin to tell how many ages long eternity is. Why, my friends, after millions and millions of years had rolled away in eternity, it would be a hundred thousand years to breakfast time."

SONG OF THE LATE THOMAS HOOD.

[The author of the following very beautiful Song was the late Thomas Hood, who published it with a nom de guerre, when he was not known to literature.]

O, Lady! leave thy silken thread
And flowery tapestrie;
There's living roses on the bush,
And blossoms on the tree;
Stoop where thou wilt, thy careless hand
Some random bud will meet;
Thou canst not tread, but thou wilt find
The daisy at thy feet.

'Tis like the birthday of the world,
When earth was born in bloom;
The light is made of many dyes,
The air is all perfume;

There's crimson buds, and white and blue—
The very violet's there;
For all the sweets that ever grew
Were blended in the air.

There's fairy tulips in the East,
The garden of the sun;
The very streams reflect the hues,
And blossom as they run.
While Hope sees like a crimson rose,
Still wet with pearly showers,
Young Love, like summer, finds unclosed
Thou tiniest into flowers.

"Mother, why does Pa call you honey?" "Because, my dear, he loves me." "No, Ma, that isn't it." "It isn't." What is it then." "Well, what is it?" "Why it's because you have so much comb in your hair."

AN EYE TO BUSINESS.

A London millionaire, being asked to sign a petition against the grant to Maynooth, the other day, replied, "Maynooth! Maynooth! Oh, yes; I'll sign a petition against anything but the Great Western—I've lots of shares in that!" This story, known to be quite true, has been a standing joke at the clubs for some days past.

ROOFING HOUSES WITH GLASS.

In consequence of the reduction of the duty on glass, it appears to be in contemplation to bring it into use for the roofing of houses. An importation of a thick description of window glass has already taken place, intended for roofing. This roof may be much lighter than tiles and slates, and if it be extended into the country, the poor will then be enabled to partake of the luxury of a bunch of black cluster grapes under the roofs of their own humble cottages.

RUSSIAN STATISTICS.

According to the last census of the population of Russia, the serfs amounted to 43 millions, 3 millions of whom belonged to the Crown, and 27 millions to private individuals. The entire population of the Empire exceeded 53 millions of souls.

REAL VERSUS MIMIC LIGHTNING

It is stated that the thunder lately has played some curious pranks with the electric telegraph on the Rouen Railway, mystifying the compositors of the messages transmitted. The atmospheric electricity combining at times with the electric current conveyed along the wires, impeded or precipitated the movements of the needle, giving to the composition the effect of dropped letters, and occasionally destroying the sense of the intended phrase. It also appears that during a heavy thunderstorm last week, one of the needles on the dial of the electric telegraph at the Southampton terminus became unfitted for use by its polarity being destroyed by the electric fluid, which was communicated to it from without by some of the connecting wires. The attendant was working the telegraph at the time, and received a smart shock from the handle.

RARE BIRD.

Last week was shot on the Severn, at Holt, Worcestershire, a specimen of the Foolish Guillemot (Uria Troile, Lath). What could have induced a bird, noted for its short flight on the sea coast, to have strayed so far inland we are at a loss to conjecture.

ANTIDOTE TO ARSENIC.

An antidote to arsenic has been discovered by Dr. Bunsen in the hydrated peroxide of iron—a simple preparation, and one which ought to have a place on the shelves of every druggist in the kingdom.

THE ENGLISH IN FRANCE.

According to official returns, there are at present 28,000 English residents at Paris; and in other parts of France 12,000. Admitting that each person spends, on an average, 5 francs per day, the amount will be 124,228,750 francs per annum, or £4,969,150 British money.

ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAYS.

At a late meeting of the Paris Academy of Sciences, the important and interesting subject of the probable advantages and utility of the atmospheric railway system, more particularly exhibited as in action in Ireland, was brought under discussion, by a report read from M. Sagey, engineer, containing a curious calculation of the amount of force expended on the atmospheric railway in the sister kingdom. He expressed the opinion that the atmospheric system can never be adopted as an economical one, and can be useful only under exceptional circumstances.

DISCOVERY OF NITRATE OF POTASH ON THE COAST OF AFRICA.

Considerable curiosity has been excited in the City, by the discovery of the nitrate of potash on the coast of Africa. It is understood that as many as twenty vessels have been sent out, while another mercantile firm is in the field, and, availing itself of its own information, is working on its own account. Nothing has caused equal excitement since the first discovery of African guano, though the circumstances of the two discoveries are widely different.

THE POWER OF BEAUTY.

A letter from Constantinople contains some account of splendid fêtes given there in honour of the nuptials of the Sultan's sister. The Sultan, it is said, appeared in good health and spirits, though somewhat dazzled and disconcerted at the formidable array of charms presented by the fairer portion of the *corps diplomatique*s. Indeed, after leaving the tent, he sent a verbal message to Lady Ponsonby, stating that he had been the first discovery to bid her farewell, and a happy return to Constantinople, previous to her approaching departure, but that he had lost his presence of mind, and even the power of utterance, at the unusual spectacle of so many beauty.

TREATMENT OF INFLAMMATION

The late Mr. Peter Van Homrigh, a very odd fish, who represented Drogheda in the Imperial Parliament, was seized with a complaint which gave more concern to his friends than to himself. "How do you treat your inflammation, Mr. Van Homrigh?" said a sedate member for one of the Midland Counties. "Sir," answered Peter, with a lofty tone, "Sir, I treat it with sovereign contempt."

COUNTRY NEWS.

WEST SUFFOLK ELECTION.—The nomination will take place on Monday next, when it is likely Captain Bennett will be elected without opposition.

DARTMOUTH ELECTION.—The nomination of a member for Dartmouth, in the room of the late Mr. Somes, took place on Wednesday. Sir Henry Seale proposed Mr. Moffatt, the Whig candidate, which nomination was seconded by John Teage, Esq. W. L. Hooken, Esq., nominated Mr. Prinsep, the Conservative candidate, Mr. Prinsep's seconder was Robert Harris, Esq. The Candidates having returned thanks, a show of hands was called for by the Mayor, who, after repeating it, the numbers being so even, declared it in favour of Mr. Prinsep. A poll was demanded on behalf of Mr. Moffatt, which was appointed for the next morning. When the poll closed on Thursday, the numbers were:—

Moffatt	..	..	125
Prinsep	..	..	111
Majority	..	..	14

Mr. Moffa't is therefore elected.

ABINGDON.—It is said that General Caulfield, a Whig, will start against Sir F. Thesiger at Abingdon. Sir F. Thesiger has been hitherto unopposed; but it is said to be doubtful whether the majority can be polled in approval of the recent Irish policy of the Government. The nomination is fixed for Monday; and should the opposition be pressed, the polling will take place on Tuesday.

REPRESENTATION OF EXETER.—The death of Sir W. Follett has caused considerable activity among the electors of Exeter. A Conservative candidate, Mr. Teed, a Chancery barrister, was first talked of. The Whigs have brought forward General Briggs, who comes up backed by the League party. This party has greatly increased in strength. Mr. Hippisley, of Shaldebrook-park, was asked to stand by the Whigs, but he declined. Sir John Thomas Buller Duckworth, Bart., has since consented, at the request of a numerous body of the most influential citizens headed by the Mayor, to allow himself to be put in nomination, as the Conservative candidate for the representation of the city. The High Sheriff has fixed the nomination for Monday, and the polling for Tuesday.

NOTTINGHAM AND BOSTON RAILWAY.—The period appointed for the application for shares in this popular line was to have terminated last evening. Up to yesterday noon there had not been found the requisite deposit sations was exceedingly great, upwards of 100,000 having been received, and what gives a better tone to the undertaking, is the fact that it excites so much attention in this district. A branch railway to Boston will form a great proportion of the whole share list.—Boston Herald of Saturday.

BATHS AND WASHHOUSES FOR THE POOR AT LIVERPOOL.—The Health Committee of the Town Council made a report to the Council held on Wednesday of the operations of the baths and washhouses for the poor during the year just ended. The report was on a most favourable character, and showed, that notwithstanding most unfavourable circumstances to the poor at a very cheap rate, the single establishment yet in operation had paid its expenses, and left a surplus of upwards of £50. The building cost between £2000 and £3000, and the new baths and washhouses now erecting in the north end of the town will cost nearly £7000, but will not be opened till next year. So promising, however, are their anticipations, that at the meeting the Committee strongly recommended the Council to proceed to the erection of a third establishment of the same description in a more central locality, and there is no doubt the recommendation will shortly be acted upon. Thus, while the Liverpool baths have contributed only about £500 towards a similar object, the municipal authorities of Liverpool have spent £10,000, and most likely will soon devote £3000 or £4000 more to the same laudable purpose.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

TO ADVERTISERS.—We are desirous to oblige advertisers, but the demands upon our space are such, that in future we shall be compelled to limit the number of advertisements. After this week we can only take them conditionally; but when they are counted, the money will be returned. Those which are received will be put in the Stamp, inserted on the following week. Advertisements so omitted, would, of course, have the preference.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Signor PUZZI respectfully begs to announce to the Nobility, Gentry, his Friends, and the Public, that his BENEFIT will take place on MONDAY, July 7th, when the Opera of Norma will be presented (for the first time this season) Donizetti's celebrated Opera, ANNA BOLENA, Henry VIII., Mr. Harley; Percy, Mr. Morgan; Smeton, Signora Rosalbi (her first appearance in that part.); Anna Boleyna, Madame Grisi; and Jane Seymour, Mdlle. Rostori. After which, Scene from Rossini's Opera of Otello, Signor Puzzi; and the Grand Scene from GERUSALEMME (Mose in Egitto), with the following powerful cast.—Aaia, Madame Castellan; Fatima, Madame Rosi Cassia, Noemdin, Sign Rovere; Pharaoh, Sign Polonini; Osiride, Lenglanno, Sign Corelli; and Oromasco, Sign Marzo. In order to give the fullest effect to the celebrated Serpents, Signor ALESSANDRO CAMPANA has kindly undertaken to conduct the Establishment have kindly consented to lend their aid and to join the Chorus on this occasion only. The Entertainments will be Ballet Divertisement will include the combined talents of Mdlle. G. Grisi, Mdlle. Lucile Grahn, and Mdlle. Carlotta Grisi, and Mr. Lee. In addition to which Signor Puzzi has the honour to announce that he has effected an arrangement by which he has secured the assistance of Mdlle. Taglioni.—Applications for Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets, to be made to Signor Puzzi, 26, Jermyn street, St. James's; and at the Box-office, Opera Colonnade. Doors open at Seven; the Opera to Commence at Half past Seven.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor and MANAGER, Mr. W. BATTY. On MONDAY, July 7, and During the Week, the Performances will commence with a new Grand BALLET OF ACTION, consisting of the MASQUERADE, Dances, Combats, and highly powerful effects, called IL DIAVOLO DI ABRUZZI; or, the Brigand Chief, with the Grand Ballet Divertisement. New and Elegant Scenery in the Circle, by the whole of the French Equestrians. To conclude with the BATELLE DE TOULOUSE, in which various Evolutions will be executed by all the Troop, and in order to accommodate those who are unable to attend at an earlier hour, has arranged that the wonderful and unique Performance of the Learned Dogs, Miss Clarke in the Circle, o'Clock; Fireworks at Ten

REPETITION OF THE JUVENILE FETE at VAUXHALL, on WEDNESDAY NEXT.—EXTRAORDINARY ATTRACTIONS.—Musard's Band of One Hundred Performers; Illumination of Grounds, 40,000 Lamps, and Grand Display of Fireworks, Comic Pantomime, Chinese Family on the Tight and Slack Wire, Chinese Illuminations, &c. &c. The Children of the Royal St Mary Asylum, Carlisle, with their full Band, will on this occasion visit the Gardens. Admission, 2s.; Children, Half price. Doors open at Six o'Clock; Fireworks at Ten

VAUXHALL GARDENS, every MONDAY, WEDNESDAY, and FRIDAY.—The Grand Vocal Ballad and Summer Masque, written and produced by Mr. G. Almar, entitled OLD VAUXHALL GARDENS.—The HERMITS KING, with Marshall Burgess, Dresses, Scenery, and Decorations. Promenade Concert, under the direction of M. Musard. Band of One Hundred Performers.—Extraordinary Illuminations (40,000 Lamps), and grand display of Fireworks. Joel II Diamond's Terrific Dances with Fireworks, &c. &c. Admission, 2s.; Children, Half price. Commence at Eight o'Clock. Admission to the Ball Room, 1s. Master of the Ceremonies, Mr Waldemar

SURREY ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS.—M. JULLIEN'S SECOND CONCERT OF GRAND INSTRUMENTAL PERFORMERS, FRIDAY NEXT, JULY 11th.—M. JULLIEN begs respectfully to inform the NOBILITY, GENTRY, AND PUBLIC, that in consequence of the immense success of his first Concert Monster (which was pronounced by the Press, and by all parties, unrivalled in the annals of Instrumental Music), he will give a Second Concert Monster on FRIDAY NEXT, July 11th, on the same unprecedented scale of grandeur. The programme will be selected from the Works of the great Masters, and will include the eight principal pieces that created so great a sensation at the First Concert Monster; viz., Selections from Fantasi, Overture, William Tell; Beethoven's Symphony in C Minor; Lo! Hear the Gentle Lark, performed by Madame Grisi and Mr. Harrison, in the same style as at the Ancient Music. His Grace the Duke of Leinster has most kindly consented to send his Monster Covers Band, to be used at the Concert Monster. This powerful instrument is the largest ever constructed, and will be played by two artists, for the accompaniment of the celebrated "Marcia di Bravura" performed by the Trumpets of the Household Troops, 20 Cornets-a-Piston, 20 Trombones, 20 Ophicleides, and 20 Sergeants. Also for that piece, Coel Rere Ua Cleery and the Harper, by William Tell. M. JULLIEN has engaged the Construction of a long Drum Monster, which will be in the same extensive proportions as those used by the Academy Royal, of Paris, for the Operas of the Huguenots and William Tell. Tickets purchased previous to July 11th, 3s. 6d. Admission on the day of the Concert, 5s. Private Boxes and Stalls, in the Pavilion, Music-gallery, and of M. JULLIEN, 214, Regent-street. Tickets issued for the Concert of June 27th, available for the Concert Monster of July 11.

COLOSSEUM.—Patronised by Her Most Gracious MAJESTY and H.R.H. PRINCE ALBERT.—Open daily from 10 till 5. Pronounced by the Press, both by Day and Night, that has ever been exhibited. Equal to the Exhibitions of the Olympic, containing Works of the first Artists, Mont Blanc and Mountain Torrent, Superb Diorama, Gothic Interior, Chalet Interior, and Panorama of London, painted by Mr. Parris, &c. Admission, 3s.; Children Half price. The Splendid Caverns, the most Magnificent of the Temples of Nature ever before exhibited, for benefit of the Public, 1s. extra.

PANORAMA EXHIBITION open from 10 till 5, comprises the entire New Panorama of London, Naval engagement, Battle of the Nile, and the palace of the Grand Turk, with Views of Constantinople, Mount Vesuvius in Eruption, Interior of the Mosque of St. Sophia, Grand Interior of the Mosque of Omar, Jerusalem, Interior of the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, Mount Calvary, Mount of Olives, Valley of Jehoshaphat, Bethlehem, Jericho, Dead Sea, River Jordan, Mount Lebanon, Damascus, Interior of the Mosque of Damascus, Grand Interior of the Mosque of Mecca, Tomb of Mahomet, Mount Sinai, Valley of the Nile, Pyramids of Egypt, Cairo, Alexandria, Malta, Gibraltar, Lisbon, Cadiz, Naples, Rome, Venice, Milan, Switzerland, Mont Blanc, Chamouni, Geneva, Lake of Lucerne, Rhine, Cologne, Antwerp, Brussels, Ghent, Bruges, Ostend, Dover, Calais, Paris, Versailles, Fontainebleau, Lyons, Avignon, Marseilles, Toulon, Genoa, Turin, Milan, Venice, Verona, Mantua, Trieste, Vienna, Prague, Dresden, Berlin, Potsdam, Hamburgh, Altona, Elsinore, Copenhagen, Gothenburg, Stockholm, Upsal, Lake Wenner, Lake Wetter, Trollhatta, Falls of Gotha, Lake Wetter, Lake Wenner, Christiania, Drammen, Frederickshall

Now ready, Vol. I. (comprising 3 vols. of the original), medium 8vo, price 10s. 6d., cloth,

MICHELET'S HISTORY OF FRANCE. Translated by G. H. SMITH, F.S.S., with Notes, &c. Publishing also in parts, price 2s. 6d. each, in a wrapper, forming a section of WHITTAKER'S POPULAR LIBRARY of Modern and Standard Authors, an explanatory and critical prospectus of which can be had gratis, by application to any Bookseller.

WHITTAKER AND CO., Ave Maria-lane, London.

WHITTAKER'S POPULAR LIBRARY.

Now Publishing, in Parts, price 2s. 6d. each, large 8vo., each sewed to a common 8vo. volume,

PART I. OF THE UNITED STATES' EXPLORING EXPEDITION ROUND THE WORLD, during the years 1838 to 1842. By CHARLES WILKES, the Commander of the Expedition. Condensed and abridged.

To be completed in Three Parts, forming 1 vol., 12s. 6d., cloth.

WHITTAKER AND CO., London; and all Town and Country Booksellers

WHITTAKER'S POPULAR LIBRARY.

Now publishing, in parts, large 8vo., each sewed to a common 8vo. volume,

THIERS' HISTORY OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION. Translated from the last Paris edition. Parts I. to VIII., each 2s. 6d. To be completed in Ten Parts.

THIERS' HISTORY of the CONSULATE and EMPIRE of NAPOLEON. Translated as it appears in Paris. Parts I. to III. ready, each 2s. 6d

WHITTAKER AND CO., Ave Maria-lane, London.

WHITTAKER'S HAND-BOOKS of MUSICAL INSTRUCTION. Composed and Written by G. HERBERT RODWELL. These Works being carefully adapted to the capacities of those who wish to commence Instruction themselves, may always be had from the publishers, WHITTAKER AND CO., Ave Maria-lane, London.

Now ready, price 1s. 6d., cloth, the Second Edition, with Additions, of

THE YOUNG SINGER'S PRIMER. Immediately by—2 SINGING FOR BEGINNERS. 3. THE VIOLIN. 4. THE GUITAR. And others as required, to all the popular Instruments.

Now ready, in 1 vol. (comprising 3 vols. of the Original), price 10s. 6d., cloth, DAUBIGNE'S HISTORY OF THE REFORMATION IN EUROPE. The First Portion, from the earliest symptoms of the Reformation to its introduction into France. Translated by WALTER K. KELLY, Esq., Trinity Coll., Dublin.  The Concluding Parts will be issued immediately they are published in France.—The best translation, with useful notes by the translator and every convenience for reference." Standard.—Forming a portion of WHITTAKER'S POPULAR LIBRARY, a descriptive prospectus of which can be obtained through any bookseller.

WHITTAKER AND CO., Ave Maria-lane, London.

On the 30th of June, price 4s. 6d. embossed cloth,

CHAMBERS' EDINBURGH JOURNAL. Third Volume, New Series, comprising Familiar Sketches, Moral Essays, Poetic Tales, Graphic Sketches, and Miscellaneous Articles of Instruction and Entertainment.

 Vols. I and II. of the New Series may be had, price 4s. 6d. each; and also all Numbers, may always be had from the publishers. "Chambers' Journal is subly working its way as one of the most experimental." Sheffield Iris.

London: WM. S. ORR and CO., Amen-corner; and sold by all Booksellers and Newsvenders.

MUSIC FOR THE MILLION.—RUSSELL'S MANIAC for SILENCE! 2—THE SONGS by HENRY RUSSELL, price 2s. each. 1. The Maniac. 2. Dear Land of Home. 3. The Sea. 4. Woodman, spare that Tree. 5. Old Dog Tray. 6. Cheer, Boys, Cheer. 7. The Old Arm Chair. 8. Cataract of Lodore. 9. Life on the Ocean Wave. 10. Ellen Bayne. 11. Just Ready, containing 72 Pieces of Standard and Modern Music, Vocal and Instructive and Dance, arranged for the Pianoforte, price 2s. 6d. cloth gilt, gilt edges.

London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington-street, Regent-street, Music Publishers to the Queen and Royal Family.

UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT.

THE NEW SPORTING MAGAZINE for JULY, is beautifully Embellished, with a Portrait and Engraving of THE MERRY MONARCH.

By H. HEATH and H. HEATH, Esqrs.

RIGGING HIS OUT-GIT.—"MAKE YOUR GAME."

By J. E. Scott, from a Painting by H. B. Davis.

CONTENTS:

Hurry for Duty
The Epsom and Ascot Meetings
Lessons from the "Leg"
Sporting Pictures (Hugo Meyer, Esq.)
Correspondence
A Fragment from a Creel Ledger
The Curlicue Hounds. By Rose-a-ling
A Visit to Mount Hunting and General Rolling School, Harrow-road. By Lord William Lennox
Antelope Coursing
The Otter, Otter-Hounds, and Terriers. By Cotton
A Night on Ullswater. By Augustus Guest, M.A.
Hunting in Devon and Somerset
Sporting Intelligence
The Fine Arts
Value of the Odds
The Turf Registers: Liverpool—Coventry—Worcester—Ayr—Pytchley Hunt—Garrick Bridge—Croxton Park—Warwick Spring Meeting—Hampton Sweepstakes—Newmarket Second Spring Meeting—Doncaster Meeting—Newmarket July Stakes—Ascot Cup—Chesterfield Meeting—Doncaster—Bath and Somerset County Meeting
Cricket
Pedestrianism—Running—Swimming—Archery
Rowing
Coursing
Obituary
Steeple-chasing
Hunting
Shooting Fishing
Literature
Fine Arts
Theatricals
Varieties
Answers to Correspondents
Sporting Intelligence

May be had, by order, of all Booksellers. Office, 24, Norfolk-street, Strand.

THE FARMERS' MAGAZINE AND JOURNAL OF THE AGRICULTURAL INTERESTS OF JULY, 1845, is embellished with splendid Steel Engravings of A PORTRAIT OF SIR R. PEEL, OF ARMAGH, AND A PLAN OF FARM BUILDINGS, by CHARLES MILES, Architect.

CONTENTS:

Biographical Sketch of Mr. Blacker, of Carrickblacker
Description of Farm Buildings. By Charles Miles, Architect
On Rent. By Cuthbert W. Johnson, Esq., F.R.S.
Hints on the Education of Young Farmers
Emergency Fences
On the Cultivation of the Turnip. By T. Sullivan, Esq.
Draining of Lands
On the Advantages of Legislative Protection to Agriculture. By George Thompson Importation of Cattle under the Time Commutation Act
The Turnip Crop
Worthy Farmers' Club
Land and Sea
Lord of Home at sure. By Mr. J. Towers, Member of the Royal Agricultural Society of England
A few Remarks on the large Hedges and Stunted Appearance of Devonshire and the adjoining Counties. By John Grant, Surveyor and Land Agent
On Manures
Chemistry and Agriculture
The comparative Applicability of the Aberdeenshire Scythe and the common Sickle in cutting Bad Crops
The FARMERS' MAGAZINE, Vol XI., is published with 12 fine Steel Engravings and may be had, by order, of all Booksellers.—Office, 24, Norfolk-street, Strand.

THE NEW MONTHLY BELLE ASSEMBLÉE, for JULY, a Fashionable and Literary Magazine, under the immediate Patronage of her Royal Highness THE DUCHESS OF KENT. Is beautifully Illustrated with Highly-finished PORTRAITS OF THE NOBILITY, AN ELEGANT AND EXQUISITE ENGRAVINGS OF GOLDEN LEA AND HEREFORD CATHEDRAL; AND TWO COLOURED PLATES OF THE FASHIONS, Finished in the First Style, as they arrive from Paris.

CONTENTS:

The Elder Sister. By Mrs. Abby
The Factories. By Grace Lennox
A Spring Song to Mary. By W. G. J. Barker, Esq.
Lays of the Convent Bell. By Justina L. To R. C. G. By One who Esteems her Lowest Friend
The Spirit of Mary and her Flower. By Elijah le Vocant
The Cabalist's Last Dream. By Richard Lipscomb.
First Love. By Mrs. Edward Thomas
The Duchess of Kent. Engraved by W. F. C.
Answer to Charade in our Last. By X. Y. Z.
The Marriage. By William Henry Pink
The Student of Heidelberg; or, The Trance. By Nicholas Michael Farding. By Alice Ann Lawson
Song for Spring. By a Member of the 55th Regiment of the Artist of Esparteru in England
To Camille Thomas
The Confession. By Mrs. F. B. Scott
The Bracelet. By E. D.

May be had, by order, of all Booksellers. Office, 24, Norfolk-street, Strand, London.

THE BEAUFORT HUNT—ON VIEW, (by Tickets only) at 6, PALL MALL, the original Picture representing the LAWN MEET at BADMINTON, painted by Mr. BAYARD, where subscribers' names for the Engraving will be received. Tickets of admission may be had on application to Messrs. GRAVES, Printsellers, Pall Mall.

INGRAM'S MANUFACTORY, 28, CITY ROAD.

CHILDREN'S and INVALIDS' CARRIAGES.—INVALIDS' and Wheel Chairs, from £6 10s., with hoods, screens, sunk seats, as well as new, safe, Self-acting Chairs. Children's Chaises, Vis-à-vis Waggons, Pinetons, Barouches, &c. &c., from Two to Fifteen Guineas. Immense and varied collections on sale or hire.

SEA-SIDE.—NICOLL'S REGISTERED PALETOT 6th and 7th Victoria, cap. 65, recently passed, has specially adapted over another coat for bad weather or evening wear, and alone during the sunny rays. The Registered Paletot prepared for the season is made in Light and Dark Regent-street. The materials are the cloth of Islams, which in variety of colour resembles sometime cloth, but it is lighter and softer in texture, its novel, yet not formal cut, gives freedom across the chest and shoulders, and from no sacrifice in personal appearance for the sake of comfort realised, a more graceful bearing to the figure is the result. To the Registered Paletot, there is a collenary testimony, as a cause of all unseemly polarity it has met with the highest approbation in the Court circle."—See the Morning Post, April 19. The Paletot is used as by many of our persons surmount the Dress Coat, others it will suit, if fold into the Pocket, and for evening costume as the Opera Cloak. Nicoll's Registered Petasus, agents for the sale of N. Nicoll's Registered Petasus. A cautious admonition, however, is necessary to avoid purchasing any general pretender. Let no one be induced to take such persons, it is needless to remark, is not respectable, be a counterfeit different in its construction, yet they are subject to the penalty, and collateral according to law.—H. J. and D. NICOLL, 114, Regent-street, London, and CHASTON'S INDIA RUBBER ELASTIC CORN PLASTERS, the only safe and sure remedy, may be had, by sending free 13 postage stamps, to B. CHASTON, Chemist, Watton, Norfolk. They will be sent free to any part of the kingdom.

ALE! ALE! ALE!—Best, brightest, purest, and most in essence, for Connoisseurs, to be had in Eighteen or Nine Gallon Casks, at One Shilling per Gallon, by addressing to the JOHN BULL BREWERY, Chloe, 30, Pimlico-lane, City. Conveyed, free, to any part of London

HEAL and SON'S LIST of BEDDING.—Containing a full description of weights, sizes, and prices, by which purchasers are enabled to judge the articles that are best suited to make a good set of Bedding, sent free by post.—HEAL AND SON, Feather Dressers and Bedding Manufacturers, 196, Tottenham-court-road.

DANCING.—LESSONS in the MAZURKA, CELLARIUS VALSE, POLKA, and VALSE a DEUX TEMPS, (as taught by Cellarius), by Mr. WILLIS, 41, Berners-street, Oxford-street. Mr. Willis has had an extensive practice in Ladies and Gentlemen of any age, wishing privacy and expedition. Terms may be had on application.

INDIA and COLONIAL OUTFITS, LADIES' WEDDING GOODS, &c., prepared with particular attention as to quality, fashion, and economy, and executed in any extent on the shortest notice, by POPE and PLANTE, General Outfitters and Manufacturers of every description of the best Hosiery for Family Use, 4, Waterloo-place, Pall-mall. The Ladies' Department conducted by experienced female assistants. Lists and Patterns forwarded.

DRESSING CASES.—FISHER, 188, STRAND.—A Large Stock of CASES, with the new and improved contrived partitions, which cannot possibly break loose. Warranted to stand the Tropical Climate. Dressing Case, elite, Lady's or Gentleman's, may be purchased from £5 to £50. Also, Writing Desks, Work Boxes, Leather Travelling Desks, &c.—188, Strand.

THE LARGEST STOCK in EUROPE.—FURNISHING IRONMONGERY, Stoves, Grates, Kitchen Ranges, Fenders, Fire Irons, best Sheffield Plate, recommended here, and Patent Dish Covers, Coffee Mills, &c., Japan Tea-trays, &c. PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS, adjoining Madame Tussaud's, 16, Baker-street, Portman-square.—N.B. Every article is marked in plain figures at the lowest cash prices.

SYLPHIDE PARASOLS.—The CLAREMONT SYLPHIDE, AS WORN AT PARIS, and manufactured by the Patentees, is the most elegant form in which this admired Parasol has been offered to the public, in addition to the many other descriptions, which is so desirable in Parasols. Ladies are requested to observe that the parasols are all stamped "Sylphide Patent."—W. and J. SANGSTER, 140, Regent-street, and 94, Royal Exchange.

ROWSE'S (PARTRIDGE-EYE) CHAMPAGNE is pronounced by all who have tasted it this season, to be in every way equal to the first-class French Champagne: it is made from a very superior grape, cultivated at Margaux, on the Rhine, and is warranted always to keep in good condition. May be procured at all respectable Britain Wine Merchants at the rate of 72s. per dozen, and in the country, at 36s. per dozen. Manufactory, 69, 70, and 70a, Strand, London.

WINDOW GLASS, MILLED LEAD, AND COLOURS.—Closets, Pipes, Pumps, Basins, Brushes, Colours, and all Materials, at the Lowest Wholesale Prices, for Cash. White Lead, 27s. per cwt.; Red Lead, 24s. per cwt.; Patent Turpentine, 2s. per gallon. Catalogues, 2s. per dozen. Price Current, 2d. HOWARD and CO., 22a, Pan Bastus, Pimlico. Brass and Iron Bedsteads, Bedding, Furniture, and Ironmongery. Estimates given for Fitting up any other description. Addition to R. COGAN, 5, Princes street, Hanover-square.

BATHS.—RICHARD and JOHN SLACK'S extensive assortment of Baths is now complete, which contains every novelty and improvement in Shower, Hip, and Sponging Baths; also Toilet Ware in great variety, and Fountain of Marble Chins, &c. The quality of every article is warranted, and marked at the same low prices for which their establishment has been celebrated for the last twenty years. Their Book of Drawings and Prices of Baths, as well as every article in Furnishing Ironmongery, may be had, gratis, or sent post-free. 336, Strand, opposite Somerset House. Established 1818.

THE MIDSUMMER VACATION.—OUTFITS' CLOTHING. GENTLEMEN and GENTLEMEN'S SONS are protected by the Patent Self-Measure, and provided with Perfect Fits, at the Moderate Charge of Ready-made Clothing, by the Patentees, WILLIS, 9, Argyll-street, Regent-street, and 76, Oxford-street.

TO LADIES BEFORE LEAVING TOWN—BARGAINS for SUMMER DRESS.—1000 Swiss Muslin, Barege, Cashmere, and Balzorine Dresses, at 9s. 9d., 4s. 9d., 5s. 9d., to 10s. 9d. the full Dress: 400 yards rich Striped, Checked, and Glazed Silks, in fancy, at 1s. 9d., 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d. per yard; 500 Pieces Jaconet, Organdie Muslin, and Fancy Silks, at 8s. 9d., 7s. 9d., 10s. 9d., to 21s. each. The above Goods have been purchased by Messrs. Jay and Co. at a great reduction in price, these patterns are not those of the present year, but the ware is of the best quality, and they will be found worthy of attention; some of the Dinner Services in quantities of Fifty Pieces, to Match in Colour, at a few shillings Dressing Room Lamps; Lustres, and Hall Lanterns.

SILKS.—GEORGE SMITH, 32, Ludgate-hill, invites the Nobility, Gentry, and Public, to inspect the magnificent collection of FOREIGN SILKS, which he has purchased, without reserve, at the Sale of Messrs. Grant, Gask, and Grant's manufacturers wide, and varied in every hue and size of pattern. An eminent Paris house not admitted to that loss, in consequence of the ruinous sacrifice of the Silks at the Sale, which prevailed through the late spring. System of business: Ladies are invited to inspect the Silks, but on no pressure presented to purchase, and are sure of a reduction from the prices, which are marked in plain figures, for ready money only. Shawls, silks, satins, velvets, Persian, Gros de Naples, fancy goods, mourning, Silk Dresses, &c. &c. GEORGE SMITH, late Grant, Gask, and Grant, successors to Everington, now 32, Ludgate-hill, the premises lately occupied by Rundell and Bridge.

GIBBINS' CREAM OF ROSES AND ROSEMARY.—This esteemed and elegant Article is most respectfully offered to the Public, by GIBBINS, Court Hairdresser and Perfumer (from Paris), 7, King-street, St. James's-square, as the most delicate and effectual Preservative of the Hair. Being a Fluid, it will be successfully applied, in promoting its growth and Luxuriance.

THE CREAM OF ROSES AND ROSEMARY is a liquid made from the above-named plants, and, when applied in washing the Hair, renders it rich and glossy, or, after Illness, a restringent properties prevent the Hair falling off.

No. 7, King-street, St. James's square, London

COGAN and GILLO'S NOVARGENT, or SILVER SOLUTION, as above used at Her Majesty's Theatre, is constantly depositing a Coating of Pure Silver on the articles. It has been highly approved by Dr. Ryan, Professor of Chemistry to the Royal Polytechnic Institution. Sold wholesale by BARCLAY and SONS, 95, Farringdon-st., London; and JOSEPH ROGERS and SON, Sheffield; and to be had in every town in the Kingdom, with full Directions for use, at one shilling and four pence each, of all the principal Chemists, Silversmiths, and Furnishing Ironmongers.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.—The Genuine are all signed on the wrapper, by the Inventors.

MOURNING.—Court, Family, and Complimentary.—The Proprietors of the London General Mourning Warehouse, Nos. 247 and 248, Regent-street, beg respectfully to remind families requiring mourning attire, that every article of the very best description, requisite for a complete outfit of Mourning, may be procured from this Establishment at a moment's notice. Widows' and Family Mourning is always kept made up, and a note particularising the mourning required, will insure immediate attention either in town or country. Ladies' Mourning Silks and Velvets for Dresses, Mantles, Cloaks, &c., are particularly recommended to a trial of the new Corbeau Silks and Velvets introduced at the house [illegible] Regent-street.—Observe, JAMES SAUNDERS and SON, Proprietors, 247 and 248, Regent-street, Warehousemen and Mantle Makers to the Queen, Queen Dowager, Duchess of Kent, Princess Sophia, Duchess of Wurtemberg, and Royal Family, Tailors and Habit Makers, Courts, Levées, Hunt and Livery Dresses, Footmen's Liveries, Servants' Clothing, Household Drapery, Mourning, and Outfits.

ROYAL FARMERS' and GENERAL FIRE, LIFE, and HAIL INSURANCE INSTITUTION

Empowered by Special Act of Parliament. Capital, £500,000.

OFFICES, STRAND, LONDON.

DIRECTORS

CHAIRMAN—John Hogarth Masterman, Esq.

MANAGING DIRECTOR—W. Shaw Esq.

J. Blackstone, Esq. | John Hudson, Esq. | G. P. Tuxford, Esq.
S. Ruddle, Esq. | E. M. Jaques, Esq. | Thomas Thomas, Esq.
Wm. Claridge, Esq. | The Right Honourable Lord Wharncliffe | W. Worsley, Esq.

MEDICAL OFFICERS—J. Blackmore, Esq., and G. W. Blanch, Esq.
STANDING COUNSEL—G. W. Johnson, Esq. | W. Shaw, Esq.
JOINT SOLICITORS—John Rogerson, Esq. | W. Forsyth, Esq.
ASSISTANT MANAGER—W. Jenkinson, Esq.
SECRETARY—Mr. Hayward.

BANKERS—The London and Westminster Bank.

The Proprietary of this Company consists of 10,000 Shares of £50 each, of which 5,000 are now offered for Subscription. The whole of the Shares are Country Directors.

The share of public favour this Institution has obtained, proves the appreciation of its utility and importance to the country.

Every kind of Life Insurance, of Deferred and Immediate Annuities, and of Endowments for Children, may be accomplished on terms as low as is consistent with security.

A dividend of Four per Cent. is now in course of payment to the Shareholders in this office.

In the Five Departments, Insurances effected at the lowest rates.

FIRE INSURANCE.—Premium Assurance for any term of Years, Farming, Trade, and Residence.

Foreign per annum for Corn, Beans, and Potatoes. Glass in hothouses, greenhouses, or private buildings, at Low Rates.

Prospectuses may be obtained at the office, or will be forwarded, post free, upon application. The usual commission to Solicitors.

Agents are appointed in the Principal Towns in the Kingdom.

W. PHAW Managing Director

THE HALL ON THE HILL.—A CURIOUS FACT.

It is noted with folks, when their friends they invite,
To select only those who are guilty delight
But on LUDGATE'S proud HILL stands a house TWENTY-NINE—
Where the wants to invite, both clothes and fine
And all who attend have a chance of a tire,
Of best fashion and cloth, on the day do they go:
Even the strangest should in there who've no
TO the HALL ON THE HILL—the famed LUDGATE DEPOT!
And unless you will have the laugh of the hall,
Who thus nobly will clothe a, the strangers who call?
They're SAMUEL BROTHERS! the eldest of their trade!
best clothes as this island are made.
Mourning, Coat, Trousers, or Vest,
Their TERMS are the cheapest, their CLOTHS are the best.
Then just call at 29, Ludgate-hill,
Then seek SAMUEL BROTHERS—the LUDGATE DEPOT
Ou entirely New Principles.—TAILORING, HABILLE—DRAPERY, and OUTFITTING ESTABLISHMENT, No. 29, Ludgate-hill, SAMUEL BROTHERS, Proprietors.

The particular advantages of this system may be practically appreciated by customers. The average quantity of cloth for a coat is 12 yards. Suppose the cloth selected to be 12s per yard, the material, even 2 coat fits, our charge would be 30s. for making and trimming. If the cloth be purchased elsewhere, and completed in the best style, will be charged for it. Now, if any, charge less than 30s. or 35s. for the same article. The same saving on every description of clothing.

Habits made in a very superior manner. Measuring to any extent always. A new and extensive assortment of Boys' and Youths' Clothing at the lowest prices.

N.B. A guide for self-measurement and patterns sent to any part of the kingdom.

GENUINE GERMAN SELTERS WATER, bottled at the Fountain head of the celebrated Springs on the Estate of the Grand Duke of Nassau, [illegible]

SPARKLING GINGER WINE, prepared by Messrs. KELSON and SCOTT.—The delicious Wine differs from any other yet offered to the Public, and is especially recommended as a grateful and refreshing Summer Beverage, having highly effervescent, Sold, Wholesale and Retail, in Pints and Quarts, by Messrs. H. and C. SCHOOLING, 5, Bartlett-court, Bucklersbury, and to be had of all Venders of British Wines. Be careful to ask for Kelson and Scott's Sparkling Ginger Wine. Each Bottle is labelled.

LIGHTER and SOFTER than FLANNEL.—THRESHER'S INDIA GAUZE WAISTCOATS, manufactured expressly for warm climates, are perfectly free from every irritating or disagreeable quality. They are manufactured by THRESHER and GLENNY, and can only be procured at their East India Outfitting Establishment, 152, Strand, London. It is very important to notice that every article is marked "THRESHER'S INDIA GAUZE," as no other material possesses the same absorbent qualities.

COMFORT and ECONOMY are equally studied in the SHIRTS [illegible] Made to Measure, Six for 40s. Patterns and Directions for Self-Measurement sent free by Post. Address, JOHN MAYO, 10, Piccadilly.

NUMBER ONE, SAINT PAUL'S CHURCHYARD.—It is strength, richness of flavour, and excellence of quality, combined with unparalleled cheapness of price, that recommend to all classes of society the old-fashioned fine TEA, at 4s. 6d. per pound. Sold by DAKIN and Co., Tea Merchants, Number One, St. Paul's Churchyard, and visitors to London may save a considerable portion of their railway expenses by purchasing Teas and Coffees at Number One, St. Paul's Churchyard. Observe—Dakin's Country delivered Carriage Free.

SILVER PLATE, New and Second-hand.—T. COX SAVORY'S Illustrated Price List, with Cuts, sent free by Post, on application, or will be sent post free if applied for by a paid letter. The contents are the prices, weights, and patterns of New and Second-hand Silver Spoons and Forks, New and Second-hand Plated Goods, Sheffield Plate, Silver-edged Plated Goods, the New Plated on White Metal Spoons and Forks, Watches, Clocks, Cutlery, Ladies' Gold Neck Chains and Jewellery.—T. COX SAVORY, 47, Cornhill, seven doors from Gracechurch street, London.

LESSONS in MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING.—Mrs. HOWELL, of 294, Regent-street, two doors from Margaret-street, sole inventress of the Method of Dressmaking so much approved of in Lessons undertakes to convey in persons of the meanest capacity a correct knowledge of cutting, fitting, and executing in the most unbiased style, in Eight Lessons, for One Guinea. The terms for Lessons by Post are Half a Guinea, illustrated by reference to pupils.—Apprentices and Improvers Wanted.—Millinery and Dress Making.

SCHWEPPE'S SODA and other ALKALINE WATERS continue to be manufactured as usual, upon the largest scale, at the several establishments, and to maintain their supremacy over all others. Each bottle has its purpose proportion of alkali, but to prevent imposition, consumers are earnestly requested to ascertain that a label with the NAME is over the cork of each bottle of soda water, and a label on each bottle of effervescent and potass water. Schweppe's Liquor Magnesia is of the finest quality, and is strongly recommended as a cure for gout, acidity of the stomach, &c., by the first London Physicians.—51, Berners-street, London.

PATENT FLEXIBLE VELVET HATS.—JOHNSON AND [illegible], Regent-street, corner of Vigo-street, Hatters to the Queen and Royal Family, [illegible] Hats.—From the construction of the PATENT FLEXIBLE VELVET HATS the pleasant pressure on the forehead is entirely removed, and by their extreme elasticity they are capable of accommodating themselves perfectly to the shape of the head, and the crown, moreover, being ventilated, and the perspiration prevented from appearing on the outside of the hat, are additional advantages. As Ladies' Riding Hats they are light and elastic, and will retain their position on the head without the least discomfort.—JOHNSON and CO., 113 Regent-street, and GRIFFITHS and JOHNSON, 2, Old Bond-street.

CAUTION TO TRAVELLERS ON THE RHINE.—In consequence of extensive alterations, the business of J. M. FARINA, Sole Distiller of the Genuine EAU DE COLOGNE, and Purveyor to her Majesty Queen Victoria, has been for the present removed to No. 2, Next Door, No. 21, opposite the Stadt Haus. Travellers are particularly requested to observe the number of the house, that they may not be deceived by parties who have assumed the title of J. M. FARINA nor by the address, "opposite the Zuliich Place," as every house to which that description is applicable is eagerly sought after by an impostor who hopes to profit by the reputation enjoyed by upwards of a century by the original inventor of this celebrated perfume, JOHN MARIA FARINA, opposite the Zuliich's Place, Cologne. Established 1709.

IMPORTANT CHEMICAL DISCOVERY for CLEANING GOLD or SILVER LACE, JEWELLERY, &c. without wetting the articles in the least, in a few minutes, and without any trouble. Sold in Bottles, 1s. each, with Directions for use, by [illegible] and Co., 2, Cornhill, and Hanson and Bowen, Oxford street.

ECONOMICAL LUXURIES for WET or WARM WEATHER.—BARDON'S WATERPROOF OVER COATS, FROCKS, SHOOTING JACKETS, &c., to wear either with, or in lieu of, another coat, for which they will prove a most valuable substitute. Their perfect freedom from all greasiness, which is made in the best manner, are thoroughly respectable, equally free from vagarity and roughness, and may be worn dressed, without creating any suspicion as to the cause of their use, and no united novelty, having been in extensive use among the respectable classes more than a year. Sold at 3, Regent-street, Waterloo-place, and greatly reduced in price, manufactured expressly for W. B.] kept to select from, of which an inspection is confidently invited.—Made only by W. BARDON, Tailor, Waterproofer, &c., 3, Cornhill, (North side).

TEETH.—MOSELY'S PATENT, without Springs, Clasps, or Wires: Loose Teeth Fastened; and Filling Decayed Teeth with Mineral Marine Cement.—MOSE, LE DRAY and SON, SURGEON DENTISTS, 62, Berners-street, Oxford-street, continue to Supply Artificial Teeth with their entirely new Mineral Marine Cement, prepared without pain, heat, or pressure, preventing and curing the Toothache, and rendering the operation of extraction unnecessary. They also Fasten Loose Teeth, whether arising from age, neglect, the use of calomel, or diseases of the gums. Incorrodible Artificial or Natural Teeth, fixed without springs, wires, or ligatures, so that they cannot be removed by the nicest tongue, from one to a complete set, without extracting the roots, or giving any pain, a fifth following charges:—Single Teeth, 5s.; Sets, 5l. 5s. Decayed Teeth rendered sound and serviceable, and rendering perfect articulation and mastication. At home from Ten till Six.—MOSE, LE DRAY'S "Treatise on the Human Gums and Teeth" may be had free, on application at their residence, 62, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

UNDER THE IMMEDIATE PATRONAGE OF HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY

ROYAL NAVAL, MILITARY, EAST INDIA, AND GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY,

No. 1, CHARING CROSS.

DIRECTORS

Lieut.-Col. Sir Frederick Smith, K.B. | Major-Gen. Sir J. Bryant, G.C.H. F.R.C.S.
Major-Gen. Taylor, C.B.
Col. Sir William Gossett, C.B., K.C.H., Deputy Chairman | [illegible]
Admiral the Right Hon. Sir G. Cockburn, G.C.B., M.P., Lord of the Admiralty | [illegible]
Major-Gen. Sir J. Cockburn, St. G.C.H. | [illegible]
Sir Thomas Bradford, K.C.B. | [illegible]
Lieut.-Gen. Sir F. W. Mulcaster, K.H. | [illegible]

Physician—Dr. Hawkins, 6, Savile-row.
Bankers—Messrs. Barnett, Hoares, and Co.
Actuary—Joseph Ellis Acland, Esq.
Secretary—Andrew Hamilton, Esq.
Physician—John M. Pearce, Esq.
Solicitor—John M. Pearce, Esq.
Surveyor—Thomas Thomson, Esq.

[illegible] ASSURANCE [illegible]

The Premiums of the Company for younger lives are lower than those charged by most of the old established offices.

Assurances are undertaken abroad as well as at home.

Parties assured in the Colonies, or in the Indies, will be entitled to participate in the Bonus.

Persons assured in this Office may change from one country to another without forfeiting their policies.

A Bonus, amounting to 30 per Cent. on the actual value of the Policies, was apportioned to the assured at the first Septennial Meeting.—JOSEPH ELLIS ACLAND, Secretary.

ALLIANCE BRITISH and FOREIGN LIFE and FIRE ASSURANCE COMPANY, 1, Bartholomew-lane, London

ESTABLISHED BY ACT OF PARLIAMENT.

Capital—£5,000,000 Sterling

DIRECTORS

John Irving, Esq., M.P. | Samuel Gurney, Esq. | Sir Moses Montefiore, F.R.S.
James Alexander, Jun., Esq. | Edward Ellice, Esq. | A. N. De Rothschild, Esq.
G. H. Barnett, Esq. | James P. Howard, Esq. | Thomas Richardson, Esq.
Sir R. Campbell, Bart. | Lord Lucas, Esq. | Joseph Soames, Esq.
Benjamin Cohen, Esq. | Thomas Masterman, Esq. | H. N. Thornton, Esq.
Hon. W. Fraser, M.P. | L. N. de Rothschild, Esq. | Samuel Wilson, Esq.
Rt. Hon George R. Dawson

AUDITORS—James Cook, Esq.; Samuel Gurney, Jun., Esq.; Andrew Johnston, Esq.

BANKERS.—Messrs. Barnett, Hoares, and Co.

ACTUARY—Charles Ansell, Esq.

SECRETARY—Andrew Hamilton, Esq.

PHYSICIAN—John M. Pearce, Esq.

SOLICITOR—John M. Pearce, Esq.

SURVEYOR—Thomas Thomson, Esq.

[illegible] ASSURANCE [illegible]

Persons assured in this Office may change from one country to another without forfeiting their policies.

A Bonus, amounting to 30 per Cent. on the actual value of the Policies, was apportioned to the assured at the first Septennial Meeting.—JOSEPH ELLIS ACLAND, Secretary.

A HAND and ARM COVERED with WOUNDS CURED by HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—Thos. Main injured his hand two years ago, in the Yard, at Northfleet, which in a short time, began to swell to an alarming extent, and broke out in wounds, which defied all the skill of the faculty. Not only was the poor man incapable of doing anything for eighteen months, but, what was worse, he had been discharged as incurable from an hospital, after being there nine weeks. From Low Lodge-row state has the person been reduced, by Holloway's wonderful Ointment and Pills: sent at Professor Holloway's Establishment, 244, Strand, and by all respectable medicine sellers throughout the civilised world.

PARR'S LIFE PILLS.—The medicine of Old Parr is the [illegible] remedy ever introduced to the public, and [illegible] and has short period has firmly established itself in public favour, and has effected numerous benefits to all who have obtained this inestimable medicine genuine. Hence the use of [illegible] considered universal. Agents are [illegible] in every town in the United and [illegible] dominions of the [illegible] PARR'S LIFE PILLS may obtained of genuine authenticity, [illegible] containing nothing [illegible] of extract of [illegible] Sold in boxes at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and in family packets, 11s. The [illegible] Life Pills have obtained the name of "PARR'S LIFE PILLS" to be engraved on the [illegible] Stamp, pieces round the sides of each box, in WHITE letters on a [illegible] ground, without which none are genuine.—Advice of [illegible]

TRINITY HOSPITAL, EDINBURGH.

TRINITY HOSPITAL, EDINBURGH.

The march of modern improvement, and especially the ruthless progress of railways, is fast sweeping away from the gloating eyes of the antiquary many of his most revered relics: amongst them, not the least interesting is the building of which a view is here presented. Trinity Hospital is the oldest charitable establishment in the City of Edinburgh, being the remains of one of the munificent bequests so extensively made in Catholic times; and one of the few which escaped the pious but indiscriminating zeal of the Reformers. The Charity was founded by Mary of Gueldres, Consort of James the Second, in 1461, by whom it was amply endowed. Parts of the building formed interesting specimens of the architecture of that period. At the Reformation, the revenues of the Institution were wrested from the Clergy, who then administered them; and afterwards given, by the Regent Murray, to Sir Simon Preston, Provost of Edinburgh, who generously turned them into the channel for which they were originally intended by their Royal donor—namely, for the benefit of the poor. In the time of James the Sixth (the First of England), a part of the structure was rebuilt, and the whole fitted up for the reception of decayed burgesses of Edinburgh, their wives, and unmarried children, not under fifty years of age. At first, only five men and two women were admitted; but the number gradually increased, till, in 1700, fifty-four persons were maintained within the walls of the Hospital. These appear to have been rather more than the house could conveniently hold, for the number of inmates was afterwards reduced to forty, which has been the limit ever since; but ninety out-pensioners, receiving £5 a year each, have been added.

It is well known that the Scotch have always been inclined to look upon any regular provision for the poor with distrust. They believe it destroys that independence of character to which they lay claim as a nation; and even this institution, calculated and intended chiefly for those whose infirmities have rendered them legitimate objects of benevolent aid, has not escaped censure. Arnot, in his "History of Edinburgh" (1779), says: "The behaviour of the persons maintained in the hospital, although they are a class above the vulgar, and are so comfortably subsisted, supports the argument against maintaining the poor in a congregate body and public poor's-house. The quarrels and riots among them were so frequent—the selling the victuals allowed them and applying the price to improper purposes, and their nasty way of living, has aroused the attention of the Governors, who have endeavoured to correct these abuses."

We have pointed out this fact, because public attention is just now being forcibly directed to the fallacious philosophy (for upon that, and not charitable feeling, are all the affairs of the Scottish poor conducted) in which the heritors and other influential men in the sister country still persist. Because a few ill-conducted people abused the benefits they received, Arnot condemns, impliedly, the whole principle of giving adequate support to the helpless. It turned out, afterwards, however, that when once the abuses were corrected, the Institution worked well for those who have benefited by it; so much so, that it has been enriched by many subsequent donations, especially from the citizens of Edinburgh; and no serious complaint of bad conduct has since been made.

Each male inmate is allowed a hat, a pair of breeches, a pair of shoes, a pair of stockings, two shirts, and two neckcloths, yearly, and a coat and waistcoat every other year, besides an annuity of eight shillings and eightpence, for pocket money. The women have a similar allowance of under clothing, with one gown and one petticoat every two years, and six and sixpence annually, for "luxuries." There is an ample and sufficient dietary, and each person is allowed a separate apartment.

The building was situated at the foot of a lane called Leith Wynd, and once the only thoroughfare between Edinburgh and its port. It stood exactly on the spot chosen by the North British Railway Company for its terminus—much to the distress of the Edinburgh antiquaries, who made a feeble effort for the preservation of the ancient fabric, and its neighbouring equally revered Abbey Church. But Acts of Parliament have little regard for antiquities; and, in obedience to the law in the case of the North British Railway made and provided, the Hospital is now entirely demolished. Its inmates are, for the present, distributed in lodgings about the city—soon to be again collected in Murray House.

THE "WOU-WOU," OR SILVERY GIBBONS.

The Engraving of these very rare and curious creatures, which have just come into the possession of Mr. Warwick, will form an appropriate pendant to the sketch of the Galago we gave in a previous number from the same gentleman's collection. They are exciting considerable interest in the scientific world as the first living specimens that have arrived in this country.

The Gibbons form a genus of Simiadæ, ranking next to the Orang-Outangs in the development of human-like characteristics; and consequently occupying the second place in the arrangement of animal creation. Their habits are, however, exclusively arboreal, for which their structure is admirably adapted; the apparently undue length and great muscular force of the anterior extremities, and the prehensile power which the long fingers and nearly opposable thumbs possess, eminently qualifying them for a life among the trees. They are commonly found in mountain districts, but do not ascend higher than the range of the fig-tree forests. They live together in little troops in the tops of the trees, never coming down to the ground, but traversing the dense woods by springing from tree to tree.

The "Wou-Wou" or "Moloch," as it has been called by some naturalists (Hylobates leuciscus Kuhl), is a native of Malacca. It derives its specific name from its peculiar cry, which is a guttural scream resembling, according to the natives, the sound "won-wou;" it is very loud, and may be often heard resounding at vast distances through the mighty forests of the Gibbons' wild and solitary territories.

The pair we are describing, seldom utter this cry, but frequently emit a low plaintive whine, extremely touching and interesting. They are quite gentle and timid, but are easily irritated by depriving them of any thing they may have taken a fancy to. Their diet is composed of lettuces, potatoes, bread, oranges, apples, &c.; they will drink milk, tea, or chocolate, but no beer or fermented liquors, being in this respect of far more temperate habits than the Chimpanzees or Orang-Outangs. They are seen to the greatest advantage when amusing themselves among the ropes with which their apartment is furnished—their long arms and extreme tenacity of grasp enabling them to spring from one cord to the other with surprising confidence, and with almost bird-like velocity. They bear a close affinity to the Ungka-puti, a specimen of which was exhibited in London some time since; but they are far more interesting, as being male and female, which gives the observer a better opportunity of becoming acquainted with their natural habits.

THE "WOU WOU," OR SILVERY GIBBONS.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—"An Enthusiast."—Augustus, Duke of Brunswick-Lunenberg, was really the author of the Chess book supposed to be the production of one Gustavus Selenus. The work was printed at Leipsic in 1616. We can find no record of the poem mentioned.

"F. G. R." In the "Laws of Chess," for the correct version of which you must consult Lewis's works, the "Chess Player's Chronicle," or Tomlinson's "Amusements in Chess," it is laid down,—"If a player make a false move, castle improperly, &c., &c., the adversary must take notice of such irregularity before he touches a piece or pawn, or he will not be allowed to inflict any penalty."

"A. G. Z." Philidor was a Frenchman. He was born near Paris in 1726, and died in London in 1795.

"R. W."—In a magazine entitled the "British Miscellany," now extinct, but a copy of which may be had by applying at Goode's Chess Rooms, Ludgate-hall.

"G. P. C." is in error; five volumes of the "Chess Player's Chronicle" have already appeared.

"Jun-ns"—You will, perhaps, obtain a subscriber's copy of Lewis's "Second Series of Chess Lessons" by applying to the author himself, 12, Chatham-place, Blackfriars.

"A Lover of Problems" should possess himself of the "Book of Problems" just published by Mr. Kuiper, containing above 100 stratagems remarkable for their skill and beauty. As a taste of the quality of Mr. Kuiper's collection, we append the following, which strike us as being in the highest degree ingenious. Place the pieces carefully thus:—WHITE: King at his K's sq.—Q at K B's sq.—R at Q sq.—R at Q's 2nd.—B at K B's 2nd.—Kt at Q B's 3rd.—P's at Q R's 4th and Q B's 5th. BLACK: King at Q B's 2nd.—Q at K B's 2nd.—R at K B's 2nd.—B at K B's sq.—Kt at Q B's 5th.—Kt at Q R's 7th.—P's at Q B's 3rd, Q K's 2nd, K B's 4th, and K R's 3rd. White mates in four moves. Again.—WHITE: King at his 8th.—R at K's 5th.—R at Q's 4th.—Kt at K Kt's 3rd.—P's at K B's 3rd, Q's 2nd, and Q K's 3rd. BLACK: King at his B's 3rd.—B at K B's sq.—P's at K's 3rd and Q's 6th. White mates in four moves.

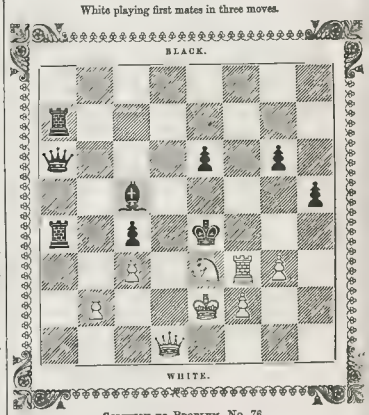
PROBLEM, NO. 77.

BY HERR K—G.

White playing first mates in three moves.



SOLUTION TO PROBLEM, NO. 76.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Kt to K's 7th (ch)	K to R's sq
2. Q to K R's 6th	B to K Kt sq (best)
3. Kt to K B's 5th	Q to K B's 2nd *
4. P takes Q	P takes Q
5. Kt takes K R's P	R takes Q's P (best)
6. P takes B becoming a Queen (ch)	R takes Q
7. Kt to B's 7th (checkmate) †

* The only move to prevent immediate mate, for if the Pawn takes the Queen, White's Knight's Pawn checkmates at once.

† This is Mr. Brede's Solution, and the idea is a happy one, but we apprehend in carrying it out, he has omitted to examine sufficiently the following line of play, by which it strikes us the mate may be given in fewer moves.

1. P takes P (ch) K takes P Or *
2. Q to K Kt 6th, and Mate next move.

* 1. K to R sq

2. Q to K Kt 6th, and the Mate appears to us inevitable in two moves more.

CHESS IN AMERICA.

We have just received the following, among a number of games lately played between Messrs. Stanley and Schulten, the two leading players of the New York Chess Club.

GAME NO. 16.

BLACK (Mr. St.)	WHITE (Mr. Sc.)	BLACK (Mr. St.)	WHITE (Mr. Sc.
1 K P two	K P two	13 Kt to K 3rd	Q B to B 3rd
2 K Kt to B 3rd	Q Kt to B 3rd	14 R to K sq	K R P two
3 K B to Q B 4th	K B P two	15 Q takes K P	Castles
4 B takes K Kt	R takes B	16 Q takes K P	Q R to K sq
5 Q P two	K P takes Q P	17 Q to K Kt 2nd †	Q to Q 2nd
6 Kt takes P	B P takes K P	18 Q B to Q 2nd	Q B to Kt 2nd
7 Kt takes Kt	Kt P takes Kt	19 Q to K B 3rd ‡	Q R to K B sq
8 Castles	Q to K R 5th	20 Q takes K R P	K to Kt sq
9 Q Kt to B 3rd	Q P two	21 K R P two §	P to Q B 4th
10 Kt takes Q P	K B to Q 3rd *		Q B to K B 6th
11 K P one	Q to R 6th		And Black resigned.

* Had he taken the knight, he must have lost one of his rooks in return.

† Q cannot take the doubled pawn, on account of "B to Q Kt's 2nd."

‡ To exchange Queens, if possible.

§ Play as he could, the game, at this point, is irretrievable.

DEATH OF M. PHILIDOR.—M. André Danican Philidor, the last of the four sons of the great chess-player, has just died at Paris, in his 83rd year. He had been for a length of time Councillor of Prefecture and member of the Council-General of the Eure et-Loire.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, of 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, JULY 5, 1845.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 167.—Vol. VII. FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JULY 12, 1845. [Sixpence.

THE DRUSES AND MARONITES.

One of the most interesting portions of the earth is at the present time the scene of a religious and civil war, and subjected to all the horrors of the worst calamity that can afflict any people. Syria and the Holy Land must always be regarded with a lively interest by all Christian nations; and it is almost impossible the "Powers" of Europe can permit the cruelties and ravages of war to ruin and depopulate this region without some endeavour to put a stop to it. They interfered in 1842 to settle with the Porte the form of the government of Syria; they are not less called on now to interpose to put a period to that state of anarchy which there is some reason to fear has been partly caused by their own former arrangements.

The war is carried on between the Druses and the Maronites; but as these names do not convey any notion of the differences between them or their relative position, a short explanation of the state of the Syrian population is necessary to render the facts contained in our recent foreign intelligence clear to the comprehension of a great body of readers.

It should be borne in mind that the population of Syria are of many creeds; the land, indeed, seems to be the very centre and focus in which religious differences, sects, and schisms contend with the fiercest intensity. It was the home of the Jewish people; it was the cradle of the Christian faith; it has been conquered by the Turk, invaded by the Crusader, and is now governed by the ruler of Egypt. The people are of many religions, and those subdivided into sects, which seem to hate each other but the more deeply the nearer they agree.

An idea of the extent of these dissensions may be gathered from the following extract from a writer who long resided among them. "The Jew loathes the Samaritan, though of his own lineage, and has no sympathy in common with any other class. The Greeks and Maronites, and Syrian, Latin, and Schismatic churches, though of one origin in Christianity, and equally oppressed, hate their rulers less than they do each other. The Metowali and the Somnite alike acknowledge the mission of Mohammed, but are reciprocally regarded as heretics and infidels; and, with the Druse and Anzary, the Arab, Turk, and European (constituting the masses of that country's population), all seem to vie in perpetuating the respective virulence and antipathies of their ancestral schisms, and each class lives in distinct and recognised habits of separation from all others."

The acts which are committed by one portion of the people alone, the Christians, from this deadly sectarian hatred, are atrocious. The Church of the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem is annually a scene of conflict, in which the exertions of a guard of Mahommedan soldiery are often insufficient to prevent bloodshed. It is manifest that a slight cause would suffice to set these passions in a flame, either against each other or the Mahomedan population among whom they live; and the flame has been lighted, and is now raging with terrible fury. The causes of this war of the Druses and Maronites have been in active operation since 1842.

According to De Lamartine, the Maronites take their name from a hermit, named Marron, who lived about the year 400: he "resided in the desert; and his disciples having spread themselves over the different regions of Syria, built several monasteries, the chief of which stood in the vicinity of Apamea, on the fertile banks of the Orontes. All the Syrian Christians who were not then infected with the heresy of the Monothelites, took refuge in these monasteries, and from this circumstance received the name of Maronites. Volney, who lived several months amongst them, has collected the best information as to their origin; it is nearly similar to what I myself drew from local traditions. Whatever it may have been, the Maronites form at present a tribe governed by the purest theocracy which has resisted the effects of time—a theocracy which, perpetually menaced by the tyranny of the Mahommedans, has been forced into moderation, and served to propagate principles of civil liberty, which are ripe for development amongst this people. The tribe, which, according to Volney, was in 1784 composed of 120,000 souls, at present reckons more than 200,000, and is increasing every day. Its territory comprehends 150 square leagues; but it has no certain limits, for it extends over the sides of Lebanon, or into the valleys and plains which surround it, in proportion as the increased population found new villages. The town of Zarkla, at the mouth of the valley of Bkaa, towards Balbek, which twenty years ago had not above 1000 or 1200 inhabitants, contains now 10,000 or 12,000, and is likely to augment."

As a people, they are highly spoken of by travellers for their industrious habits and skill in cultivation, by which, aided by a fine soil and beautiful climate, they have made much of the district they inhabit a paradise on earth. Their clergy is composed of a Patriarch and Bishops: the Patriarch is elected by the Bishops, subject to the confirmation of the Roman Pontiff; and a Legate of the Pope resides in the country. In some points of discipline, however, they differ from the rules which the Church enforces in Europe; the secular clergy marry; celibacy is practised only by the Monks, who live in communities, and the Bishops.

The origin of the Druses is more difficult to discover; their tenets are more difficult to define; opinions are divided as to whether they are Idolators or Mahommedans; some speculators have traced their descent from the Jews who lapsed to idolatry. The difficulty arises from the fact, that they adopt outwardly the faith of Christian or Mahommedan indifferently, as circumstances may require, practising still a secret worship which they permit no one to observe. It was among this tribe that the celebrated Lady Hester Stanhope lived for so many years, and gained so much influence; yet she assured De Lamartine, that even to her the belief of the Druses was a mystery. The following is the account given of them by this traveller himself:—

"The Druses, who with the Metualis and Maronites form the principal population of Lebanon, have long passed for a European colony, left in the East by the Crusaders. Nothing is more absurd. Religion and language are the things which are longest preserved amongst a people. The Druses are idolators, and speak Arabic; they are therefore not descended from a Frank and Christian parentage. What is more probable is, that they are, like the Maronites, an Arab tribe of the desert, who, having refused to adopt the religion of the Prophet, and being persecuted by the new believers, took refuge in the inaccessible solitudes of the high Lebanon, in order to defend their gods and liberty. They have prospered; they have frequently had predominance over the tribes inhabiting Syria."

"The greatest number of travellers who have written upon them, allege that their creed is but a Mahommedan schism. I am perfectly convinced that they are egregiously deceived. There is one thing certain, that the religion of the Druses permits them to assume the creeds of all persons with whom they are in communication, and from this circumstance has sprung the idea that they were schismatic Mahommedans. The only fact that is ascertained with certainty upon the subject is that they worship the calf. Their institutions are in some respects similar to those of the people of antiquity. They are divided into two castes, the Akkals, or those who know, and the Dyahels, or those who do not know; and, according to his caste, a Druse practises such or such a form of religion. Moses, Mahomet, Jesus, are names which they hold in veneration. They assemble one day in the week, each in the place assigned to the degree of initiation to which he has advanced, and fulfil their rites. Guards are stationed during the ceremonies, to watch that no profane person may approach the initiated. Death is instantly dealt out to any rash invader of the sanctity. Women are admitted to these ceremonies. The priests, or Akkals, are married, and form a hierarchy."

THE CONFLICT AT BALLINHASSIG.—SKETCHED BY MR. MAHONY, CORK.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

"In my opinion, the Druses are one of those tribes whose origin is lost in the darkness of time, mounting to an antiquity extremely remote. In physical appearance they have a considerable resemblance to the Jews, and the worship of the calf leads me to believe that they are descended from those tribes of Arabia Petræa, who led the Jews to that species of idolatry, or that they have a Samaritan parentage. At present, accustomed to a sort of fraternity with the Christian Maronites, and abhorring the yoke of the Mahommedans; and being numerous, rich, capable of discipline, and attached to agriculture and commerce, they would easily form a united body with the Maronite tribe, and progress with equal rapidity in civilisation, provided their religious ceremonies were respected."

The Druses occupy all the Gebel Sannin, or Southern Chain of the Lebanon, including the maritime district Kesrouan, as far south as Deir ell Kammar. The anticipations of the writer we have quoted as to the ease with which an union between them and the Maronites might be effected, have proved sadly delusive: they are the two tribes who are now murdering each other and burning villages and crops. But we must confess, whatever the Druses may be—Idolators or Mahommedans, or both—they show to the most advantage throughout the troubles that have led to this catastrophe. We doubt if the Maronite Clergy deserve the high character the French traveller gives them; they incited their flocks to violence at all. The Maronites commenced hostilities, by a series of assassinations, which were, of course, retaliated, till an open war broke out, in which the Druses obtained at last the assistance of the Turks, and have overpowered the Christian aggressors, inflicting cruelties and atrocities which are too common to civilised anywhere, but especially among the Easterns, those

> Sons of fire and children of the sun,
> With whom revenge is virtue.

The political causes of the disturbance seem to have been shortly these: in 1842 the Five Powers acceded to the deposition of the powerful house of Shehab from the Government of the Lebanons, where it had had great influence for a recorded period of 720 years—a time reaching as far back as our oldest aristocracies. Instead of their Governmen, the European Powers recommended the appointment of two Caimakans, or rulers—one chosen from each sect. The proposal was carried into effect by the Porte. During the three years that have since elapsed, the Shehabs have resorted to every artifice and intrigue to make the new form of Government a failure; and their chief allies in this plot against the peace of the country were the Maronite priests and clergy, who thought the division of the Lebanons into two Governments had diminished their influence. This was the result they produced:—

> The Christians declared that they never would tolerate, in any shape, or with any modifications, the rule of the Druses; they or the Druses were to be driven from the Lebanon or exterminated. The organization of this war had been long going forward, and Bishops, with the language of religion on their lips, ordered the inhabitants to provide themselves with muskets, and powder and shot; and the member of the Christian flock who would not arm himself for war against his neighbours, was denounced by his Bishop. The leader of the first attempt to surprise the Druses was the Maronite Bishop, Assad, of Zouk Mosbeh. The burning of numerous Druse villages marked his way, but the Christians were soon overcome by their more warlike enemies, and Bishop Joseph, the first to lead in success, was the first to turn his back in reverse. He fled from Geseyer to Tahleh and Beyrout, taking with him the flower of the garrison of Geseyer, his late head quarters. This deserted town, thus abandoned, was then taken and sacked by a mixed body of Druses and Mussulmans, and such cruelties were committed as might be expected only from infuriated savages.

Those who first raised the sword have thus perished by the sword; but it is impossible but that much suffering has been inflicted on many ignorantly led astray by those who, from position and knowledge, ought to have been their guides—but not to destruction. It is satisfactory to know that, as far as the efforts of the British Consuls and Agents could go, they were used to prevent the war, and, failing in that, they have done their utmost to relieve the distress that has followed it.

THE LATE FATAL CONFLICT BETWEEN THE POLICE AND THE PEOPLE IN IRELAND.

Last week we gave an account of a fatal conflict at Ballinhassig, in the county of Cork. Several versions are given of the origin of the affray, but it is very difficult to ascertain the exact particulars. It appears, however, that the number of lives lost now amounts to ten, two more of the country people having died of their wounds since the previous accounts.

The subjoined account, from the Cork Constitution, is very different from that given by the Repeal papers:—

"The party at the fair consisted of three constables, two acting constables, and thirteen sub constables, who had been marched in from different stations, and who were under the command of Mr. J. Kelly, first class sub inspector of Kinsale. The business of the fair proceeded as usual up to four o'clock, when symptoms of hostile significance began to be exhibited amongst the country people. There continued, however, a temporary quietness, and Mr. Kelly was enabled to induce the tent-owners to level their tents before half-past seven o'clock. The magistrates who attended the fair, Mr. William S. Meade, Ballymartle; Mr. John Maloney, Ballinhassig, and Mr. John T. Biggs, Garryhandkerdmore, then retired to Mr. Moloney's residence, at about a quarter of a mile distant, to dinner. They were, however, but a short time gone, when the leader of one faction, a man named Sullivan, who is better known by the cognomen of 'Ranter,' threw up his hat in the green, and, whirling his stick, gave the faction whoop, when his adherents gathered about him immediately. The police, who were not interfered, and the men of the opposite party, the 'Neills,' retired from the green. Ranter and his party then left the green and took a different road from the Neills. In a few minutes the latter returned to the number of about 200, and a large body of people mounted the ditches around the green in expectation of a fray. In a moment after Ranter appeared on horseback, and rode furiously down the hill, followed by above 300 men. When he got to the middle of the cross he pulled up, and addressing his own party in Irish, broke a new hat which he wore upon his horse's head. This was the signal for attack; a yell followed from those on the cross, which was answered by another from their opponents on the green. Hearing this yell of defiance, Ranter leaped from his horse, and rushed at the entrance to the green, which was a narrow gap. There he was met by the leader of the Neills, a man named Walsh. He grappled him, and when dragging him to the green Constable Pigott and Head-Constable Hannan dashed through the mob, held Mr. Ranter, who was their prisoner at the time. He struggled for his release and resisted in his fashion to release him, but the other rebels seeing him coming to the police, he was rescued in the [illegible] then surrounded the house, yelling in a hideous manner, and demanding the release of Sullivan, which was of course refused by Mr. Kelly, who told them it was his duty to convey him before a magistrate [illegible] the people to be quiet. There was then a cry of burning, [illegible] them." The attack commenced, and stones were thrown [illegible] got the order to fix bayonets. [illegible] sat that they were forced to retreat into the house. When inside, Ranter told them that if they did not release him, every one of them would be killed. To this Mr. Kelly replied, that he must do his duty, and that was to keep his prisoner. The stones now dashed in the windows, and the order was given to prime and load. This was quickly obeyed; but while the police were in the act of doing so, an attempt was made to force the door, with a cry of 'Drag them out.' The police attempted to keep the door closed, but it was forced, and one fellow—a very able man—caught the top of it, and tried to drag it into the road, so as to expose the inmates to the fury of the mob; but one of the constables drove the bayonet into the desperado's breast, and he fell back. Three others of the crowd then seized the door, and dragged it into the road. The doorway was now defended by constables Pigott and Hannan and acting constable Dawson, while the number of stones thrown increased every moment. A cry was raised amongst the mob, and they were exhorted to tear down the house and kill the police. A body of the people back of the house got on the roof, and with tenpenny nails commenced to rip off the roof. The police now perceiving that their lives were in imminent danger, called upon Mr. Kelly to permit them to defend themselves; but he answered 'no, no fear,' and came to the door to implore the people to desist; but before he had uttered many words he received a blow of a large stone on the right side of his face, which drove him back. The roof was now open, and large stones were thrown into the house, and the police again called upon Mr. Kelly to give them the order to fire, and he then said, "Fire, but fire steadily." Instantly a fellow rushed at the door, and threw a large stick at constable Purcell, which struck him on the head, but the stick had no sooner left his hand than he was shot from the window on the right; and, reeling for a short distance, he fell. The mob now became more violent, and dashed forward, yelling hideously, as they closed in at either side the ringleaders were shot. The police saw that retreat was their only safety, the stones fell so quickly upon them through the aperture in the roof; and even Ranter's courage left him, for he ran to the windows and implored of his 'friends' not to murder them, and, while doing so, received several wounds from the stones. The police then determined on retreating, and acting constable Dawson led; but no sooner had he left the threshold than he received the blow of a stone on the mouth, which split his upper and lower lips and knocked out two of his front teeth. He fell, and his persons was wrested from him by a fellow, who struck Dawson with it on the head while he lay; but this fellow paid dearly for his barbarity, for a shot from the window at the same moment stretched him alongside his victim. Dawson again got up, and being supported from his comrades by the crowd which surrounded him, and which had prevented them from leaving the house, staggered along the road in the direction of Mr. Keller's house. He was overtaken, and beaten into the ditch. Dr. Stewart J. Treslian at that moment came up and cried out, 'Run, run, here come the dragoons,' which caused the fellows to fly from their victim. Dawson then got up, and staggered to the house of a Mrs. Daly, but her son drove him off, and he reeled to the house of a man named Barratt, but the door was shut against him. He stood there for a moment; but seeing his assailants return-ing, he got to the other side of the road, and went into the house of a man named Lacy. Lacy closed the door and pushed Dawson into a pigsty at the other end of the house, and concealed the aperture. The mob coming to the door, demanded to have it opened, but there being a moment's delay, they drove it in, and searched for Dawson. During the search Dawson contrived to force himself through a small hole in the pigsty into Mr. Keller's meadow, and crawled through the high grass up to the house, where he was secreted by Mr. Keller's man in a loft. The mob, finding that Dawson had escaped, wreaked their vengeance upon Lacy, by breaking his windows and door, and beating a woman with stones until they left her apparently lifeless. But to return to the scene at the Dispensary. At the moment Dawson was separated from his party, constables Pigott and Hannan followed to try to protect him, but were obliged to retrace their steps, and immediately after, the entire body were compelled to leave the house, it was so dilapidated, and stones were poured into it with such murderous determination. The police then left the house, and, forming in a body, charged up the hill, in the hope of gaining the police station, which was about a mile off. In the confusion attending this movement, their prisoner, Sullivan, escaped. In the course of their retreat, they were met at all points by dense masses of people, yelling and throwing stones, but were fortunate enough to gain the top of the hill alive, though very much bruised. Having got into the station-house, they made preparations to defend themselves against any renewed attack, and were speedily after joined by the magistrates. Mr. Meade, fearing an assault upon the station-house, sent off a special messenger to Cork for a reinforcement. Within two hours from the time the messenger was despatched, forty police had arrived from the city, in jaunties, under the care of Sub-Inspectors Walker and Green, and Head-Constables Condon and Moylan, accompanied by Dr. Harris, physician to the constabulary. We may here mention Dr. Treslian's providential escape from being struck. Seeing the mob, he ran forward to try to calm the mob, and while in front of the Dispensary the firing commenced. He thought it was blank firing until he saw a woman fall alongside him. He then attempted to escape into the public-house, but the door was closed against him, and, before he had an opportunity of turning from it, a ball whizzed by his ear. He then quickened his pace, and, while running his way through the crowd, another person dropped near him. The affray having subsided, Dr. Treslian paid every attention to the wounded, in which he was occupied during the night, assisted by Dr. Harris and Dr. M'Evers. The firing of the police was remarkably accurate, there being thirty four shots discharged, every one of which must have taken effect. Thirty-two shots were fired within the dwelling, defended themselves in the house, and two during the retreat. Each policeman had twenty rounds of ball cartridge, yet no man fired more than four shots—in fact, the time during which the quiet firing continued would not permit of his doing more. It is, up to the present moment, impossible to know accurately the number killed or wounded, as they have been removed to their abodes for miles round the country."

THE DISPENSARY.

THE INQUEST ON THE BODIES.

On Thursday week an inquest was commenced on seven of the bodies of the unfortunate persons killed. The Cork Examiner says:—

"The inquest was held in a loft, in the mill-house of Mr. Keller, Ballinhassig, close to the spot where the massacre took place. The building was surrounded by crowds of peasantry during the entire day.

"It had been previously arranged that the jury were to see the nearest body first, and so on, until the whole seven had been examined, in order that an opportunity might be thus afforded to the friends and relatives of the deceased to inter them as soon as possible. The first bovel before which the cavalcade halted was that of the brother of Julia Callaghan, whose maiden name was Hallahan. This was about two miles from the scene of slaughter, at a place called Ballingromools. A group of men surrounded the door, and in the midst of them was the young husband of the dead woman. The Coroner, the sub-inspector, and the other gentlemen, refused the crowd of people, principally women, who crowded the apartment where the corpse lay, to leave it for a time, in order that all the jurors might view the body, and that the medical men should satisfy themselves as to the exact cause of the wounds of the deceased, either by close inspection, or, if necessary, by a post mortem examination.

"The body of Julia Callaghan, over a rugged road, to Adamstown, where, in a filthy hovel, not twelve feet square, sank in a lag, and surrounded by fetid stagnant pools of slime, lay the body of John Desmond. To say that the remains of this unhappy woman presented the most revolting appearance of revolting appearance that could be seen by mortal eye, is only to give a faint notion of the reality.

"The body of Maurice Corkoran, of Adamstown, was, if possible, in a more advanced state of decomposition. It was perfectly black, and so swollen were the features that the face resembled that of some gigantic African idol, horrible and repulsive. A wife and four children live to mourn for a husband and a father.

"A post mortem examination was held on the body of Jeremiah M'Carthy, of Bath heads, who lest behind him an infant child and wife.

"In the same direction lay the body of Jeremiah Co[illegible]an, a fisherman, who has left behind him an infant child and a wife.

"The body of Cornelius Forde, of Ballinadobla, presented a equally horrible spectacle as the bodies of Desmond and Corkoran. Forde was the sole support of an aged [illegible]

"The last body was within three miles of Kinsale: it was that of Timothy Kerricane, who has also left a wife and young child to deplore his untimely fate.

"Within a few yards of each lowly habitation you might see the hearse lying on its shafts; while round the door, and on the road opposite to it, were gron, ed hundreds of the peasantry of both sexes, in their best attire, as is usual in Ireland when attending a funeral."

The inquiry is likely to be protracted to an interminable period. Witness after witness is produced to prove that they saw a crowd around the police previous to the firing—that there was no noise—saw a few boys throw stones, and then the general discharge of fire-arms.

On Monday morning the Coroner and Jury sat at half-past nine o'clock, and we subjoin the most interesting evidence given during the day.

William Regan examined by Mr. Walsh: I was at Ballinhassig fair this day week. I was there after the tents were taken down. I saw the police take Thomas Sullivan after the tents were taken down. I was standing by with my hands in my pocket. I was on the cross above the Dispensary. I was standing there at the moment he was taken by the police. They took him into the Dispensary. There was an alarm then by the people, women and children not to let the prisoner be taken in. The people rushed in towards where the police were standing outside the Dispensary door. Some of the police viewed on their bayonets, and more of them began to load. I got in dread, and made my way into the potato-garden behind the Dispensary. There were some shots fired then. I do not know how many. I remained in the potato-garden, and heard the people in the outside of the crowd cry out that some persons in the inside of the crowd were killed. With that some of the people threw stones towards the police. I then made my way into Mr. M'Carthy's house. He is a tailor. I know a man of the name of Forde, who is dead. In a short time after, I came out. I stood by the channel, and saw Forde by the side of Callaghan's wall. Forde made his way into the kitchen of Mr. M'Carthy's house. He remained there about half a minute. He then turned outside the threshold of M'Carthy's door. Three policemen came out of the Dispensary, and stood about twelve yards about. Two of them aimed down towards the crowd at the cross. I had been standing in the channel from the time I came out of Mr. M'Carthy's house. Forde was standing at Mr. M'Carthy's door, inside me, between me and the door. The third policeman aimed towards M'Carthy's door and fired. When I saw him aim in the direction, I threw myself on my face and hands. When I got up the smoke was about me. Forde was stretched, his legs were outside M'Carthy's door, the remainder of the body was inside. That Forde was the same man whose body was viewed on the first day of the inquest. When I saw Forde dead, I made my way across the road into the potato garden, above the forge. I remained there until the whole body of the police came out of the Dispensary. They ran up the street towards the mill. I saw the carbines with some; cannot say I did with all; as they were far away from me. I saw the police do nothing more, as I went into M'Carthy's house. I remained at M'Carthy's house some time. I then came out, and heard the people say the police were gone home. I went home, and heard where the people were dead and wounded. I saw Kerricane dead. I saw the woman dead near the wall. I saw Forde, whom I before described. I saw M'Carthy wounded lying at the south side of the forge, on the old Cork road. He since died, and was buried. I was with the jury when they viewed his body. I saw Coghlan lying wounded, east of Connor's house, on the Five Mile Bridge road. He since was buried, on the first day of the inquest. I saw Desmond lying alongside the posting pillar before Callaghan's door. He was not dead—he was wounded. He since was buried. I saw no more after that. I made my way home. I should not know any of the police who fired the shots.

Cross examined by Mr. Scannell. What time did you go to the fair?—Between one and two o'clock. I met no business there.

You knew John Sullivan? Not before then.

He is called the "Ranter?"—Yes. I don't know that he is a great fighting man. I saw him about five minutes after he was taken. He (Sullivan) was opposite the Dispensary

How many people were there at the time? I can't say; but there were over a hundred. The people were about Sullivan.

Did he appear tipsy?—He did not.

Did he seem pleased?—I cannot say, I suppose he was not, for the people were pulling him.

Was it while that was going on the police arrested him?—It was.

When the police arrested him did the people rush in on them?—Not until they came near the Dispensary.

Now, when they said the prisoner should not be allowed with them was there any shouting?—There was not; when the women said the words the men rushed in.

Was there a shout then?—I did not hear them.

Could it occur that a stick was raised? I did not see one.

Did you ever see a crowd rush without a shout or a stick?—I never saw many crowds, except at goalins.

Did you never see a row?—I did.

Did you repeat this story before a coroner here? Never, but to the attorney outside, in the mill

Mr. Scannell. Oh, I see you were ground in the mill. (Laughter.)

Mr. O'Connell. The counsel or would grind you better than I could. (Laughter.)

Mr. Scannell: Oh, you are there my grinder. (Renewed laughter.)

Mr. O'Connell. You are not at all "penny-mouthed." (Great laughter.) Did you expect fun at the fair that day?—I did not.

Did you hear of a fight between the Nelles and Sullivans? I did not. I did not hear of the two factions of these names until after that day. I know where the gap is, getting into the fair field. I passed through it

Did you hear anything said by the police to the people to keep off?—I was talking to the people, but I did not know what they were saying.

Did you see a man at the fair, on a horse, with his hat off?—I did not.

Did you see a policeman struck or wounded that day?—I did not.

Did you see his brother after?—I did not.

Did you see the people rush into a house where it was said a policeman was shot at.

To a Juror (Mr. Cole): I am not related to any of the deceased. I was in the potato garden when the first shot was fired. I was within about 20 yards of the north gable-end of the Dispensary when the first shots were fired. I could see the crowd plainly at the time in front of the Dispensary. I saw no person fall in consequence of the first shots out of the Dispensary; they might, unknown to me. The people moved back after the shots. There was an alarm. The people ran away, and there were some stones thrown. The entire crowd dispersed after the shots. Some of them ran away entirely. Some of them might have gone into houses unknown to me. I will undertake to say there were no stones thrown, to my knowledge, before the first shot was fired. I saw no sticks thrown. I think it would be hard for them to be thrown without my seeing them, as I was looking at them. I could see the gable end of the Dispensary quite plain. A man could stand there without my seeing him. There were several there sick and forward. I did not know Delay until Saturday. I cannot say if he was standing there or not. He might be there without my observing him. I saw three police come out of the Dispensary after the first fire. The next time I heard firing, one fired up and two down the Old Cork road. I did not see them come out again and fire. They could not come to the middle of the road without my seeing them. I did not come out to fire a second time I would have heard them. I heard a third firing. I cannot say whether it was with, or without his Dispensary. A few minutes elapsed between the second and third firing. The last firing I heard Forde was shot at M'Carthy's door. From ten to fifteen minutes elapsed between the first firing out of the Dispensary and Forde being killed.

The proceedings of Monday were brought to an abrupt conclusion by the sudden indisposition of one of the jurors (Mr. Gilman), and the Court adjourned until Wednesday.

Our Illustrations have been engraved from sketches of the locality made by Mr. Mahony, of Cork, expressly for this journal. The first sketch is taken from the corner of the forge green, where "Sullivan, the Ranter," first gave the faction whoop; it shows also the town of Ballinhassig, with the position taken up by the police as they came out of the Dispensary in couples, and fired upon the crowd. In the fore ground is the first man that was shot; and higher up is another man that some men and women sought to remove until they were again fired on: at the angle of the Dispensary is one of the witnesses in a position which he took up and retained during the greater portion of the affray. The second engraving shows more distinctly the position of the Dispensary. These sketches have been made by our artist on the spot, who had the incidents described to him by eye-witnesses.

THE CORK TRAGEDY.

THE FAIR OF BALLINHASSIG.

> The South was all ablaze!
> A blaze with rushing strife!
> With Cheerfulness in sunny rays,
> And Mirth alive and lively!
> The year—the travelling year—
> Had brought its Summer round;
> Men went to catch the spark of joy
> That gleamed upon the ground
>
> To light the torch of hope!
> To speak the word of love!
> To give their fancy scope,
> Reflected from above!
> To raise the greeting voice—
> To grasp the friendly hand—
> To pledge the cup—to bid rejoice,
> Old customs of their land
>
> And young girls went to hear
> [illegible] went and early vow,
> And [illegible] brought their white wreaths fair,
> [illegible]

And youth stood on and smiled,
And childhood laugh'd outright,
When—all through Nature's merriment,—
U'proar'd the Faction Fight!

It came! the black-wing'd bird!
The omen of the gloom!
Its wild and screeching voice was heard,
Till blood eyes saw the tomb!
Ay! and the grave spoke back
Its echoes to the cry!
And gentle hearts turn'd from its track,
And sorrow fill'd Love's eye!

At morn, from shining mead,
From pasture, and from fold,
The ram, the lamb, the ox, the steed,
Were changing into gold!
The brooded cattle stood
To pay their owner's care;
And no one thought a night of blood
Would cross all that "Fair."

Beasts should be homeward drove—
The ground of sport be clear!
And Happiness look round for Love,
To bless and to endear!
When—sudden as quick Death—
And swift as arrow-flight,
Boom'd through the air the challenge breath,
The faction and the fight!

Peace! Peace!!—the mild word sped
Over the fury-ground;
And Faction had gone home to bed
And never stabbed a wound!
If raging to its den
Yet not to slay!—to think—
But for that stealthy curse of men
That gurgles Passion—Drink!

A drunkard stayed the swing
Of the strong arm of Power—
And at its lusty grasp broke wing
The clouds that were to lower
Over the peasant's heart of life,
Sting him to desperate mood,
Wed him to Phrenzy as a wife,
And rain around him—Blood!

'Twas horrible! the contest broke
As from a thunder cloud,
While Power's voice of Anger spoke
Absorbing and aloud!
From where stone missives whirr'd the air,
With wild and whizzing rush,
And the roof'd soldiers,* sheltered there,
Look'd upward for the crush;

And flashed back on the people's hate
The deadly vengeance-look!
There rolled the thunderbolt of fate,
And Death spread wide his hook!
The strong ball torrent poured to where
Stood shrieking life aghast!
And men and fainting women there
Fell fearfully and fast!

Orphans were soon made fatherless.
Wive, Whoswa!—Mothers' joys,
Died in the arms of all the Love
That once had bless'd their boys!
Oh God! 'tis hard to tell the wrong
Of all that bloody ruth!
Do thou uphold thy Justice strong
And punish it with Truth!

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

All conversation here has centred on the expulsion of the Jesuits from France. The decision of the Pope, as regards them, is certainly one of the most remarkable and unexpected events of the present day. The order of the Jesuits has spread its roots far and wide with the sensible mystery of Power, deprived of all intrinsic energy, had borrowed reflected power from the admirably disciplined, the all-powerful order. In society the love of what is mysterious, the constant desire to penetrate into the midst of scepticism and fickleness of opinion to adhere to some immovable point of doctrine, had thrown many of the greatest personages of the realm into the arms of the Jesuits—although persons in society, who possessed any secret influence in their nature, but particularly the most distinguished part of the female community, had succumbed to their power.

In a former letter I adverted to the circumstance, how a Minister of France, the great literary character, Villemain, having been bound by his office to repress the ambition of the order, had been seized by so acute a pang of remorse, that it drove him mad, and even to this hour he remains expelled from that position which was the reward of a whole life of literary exertion. Is it not astonishing to behold this cunning, intriguing, all-powerful order, which no stratagem could baffle, no power in DESIGNED PROTESTANT CHURCH, ON MOUNT ZION.

PROTESTANT CHURCH ON MOUNT ZION.

For some time past, the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews, have been sedulously labouring to complete the Church which they have commenced erecting at Jerusalem, but which, from various causes, has not been raised higher than six or seven feet above ground; although the depth underground, to the solid rock, on which the foundations are laid, in many places exceeds forty feet.

This excellent Society, established for the purpose of spreading the Gospel among the Jewish People, expends, in its good and great work, funds to the amount of £26,000 per annum; his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury is patron, and most of the Bishops of the Church of England and Ireland support the Society. They commenced a Mission to Jerusalem so long ago as 1820; in 1837, was placed at its head a clergyman specially ordained for that office by the Bishop of London; and, in 1841, Bishop Alexander was, under Act of Parliament, appointed to reside at Jerusalem, with spiritual jurisdiction over the English clergy, and others in union with the Church, together with German clergymen ordained by the Bishop, throughout Palestine, Syria, Chaldea, Egypt, and Abyssinia—his chief missionary care being directed to the conversion of the Jews to Christianity. For the purposes, also, of promoting education, a College was to be established, under the superintendence of the Bishop. This important step was taken at the suggestion, and with the concurrence and hearty co-operation, of his Majesty the King of Prussia, who contributed the munificent sum of £15,000 towards the permanent income of the Bishop.

Thus encouraged, both at home and abroad, by the highest patronage, the Society urged forward with increased exertions the erection of a Church for the performance of Divine Service, and buildings for the accommodation of the Bishop and Missionaries, which they had, at very considerable expense, already commenced upon a piece of ground purchased for the purpose. The erection of a Church has since acquired additional importance from the need of a place of worship for the numbers of English and foreign Protestants who now frequent the Holy City.

Having a Letter Commendatory from his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Jerusalem proceeded, with the prayers and best wishes of the friends of Israel, to take charge of his sacred trust. The reception he met with upon his arrival, which was ensured by the marked countenance and protection afforded by her Majesty's Government, and the respect he has at all times and upon all occasions received from the heads of other Christian Churches, as well as from the inhabitants of Jerusalem generally, consisting of so great a variety of differing sects, is the best evidence, not only of the unobjectionable nature of the mission, but of the sound judgment and discretion with which the holy functions of the Bishop have been exercised.

Notwithstanding these favourable circumstances, the erection of the Church has been frustrated by every possible vexation, more especially by interference with the workmen; and, say the London Society, "whilst the Greeks, Roman Catholics, Armenians, and other minor sects of Christians, enjoy the permission to worship God in their respective temples, and whilst no privilege is withheld on the representations of French and Russian diplomacy,—the pure Reformed religion of the British nation, to whom, under God, Turkey is indebted for the recovery of Syria, should be alone proscribed, and her Protestant children alone denied the possession of a consecrated building for the service of God, and especially that recognition of the Protestant faith which is indispensable to ensure protection."

The Members and Friends of the London Society have accordingly presented a Memorial to the Earl of Aberdeen, praying that his Lordship would send out such instructions to her Majesty's representative at Constantinople, as would be likely to obtain from the Porte a firman, authorising the completion of the Church which has been commenced on Mount Zion. The Memorial was signed by his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Bishop of London, and other prelates, many of the nobility and dignitaries of the Church, besides upwards of fourteen hundred parochial clergy, and nearly fifteen thousand laity. Lord Ashley read and presented the Memorial, which was most favourably received, and Lord Aberdeen gave hope that the firman from the Porte would be, ere long, obtained; so that the Society may complete the buildings, upon which so much money has already been expended, and which have excited such general and intense interest. A strong proof of this interest is afforded by the fact, that an English lady has undertaken to complete the Church, and endow it with an income of £100 per annum for a permanent minister, as well as to contribute the sum necessary to form a fund for keeping the edifice in repair.

In the Times of June 28, we find the following intelligence from Constantinople, dated June 4, which throws some new light upon the probability of the completion of the Church:—

"On the 27th ult. the British Ambassador reiterated in urgent terms in a note to the Porte, the request for a firman to permit of a Protestant Church being built at Jerusalem. It is easy to explain the long delay which has hitherto occurred in this matter. Syria, as of old, is the battle-field for religious strife, and where the question of empire may still be decided by the conflict of creeds. France and Russia, actuated by political motives, each have vast religious interests to defend in Syria, and are alike adverse to the progress of a new element. It is this opposition which has hitherto impeded the negotiation; nor does it appear likely that it will soon be overcome. If the Church must be built, why is not a body of English workmen sent out for the purpose? In such an instance the Porte could not interfere."

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

OXFORD.

July 5.

In a Convocation holden this day, being the last day of Act Term, the Rev. Richard Henry Wall, D.D., of Trinity College, Dublin, was admitted ad eundem.

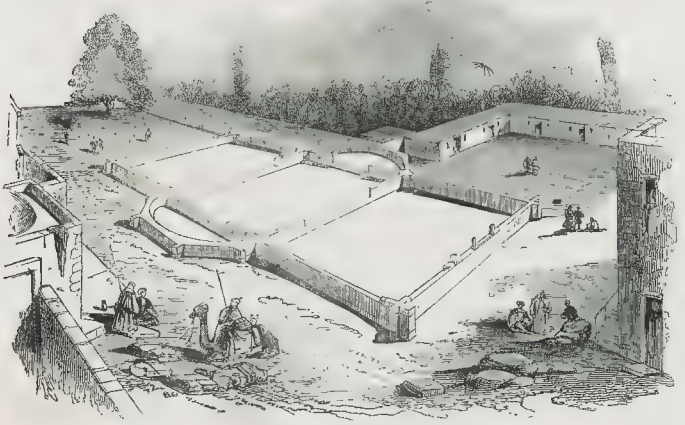
In the same Convocation the Vice Chancellor read to the house a letter from his Grace the Chancellor, giving directions that all future nominations of his Vice Chancellors, when the Convocation is called on to assent to the nomination, no taking the sense of the house by scrutiny or otherwise shall be permitted

In a Congregation, holden at the same time, the following degrees were conferred:—

Doctor in Civil Law.—Rev. James Caulfield Browne, St. John's College, Vicar of Dudley, Worcestershire.

Master of Arts.—Rev. Edward Francis Coke, Brasenose College.

The Rev. William Henry Chepmell, M.A., Fellow of Jesus College, has been appointed curate of St. Peter-le Bailey, vice the Rev. W. B. Heathcote, B.D., resigned.



PRESENT STATE OF THE BUILDING.

CHESS.

To CORRESPONDENTS.—"Senex," Maida.—The following are very beautiful specimens of the sort ofsneaded problems to which Senex refers. The first is by D'Orville, and the second the invention of M. Brede. Put up the these them But:—White King at his own sq, Q at her 2nd, R at Q Kt's 8th, R at Q R's 6th, B at K B's 8th, B at Q R's 4th. Black: King at Q R's 8th sq, Q at K Kt's 7th. In this position, White having to play, engages to compel Black to checkmate him in six moves. White King at his K's sq, Q at her Kt's 4th, B at Q's 7th, B at QB's 5th, Kt at K R's 6th. Black: King at his 4th, B at K R's 2nd, Pawns at K R's 5th, and K B's 6th. White here also undertakes to force Black to mate in six moves.

"A. Z.," "G. D.," "J. P.," "J. V." Okehampton, and others, who have written to us respecting Mr. Brede's problem (No. 76), we beg to refer to the note appended to our diagram in this day's paper.

"H. L. M.," Yarmouth, by referring to his problem, will find mate may be given in seven moves. We have no copy of it.

"Q. Q." We have no recollection of the problem sent.

"Scaoch," Glasgow, will find a better method of estimating the powers of the pieces in Tomlinson's recent publication, "Amusements in Chess."

"Ebor M.," Manchester.—The best solution is unquestionably that in the fewest moves; but, in Problem 7b, it is impossible to effect the mate under seven. Look again attentively at the solution you have submitted in six moves, and you will see that Black's moves are not compulsory.

"G. S. S.," Liverpool.—Many thanks. We shall be glad to receive the long lost games.

"Rushworth."—The solution of Mr. Bolton's three-move problem sent is the true one.

"A Moderate Player" will see by the solution that his over-confidence might have lost him "a good round sum."

"S. H. G.," Bridport.—We believe you are right.

"A. J.," Tyrlethan; "M. M.," Swansea; "Sancho," Bury; "Nemo," Westbourne; "Miles," Widow; "G. E.," "S.," "P. Y.," "H. P.," "T. R.," "Marvell."—The solutions are correct.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM NO. 77.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. R to K B's 5th	P takes R (best)

2. K B's P two; and, then, play as Black can, the Queen mates next move, either at K's R's sq or Q B's 2nd.

PROBLEM NO. 78.

By M. BREDE.

White plays first and mates in eight moves.

 In reference to the defect we pointed out in Problem, No. 76, we find in Herr Beadle's "Almanach für Freunde von Schachspiel" a note stating that a black Pawn should be placed at Black's K's Rook's 4th square.

GAME NO. 71

Is the contribution of the celebrated Livonian player, M. Kieseritzki. It was recently played by him against an amateur of the Paris Chess circles, M. K. giving the odds of Pawn and move. (Remove White's K B P from the board.)

BLACK (Mr. P—).	WHITE (M. K.)	BLACK (Mr. P—).	WHITE (M. K.)
1. K P two	Q Kt to B 3rd	12. K P one	K R P one
2. Q Kt to B 3rd	K P two	13. P takes Kt	P takes B
3. K B P two	B to Q B 4th	14. K Kt takes Kt P	K Kt P one
4. K Kt to B 3rd	Q P one	15. Q to K sq	B to K Kt 5th
5. B to Q Kt 5th	Q to K 2nd	16. Q to K R 4th (ch)	B to K R 4th
6. Kt to Q 5th	Q to her sq	17. Kt to K 6th	Q to her 3rd
7. P takes K P	P takes P	18. Q to K Kt 5th	K to R 2nd
8. Q P two *	P takes P	19. K Kt to his 7th	Q P one (dis. ch)
9. Castles	K Kt to B 3rd	20. K to R sq	R to K B 2nd
10. B to K Kt 5th	Castles	21. Q Kt to K B 4th †
11. B to Q B 4th	K to R sq	White surrenders.

* Taking the K's Pawn would be bad play, because of "Q to R 5th (ch)."
† The attack throughout is sustained with great spirit by the opening player.

DISCOVERY OF ANTIQUITIES IN NORTHUMBERLAND.—The discovery of the remains of St. Leonard's Hospital which has taken place within these last few days, after remaining in obscurity from time immemorial, must be very interesting to the antiquary. The site is about three quarters of a mile north of Alnwick, and adjoins the great north road on the west side, and is about 300 yards south of the cross erected to the memory of Malcolm III., King of Scotland, who, in besieging Alnwick Castle, was killed November 13, 1093. Amongst other things discovered are the following:—A holy water font, the base of a cross and socket, several stones of the saw-toothed and pointed Gothic arches, two silver coins, a vase or urn, part of a doorway, upwards of twenty human skeletons, four tumbestones (one of which had cut on it a triangle, a cross, and a circle, probably intended as emblems of the Trinity, Christianity, and Eternity), the base of a column, with several smaller carved stones. There has also been discovered a draw-well, set round with stones.

SUMMARY OF RAILWAY FACTS.—On Monday last the York and Scarborough Railway was opened throughout. The line is about 50 miles in extent, and traverses perhaps one of the most picturesque spots to be found in the whole kingdom, so that a trip to Scarborough may be realised with pleasure. The whole line has been constructed in twelve months, at a cost of not more than £6000 per mile.——The long pending question as to the remburesement, by the South Eastern Railway Company, of the cost of the six miles of Railway north of Reigate, which six miles, to save the expense of two lines running nearly parallel to each other for twelve miles, were constructed by the Brighton Company, has been settled, and the sum of £340,000, including interest and improvement of the funded investment, will be paid over to the Brighton Railway Company.——The Committee have decided that the preamble of the Gravesend and Rochester Railway has been proved.——The preambles of the following bills are also declared to be proved:—The Ashford and Hastings (Brighton, Lewes, and Hastings line); the Richmond and Surrey and the Bristol and Exeter.——The opening of the Norwich and Brandon Railway, that was fixed to take place on Wednesday last, is unavoidably postponed in consequence of a slip of great magnitude having taken place in the Fens.——A Select Committee on Railways have made a second report, in which they state, that owing to the peculiar circumstances of the present Session of Parliament, they are of opinion that special privileges should be granted to parties wishing to re-introduce, in the next Session, railway bills, which, having been advanced to a certain stage, it may be found impossible to pass into laws during the present Session, from want of time for their proper investigation. A proper proof, therefore, being given next Session, that such bills had, at the end of this Session, been pending in the House of Lords, or if pending in the House of Commons, had been ordered to be ingrossed, the standing orders with respect to any such bills shall be held to have been complied with.——In the case of the London and York Railway, the Committee have decided that the promoters of the Direct Northern line are at liberty to offer, as rebutting evidence, proof of any errors in the London and York line of such magnitude as to render the construction of the line impracticable under the provisions of 8 Victoria cap. 20.

GANYMEDE. LILY OF DEVON.

WESTON-SUPER-MARE REGATTA, FROM THE SEA.—DRAWN BY CONDY.

BRISTOL CHANNEL REGATTA.

This splendid Regatta, which has been looked forward to with much interest, came off on Thursday, the 3rd instant, at the picturesque watering-place, Weston-super-Mare. This already popular resort adjoins the Great Western Railway, about twenty miles from Clifton: it has a fine strand, three miles in length, and is, certainly, one of the pleasantest localities on the Somersetshire coast. To add to its attractions, the inhabitants have evinced great spirit in that truly national pastime—yacht-sailing.

For some days previous to the late Regatta, the weather had been unpropitious. Of the five Royal yachts which had been entered for the Weston-super-Mare Cup, only one, the Champion, T. P. Wickham, Esq., had arrived up to Wednesday afternoon; the Guerilla, John Burton, Esq., the Grand Turk, F. Fox, Esq., and the Daring, E. Downe, Esq., all of the Western Yacht Club, being prevented, by the terrific storms, from getting round the land. The Ganymede, Pigott Smyth Pigott, Esq., arrived on Monday, and lay off in the bay, braving for twelve hours a tremendous gale, and short of one-third of her crew, who had been sent on shore with commands. Her gallant owner was on board, and, with his short number of hands, succeeded in running, on Tuesday afternoon, into Penarth Roads.

Wednesday afternoon, the wind having somewhat gone down, the Ganymede again arrived in the bay, and the same tide brought up the Lily of Devon, W. F. Moore, Esq., of the R.W.Y.C., she having, in spite of every difficulty, rounded the point. The Sailing Committee met about seven o'clock, when the Champion and Lily of Devon were entered for the Weston-super-Mare Cup (a superb richly chased silver Elizabethan Cup and Cover, in oak case, value fifty guineas; open to all yachts belonging to any Royal Yacht Club in the United Kingdom, and not exceeding 50 tons, O.M., and not less than 10 tons, O.M). The Honorary Stewards were the Marquis of Conyngham and Earl Mountcharles.

Thursday morning, the weather all round looked "muddy:" nevertheless, pedestrians, and passengers by steam-boat and railway, flocked into the town by hundreds. At half-past ten o'clock, the Champion, 25 tons, and the Lily of Devon, 30 tons, took up their stations, with mainsails scandalised, foresails downs jib furled, their bowsprits, and gaff on topsails stopp'd. At 10h. 50m. the start took place, the Champion leading; she was, however, soon caught by the Lily, which rounded the flag first time at 1h. 42m. 35s. P.M., the Champion at 2h. 12m. 4s. From having a bad pilot, the Lily, in making her second round, stood out in the strength of the tide. J. Board, master of the Rosebuck, of this port, and a native, piloted the Champion, and, taking advantage of his competitor's indiscretion, with good judgment, stood close on the flat, and came up with her. The wind, which had hitherto been very light, began now to freshen, and the race became very interesting. The Lily of Devon soon gained on her opponent, and had a start of two minutes round the Flat Holmes. Shortly after, her topmast was seen to go; at the same time she sprung her mast, and was obliged to lower her mainsail, and take in two reefs, and even then obliged to sail her shaking; she also took in her jib—her spar not being able to bear her canvas. The Lily's chance was now all gone, and the Champion came in, winning by 4m. 20s. At the instant of rounding the flag vessel, the Lily's mast went by the board, carrying with it part of her bulwarks, &c. She was shortly afterwards towed up to Bristol by the Swift steamer, to repair damages.

The race throughout was of an exciting nature, and it is generally allowed that, even with her pilot's bad management, the Lily would, but for the accident alluded to, have been the winner. This is the fourteenth silver cup which the Champion has won at different matches, although the first since she has been the property of her present owner.—The course was twice round the Steep and Flat Holmes, a distance of about forty-five miles.

The Bristol Channel Cup (an elegantly chased silver tankard, value fifteen guineas, open to the Bristol Channel only; to be sailed for by all vessels not exceeding 35 tons, O. M.) was contested for by the Swansea, of Swansea, Captain George; the Cornwall, of Bridgwater, Captain Press; and the Severn, of Bristol. Their course was once round the Holmes, which was accomplished by the two first-named vessels in capital style—the Swansea winning after a beautiful display of seamanship on both sides.

The Knightstone Cup.—A massive silver tankard, value ten guineas, open to vessels belonging to Weston-super-Mare exclusively. The vessels which started for this prize were the Victoria, F. Harris, the Sea Flower, W. Coles, and the Nancy, R. Muggleworth. Their course was the same as for the Bristol Channel Cup; and the prize was cleverly won by the Victoria: the Nancy could not round, and was run over to Penarth.

We have somewhat abridged this report from the Westonian.

The "Cups," manufactured by Reyna, of Bath, were very superb. They were presented to the winners at a public dinner at Reeve's Hotel, Mr. R. S. Pigott presiding. In the evening, there was a splendid display of fireworks; and, what with the waving of flags and the firing of cannon throughout the day, the town wore a truly festive appearance.

On Friday, the sports of the Regatta closed with galley-matches and duck-hunts. The first galley-match was between two four-oared boats, the Rose, Charles Norris, 23 feet, 6 inches, and the Horatio, Jesse Hanwick, 24 feet, for a purse of three guineas, which was won by the former by about four feet. The first duck-hunt was won by the Horatio, after about ten minutes' chase.

We should have mentioned that Mr. Pigott's yacht Ganymede was the flag ship, on Thursday; and his gig the flag-boat at the galley-matches, on Friday.

Our Illustrations have been engraved from sketches by Mr. N. M. Condy. The view in the breeze shows the Champion winning, with the Lily of Devon disabled. In the distance are seen the Steep Holmes and the Flat Holmes Lighthouse. The second sketch shows the Regatta from the sea—the Ganymede, R. Y. S., saluting.

PUTNEY AND ROEHAMPTON REGATTA.

The twenty-seventh annual contest for a purse of sovereigns, given by the nobility and gentry of Putney and Roehampton, took place on Tuesday amongst the watermen plying at the first named place. The race was in three heats, with ten pair of sculls, two pair in each boat. The distance rowed was in the two first heats from Putney-bridge up the south shore, round a boat off the Vice Chancellor's, down, round a boat off the College of Civil Engineers, and up through the centre arch of Putney-bridge.

FIRST HEAT.

T. Green, sen., and Charles Cobb	(Yellow)	1
J. Johnson and T. Green, jun.	(Pink)	2
James Green and James Johnson	(White)	3

Pink took the lead, White following, and Yellow being close on their quarter. White were obliged for a moment to give way to Yellow, who shortly after went into the first place, and won by a length.

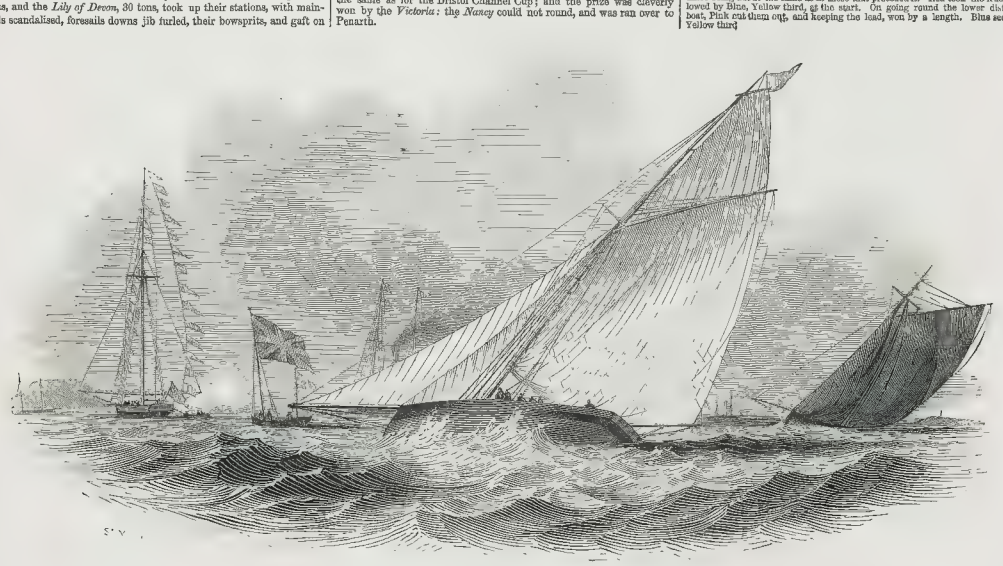
SECOND HEAT.

W. Robinson and T. Phelps	(Blue)	1
H. Green and W. Cobb,	(Red)	2

The winners took the lead and kept it.

GRAND HEAT.

The two best pairs of each boat started down for this, the final heat, the distance being about the same as in those that preceded it. Red took the lead, followed by Blue, Yellow third, at the start. On going round the lower distance boat, Pink cut them out, and keeping the lead, won by a length. Blue second Yellow third



GANYMEDE. CHAMPION. LILY OF DEVON

WESTON SUPER-MARE REGATTA.—THE CHAMPION WINNING, WITH THE LILY OF DEVON DISABLED.

Now Ready, Price Eighteen Shillings, Vol. VI. of
THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.
Elegantly bound in cloth and gilt, gilt edges, rich in Illustrations of the Passing events of the last Six Months, forming a most complete and valuable ILLUSTRATED CHRONOLOGY, together with a mass of useful and highly interesting articles on Art, Literature, and Science.—May be obtained, by order, of all Booksellers, &c., in the Kingdom, as also all the previous Volumes. Vol. I., 21s.; Vols. II., III., IV., V., and VI., 18s. each.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, July 13.—6th Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY, 14.—The Bastille destroyed, 1789.
TUESDAY, 15.—St. Swithin.—The French Revolution commenced, 1789.
WEDNESDAY, 16.—Sir Joshua Reynolds born, 1723.
THURSDAY, 17.—Dr. Watts born, 1674.
FRIDAY, 18.—Petrarch died, 1374.—Hampden killed, 1643.
SATURDAY, 19.—George IV. crowned, 1821.

HIGH WATER at London-bridge, for the Week ending July 19.

Monday.		Tuesday.		Wednesday.		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday.
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
0 25	0 51	1 9	0 37	0 52	1 18	1 36	1 59	2 22	2 45	3 10	3 34

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"A Correspondent," who has sent us the description of the sculpture in the grand pediment of the Mansion-house, London, is thanked for his intention; but the subject has no immediate interest.

"Maxeppa."—Exeter-hall is not the property of the Sacred Harmonic Society.

"D. J."—"Crichton" is pronounced "Criton."

"P. W."—We know nothing of the report.

"A Constant Reader," Great Yarmouth.—The Tunbridge mineral water owes its active properties to the presence of carbonate of iron. Britton's "Descriptive Sketches of Tunbridge Wells" may be had of Messrs. Longman and Co., 39, Paternoster row.

"H. H.," Montrose.—The notice is indispensable.

"H. W. C."—Jackson's "Treatise on Wood Engraving" is a complete, but somewhat costly, work.

"Ato" should consult the "Oxford and Cambridge University Calendars."

"A Reader."—Noad's "Lectures on Electricity" is a sound work.

"H. G.," Barford.—Dr. Ramond.—In place.

"F. F. F."—The wens for the hair dye should be white.

"Amicus" should apply to some respectable life assurance office, as "The Amicable," in Fleet-street.

"Ægidius," Ipswich, in some critical remarks on our Engravings of the Fleet at Spithead, has stated that, in manning the yards, the men stand on the foot-ropes; whereas, they stand on the yards, and hold on by the life lines, as our artist has correctly represented. Our correspondent should attend to technicalities.

"A Constant Reader."—We have not room for the view, &c., sent.

"A. E.," Dublin.—See "The Family Manual and Servant's Guide," or any treatise on the hair.

"A Correspondent" should address, at Messrs. Longmans, 39, Paternosterrow, the publishers of Mr. Hansard's work on Archery.

"B. W.," Blackheath, should apply by letter, with testimonial of householder, to Sir Henry Ellis, British Museum. St. George, as the patron saint of Britain, dates from his reinforcement of the Christians at the famous siege of Antioch; according to Butler, St. George was a soldier in the army of Diocletian.

"E. F." Derby.—Address, 198, Strand.

"W. N.," Abergavenny.—No. 24 of our Journal contains the account of the Meeting of the Welsh Society: it may be had, by order, of any bookseller.

"H. J. A.," Wellington, Salop.—The sketch and description will be acceptable. The present Examiner of Plays is a son of Mr. Charles Kemble. The lines "On the Marriage," &c., do not reach our standard of merit.

"O. R. W.," Aldermanbury.—Six volumes of our Journal are already published; and may also be purchased in Numbers, 6*d. each.*

"Edoxensis."—"The Theatre Italien Moderne" appears to be one of the best octavo editions of Italian operas; it is, however, only superior to "Les Compositeures Illustres" in its typography.

"Cromp."—We think not.

"Oleo."—We have no intention at present.

"S. C. B." Cheltenham.—The prints may be had, by order, of any bookseller.

"Mrs. B.," who writes from Sonbattee, Bengal, should have paid the postage (2s.) of her, to ourselves, unclaimed letter.

"An Inquirer."—The Grand Duchess Stephanie of Baden is the niece of the late Empress Josephine; and was, consequently, Stephanie Beauharnais, the first husband of the Empress being uncle to the Grand Duchess.—F. F.

"G. M.," Marylebone-lane.—"I Know."

"W. J.," Masham.—We do not remember to have received the work in question.

"Juventus."—Accepting the Chiltern Hundreds is receiving a nominal Government office, by which a Member of Parliament vacates his seat.

"A Protestant."—See No. 81 of our Journal for a description of St. Peter's Church, Islington.

"L. O."—The Prince of Leiningen is half brother to her Majesty.

"H. B.," Dublin.—To reply to our correspondent's first question would occupy more room than we can spare. 2. A schooner sails better of the wind, and a cutter is best at beating.

"A Subscriber," Waterford.—We have not room for the quotations.

"An Early Subscriber."—Address, Mr. Lumley bookseller, Chancery lane.

"A Well-wisher."—Bath bricks are made in various parts of England.

"C. F. D. X."—We differ in opinion with our correspondent, and our impressions are derived from certain facts; such, for instance, as these. Last year, a gentleman proposed for election into the club referred to by the commodore was black balled; whereupon that nobleman attended a dinner given by the party so black-balled, to mark his feelings on the subject. A royal club is in course of formation at Ryde, under the especial patronage of the most influential members of the society for whose undiminished popularity "C. F. D. X." contends. We hold these facts to be opposed to his conclusions.

All the numbers are reprinted, and our subscribers can make up their sets from No. I. to the present time.

Covers for binding Volumes I., II., III., IV., V., and VI., may be had at the Office, and of all agents, price 3s. each.

Portfolios, price 4s., for preserving the numbers for binding.

The Monthly Part, XXXIII., price 2s. 6d., is now ready.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 12, 1845.

THE latest question of privilege has terminated more favourably for the House of Commons than the former ones; it has been stopped at the shreshold of the Court of Law. The heart of the plaintiff failed him from fear, and at the questioning of the House he declined to grapple with that indefinite power—the privilege of the House—on which so much doubt prevails, whether it is a phantom or a reality. Tasso describes a forest all were deterred from entering by a wall of raging flames that surrounded it; but the hero of the poem walking boldly into them, they prove the mere appearances, or simulacra of flames, having no power to burn, scorch, or consume, or, as a lawyer would say, otherwise to injure any person bold enough to test their nature. Some such visionary character the privilege of the House possesses, and the dread of its power is "most in apprehension;" for whenever it has been brought into conflict with the law, it has, in recent times at least, not been triumphant. It was with the most perfect knowledge of the principles involved, that Sir Robert Peel and Sir Thomas Wilde warned the House against engaging in a legal contest, or consenting to appear before a court of law. This was some years ago, and the Premier has since consented—against his first and better judgment—to another course; and, having done so, thinks it better to exhaust every means the law furnishes for the decision of such a question, before changing the plan of defence. Sir Thomas Wilde remains his first opinion, and everything that has occurred since has proved the soundness of it. Once submit such a question to the Judges, and it is brought within all the technicalities, distinctions, uncertainties, and, it may be added, absurdities, with which the law will surround it. Thus, a word omitted in the form of a warrant, will be fatal to it, though the power of issuing the warrant is not doubted; just as a man named James cannot be punished for a crime—though of his guilt and identity there is not the shadow of a doubt—if he is indicted by the name of John. The question is, whether it is necessary or desirable that a power which does not depend on statute or written law, but is something distinct from and above it, should be driven to operate through the technical forms the law prescribes. We are inclined to think it should not be so fettered; the governing power of the State must be lodged somewhere; the abuses of the Royal prerogative in former times, raised that feeling against it, which has reduced the Crown to its present dependent condition. Parliament gained power as the Crown lost it, and is now the predominating element in the Constitution. Making the laws, and ultimately disposing of all the affairs of the empire, it must have a power of independent action, of inquiring into abuses with a view to providing a remedy, of receiving evidence with regard to the conduct of public bodies or private individuals. One of its clearest privileges is that of protecting parties from the consequences of communications made to it, at its command. Such evidence may be most necessary, and perfectly true, and yet the Law, if appealed to, will call it a libel. With the fear of penalties before him, no man will be inclined to tell all he knows, and thus the efficiency of Parliament is broken down by the stringent technicalities of the Courts of Law. This has been actually done in one recent case; and, had not the parties withdrawn their action, might have been done in the last instance. As the result of the proceedings of Monday last do not in any way settle the controversy, it will be necessary for the Commons to take a stand at once, or these actions will be perpetually springing up, the "defendant" will always be worth powder and shot, and success seems to depend more on what may be called the "pluck" of the plaintiff than any thing else.

As the power to compel the attendance of witnesses and examine them is not questioned, and as the late actions have each arose from allegations of libellous matter contained in the evidence given by these witnesses, perhaps it would be as well if the House would come to some decision as to the publication of such evidence. A short act would exempt from the operation of the law of libel all publications printed by "order of the House of Commons." The evidence is taken for the House to guide its legislation, and should have absolute freedom from all process; in short, be made analagous to the freedom of speech of members. The printing of that evidence in a Blue Book is at present facetiously called "publication;" but we never yet heard of a well-established case of any one who had read a production of this kind, a few members excepted, and an editor or two for the purpose of extract. As a fact buried in a Blue Book is practically unknown to the world at large, we would put it out of the pale of the law that punishes the giving of publicity to unpleasant truths. Let no actions lie against the Parliamentary printer for putting Parliamentary evidence into type, and one fertile source of attacks on Parliamentary privilege would be stopped up. But it may be said newspapers and journals may reproduce the evidence, and "publish" the libel, if it be one, in reality; we reply that in this, as in all other cases, journalists must use their discretion; as they are deeply interested in keeping personal libels out of their columns—and, from great practice, have a kind of instinct in detecting one—they would very rarely commit themselves, and when they did must take the consequences, as a part of the risks of their profession. A Member of Parliament may utter a gross personal libel in his place; the debates are reported, but, as the House does not recognise the existence of the practice, there would be no protection for the journalist who should publish it. The rules of debate, which repress direct personal charges, or explain them in "a Parliamentary sense," make the risk of such a case occurring a very small one. But out of Parliament the danger often arises, and every journal is dependent for the prudent suppression of personal libels, on the tact and discernment of its reporters. We would apply the same responsibility to the reproduction of evidence printed (but not published) by the House of Commons. That body, and its witnesses, ought to be exempted from the Law, or free and full enquiry cannot be made into abuses; subject that evidence to the scrutiny of a Court of Law, and libels will spring up at every step. In the case pending the House, having appeared in Court, must go on to the last stage; in the case discussed on Monday the party gave up the contest; but much more is wanting to settle the controversy.

THE week has been a busy one in the Legislature, both for what has been done, and in what further doing has been relinquished as impossible. The disease, "the advanced period of the Session," has attacked several promising measures; the cases being hopeless, they were on Monday given up by the Chief Physician, and expired.

Lord Palmerston originated a discussion, on Tuesday, on the Slave Trade, and went into an examination of the late Convention between France and England, for the purpose of throwing all possible censure upon it. His speech was able and elaborate, but failed, we think, to establish the case he sought to make out. The Convention proves as sincere a desire in the present Government to repress the Slave Trade as that entertained by the Whigs; and in some points it is far more practical, considered as a means to an end, than barren treaties made with every nation, and observed by none that had the temptation and opportunity of breaking them.

The most remarkable division of the Session occurred on Wednesday night, when in a House of 224 Members, the Ministry only escaped a defeat by a majority of 8. An attempt has been made to revive religious tests in the Scotch Universities, after they have long fallen into disuse. A measure to abolish them altogether was some time ago brought in by Mr. Rutherfurd. The Government promised it a qualified support. They opposed every attempt to introduce any religious tests into the new Irish Colleges, and it was reasonably enough expected they would not now oppose their abolition where they were useless. They did oppose the second reading of Mr. Rutherfurd's Bill, and only threw it out by the above narrow majority. Mr. Macaulay made one of his powerful speeches in support of the Bill; he was unsparing in his denunciations of the inconsistency of the Government, and must have materially contributed to produce the unexpected result.

THE STATE OF THE REVENUE.

The Revenue Accounts for the Quarter ending the 5th of July, show a decrease on the quarter, as compared with the corresponding term in 1844, of £739,847; and the deficiency is thus divided:—

Customs	£369,587
Excise	140,008
Miscellaneous	405,535
Imprest and other moneys	19,756
Repayments of advances	26,263
Total decrease	1,040,089
From this must be deducted the increase, during the quarter, on the undermentioned departments:—
Stamps	£132,043
Taxes	16,623
Property Tax	157,596
	306,242
Net decrease on the quarter	£739,847

Upon the whole year, terminating on the 5th inst., the tables show an increase, compared with the year preceding, of £847,178.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

HER MAJESTY'S RETURN TO THE ISLE OF WIGHT.—The Queen and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, after taking a farewell of the King and Queen of the Belgians on Monday week, with proceed by railway to Gosport, and there embark on board the Royal yacht for Cowes. Her Majesty and the Prince Consort contemplate sojourning at Osborne House until the close of that week. The Prince of Wales and the Princess Royal will accompany their illustrious parents. Her Majesty, we understand, has purchased Osborne Villa, the late residence of General Barton, with the small piece of land on the opposite side of the road abutting on to the Osborne estate, it is understood for the reception of one of the officers of the Royal household.

THE DEPARTURE OF THE KING AND QUEEN OF THE BELGIANS.—Their Majesties the King and Queen of the Belgians, according to present arrangements, will close their visit to the Queen and Prince Albert on Monday next, when they leave this country direct for Brussels, and do not go to Paris, as was rumoured lately.

HER MAJESTY'S GRAND DINNER PARTY.—On Tuesday the Queen had a grand dinner party at Buckingham Palace. The company consisted of their Majesties the King and Queen of the Belgians, their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, the Austrian Ambassador and the Countess Dietrichstein, the Belgian Minister, the Duke of Wellington, the Marquis and Marchioness of Douro, the Countess of Westmorland, Lady Augusta Cadogan, Baroness d'Hoghvorst, Lord and Lady Wharncliffe, the Right Hon. Sidney Herbert, Major de Moerkerka, and Baron Knesebeck. The band of the 1st Regiment of Life Guards attended during dinner, and performed several pieces. Her Majesty had afterwards an evening party. At ten o'clock, the Queen and Prince Albert, the King and Queen of the Belgians, the King and Duchess of Cambridge, and Prince George, of the Yellow Drawing Room and entered the Grand Saloon, which was fitted up for music. The general company then moved. A concert then commenced.

THE VISIT OF THE DUCHESS OF KENT TO GERMANY.—Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent and the Prince de Leiningen have arrived at Vienna.

THE DUCHESS OF NORTHUMBERLAND'S FETE CHAMPETRE.—On Tuesday afternoon a brilliant party of the leading aristocracy congregated at the Duchess of Northumberland's second fête champêtre at Sion House. The invitations amounted to 700.

PROPOSED MARRIAGES IN HIGH LIFE.—Lord Macdonald is the successful suitor for the hand of Miss Wyndham, eldest daughter of the Countess of Lastowl. It will be recollected that the début of the fair betrothed, at her Majesty's first Drawing-room this season, excited great interest in aristocratic circles, and, if report speak truly, the noble bridegroom elect may congratulate himself on his success, where many high-born competitors have failed to create an impression.—The preliminaries are arranged for a matrimonial alliance between Lord Alfred Hervey, the youngest son of the Marquis of Bristol, and Miss Chester, daughter of Colonel Chester.—A marriage is also spoken of as likely to take place shortly between Mr. Ernest Bunsen, second son of his Excellency the Prussian Minister, and Miss Elizabeth Gurney, daughter of Mr. Samuel Gurney, the opulent banker. The bride, it is said, will have a dowry of £100,000.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

INSTALLATION OF A JEWISH RABBI.—The ceremony of installing a Chief Rabbi of the united congregations of Jews of Great Britain, was performed on Wednesday evening in the Great Synagogue, Duke's-place, Houndsditch. This last ceremony of the week takes place every 42 years ago, when Dr. Hirchell, the late Chief Rabbi, was the "chosen one." Dr. Hirchell died three years since, and Dr. Nathan Marcus Adler was selected to fill the chief place in the Jewish Church in which he officiated last. He is a native of Hanover, and never visited this country before Monday last. The interior of the building was newly painted, and decorated for the occasion with flowers, &c. Long before the hour fixed for the ceremony, the body of the synagogue was completely crowded with the leading members of the Jewish persuasion in the kingdom, and the galleries were filled with ladies, exclusively at seven o'clock the Chief Rabbi, during whom we held a canopy of blue silk, trimmed with silver) entered the Synagogue, conducted by Baron Lionel de Rotnscnild, Sir Moses Montefiore, and several of the principal of the choir of the synagogue. Prayers were then offered for the welfare of the Queen and Royal family. The scrolls were again deposited in the ark, and the usual evening prayers having been said, the Chief Rabbi was conducted from the Synagogue, and the congregation left.

SOCIETY OF OLD FRIENDS.—A procession of this Society, being that of its 27th anniversary, took place on Tuesday. The lodges assembled, in great part, in Finsbury-square, and proceeded thence along Chiswell-street, Barbican, through Smithfield, down Snow-hill, Farringdon-street, and over Blackfriars-bridge to Vauxhall gardens, where covers were laid for 2000 of the members. The appearance of the procession, with its nobly painted banners flaunting in the breeze, and its numerous bands of music, was magnificent, and in every way worthy of its philanthropic object.—"The Relief of its Distressed Brothers"—a motto with which the banners were principally inscribed. The members were vested in the insignia of their order, which added much interest to the procession. "The Old Friends" were originally founded by the late Mr. Staunton, a man of most humane disposition, and they now number 101 lodges in London, with branches in all parts of the civilised world. The day was most favourable for the procession, which took up the greater portion of the forenoon; whereas for many years in the metropolis, and the evening was delightfully passed by the members at Vauxhall Gardens.

THE WEATHER.—The temperature has been again above the extreme "summer heat" of the climate of England. On Sunday the thermometer ranged from 76 to 78 degrees in the shade; and on Monday, in some situations, it reached 80 degrees, with a light breeze from the W. S.W. Of course, the atmosphere was strongly charged with electrical matter. During the whole of Sunday night there was a magnificent play of sheet lightning, with occasional thunder. Between four and five on Monday morning a thunderclap burst over the eastern parts of the metropolis, the rain poured down in torrents. The hailstones, in some places, were the size of marbles, and did an immense deal of damage amongst the hot and greenhouses. In Lord Say and Sele's grounds there were upwards of 4000 panes of glass broken, and the fruit damaged, which will cost from £200 to £300 to repair. The weather during the latter part of the week was changeable and colder.

MORTALITY OF LONDON.—The total number of deaths in the metropolis in the week ending last Saturday, as made up by the Registrar-General, was 963. The weekly average for the last five summers is 904, and for the last five years, 903.

THE LATE ACCIDENT ON THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY.—Major General Pasley's report on the accident of the 17th of June on the Great Western Railway has just been laid before Parliament. It is a lengthy document, entering into full particulars of the accident, its effects, the subsequent appearance of the parts of the line where it occurred, the state of the carriages, &c. That portion of the report, however, in which he states his opinion as to the causes of the accident is of especial interest to the public, and the remedies he would propose are of still greater moment. He ascribes the accident (by which the lives of 145 passengers were placed in the most imminent peril) to the lightness of the luggage van, which had the greatest velocity, combined with the extreme weight of the express trains, and the elasticity of the light rails and sleepers, aggravated by the "hog-trough rails." The obvious remedies he states to be, first, to replace the light sleepers and those

POSTSCRIPT.

RAILWAYS.—In the cases of the London and Croydon, Catham to Chatham Railway Bill, and the London, Chatham, and North Kent Railway Bill, the Committees have declared the preambles not proved. A similar decision has been given in regard to the London and Croydon (Orpington Branch Railway Bill, and the Rye and Tenterden Railway Bill.

THE LATE DUEL AT GOSPORT.—BOW STREET, Thursday.—A report has been in circulation for some days past that Lieutenants Hawkey and Pym would surrender themselves for trial at the assizes for this county, which commenced here this day. The report, as might naturally be expected, has created considerable interest in this locality, from the extraordinary nature of the case, and the peculiar circumstances of the duel. Whatever foundation there may have been for this report at the time it was first put in circulation, and whatever intentions these gentlemen might have had of surrendering themselves to take their trials at the present assizes, we can state upon competent authority that there is no probability that such will be the case just yet. If Lieutenants Hawkey and Pym had it in contemplation to surrender, and that they had such intention may be inferred from the fact that Mr. Cockburn has been retained on their behalf, they have postponed doing so, at all events, till next assizes. It is understood that a consultation has been held between Sir Thomas Wilde and Mr. Cockburn with respect to the circumstances of the case, the result of which was the expression of an opinion favourable to the accused parties, and it is thought that, when these gentlemen do surrender to take their trials, facts will be adduced which will fully vindicate them in public estimation at least, if not in the strict eye of the law. Mr. Crowder has been retained on the part of Lieutenant Rowles, the second of Mr. Seton, but, from what can be gathered, that gentleman has no intention of surrendering to take his trial at present. Lieutenants Hawkey and Pym, the survivors in the late fatal duel, were in Portsmouth on Thursday.

DEFENCES AGAINST AN ENEMY.—On Thursday night, a few minutes before eight o'clock, as a man, respectably attired, was passing along London Bridge, with the crowd, on the pathway on the eastern side, he suddenly stopped and took out his watch, and for a moment or so he appeared to be meditating, with his face turned toward the shipping down the river. In an instant a convulsive spasm appeared to seize him, and before it was possible for any one to save him, he threw himself over the parapet, and fell headlong into the water. Who the party is, is not at present known; but he is stated to be an elderly gentleman, wearing very excellent apparel. It is supposed the body has lodged underneath the craft at the eastern side of the bridge.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE. The latest Paris papers state that the members of both Chambers are leaving for the country. M. Thiers was about to start for Vichy, where he will remain till the middle of August, after which he will go to Lisle. At the opening of the sitting of the Chamber of Peers, on Wednesday, the death of Count de Sparre, one of the members of the house, was announced. The bill for introducing European labourers into the French colonies was adopted by 97 votes to 4. After some discussion, the bill for increasing the number of French cruisers on the western coast of Africa, in accordance with the late treaty to put down the slave trade, was adopted by 94 votes to 8.

VISIT OF THE KING OF HOLLAND TO ENGLAND.—The following is extracted from the Rotterdamsche Courant of Monday: "One of the newspapers asserts that our statement respecting the intent on of his Majesty to go to London does not appear to be confirmed. We have, however, been informed from the Hague that no alteration has taken place in his Majesty's plan, and that he will for a certainty pay a visit to the Queen of England. At the time we made the statement, the day for the King's departure was not formally fixed, nor is it, perhaps, as yet."

LEBANON.—Letters from Syria, of June 9, announce the breaking out of a fresh insurrection in the Lebanon. An engagement between the Maronites and the Druses had taken place at Baroch, in the plain between the two Lebanons, which had terminated in a loss on each side of from 100 to 150 men. The roads between Damascus and Jerusalem are no longer safe; and no caravan can travel by that route without a strong escort. The Arabs are from 40 to 50,000 strong, and are plundering right and left. Much damage had been made on the life of the French Consul at Damascus, and the whole country was, in fact, in a state of complete disorganisation. The Turkish authorities were, as usual, occupied in exciting the Druses against the Maronites.

COUNTRY NEWS.

NEW ELECTIONS.

ABINGDON.—The nomination of candidates for the vacancy caused in the representation of Abingdon by the appointment of Sir F. Thesiger to the office of Attorney General, took place on Monday, at the Town Hall. Mr. Morland proposed her Majesty's Attorney General, Sir F. Thesiger, as a fit and proper person to represent the borough of Abingdon in Parliament. Mr. Aldworth Neate seconded the nomination. Mr. G. C. Lewis, the Right Honourable Major General Caulfield, who had not as yet declared himself, but who had taken a very active part in the interests of Abingdon, and, being no party man, he would not only support his principles, but support them. Mr. Kendall seconded the nomination. Sir F. Thesiger and General Caulfield having addressed the electors, a show of hands was taken, and, after a second time of holding them up, were declared to be in favour of General Caulfield. The High Sheriff declared the Attorney-General immediately demanded a poll, which took place on Tuesday, and resulted in the return of Sir F. Thesiger, by a majority of The numbers on the poll were, General Caulfield, 193; Sir F. Thesiger, 201.

WEST SUFFOLK ELECTION.—The West Suffolk election took place on Monday, when Mr. Bennet was elected without opposition. He was proposed by Sir. Compper Hill, and the nomination was seconded by Sir Thomas Oakes, Esq. Captain Bennet, on returning thanks, was received with enthusiastic cheering. He resolved, he said, to support the farming interest and the interest of the church; unpledged to any ministry, he would advocate all measures calculated to secure those great interests by which the country flourished.

EXETER ELECTION.—This election took place on Monday. Charles Bird, Esq. proposed Gen. Briggs, the Wigg candidate, and Dr. Barham seconded the nomination. The Mayor of Exeter, E. Woodrer, Esq. then stated the Conservative candidate, Sir John Duckworth, Bart. T. Snow, Esq. seconded the nomination; and said he was quite confident the interests of the city could not be intrusted to better hands. A show of hands was called for, and, after some confusion, the Sheriff declared it to be in favour of General Briggs. A poll was demanded, which began on Tuesday. As soon as it was closed, in pursuance of the request of both parties, the High Sheriff made an official declaration of the numbers. The poll-books having been cast up, the High Sheriff rose and said: it is my duty now to communicate to you the result of the poll at this election. The numbers stand thus.—

For Sir John Duckworth	1258
For General Briggs	588
Making the majority for Sir John Duckworth	670

Tremendous cheering.] I therefore declare Sir John Thomas Buller Duckworth, Bart., to be duly elected a member to represent this city and borough, in Parliament. (Renewed cheering, which continued for some minutes.)

REPRESENTATION OF CAMBRIDGE.—Upon the announcement being made that Mr. Kelly had been appointed her Majesty's Solicitor General, Mr. Adair immediately declared that he should stand by himself as a candidate for the vacant seat. Mr. Adair is an opponent of her Majesty's Ministers. Mr. Fitzroy Kelly arrived at Cambridge on Tuesday, and on Wednesday both candidates addressed distinct bodies of the electors of the Senate House over the Bachelors' Barnwell, and Mr. Fitzroy Kelly at the Eagle, and subsequently at the Black Bear. The right hon. gentleman spoke on both occasions against bribery and corruption, and in the strongest terms of denunciation, saying that he would rather renounce all hopes of ever possessing a seat in the House of Commons, than to be returned by such unworthy means. They were not his friends, or friends to the university, so far as he had at all attempted at this dishonourably. He should look upon all such persons as enemies; and no one would go further to bring them to justice than himself. Neither was there any necessity for any one to have recourse to such unconstitutional agency to bring it about, as his triumph was certain, without making a single effort to purchase. Individuals, or other persons, might entertain a single idea if the Conservative party would only agree to forget any little differences or misunderstandings which might have existed amongst them, and go united, and firmly into the field. Mr. Kelly should say for himself as a candidate for the vacant seat, as he understood that some of his friends at Cambridge felt displeased with Government for a measure which they looked on in the light of an endowment. The fair view, he considered, that men should take of the grant was as a measure of education. [Hear, hear.] Education, enlightenment, until religious dogma, error, and superstition could at last, give way, and true Protestantism be the universal religion of Ireland. The nomination is to take place on Monday.

AFFRAY AT LIVERPOOL.—On Sunday last a riot broke out in the neighbourhood of Scotland-road, Liverpool, in consequence of which a number of Irishmen made an attack on a body of Orangemen who were marching in procession on their return from the funeral of a deceased brother The mob commenced the attack by pelting the Orangemen with brickbats and stone, which was followed by terrific volleys, hurled amidst the most indignant and insulting language, and barbarous execrations. The Orange men halted, and, assisted by the police, partially succeeded in repelling their assailants; but the latter having acquired strength and courage by a reinforcement of desperate characters, the attack was renewed, and the objects of their resentful passions made to fly before them. Many Irishmen were lost. Mr. Superintendent M'Donald received a severe blow of a stone on the eye, and was obliged to be conveyed home on a car. Inspector Bibby was struck on the face, and some few of the police had wounds inflicted on the head. The police perambulated the streets where the affair took place, and the scene in the immediate neighbourhood, in large numbers, until half past 8 o'clock, when a heavy shower of rain which fell dispersed the crowds of the lower classes that were congregated. Three of the Roman Catholic clergymen of Liverpool remained in the neighbourhood during the evening, and used their exertions to pacify the excited feelings of the mob.

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The Grand Duke Constantine of Russia arrived at Constantinople on the 18th ultimo. The letter which announces this fact states, also, that three friends of the family of the Emir Bechier, who were being exiled, had been assassinated by their escort.

The Constitutionnel publishes a letter dated from the frontiers of Russia, the 17th ult., which states that a revolt has broken out in Circassia, in consequence of the orders of Count Woronzow, and the difficulty of maintaining a strong military force in the provinces now half deserted, force the Emperor to adjourn the definitive pacification of the Caucasus.

Two new projects for railroads have been submitted to the Council of Ministers of the Grand Duchy of Baden. The one is to run between Baile and Constance, passing by Schaffhausen, uniting with the present railroad; and the other is to be an embranchement from Offenburg to the Lake of Constance, crossing the valley of Kintzig, at the small town of Willingen.

Letters from Guadaloupe, of the 10th ultimo, announce the death of Rear-Admiral Gourbeyre, the Governor of the colony, after an illness of seven days. The death of the brave admiral appears to have caused a great sensation, as he was universally respected.

According to private letters from Florence, Mr. Babbage, sub-engineer to Mr. Brunel, was then employed to survey the line of railway which he says for the railroad about to be constructed from Florence to Pestoja, in order that the works on that important line may be commenced forthwith.

The Gazette d'Augsburg states that the Italian and Austrian Railway Company, formed in London under Mr. William Jackson, with a capital of £3,000,000 sterling, has proposed to the Lombardo-Venetian Railway Company to pay over £25,000,000 Austrian currency towards the finishing of this railway, upon the condition of receiving 2500 new shares, but not to be put in circulation before the railway from Venice to Milan shall be finished: this journal adds that there was no doubt of the offer being accepted.

A [illegible] has been received from the Cape of Good Hope to the 6th [illegible] May, [illegible] and the Athenæ. The state of affairs in [illegible] and it was presumed that the Governor was preparing for a crisis, taking precautions to guard against any actual outbreak on the part of the Boers.

By a letter, received from the Real del Monte Mines, dated 29th May, it appears that a most important discovery of very rich silver ore has been made in one of the mines on the Santa Brigida vein. The last four days' working produced ore worth about 1,000 dollars, of which 800 dollars' worth was extracted on the 28th, the day previously to the date of the letter.

So great was the population of Gravesend increased by the immense influx of visitors on Sunday last, that the requisite quantity of food [illegible] savings of appetite could not be procured, and many persons had to return without partaking of any refreshment. As a proof of the demand, it may be stated that ham was sold at six shillings per lb., and half-quarters of loaves sixpence each.

The Russian ship Alexander, of the Neva, which, for several years, formed one of the fast packet fleet trading between Liverpool and New York, was lost during the heavy gale of wind on Wednesday week, off a place called Morfa, on the coast of Carnarvon. The life boat from Studwell Roads was immediately conveyed to the spot, and, after several attempts gained the wreck, and saved every one belonging to the vessel, which appears to be a complete wreck. She was nearly 500 tons' burthen, and her loss is about £7000.

General Ingoff, Director of the Foreign Colonies in Southern Russia, has just died at Odessa, aged 67. He served in the Russian army under four sovereigns—Catherine, Paul, Alexander, and Nicholas.

Monsieur Thierry, who attempted to establish himself as an independent sovereign in New Zealand, having disappointed or given umbrage to his barbarous subjects, was recently killed, cooked, and eaten by them at a solemn public banquet.

Letters from Berne, of the 4th instant, state that the Jesuits had been already placed in possession of the parochial church of the Franciscan Friars at Lucerne. Mr. Scott, the new Secretary of the English legation in Switzerland, had arrived at Berne.

A storm of thunder and lightning burst over Huron on Sunday night, about twelve o'clock, and lasted until five the next morning. A copious rain accompanied this storm, which precipitated to Bolter, where a considerable quantity of hail fell, and broke upwards of 2000 panes of glass. A number of trees were also uprooted.

A valuable relic of Nelson has been purchased by Prince Albert for [illegible] the coat and waistcoat which he then wore—when he fell at Trafalgar. Four stars—of the Orders of the Bath, Redland and Merit, the Crescent, and the Double Crescent—which decorated the noble admiral habitually wore them, which disproves the assertion that he was not in the habit of wearing his decorations on going into battle. The coat, one of the fatal ball is shown by a hole over the left shoulder, and part of the epaulette is torn away. The coat and waistcoat are stained in several places with the hero's blood.

Mayor-General Sir John F. Burgoyne, Chairman of the Irish Board of Works, has been appointed Inspector of Fortifications in England. There are two other Commissioners of the Board of Works—Colonel Jones, R.E., and Captain Larcom, R.E., Superintendent of the Ordnance Survey in Ireland, is to succeed Sir Frederick Smith, C.B., as Secretary to the Board.

The Prussian Government has promulgated a new penal code for the army, composed of 367 articles. The schlagen (the application of the stick or cane to delinquents) is mentioned in the new code, with certain restrictions, calculated to render its application less frequent.

POLICE.

A GENTLEMAN COMMITTED FOR ROBBERY.—At MARYLEBONE Police Office, on Saturday last, Mr. John Finden, husband of the [illegible] well known to the public a few years ago as Miss Harriet Cawse, was charged with having stolen, on the 28th ult., from the shop of Messrs. Osborne and Co., 22, St. James's-street—It appeared that on Friday, the 13th ultimo, the prisoner went into the shop in question for the purpose of making some purchases to the amount of a few shillings, and that he went immediately after he left, the forks, which were on the counter when he entered, were missed. He was subsequently taken into custody at his residence, No. 8, St. Anne's Villas, Acacia road, St. John's Wood—The forks were not produced, and evidence was given, that on Tuesday week Mr. Osborne's counsel found them in the area, wrapped up in brown paper. By whom the property had been thus deposited, after the robbery, was a mystery.—The prisoner, who asserted his innocence, was committed for trial.

A WOMAN ACCUSED OF ATTEMPTING TO PLACE HER CHILD UNDER A WAGGON.—At GUILDHALL, a day or two ago, Elizabeth M'Cullah, a woman about 30 years of age, was charged with attempting to cause her child, apparently about six years old, to be run over by a waggon. John Ratcliffe, a City policeman, stated that he was on duty on Blackfriars Bridge, and his attention was called to the prisoner, who, he was told, had made two or three doubtful attempts to let her child fall over the parapet of the bridge. He drove her on, and at the place where the road for the purpose of forcing her child close before the wheels of waggons in motion. He therefore took her into custody. She was drunk Mr Tenant, the Chief Clerk, recognised her as having been in custody before to be sent to the poor-box to reach Brighton.—The prisoner said she had a bad husband, who had deserted her, and she had carried the child all over Scotland and England, and it was not likely that she would throw it into the water or under a cart-wheel; but she wished the child to be taken from her, because it would not obey what she said to it, and therefore caused her to get drunk. She could not bear the child's perverseness, and she hoped the magistrate would put the child into an institution, or in the workhouse, where it would learn manners. She would leave her child to Providence, for she had no friends. Lady Caroline Wilmot Sherman Challis asked if she was sober the previous night?—The officer said she was not, and she was very noisy and troublesome.—Alderman Challis committed her to Bridewell for seven days, after the robbery, was a mystery.—The prisoner, who asserted his innocence, was committed for trial.

A WOMAN ACCUSED OF ATTEMPTING TO PLACE HER CHILD UNDER A WAGGON.—At GUILDHALL, a day or two ago, Elizabeth M'Cullah, a woman about 30 years of age, was charged with attempting to cause her child, apparently about six years old, to be run over by a waggon. John Ratcliffe, a City policeman, stated that he was on duty on Blackfriars Bridge, and his attention was called to the prisoner, who, he was told, had made two or three doubtful attempts to let her child fall over the parapet of the bridge. He drove her on, and at the place where the road for the purpose of forcing her child close before the wheels of waggons in motion. He therefore took her into custody. She was drunk Mr Tenant, the Chief Clerk, recognised her as having been in custody before to be sent to the poor-box to reach Brighton.—The prisoner said she had a bad husband, who had deserted her, and she had carried the child all over Scotland and England, and it was not likely that she would throw it into the water or under a cart-wheel; but she wished the child to be taken from her, because it would not obey what she said to it, and therefore caused her to get drunk. She could not bear the child's perverseness, and she hoped the magistrate would put the child into an institution, or in the workhouse, where it would learn manners. She would leave her child to Providence, for she had no friends. Lady Caroline Wilmot Sherman Challis asked if she was sober the previous night?—The officer said she was not, and she was very noisy and troublesome.—Alderman Challis committed her to Bridewell for seven days, after the robbery, was a mystery.—The prisoner, who asserted his innocence, was committed for trial.

FATAL CAR ACCIDENT.—On Friday evening, Mr. Payne held an inquest at Guy's Hospital, on the body of William Henry Lewer, aged thirteen years. Deceased, whose parents reside at Stockwell, had gone out with some juvenile companions, and entered their wash so far as Newington, in order to enjoy the sport of the road at a moment when a street car, driven rapidly by a with crockery-ware was coming along, the deceased was knocked down, and the near wheel of the car passed over his body. He was taken up in a state of insensibility, and conveyed in an adjacent cart, by which, having received the necessary immediate attention, he was removed to the above hospital Mr. shirley, the house surgeon, said deceased, when admitted, had sustained a fracture of the tibia, which, passing upon the fibula, caused death on Monday last. The jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death.

ACCIDENT ON THE MANCHESTER AND BOLTON RAILWAY.—Last Wednesday morning an accident occurred on the Manchester and Bolton Railway, by which one man was killed, and several others severely injured. It appears that one line of the rail has been taken off for repairs, and that the engine at that particular place have been driven to and from Bolton on the other rails. On the morning in question a luggage-train left Manchester early hour, and at Ringley, where the rails are taken up, came into collision with a down train with fearful violence. The engineer, on perceiving the other train coming down, threw off his steam and jumped off the engine into the ground, who was on the tender, also jumped off, but, by some means or other, was caught by the head between the main line and the siding. In the afternoon an inquest was held on the body of the deceased, when the jury returned a verdict of "Accidental Death." None of the others injured are in a dangerous state.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES

DESTRUCTION OF EIGHT HOUSES AT BLACKWALL.—On Tuesday night a fire broke out in one of the houses in Folly-row, near the Folly House, Blackwall, which resulted in the destruction of eight houses, the abode of nearly forty persons, who have lost the whole of their furniture, and, in some instances, the greater portion of their wearing apparel. The discovery was made between seven and eight by one of the occupiers, named Wilson, a poor waterman, whose attention, it appears, was directed to the chimney of his habitation, by noticing flames issuing out of it. He immediately got upon the roof, and endeavoured to subdue the flames, which was then confined to the chimney. In that, however, he was foiled, for the door of the room having been left open, and the wind blowing strong from the south west, the flames and sparks were driven upon the roof, which, being composed of thatch, was very speedily in a general blaze. The adjoining habitations were similarly constructed, and the fire progressed right and left, with great speed. To get to the spot the engines were obliged to be taken across the marshes of the Isle of Dogs, and several hills and ditches had to be passed over before the seat of the fire could be gained. That having at length been accomplished, the School house lane engine was taken to the edge of the River Thames, but, unfortunately, another difficulty here presented itself; the tide being at ebb an immense quantity of hose was required before the flames could be extended with water. When the engines were at length ready, the engine was effectively worked, but the only good that could be done was the putting out the fire scattered along the ground. By nine o'clock the whole dismal scene was complete—eight houses were entirely destroyed. The occupiers, hard-working people, have been bereft of everything they possessed. The following are the names of the sufferers.—James West, waterman; Joseph West, ditto; Joseph Taylor, ditto; Joseph West, gardener; John Dudman, sawyer; James Moore, captain of the Emma; William Leonard, police inspector; and Joseph Lund.

SUICIDE.—On Saturday evening, about half past seven o'clock, the wife of a man named Thomas Winfield, a shoemaker, residing at No. 44, Ernest-street, Stepney, ran out of her house in a frantic state, and alarmed her neighbours by calling out that her husband had cut his throat. A policeman, one of the assembling officers of the Thames Police Court, who resides near the spot, immediately rushed into the house, and found the man with his throat cut in a frightful manner, and lying on the floor, which was covered with blood. Mr. Sell, a surgeon in the neighbourhood, was soon in attendance, who pronounced the unfortunate man to be in a very dangerous condition, and ordered him to be immediately removed to the hospital, which was done. He lingered till Tuesday, when he expired. The deceased inflicted the wound with a razor. The poor fellow was in great distress, and this is believed to have preyed upon his mind and caused him to commit self destruction.

COMMITTAL OF A DRUNKEN JUROR.—The power of a Coroner to commit an individual appearing before him in a state of intoxication, was, on Monday last, exercised by Mr. W. Payne, the Coroner for the City of London, at an adjourned inquest, held at the Feathers Tavern, Whitefriars. The case was one of alleged child murder, and the female charged as having been instrumental in the death of the deceased had been in custody some days, awaiting the result of the inquiry. The whole of the panel, with the exception of delinquent, assembled at the hour appointed, and after waiting more than a quarter of an hour, that individual entered the court in an evident state of intoxication, and took his seat among his brother jurors. The Coroner immediately observed the disgraceful condition in which he appeared, and, addressing him, inquired if he thought himself in a fit state to decide on the liberty of a fellow-subject. The defendant muttered out, "Yes, sir—oh yes, sir!" The tone and manner, if anything further conclusive had been required, were sufficient, and the Coroner, after addressing him in terms highly condemnatory of his conduct, which he described as a gross insult to the court, committed him forthwith to Gilspur-street Compter, to which prison he was immediately removed in the custody of an officer. Thirteen jurors being still in attendance, the inquiry was proceeded with, and a verdict of "Found dead" returned. Before the close of the inquiry the Coroner addressed a letter to Mr. Watkin, the governor of Gilspur-street Compter, requesting that officer to inform the defendant, when sufficiently sober, that upon his writing a letter of apology he would be permitted to leave the prison.

ACCIDENT TO A YOUNG LADY.—On Wednesday afternoon, a serious accident occurred to Miss Matilda Wilkinson, second daughter of Mr. J. Brown Wilkinson, of No. 39, Wimpole-street, Cavendish square, and cousin of the unfortunate lady, Mrs. Round, who was lately burned to death at Leggett's Hotel, Dover street. It appears that the young lady had just alighted from a gentleman mounted her horse for the purpose of taking an airing in the Regent's-park, when the animal became restive and reared up; thinking no doubt to check him, she suddenly pulled the reins, on which he again reared much higher than before, and, losing his balance, fell backward on the unfortunate lady, and rolled upon her several yards. Her groom promptly ran to her aid, and, with the assistance of the butler and several persons who were passing at the moment, conveyed her into the house. Medical assistance was immediately procured; and, on examination, it was declared that she had received very severe internal injuries, although it was believed that no bones are fractured.

DESTRUCTION OF A DISTILLERY, NEAR CROYDON.—Shortly before nine o'clock on Saturday night last, the herb distillery of Mr. J. Arthur, situate on Waddon-marsh, near Croydon, was discovered by fire. It appears that smoke simultaneously flames were discovered by several persons bursting from the body of the building, a considerable wood erection, with an adjacent stable and one of the barns of the premises on the whole place was in a blaze. There being at the time upon the premises several hundred gallons of spirit, and a considerable quantity of essential oil, &c. amounting in value to upwards of £1000, the fury of the fire was considerably enhanced; and before any assistance could be procured, the whole of the contents and the building were destroyed, or rendered useless. The total damage is not precisely known, but, as moderate estimation, it is estimated that it will reach Unfortunately, the proprietor is not insured. How the fire originated is not known.

SUICIDE OF THE MASTER OF A SHIP.—On Tuesday night the ship Reliance arrived in the eastern basin of the London Docks from Buenos Ayres, with a valuable cargo, and next morning, at an early hour, the body of her commander, Capt. Fox, who committed self destruction on Tuesday morning off Milton, below Gravesend, was landed for the purposes of a Coroner's inquest. On the arrival of the ship in the river Captain Fox received a letter from the owners, stating that he would be superseded in the command by another master. He became very uneasy after the receipt of this communication, and on Tuesday morning, after he had washed and shaved himself, he left the cabin, and on shore for some liquor, his own stock of spirits being exhausted, and after he had partaken of two or three glasses of grog, he loaded his pistols, and during the absence of the people from the cabin he shot himself through the heart. The report was heard on the deck, and when the mate and others went below they found him lying upon the floor of his cabin, surrounded with his blood, but quite dead.

FIRE IN GREAT QUEEN-STREET.—On Saturday evening, an alarming fire broke out in the manufactory of Mr William Slocomb, hurdle manufacturer, situated in Queen's Head yard, Great Queen-street, Lincoln's Inn fields. Queen's Head-yard is situated on the south side of Great Queen-street, directly opposite Little Queen-street, and adjoining upon the printing establishment of J and H. Cox, which for some time was in great danger. The engines were prompt in their arrival, and were very effectively worked, but Mr. Slocomb's premises are, however, completely gutted, and the valuable stock wholly destroyed. The lower part of the factory was in the occupation of Mr. Hopkes, livery stable keeper, whose stock of carriages is greatly damaged by fire and water. The stables adjoining, belonging to Mr Farrar, of Lincoln's Inn fields, are as much damaged by the fire as the premises of Messrs. Cox, who have also had a quantity of paper burnt and damaged, which had been placed in Mr. Slocomb's premises while their own were under repair. The total loss is estimated at £2000.

FATAL FALL FROM A WINDOW.—Tuesday, Mr. Bedford held an inquest at the Craven Arms, Marshal street, Golden square, on the body of Anne Cox, aged four, the son of a compositor, living at 53, Marshall street. On Saturday afternoon the deceased was left alone by his mother in a room on the third floor, when he got on a chair to the window, out of which he must have accidentally fallen. He fell with dreadful violence on his head in the yard, fracturing his skull and causing great concussion of the brain. The unfortunate child lingered until Monday.—Verdict—"Accidental death."

FATAL ACCIDENT.—On Tuesday Mr. Bedford held an inquest at St. George's Hospital, on the body of James Marshall, aged 35. The deceased was a coachman in the employ of Mr. Edwards, johnmaster, of Kinnerton-street, Knightsbridge, and on Friday week he was proceeding along Grosvenor place, on horseback, when the animal he was riding became restive, and reared up on its hind legs. The deceased lost his balance, and fell out of the saddle on to the ground, as the horse rolled over him. He was picked up in a senseless state, and conveyed to the above hospital, when it was found that life was extinct, death having been caused by rupture of the aorta. Verdict, "Accidental death."

SUDDEN DEATH OF A PORTUGUESE GENTLEMAN.—On Monday, Mr. Wakley, M.P., held an inquest at No. 4, South-crescent, Bedford square, on the body of Don Manoel Joze da Gama Machado, aged 75, a Portuguese gentleman of independent fortune, a resident in this country for about 40 years. It appeared from the evidence that on Sunday morning early he went to chapel, and having returned he complained of the length of the service and of oppressive heat. He breakfasted, as usual, on coffee and toast, but ate strawberries, contrary to ordinary practice. His landlady left him in the room reclining on an easy chair, and went up stairs to dress for church. She descended in about a quarter of an hour and found deceased dead in the chair, almost in the same position as that in which she left him. She sent for Mr. Tweed and Mr. Quain, surgeons, who pronounced him dead, and said that the cause of death was disease of the heart. Verdict—"Natural death."

The importation of German coloured and fancy glass, known familiarly by the name of Bohemian glass, has lately, and particularly since the [illegible] of the duty, increased to a very great extent, and articles of use of every description, and of every ornamental form made of this kind of glass are being brought to this country in great quantities.

CARTOON (35) RELIGION.—BY J. C. HORSLEY.—EXECUTED BY COMMISSION.—FROM THE EXHIBITION IN WESTMINSTER HALL.

CARTOONS IN WESTMINSTER HALL.

We this week present to our readers Engravings of two of the finest productions in this Exhibition of National genius. First is one of the commissioned works—

"35. Religion exemplified in the faith and hope of the Cross of Christ, in the subjection of all earthly power and human distinctions to His will, and in the dependance of all estates and conditions of men on His WORD. (Cartoon.)—John Callcott Horsley." ("Catalogue," page 8.)

The composition includes a terrestrial and celestial group; the latter being arranged in an attitude of devotional awe round an altar, on which The Book is opened. We spoke last week in terms of high commendation of the simplicity and breadth of details and general treatment in this Cartoon.

Mr. Horsley has, we understand, been elected by the Committee of the School of Design, to succeed Mr. Herbert as drawing-master.

WORCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.—The hundred and twenty second festival of Worcester, Hereford, and Gloucester, is appointed to be held on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, the 26th, 27th, and 28th of August, in the nave of the Cathedral and College-hall, Worcester. The Lord Bishop of Worcester will preside. On Wednesday there will be oratorios and concerts, and on Thursday "Acis and Galatea" will be performed in the College-hall. On Friday evening it is the intention of the ladies patronesses to give a splendid ball in the Guildhall.

PROPOSED TUNNELS UNDER LONDON.—A project has been formed for uniting the Great Western Railway with the Eastern Counties line, by a tunnel from Paddington to Shoreditch, under the New road to Finsbury-square, and then turning off. By means of branch tunnels Tottenham-court-road, Somers town, King's-cross, Islington, and other districts are to be benefited. Mr. Robert Stephenson is the engineer. A prospectus of this remarkable project will come before the public in a day or two.

THUNDER STORMS IN THE COUNTRY.—The provincial papers received during the week contain accounts of a severe thunder storm on Sunday night last. At Nottingham, the effects of it were very lamentable. The weather during the day had been, on the whole, very fine; and there was a total absence of that oppressive closeness which is usually the precursor of thunder. At a little before sunset there was scarcely a cloud to be seen, but shortly afterwards a dense mass gathered near the south western horizon, and flashes of sheet-lightning streamed forth in quick succession. As the darkness advanced, these electric discharges followed each other still more rapidly, until at length the heavens from the north to the south were completely illumined as with fireworks. At about ten o'clock it commenced raining; and the shower, which lasted till nearly eleven, was one of the most heavy known for a long period. The lower parts of the houses in Narrow-marsh, the Meadow-plats, and other similar situations, were completely deluged, and the damage done will amount to several hundred pounds at the least. A double brick wall at Messrs. Fisher's factory was washed down, and other similar injuries are quite common in various parts of the surrounding country. But the most awful occurrence took place at the Milton's Head Inn, on the Derby-road. A man, named Alfred Greenwood, of Radford, a lacemaker, who was drinking there, was using some of the most disgustingly blasphemous language conceivable. Amongst other things, he said that he wished a thunderbolt would fall through the roof, and kill every body in the house. One of the bystanders rebuked him for his impious wish, and he replied, "I don't care; I fear neither God nor devil." When he had spoken these shocking words he sat down, and remained about ten minutes with his eyes steadily fixed upon the ceiling, and appeared like one greatly amazed; he then gradually reeled, and fell into the arms of a soldier who was sitting against him. He was struck blind! His eyes were then firmly closed; but in seven or eight minutes he opened them for about a quarter of a minute, when they closed again, and he ejaculated, "The Lord forgive me!" to which every one in the room, about twenty in number, responded "Amen." A surgeon was instantly fetched, who bled him and administered other remedies; but the unhappy man appeared nearly frantic. He was soon after removed home, and since then to the General Hospital, where he has received the unremitting attention of the first medical practitioners in the town. We understand that he has since been enabled to see a little, and that hopes are entertained that his sight will be ultimately restored to him. It is singular that at Leicester, thirty miles off, not a drop of rain fell; while at Birmingham the flood was so great that fire-engines had to be at work all night to draw the water from the houses. At Derby, the flood was very much felt; and throughout Lincolnshire the storm raged furiously.

SCHOOL OF DESIGN SPITALFIELDS.

On Wednesday, the Annual Distribution of Prizes, awarded to the most meritorious pupils in the Spitalfields Branch of the Government School of Design, took place in the fine old Hall of Crosby-place, Bishopsgate-street. Viscount Sydney had been announced to preside, but his lordship was prevented from so doing by other business; and the chair was obligingly taken, shortly after three o'clock, by Lord Robert Grosvenor, M.P. The proceedings of the day were then commenced by the Rev. Mr. Stone reading the Report of the Committee for the past year, in which the reverend gentleman congratulated the company on the success with which the institution had been attended, and impressed upon them the importance of its being supported in a proper manner He, as Rector of Spitalfields, had many opportunities of visiting the operatives of that large and important parish, and he was convinced the efforts that had been made by the institution, and the carrying out to the full the objects of the School of Design, must be attended with the most beneficial consequences. Machinery had been erected in the school, and the result had been very satisfactory. There were at that time 200 students. The rev. gentleman regretted that the school had not received any very large support from those in the silk trade. The pupils had subscribed during the past year £82, the Council of Somerset House had contributed £135, other subscribers £36, and the trustees of the Prize Fund £28 odd shillings, making a total of £282.

PRIZE DESIGN FOR FIGURED GARMENT, £4.

PRIZE DESIGN FOR FIGURED WAISTCOATING, £3.

The successful pupils were then introduced by Mr. Casey, and the prizes handed to them respectively: they included nine prizes from the Merchants' and Brokers' Prize Fund. Of these we have engraved the three following:—

1. For the Best Design for a Figured Garment, John Tuffnell... £4 0 0
4. For the Best Design for a Figured Waistcoating, Christopher Cutter 3 0 0
7. For the Best Design for a Parasol Border, Charles Youens ... 3 0 0

Next were two prizes by Lord Robert Grosvenor, M.P., &c.; two by

PRIZE DESIGN FOR DAMASK FURNITURE, £3.

Messrs. Hanbury, Buxton, and Co.; one by A. J. Doxat, Esq.; and thirteen by the Committee. We have also engraved one of Messrs. Hanbury's prizes.

12. For the Best Design for Damask Furniture, Richard Hayward £3 0 0

The prizes having been presented, resolutions in support of the institution were put and carried in the usual manner, after which a vote of thanks having been passed to the noble lord in the chair, which his lordship acknowledged by thanking the company, the meeting broke up.

PRIZE DESIGN FOR PARASOL BORDER, £3

As a proof of the widely-extended influence of the School of Design, we may mention that an Engraving of a Prize Design for a Chandelier, was cut from our illustrated report of the Distribution of 1844, and has lately been forwarded from Calcutta to a manufacturer in London, with an order for a set of chandeliers of the same pattern.

GENERAL JACKSON.

Andrew Jackson was born at WAXSAW, South Carolina, March 15, 1767, two years after his father emigrated from Ireland. At 14 years of age he entered the army of the Revolution, and was wounded and captured. Escaping from the enemy, he commenced the study of law, and was admitted to practice in 1788. Elected member of Congress from Tennessee in 1796, and, in 1797, elected member of the National Senate, but resigned at the end of the first session; upon which he was appointed Judge of the Supreme Court of Tennessee, which appointment he soon after resigned. He was also appointed Major-General of the Tennessee Militia in 1797.

In 1812 he was ordered to take the field against the Indians in the South, and in all his engagements with them he was signally victorious. His services and skill as a military commander attracted the notice of Government, and he was commissioned Major-General of the U. S. Army in 1812, and proceeded to the defence of New Orleans; and during the month of December, 1814, he routed the British troops in a number of skirmishes in the vicinity of New Orleans.

On the 8th of January, 1815, he signally defeated the English army of 9000 men in the memorable battle of New Orleans, leaving the British General, Sir Edward Packingham, and 3000 of his troops, killed and wounded upon the field; the force of the Americans being but 3700 men, and their loss but 13. Peace being restored, he retired to his farm near Nashville, Tennessee. In 1817 he was again called to the field to suppress the Seminole Indians of Florida.

THE LATE GENERAL JACKSON.

In 1821 he was appointed Governor of Florida; 1823 elected to the National Senate; but, being nominated for the Presidency, resigned. Elected President of the United States, February 11th, 1829; and re-elected in 1832.

The American public had been prepared for the death of this celebrated man, by the long illness that preceded his demise. He expired on the 8th of June, in the 78th year of his age. The Louisville Democrat thus announces the melancholy intelligence:—"The term of General Jackson's life closed on Sunday the 8th instant, at six o'clock. On Sunday morning the report reached Nashville that he had expired, owing to his having fainted away, in the attempt to remove him from his chair to his bed. He, however, recovered for a few hours. A short time before his death he took an affectionate leave of his friends and domestics, retaining to the last his senses and intellect unclouded. He expired with the utmost calmness, expressing the highest confidence in a happy immortality through a Redeemer."

MONUMENT TO THE LATE SIR WILLIAM FOLLETT.—It is in contemplation to erect a statue at Exeter to the memory of its late respected representative, as the most fitting memento of the admiration of his genius and character entertained by the citizens.

DEATH OF A CLERGYMAN IN HIS CARRIAGE.—On Wednesday week, the Rev. J. V. Vachon, whilst going to Droitwich, died in his carriage. Deceased was in his 65th year.

DEATH OF THE MAYOR OF WALSALL.—We regret to state that Mr. Hervey, the respected Mayor of Walsall, was drowned while bathing, at an early hour on Wednesday morning. This event is rendered still more lamentable by the fact that one of the persons who went with the drags to find the body of the deceased gentleman was drowned in the attempt. The demise of Mr. Hervey more particularly under such circumstances, has occasioned a deep feeling of regret throughout the borough.

CARTOON (85) AN ALLEGORY OF JUSTICE.—BY JOHN TENNIEL, JUN.—PRIZE £200.—FROM THE EXHIBITION IN WESTMINSTER HALL.

CARTOONS IN WESTMINSTER HALL.

"85. An Allegory of Justice. (Cartoon.)—John Tenniel, Junior." ("Catalogue," page 12.)

For this fine work Mr. Tenniel received one of the premiums of £200; and we are happy to learn that the Art-Union have since purchased, for the sum of £100, the same artist's coloured sketch of the Cartoon.

In our critique of last week, we detailed the composition of this Cartoon, and characterised its masterly execution.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS, RECENTLY DECEASED.

DAVID FRANCIS ATCHERLEY, ESQ., SERGEANT AT LAW.

The Bar has just lost another learned and most estimable member, Mr. Sergeant Atcherley, Attorney General for the Counties Palatine of Lancaster and Durham, who died, deeply lamented, on Sunday last, the 6th instant. Few in his profession enjoyed, in so high a degree, the respect and regard of his contemporaries, and few deserved that consideration more. The deceased gentlemen was born 13th of June, 1783, and had consequently completed his sixty-second year. His father, David Francis Jones, Esq., of Cymman, in Flintshire, was a solicitor in Chester, and Deputy Baron of the County Palatine; and his mother, Jane, daughter of Richard Atcherley, Esq., of Marton, Co. Salop, the representative of an ancient family, which has been settled at Marton since the reign of Henry VII, and numbers among its ancestors the benevolent Sir Richard Atcherley, Lord Mayor of London, in 1511, recorded by Fuller and Stowe, as having munificently stored Leadenhall for the relief of the poor.

From his maternal uncle, Richard Atcherley, Esq., the last male heir of this distinguished line, the subject of our memoir inherited a considerable estate in Shropshire, and, in compliance with his predecessor's testamentary injunction, assumed, by letters patent, the surname and arms of Atcherley. It was, however, as Sergeant Jones that the learned gentleman won his way to legal distinction; at a time, too, when the Northern Circuit, always the grand arena of forensic ambition, was adorned by a more than usually brilliant bar—including Scarlett, Brougham, Pollock, and many a great name besides. As a criminal lawyer, and as one especially skilled in the knowledge of evidence in matters of pedigree, Mr. Sergeant Jones's reputation stood very high, and his practice, at one period, was considerable; but of late, since his accession to the Atcherley property, he did not desire or obtain extensive business. On a recent occasion, he acted as one of the Judges of Assize, and the manner in which he fulfilled the important duties thus entrusted to him, gave so much satisfaction that his professional friends felt no little disappointment that the vacancy on the Bench, caused by the retirement of Baron Gurney, was not filled up by the appointment of Sergeant Atcherley, whose qualifications and claims were second to none other.

Mr. Sergeant Atcherley married, on the 20th May, 1817, Anne Margaret, second daughter of the late James Topping, Esq., of Whatcroft Hall, in the county of Chester, a King's Counsel and Attorney-General of the Counties Palatine of Lancaster and Durham, by Sarah Margaret, his wife, only daughter and heiress of William Robinson, Esq., of Whatcroft Hall; and by this lady has left eight surviving children.

We have omitted to state that Mr. Sergeant Atcherley contested, unsuccessfully, and we believe more than once, the representation of the City of York. His call to the Bar took place 5th July, 1810; and he received the coif, with a patent of precedency, in 1827.

SIR ARTHUR RICHARD DILLON, BART.

Died in Dublin, on the 3rd inst., in the 74th year of his age, Sir Arthur Richard Dillon, Baronet, of Lismullen, in the county of Meath, and a Baron of the Holy Roman Empire. This gallant officer served in Ireland during the rebellion of 1798, and at the period of his decease had attained the full rank of General. Sir Arthur was the eldest surviving son of John Dillon, Esq., M.P. (descended from a common ancestor with the Lords Roscommon and Dillon), who was created a Baronet 31st July, 1801, and had the honour of a free Barony of the Holy Roman Empire conferred on him in 1782 by his Imperial Majesty Joseph II., with reversion to male and female descendants. He married, in 1774

Letitia Elizabeth, second daughter of the late William KNOX, Esq., but has not left any issue. He succeeded as third Baronet on the decease of his elder brother in 1840.

LORD SEAFORD.

Charles Rose Ellis, Lord Seaford, died suddenly, on Wednesday, the 2nd instant, at his seat near Chichester. His Lordship was younger son of John Ellis, Esq., first cousin of the accomplished George Ellis, author of the "Early English Poets," and grandson of George Ellis, Chief Justice of the Island of Jamaica, by Anne, his wife, sister of William Beckford, of Fonthill, the well-known Lord Mayor of London. Previously to his elevation to the Peerage in 1826, he had for many Parliaments a seat in the House of Commons. He was born on the 19th of December, 1771, and had been twice married. By his first wife, Elizabeth Catherine, only daughter of Augustus, Lord Hervey, he has left two sons; the elder, Charles Augustus, succeeded, in right of his mother, to the Barony of Howard de Walden in 1803, and is at present Ambassador at the Court of Lisbon. Lord Seaford's second wife, whom he married in 1840, was the widow of the gallant Admiral Sir T. M. Hardy, Bart.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

The funeral of this distinguished ornament of the Bar took place on Friday morning last at 11 o'clock.

The procession was formed on the terrace of the Inner Temple in the following order:—

The Porters and Warders of the Inner and Middle Temple, with their staffs of office, covered with black
The Benchers of the Middle Temple, two-and two.
The Benchers of the Inner Temple two-and-two.

Those of the Inner Temple were Lord Lyndale, the Attorney General, Dr. Lushington, Sir Charles Wetherell, Sir John Beckett, Sir George Rose, the Recorder, Mr. Spence, Mr. Wyatt, Mr. Starkie, Mr. Rogers, Mr. Chilton, Mr. Richards, Mr. Dundas, Mr. Whateley, Mr. Baines, the Hon. J. S. Wortley, Mr. Lee, and Mr. Russell Gurney

The Mutes.
The Feathers.
The Sexton and Assistant Sexton.
The Boys of the Choir, two and two.
The Gentlemen of the Choir, three and three.
The Reader.
The Master.

THE BODY.

The Pall, borne by

William Burge, Esq., Treasurer of the Middle Temple.	R. B. Crowder, Esq., Treasurer of the Inner Temple.
The Lord Chancellor.	Sir Robert Peel.
The Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas	Sir James Graham.
The Chancellor of the Exchequer.	The Vice Chancellor of England.

The Mourners,
The Brothers and other near Relatives.

Then followed the distinguished persons who desired to attend; viz., The Duke of Marlborough, the Earl of Carnarvon, Lord Brougham, Lord Campbell, Vice-Chancellor Wigram, Baron Parke, Mr. Justice Coleridge, Mr. Justice Cresswell, Baron Alderson, Baron Platt, the Chancellor of the Duchy of Cornwall, the Dean of Westminster, Sir Thomas Acland, Major-General Sir Robert Houston, Captain Houston, Sir William Horne, Masters Wingfield and Lynch; the Treasurer of Lincoln's Inn, T. F. Simpkinson, Esq.; and Messrs. Stuart, Kindersley, Turner, Lowndes, and almost all the Benchers of that Society; the Treasurer of Gray's Inn, T. Greene, Esq., M.P.; Messrs Romilly, Teed, Whitmarsh, &c., benchers.

Barristers and students were admitted into the church at eleven o'clock, and filled the seats appropriated for them. On the arrival of the porters at the west door of the church, the "Dead March in Saul" was performed until the arrival of the choristers.

The Benchers of the Middle Temple, preceded by their porter, then took their seats on the north side of the church; those of the Inner, preceded by their porter, took their seats on the south side

The porters then returned and took their station on each side of the arch which separates the Round from the Square Church. On the arrival of the choir inside the gate, they commenced the beautiful service, "I am the Resurrection." The choir having arrived at the square pew, they marched off, and each took their stalls. The Master took his seat on the south side, the Reader on the north side.

The respective Treasurers were conducted to their seats by their respective porters.

The Psalms were read by the Rev. Mr Rowlatt, and the lesson by the Master of the Temple.

The body was then brought to the vault, and the Master, Reader, and mourners, took their stations. After which there was sung the beautiful anthem, "Man that is born," &c. Then the concluding Commander of the service were read by the Master, followed by the beautiful anthem of Handel, "His body is buried within the grave, but his name shall live for ever" Messrs Machin, Bennett, Seguin, and Coward were amongst the gentlemen composing the choir.

We have never witnessed a more solemn and impressive ceremony, and there did not seem the least confusion or interruption.

THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON We last week presented our readers with a sketch of the equestrian statue of the Duke of Wellington by Count D'Orsay. His Grace is now having his portrait taken, in oil, of the full size, by the Count, and gave the finishing sitting on Saturday. The likeness is most striking.

EAST INDIA DIRECTION.—On Wednesday, a ballot was taken at the East India House, for the election of a director, in the room of Major General Sir Jeremiah Bryant, C.B., deceased. At six o'clock the glasses were closed, and delivered to the scrutineers, who reported that the election had fallen on the Hon. William Henry Leslie Melville.

DINNER TO MR. BRITTON, F.S.A.—On Monday, upwards of 100 gentlemen sat down to a sumptuous dinner at the Castle Hotel, Richmond, to celebrate the birth-day of Mr. Britton, when the chair was taken at six p.m. by Mr. Pettigrew, who in a few terse but appropriate remarks proposed the health of the guest, who, in returning thanks, said that he felt very grateful for the honour conferred upon him by the gentlemen present, but he could not help feeling that he was undeserving of such a compliment, as he had only done his duty in endeavouring to promote the interests of literature and the fine arts. He was happy to say that the Society for the Encouragement of Literature, the Fine Arts, and Antiquities, was in a very prosperous state, and he hoped that the Society would continue to flourish. He then proposed the health of Mr. Pettigrew, who returned thanks, and proposed the health of Mr. Wheeler, the Secretary to the Society, who also returned thanks. Mr. Britton then proposed the health of Mr. Gould, the Treasurer, who, in returning thanks, said that he was happy to find that the Society was in a very flourishing state, and that the number of members was increasing. He then proposed the health of Mr. Wheeler, the Secretary to the Society, who also returned thanks. Mr. Britton then proposed the health of Mr. Gould, on whose right was seated Mr. Britton, and on his left, the Bishop of Hereford. In the course of the evening, the company were ably addressed by several gentlemen, and the health of Mr. Britton was drunk with enthusiasm, and the party separated after a delightful entertainment. Among the gentlemen present, we noticed Mr. O. Rees, R.A., Mr. Tite, the architect, Mr. W. Tooke, Dr. Conolly, the Rev. Dr. Ingram, Mr. Jerdan, Mr. G. Godwin, and several of the most eminent architects and builders in the metropolis.

CURRANCE OF A RAILWAY TRAIN.—One of the most astonishing things connected with railroads is the rapidity with which the longest train is cleared. Hundreds of people, with hundreds of boxes, parcels, trunks, bundles, portmanteaus, travelling bags, handboxes, have to be sorted and owned by those to whom they belong; and yet, in a few minutes, all is again still. The most extraordinary effect of this sort I witnessed once in the middle of the night. My master had left me resting against one of the first floor windows of that superb hotel at the terminus at Birmingham. This window had a view over the whole of that wonderful, gigantic, yet fairy like roof which covers the immense space where the trains arrive and depart. The stillness of death reigned over the whole place. The numerous gas lamps which illumine that spot looked like the brilliant lights in some palace hall from which the guests had been suddenly removed by enchantment. As I looked upon the silent scene, I thought: "And can this be the place in which more traffic is carried on than in any other spot of the kind in the whole world? Impossible." I knew it was near the time for an enormous train to arrive; but, as yet, not a sign of anything sensible and profound appeared, could be observed—not a living thing was there. I gazed, and gazed; when all at once whether it rose through the flagstone on which it was, or fell down from the roof, I know not—but certainly there stood the figure of a man. Those who have watched the lighting up a church in the Diorama, and have found little glimmering specks popping up one after another, in spots where least expected, may form some idea of the effect before me. Look which way I would, there, on all unaccountable spots, stood men; the windows of the various offices, which, but a moment before, were black and dark, now threw out a blaze of light. Great baskets, on wheels seemed to have run there by themselves; waiters, with their own white napkins, stood about—and even women without bonnets—but all this was in order; when, like a trumpter's whistle, a shrill sound was heard, and in an instant the scene, as if by magic, changed. The great baskets now appeared to be running away from men behind them, waiters' napkins were flying about; the women without bonnets, proved to be chambermaids, put their caps in order, and smoothed down their aprons. A rumbling noise was heard—several loud bumps as it passed those roundabouts on which the carriages are turned—and, lo! the train was there. In a moment, the whole side of the enormous train was covered with human beings, as they emerged from the numerous doors. There was one prodigious carriage to all appearance, without door or window: but I saw, from out the very side itself, appear three or four young men, without hats, and running towards the house in slippers. This carriage was, in truth, a flying Post office; those were the clerks, who, during the transit, receive, sort, account for, and despatch, all letters to and from every town on the way from London to Liverpool. Great was the rush towards the hotel in twenty minutes, great was the rush again therefrom. The side of the train seemed to swallow up, in an instant, the whole of the hundreds of passengers, as if it had been an enormous mouth The magic which had brought about the scene now dispelled it. The rumbling noise was again heard—the loud bumps sank repeated—the prompter's whistle sounded—the train was gone! [We quote the above from Rodwell's graphically amusing "Memoirs of an Umbrella," No. 2.]

THE THEATRES.

There has been very little novelty to notice in the theatrical world during the past week. The principal event has been the revival of "La Reine de Chypre" by the Brussels Company; but its representation did not excite any great enthusiasm in the audience; indeed we do not think Halevy will ever attain much popularity in England as a composer. We have only had an opportunity of hearing one other of his works, "La Juive," and, if we remember aright, the greater part of the music in that magnificent spectacle was cut out after the first representation. The libretto is the one on which Balfe's "Daughter of St. Mark" was founded, the plot being nearly the same; and most of the scenery was brought into use together with the decorations, on Monday evening, at Drury-lane. The singers exerted themselves to the utmost, but they could not warm up the house to anything approaching to excitement; and we must say, that the long periods between the acts were enough to weary the most patient listener. At the close of the opera, after midnight, every body was completely tired out. This should be remedied: it is quite enough in itself to keep people from attending the performances. The operas of "Le Postillion," "De Loujumeau," and "La Part de Diable," were advertised on Wednesday as by desire of her Majesty and Prince Albert, with the King and Queen of the Belgians.

DRURY LANE closed on the 3d, with the benefit of Madame Thillon, and an address from Mr. Bunn, who stated that the season had been brought to a favourable issue. The outcry of "patronising foreigners," and "illegitimate performances," is now almost worn-out, and we are not disposed to find fault with the lessee, for having made ballets and operas his staple productions. A manager takes a theatre and embarks his money in it as a mere commercial speculation, whatever he may affect to the contrary. His object is to draw as large an audience as he can, by representations most suited to their taste; and if he finds that the legitimate drama will no longer attract, either from lack of actors capable of rendering it in a first-rate manner, or a decided change in the public feeling, he is compelled to fall back upon that style of theatrical entertainment most likely to fill his house. Some of the foreign artistes, it is true, have been paid large sums of money; but we may suppose that they have attracted in proportion: and we believe we are right in saying that throughout the season the salaries have never been curtailed or allowed to fall in arrear one single week, whilst two or three hundred English mouths have depended upon the theatre for the bread that filled them. With regard to the patronage we so liberally bestow upon foreigners—here and elsewhere—we have before stated that John Bull is too patriotic to countenance any thing that is not superior to his countrymen. But it is as well to own, with a good grace, that we cannot approach our continental neighbours in music and dancing. Still we may be content with finding our manufactures and power displayed in every corner of the globe; and not grumble at seeing it practically proved that the production of operas and ballets is the only point on which they can compete with us, to be assured of superiority.

THE HAYMARKET, PRINCESS', LYCEUM, and ADELPHI have kept the same pieces in the bills; and nothing remarkable is underlined at either of these theatres. The houses have been very good, for the weather, which has operated generally against in-door entertainments.

THE STRAND came to a sudden close on Saturday evening. The prophecy which we made, that the management would be a short-lived one, has thus been realised; and we hope and trust that this will be the last of these miserable ventures. If it be true that the salaries have been unpaid lately, the case is still more reprehensible: management then becomes a mere affair of trading upon the unpaid abilities of, in most cases, a necessitous class. The story of all these speculations is the same. Some person, from self-glorification, or the remote chance of gain—a third, fourth, or fifth-rate actor, or one even who is scarcely recognized as such—contrives to rent a theatre, and gets up a company, whose names are either unknown, or constantly associated with struggling entreprises. Conventional announcements are then made, of the elegance with which everything is to be conducted—the Vestris' management being taken as the type: whilst the parties in question are altogether deficient in education and perception; or incapable of mixing in that good society, from constant association with which the tone and class of pieces likely to suit a refined general audience, is alone to be learned. The pieces come next, and the public, far more attentive to minute detail than managements suppose them to be, are disappointed; then the houses fail; stock pieces, requiring no getting up, or worn-out farces, high in provincial favour for several years, appear in the bills; there is a salaam in the cabinet, and the chief performers quit the concern, the remainder struggle on for a fortnight or three weeks; and, lastly, some disreputable and sudden termination concludes the "season." This is not the history of one of these ventures, but of all: and such may expect but little mercy at our hands.

The opera season commenced on Monday at the Haymarket, having been delayed thus late by the difficulty experienced in procuring a leading female singer. The company now includes Madame Eugenia Garcia, Mr. D. W. King, Mr. Weiss, Mr. Barker, and Miss Collett. "Lucia di Lammermoor" was the opera chosen to commence the season; and Madame Garcia, as the heroine, was most warmly welcomed by the Surrey patrons, as indeed were all the other singers, who are new to this side of the water. The orchestra was ably directed by Mr. Edward Loder. The house was well filled, although not crowded.

The hot weather, whilst it has injured the theatres, has done great things for the al fresco places of amusement; and Vauxhall, the Surrey Zoological, and Rosherville Gardens, have been reaping good harvests. The luckless Cremorne House, at Chelsea, with its really beautiful grounds and commodious mansion, has also been opened; but the entertainments and accommodation are not of a class likely to prove attractive. There is a dreary look about the whole concern, which accords well with the fallen fortunes of the estate; and although there are plenty of steam-boats and omnibuses to take you there, the process of getting to them is by no means altogether so satisfactory.

That graceful ballerina, Carlotta Grisi, will take her benefit next Thursday, at HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE. The evening's performances will be most splendid. By special desire, Mozart's magnificent opera "Don Juan" will be given on that evening, with the original cast, which will appear in the last act of "Anna Bolena." The entertainments in the ballet department will be numerous, including, amongst others, the favourite ballet of "Giselle," in which la Carlotta Grisi will make her last appearance but one.

VAUXHALL GARDENS.

The amusements provided at these Gardens are very attractive, and the present lessee conducts the establishment with such spirit and liberality, as to deserve the patronage the Gardens receive. In the palmy days of the Royal property, the entertainments were really of a much inferior description. For instance, there was not such a splendid band as that of Musard.

The Juvenile Fête took place on Wednesday evening; and although the weather was rather indifferent, there was a full attendance, not only of young children, but of children "of a larger growth," all of whom seemed delighted at the entertainment.

Several novel fêtes are announced, and we see that there is to be another Masquerade. At the last one, as we have already mentioned, there was a tendency to boisterous mirth, but the management had done its duty in providing ample amusement. There is no doubt, that it will do the same upon this occasion. Vauxhall is just the place for a masquerade, and all lovers of fun will no doubt be satisfied. It is true that the fun is sometimes a little violent, but some people have no relish for grins unless they are broad ones. At all events, there is every requisite for enjoyment at a masquerade at Vauxhall; and, accordingly to report, the lessee intends to have plenty of novelties for the next one.

MLLE. TAGLIONI For the portrait of this distinguished danseuse, in the large Opera page in our last Number, we are, in part, indebted to Mr. Charles Heath's superb work, "The Beauties of the Opera," which has already been highly commended in our columns.

A new nautical work is about to be published, entitled, "My Marine Memorandum Book." Report states it to be full of original humour, and its author to be a master in his craft.

The Annual Dinner and Ball was given by the Newsvendors of the metropolis to their assistants on Wednesday, at Highbury-barn Tavern. The chair was ably filled by Mr. Wild, and nearly 500 persons partook of the substantial fare.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The chief racing feature of the week was "the three days of July," at Newmarket. This, "the middle meeting," as the natives call it, is remarkable for the appearance of two-year-old stock, and the non-appearance of company. Its recent anniversary was neither better nor worse than the ordinary average: the races were few, and far from distinguished; and consequently the visitors few—exceeding, however, in quality rather than quantity. The sport in this district from the general rule at Newmarket—the favourites had infinitely the worst of it. As the winner of the July Stakes is in next year's Oaks, it may be proper to state that she is a fine stapping filly, with capital quarters, great depth of chest, and very likely to improve on her two-year-old form. Moreover, she won her race "all the way," as the lads express it, which means, with great ease; and her blood is the right sort for speed.

More Derby robberies were the subjects of discussion, in the absence of more agreeable matter: unless things mend, what shall save Epsom from an earthquake?

In cricket there has been a little doing, but the important match, "The Gentlemen and Players," which originally was fixed for Monday, stands prorogued to the 28th inst. And, apropos of bal. practice, there was a little shooting the other day at the Red House, Battersea, worth mention. A Mr. Capps backed himself to kill ninety-two pigeons out of a hundred, and only lost by one, and that was more his misfortune than his fault. Having missed his bird with his first barrel, the fowl towered so steadily over his head as to afford him a point blank shot. But Mr. C. is sherry-sighted, and uses a glass when at work. Now, on this occasion his first fire doused his glim, so that had it been a hay-stack instead of a turtle-dove, he couldn't have seen it; for which reason, of course, he couldn't bring it to bag, or rather to account.

First, however, of metropolitan recreations for the sporting way, was—or we fear we must write it—was to have been, the Regatta at Erith. A very sporting sum was contributed by the neighbourhood [illegible] £200, or thereabouts—and last week a very goodly programme was published of the entries. Most of the crack river crews, both of gentlemen and professional rowers, were set down among the various nominations for the prizes, and those were of quite a first-class character. This regatta took place on Thursday—the noon of which was most unpromising for a water festival. It was dull and black; and, either for that reason or some other, the éclat of the thing was spoilt. Still, at the hour appointed for the start—half-past two—the picturesque little bay was sufficiently brilliant with pleasure-galleys and steamers, and all the paraphernalia of sporting aquatics.

Among the not least accountable of the craft, was an eight—a long floating horticultural test higher out of the water than a toothpick) about to undertake a voyage to Ostend. Her crew were a likely company of youths—may good [illegible] have mercy on their souls! [illegible] The attendance, as has been said, was not good, but the arrangements were, and excellent time was kept, a set invaluable from in the usual general come-off of such matters. The principal races were the Amateurs' Four-oars Match, for the Presentation Cup, value seventy guineas; and the Watermen's Four-oars, for sixty pounds in money. The first of these the Leander Club won, after as hardly-contested a race as ever was run for; the St. George's pressing them for dear death for second; the latter by Coombs's cryer in a canter indeed, without an effort. As a holiday tryst it was a bad John Bull specimen. The grand hotel was closed for the nonce—if not for ever; and eating and drinking were episodes, instead of the current action of the scene. One of the oldest inhabitants—and, by-the-by, he plended guilty to three score years and ten of residence, and that was long enough) assured us that the parish of Erith is half-a-century of civilization behind any other of the County of Kent; and as we saw neither feasting nor junketing of any sort, we are of opinion he is not far from the truth.

TATTERSALL'S

MONDAY.—A tolerably full attendance, and business, as regarded the number of events specilated, was reasonably brisk, but without any prominent features. We may therefore content ourselves with stating that Moonbeam was a "pot" for the July Stakes, and that several betting commissions were executed in favour of Winesour, Milton, Treeboy, and the Doncaster, for the Liverpool Cup; in no other respect was the betting worthy of comment.

JULY STAKES.

2 to 1 agst Moonbeam	2 to 1 agst Smuggler Bill

LIVERPOOL CUP.

7 to 1 agst Winesour (t)	8 to 1 agst Treeboy (t)	10 to 1 agst Ironmaster
8 to 1 — Milton (t)	8 to 1 — Cotherstone	10 to 1 — Lightning

GOODWOOD STAKES

5 to 1 agst Kent's Bet	20 to 1 agst Flying Dutchman	25 to 1 agst Kedger
5 to 1 — Pyrrhus	18 to 1 — Queen Mab (t)	25 to 1 — Tomboy
12 to 1 — Miss Libel (t)	20 to 1 — Mowbray (t)	25 to 1 — Wee Bet
25 to 1 Warp	25 to 1 — Boarding School	22 to 1 — Europa
25 to 1 — Pine Apple	Miss	25 to 1 — Coal Black Rose
20 to 1 — Lightning	18 to 1 — John o' Gaunt	40 to 1 — Queen of Tyne

GOODWOOD CUP

2 to 1 agst Fitz-a-Ballagh (t)	11 to 1 agst The Ironmaster (t)
10 to 1 — Arnado	16 to 1 — Stonecutter (t)

ST LEGER

5 to 1 agst Westerhirt	20 to 1 agst Connaught Ranger	30 to 1 agst Fantasia
10 to 1 — Annandale		30 to 1 — Cœur de Lion

DERBY

20 to 1 agst Stingo	50 to 1 agst King Charles (t)
50 to 1 — Sanspareil	50 to 1 — Beehive to Mazeppa Monarch (t)

THURSDAY.—The betting, although in small sums, touched upon all the races now in the market, enabling us to present a full table of the averages—

LIVERPOOL CUP.

5 to 1 agst Winesour (t)	10 to 1 agst Kent's Bet	12 to 1 agst Lightning
6 to 1 — Milton (t)	11 to 1 — Ironmaster	20 to 1 — Little Hampton
8 to 1 — Treeboy	12 to 1 — Cotherstone

GOODWOOD CUP.

5 to 2 agst Fitz-a-Ballagh (t)	8 to 1 agst Ironmaster	20 to 1 agst The Drummer
	12 to 1 — Stonecutter	20 to 1 — Gamecock

GOODWOOD STAKES.

11 to 1 agst Pythia	18 to 1 agst Queen Mab (t)	20 to 1 agst Wee Bet
12 to 1 — Libel	20 to 1 — Europa (t)	20 to 1 — Wee Pet
15 to 1 — Pine Apple	20 to 1 — Mowbray	20 to 1 — Boarding School
17 to 1 — Venus	20 to 1 — Lightning	Miss [illegible]
18 to 1 — John O'Gaunt (t)	20 to 1 — Warp	25 to 1 — Kedger

ST LEGER.

5 to 1 agst Weatherbit	9 to 1 agst Beehive	20 to 1 agst Fantasia
6 to 1 — Merry Monarch	10 to 1 — Old England	25 to 1 — Kedger

NEWMARKET JULY MEETING.

A meeting of very slender pretensions commenced on Tuesday with the July Stakes and a handicap (the match between Panther and Hartshorn standing in the list for the second day) and a company sadly deficient in numbers and scarcely less so in rank, many of the leading members being detained in town upon railway committees.

The Handicap Sweepstakes of 20 sovs each.

TUESDAY.

Duke of Rutland's Panther, 3 yrs, 8st 5lb	..	..	(Boyce) 1
Lord Exeter's Adelaide	..	..	(Mann) 2

The July Stakes of 50 sovs each.

Mr. Vernon's Hartshorn beat Duke of Bedford's Paul.cr.

£5 5s for three-year-olds.

Mr. Shafto's Metal, 3 yrs	..	..	(Puttik) 1
Mr. W. S Stanley's Keppel, 3 yrs	..	..	.. 2

The Town Plate of £50.

Col. Peel's Heresy	..	..	(Nat) 1
Mr. Wigram's Kesheng	..	..	.. 2
Mr. Freeman's Stamp	..	..	.. 3

THURSDAY.

Sweeps, of 10 sovs each.

Lord Exeter's Tuneli, 3 yrs	..	..	(Mann) 1
Duke of Rutland's c by Bucanus out of Minikin, 3 yrs	..	..	.. 2

The Chesterfield Stakes of 30 sovs each.

Lord Chesterfield's Free Lance by Jerced	..	..	(Nat) 1
Duke of Rutland's Fly Caesar out of Ramadan's dam	..	..	.. 2

WORCESTER RACES.

The Severn Stakes of 5 sovs each, with 25 added.

Mr. Collet's Caramel, 6 yrs, 9st 3lb	..	..	(Marlow) 1
Mr. Buckley's Dot, 6 yrs, 9st 3lb	..	..	.. 2

The Two Year Old Stakes, of 10 sovs. each, with 25 added. Five subs.

Mr. Cooper's Nancy, 8st 2lb	..	..	(Wakefield) 1
Mr. Treen's Astonishment, 8st 2lb	..	..	.. 2

The Worcestershire Stakes of 30 sovs each.

Mr. Collett's Caramel, 7 yrs, 9st 3lb	..	..	(Marlow) 1
Mr. Ongley's Roderick, 6 yrs, 7st 8lb	..	..	.. 2

CRICKET

THE MARYLEBONE CLUB AND GROUND v. THE COUNTY OF HANTS.—Contrary to the anticipations of many, this match terminated on Wednesday, in favour of the Marylebone Cricket Club, by a majority of 63 runs. At the close of the play on Tuesday, Pilch and Martingell were well in, but Pilch did not play in his accustomed style, and the result was, that a very inferior ball from Lillywhite settled his business in quick time. Martingell and box soon followed, whilst Day, after some fine hitting, scored 16. The whole side made 62, thus losing by 64 runs.

CLAPHAM AND BLACKHEATH (PARAGON).—These clubs played a match on the ground of Mr. Cutler, on Wednesday, when the former were victorious upon the first innings by 142 runs.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

RAILWAYS AND PUBLIC COMPANIES.—A resolution, moved by the Marquis of CHANDOS, respecting the election of Directors of Railways, was made a standing order. The Marquis of LANSDOWNE took occasion to mention a predicament into which Mr. Craven Berkeley had been placed by the unwarranted insertion of his name in a Navigation Company's Act, and moved that another standing order be added, to the effect "That no Lord should be recited in a bill as liable in any pecuniary amount, until it had been first proved before the Standing Orders' Committee that the names were inserted with the consent of the parties concerned."—Lord BROUGHAM recommended the passing of an act "to relieve Mr. Craven Berkeley from the legal liability under which he lies, on account of the fraudulent conduct of the parties who procured the act in question to be carelessly passed by the Legislature."—Earl FITZHARDINGE stated that the sum for which his brother was sued in this case was £35,000, and the costs already incurred in defending the action were £400.—The standing order was agreed to.

THE BRAZIL SLAVE TRADE TREATY.—The Earl of ABERDEEN moved the second reading of the Brazil Slave Trade Bill. He stated that the effect of the measure would be to enforce the first article of the treaty of 1826, which enacted that within three years after the ratification of the treaty subjects of Brazil trading in slaves should be treated as pirates. This article had been hitherto rendered nugatory by the appointment of Mixed Commissions, to try offenders, which had taken the matter out of the jurisdiction of the Admiralty Court. The second reading was carried without observation.

ADMINISTRATION OF CRIMINAL JUSTICE.—Lord BROUGHAM (who moved the second reading of the Bill for the Administration of Criminal Justice. By this measure it was proposed to fix upon certain places as assize-towns, at which, as the Central Criminal Court, all prisoners within a certain circuit should be tried.—Lord CAMPBELL thought a consolidation of the kind would be very beneficial, but that the matter should not be pressed forward this session. Great advantage would be derived from the appointment of a new commission with power to inquire into the whole subject, and to re-divide the assize districts of England and Ireland.—The Lord CHANCELLOR admitted the necessity for a new commission; but, though he himself did not consider the Irish Judges in any way inferior to their English brethren, he did not think they could administer justice so successfully in England as the report of the late commission was unsatisfactory, he should feel it his duty to recommend the appointment of a new one with more extensive powers.—Lord BROUGHAM, after this statement, said he should not press the bill this session, but the second reading was carried.

The house adjourned about 8 o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

BUSINESS TO BE DISPOSED OF THIS SESSION.—Sir R. PEEL, according to promise, stated the course which the Government intended to pursue with regard to the various bills before the house, and mentioned those with which it was intended to proceed this session. From the statement it appears that the bills of general public importance which are intended to be brought forward this session are:—The Irish Colleges Bill, the Scotch Poor law Amendment Bill, the Jewish Disabilities Removal Bill, and the Commons Enclosure Bill. In addition to these, there are a number of other bills, some of them relating to Ireland, to all of which no general opposition is anticipated, and which are intended to be pressed forward, especially as several of them are continuance bills, necessary for the renewal of powers conferred by expiring acts. Of bills to be relinquished there are the Physic and Surgery, the Parochial Settlement, the Charitable Trusts; and nothing is to be done for the improvement of the Irish Registration, or the Irish Municipal Franchise. On the subject of the Irish Landlords and Tenants Bill, Sir R. Peel declined to give any assurance, though twice questioned, alleging that the bill was still in the House of Lords, and not therefore before them. In answer to a question, Sir R. PEEL said he intended to proceed with the Small Debts Bill. Sir R. PEEL having stated, in answer to Lord J. RUSSELL, that he could not give up any Government night for the discussion of the Ecclesiastical Bill, that Noble Lord intimated that he would not press the bill during the present session, as he would have no opportunity of bringing it on.

THE LATE BREACH OF PRIVILEGE.—On the motion of Mr. DIVETT, Mr. David Phillips, the plaintiff in the action against Mr. Jasper Parrott, for evidence given before the select committee on the Medical Relief Bill, was called to the bar for examination. After considerable hesitation, Mr. Phillips admitted substantially that the action was brought against Mr Parrott for evidence given before a select committee of the house, in which evidence he had, previously, been chairman of the Poplar board of guardians, and a most litigious against the character of Mr. Phillips, which the latter regarded as not only utterly untrue, but deliberately malicious. The consequence of these statements was, that Mr. Phillips, though in practice as a surgeon for upwards of twenty-four years, had lost his situation as one of the medical officers of the union, and had been otherwise injured in reputation. In answer to various questions, Mr. Phillips said he had not brought the action until he had first tried every other means for the vindication of his character. He said he was unaware that he had, by bringing the action, committed a breach of the privileges of the house, and therefore had not consulted them, and that he expressed a hope that the house would institute some inquiry, which would enable him to vindicate his character. He consented to stay the action. A long discussion then took place, which terminated in the call of Mr. Phillips, embodying the expression of his regret, and formally asking for the lenient consideration of the house. Thereupon, on being informed by Sir John Yarde Buller that he had withdrawn the action until the house had acted, he was ordered to withdraw. He then returned and was brought by the clerk at the table. The attorneys who had commenced the action, in imitation of the course pursued by their client, sent in a petition, pleading ignorance of the privileges of the house, and praying that it would forgive and remit the unwillingness to abstain from conduct, in future, of a similar nature. This repentance was accepted; and, in consideration of their submission to its authority, the house came to a unanimous vote, discharging Mr. Phillips and his attorneys from further attendance.

The house was then engaged until nearly two o'clock in the morning in Committee on the College of Ireland Bill.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

The business to-day was unimportant. Lord BROUGHAM gave notice that he would, on Monday next, state when he would move an address to her Majesty, praying that she would give orders for preparations to be made for being made in the new building for that House of Parliament before the next session of Parliament with temporary fittings: and he would also add a prayer that especial care should be taken for providing means of ventilation in the house in a manner to render it fire proof. At an early hour the house adjourned till Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

The House of Commons commenced its proceedings to-day. It met at noon, and discussed the Commons Inclosure Bill in Committee for four hours. After an hour's interval business was resumed, and some railway bills were advanced a stage.

THE SLAVE TRADE.—Lord PALMERSTON moved for a return of the names and description of the witnesses examined before the mixed British and French Commission, appointed to inquire into the best means for putting an end to the slave trade; and of copies or extracts of the evidence given by those witnesses. The noble lord at great length expatiated on his efforts to put down the slave trade by treaty or otherwise, and contended that the right of search conventions of 1831 and 1833 been maintained, and had not Spain, and Portugal, and Brazil, systematically, scandalously, and dishonourably, violated their engagements? A system of slavery would now be at work. He condemned the treaty just concluded with France, as abrogating for ever the mutual right of search between the two countries, without substituting anything equivalent for accomplishing the purpose which appeared to be what France professed to desire. He valued the right of search as the most efficacious means of putting down the slave trade. He charged the Government with having pusillanimously yielded to the bullying tone of France. It was said there was an equivalent in the arrangement made that the two squadrons, one English and the other French, were to guard the West Coast of Africa. The right of search was much more extensive. It extended to the West Indies, the Brazils, to Africa, and a certain limit round the Isle of Madagascar. The present arrangement was confined to the West of Africa, and, even in respect to this, it would be ineffective, unless the English and French contrived to move together like Siamese twins, and hunted in couples. Lord Palmerston vehemently condemned the wording of the preamble, and, after arguing that in all parts of their foreign policy the Government had exhibited weakness or assumed a low tone, said he was not prepared to move any resolution condemnatory of the course he knew to be approved by the great majority, but he was determined to press for the evidence he required, believing that that evidence went to prove the necessity of a right of search as a means for effectually crushing the slave trade.—Sir R. PEEL said that Lord Palmerston, who was imbued with very strong feelings upon the subject, should not have considered the probability of his being in a minority on the question, had he not construed the first article of the treaty in the sense of the house. He denied that the honour and dignity of this country had been at all compromised by the recent convention with France—a convention wise and praiseworthy in itself, and which would be productive of the most signal benefit to the slave trade, and to the interests of humanity. He could not admit that the right of search was a bad one, and that the clamour against the right of search was wholly unfounded; but the irritation existing at that time in the minds of the French people against Lord Aberdeen's conduct in the Cracow affair rendered it hopeless to procure the ratification of the treaty. So far from quietly acquiescing in the refusal to ratify the treaty, the British Government earnestly protested against its non-ratification, but it was found to be impossible to control popular feeling in France, and ultimately the recent convention was concluded, which, he believed, would be found more effective than the limited right of search which had been previously agreed upon. Sir R. Peel then contended that the right of visit now conceded by France would be a sufficient guarantee against the abuse of the flags of either country, and that the severity of the French law would have its effect against the practice of having double sets of papers, for the very fact of having two sets of papers was of itself an act of piracy according to the law of France. He had no objection to give the names of the witnesses, but he trusted the house would not forget who the two men were by whom this convention was considered and signed Dr. Lushington and the Duke de Broglie, both of them remarkable in their respective countries for their anxiety to suppress the slave trade. The evidence moved for, he could not give consistently with his feeling of public duty.—After a long debate, a division took place, the numbers being—

For the motion	..	..	.. 51
Against it	..	..	.. 94
Majority against the motion	..	..	.. —43

The house adjourned at two o'clock in the morning, having sat thirteen hours.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The house again met at twelve o'clock, and was occupied until nearly six in discussing the clauses of the Lunatic Asylums and Pauper Lunatics Bill. The bill passed through committee, and was ordered to be reported on Friday.

THE UNIVERSITIES (SCOTLAND) BILL.—Mr. MACAULAY, in the absence of Mr. Rutherford, moved the second reading of this bill, and, in doing so, said he regretted much to find that the bill was to be opposed by the Government, for it was a bill founded upon sound principles, the application of which was called for by the peculiar circumstances of Scotland. This principle was precisely the same as that upon which the Irish Colleges Bill was grounded, and he could not understand how the Government could have introduced the latter, and yet oppose the former. Mr. Macaulay adverted to late occurrences in the Church of Scotland, and after reviewing the position of that Church, argued against the policy of maintaining tests. He contended that by the enforcement of tests they would shut out from the universities more than one-half of the Presbyterian people of Scotland. By throwing out this bill, in fact, they would cause a rival establishment to be founded, which would diminish the number of the pupils and the resources of the universities; and the result would be that Scotland would be blessed with a race of the shallowest "Dominies," filling the chairs of Adam Smith, Dugald Stewart, Reid, Black, and Ferguson. The right hon. gentleman then challenged the Government with not knowing its own mind twenty four hours together—they had carried tests in Limerick, for instance, at Glasgow, against them at Belfast, and for them at Aberdeen. The Government was like a reed shaken by the wind, and could not command public respect even for an hour.—Sir R. GRAHAM said he would not allow himself to be seduced to follow the right hon. gentleman in the course of invective in which he had indulged, and which he was in the habit of resorting to in the rencontres of debate. The result of the deliberations of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland only confirmed him in his previous disposition to oppose the measure, such opposition arising from no hostile or unfriendly sense of public duty, looking to the engagements of the Crown with the Scottish Church, and looking also as a Minister of the Crown to the effect of the measure upon the interests of the country. He was on principle rather favourable to tests, and in Scotland tests, as they existed, were founded on ancient statutes, and were, in his opinion, far superior to any modern modifications In Ireland, however, tests were not advisable, owing to its peculiar circumstances of the country. In Scotland he feared that sectarian education was inevitable. The tests prescribed by statute were intended for the security of the Established Church, the destruction of which appeared to be the undisguised object of the Free Church party. Under these circumstances, the right honourable baronet moved that the bill should be read a second time that day three months.—After a debate ensued, in the course of which Sir ROBERT PEEL denied that the principle on which the Government proceeded in proposing academical institutions for Ireland was necessarily applicable to other parts of the United Kingdom. The universities of Scotland were by compact and statute connected with its Established Church, and the abolition of the required tests would not only be a violation of the Act of Union, but would be equivalent to a declaratt that in Scotland there should be no Establishment whatever. —Lord J. RUSSELL contended that the unanimity of tests was demonstrated by the facts that such men as Hume, Bolingbroke, and Gibbon, had held offices even during the time when the sacramental test was applied.—On a division the numbers were—

For the second reading of the bill	..	..	.. 168
Against it	..	..	.. 115
Majority against it	..	..	.. —8

Mr. WATSON then moved the committal of the Catholic Relief Bill, the object of which was to repeal those clauses in the statute book which were still unrepealed against the Catholics.—When a division took place, however, the bill was defeated by a majority of 89 to 47.—The house did not adjourn till a quarter past one.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

ARRESTMENT OF WAGES (SCOTLAND) BILL.—On the motion of Lord CAMPBELL, this bill was read a third time and passed.

PRIVILEGE.—The Duke of RICHMOND rose to call their Lordships' attention to a matter of privilege. He held in his hand the petition of Mr. Thomas Baker, who had been superintendent of the C division of the metropolitan police force from the year 1829 down to August in the last year. The petitioner stated, that, on the 26th day of April, he attended before the committee of that house appointed to inquire into the law respecting gaming, at which he was examined by such committee, and gave evidence before them that Mr. John Harlow, a person named in that evidence, commenced an action on the case in the Court of Queen's Bench against him, wherein he was required to recover damages from the petitioner for evidence which had been done to him in consequence of such evidence; that petitioner had not pleaded to such action, and therefore he prayed the house to take the premises into their consideration, and to grant him petitioners against the action.—On the motion of the Lord CHANCELLOR, a committee was appointed to search for precedents upon the subject, and the house adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

The house met again at twelve o'clock, when the time discussed the Commons' Inclosure Bill in committee. The clauses were all agreed to, and the report ordered to be received to morrow (Friday).

In the evening, the Glasgow, Barhead, and Neilston Railway Bill was read a third time and passed.

NEW ZEALAND.—Mr. C. BULLER gave notice that on the 19th instant he should move for copies of the correspondence which had taken place between her Majesty's Government and the New Zealand Company since the late debate.

SPANISH TREATIES.—Lord PALMERSTON said it was his intention on Tuesday next to submit a motion on the subject of the correspondence which had taken place between her Majesty's Government and the Spanish Ministry on the subject of the existing treaties between this country and Spain.

IRISH COLLEGES BILL.—On the motion that the Colleges (Ireland) Bill be read a third time, Mr. DENSOMB proposed that an humble address be presented to her Majesty, praying that she will be graciously pleased to direct an inquiry to be made into the amount of the revenues of Trinity College, Dublin, (1) from the College lands; (2) from such sum as may be beneficially realised on matriculation, on taking degrees, and from every other source; also in the manner in which that income is expended, the number of Senior and Junior Fellows, Professors, Scholars, and Officers connected with the College, and the amount of salary and allowances to each of them; with a view to ascertain whether the income or funds at present applied solely to the benefit of members of the Trinity College, Dublin, are not sufficient to enable them so as to make Roman Catholics and Protestant Dissenters eligible, if otherwise qualified, to all Scholarships, and to all such Fellowships, Professorships, and Offices as may be deemed by the College, on the ground of their academical purposes, or immediately connected with ecclesiastical endowment.—After a long discussion, the house divided, and the amendment was rejected by a majority of 39 to 9. The bill was then read a third time and passed.—The house did not adjourn till past one o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

PRIVILEGE.—The Lord CHANCELLOR laid on the table the Report of the Committee appointed to search for precedents upon the petition of Thomas Baker, which he presented yesterday.—The Duke of RICHMOND moved that Mr. Baker be called to the bar to deliver in the declaration which he had received.—The Lord CHANCELLOR: The course which he would propose was this. That the report be printed and placed in the hands of their lordships. He proposed merely to call the petitioner to the bar to identify the transaction and prove the fact; after which he would move that the plaintiff and his attorney should attend on Monday next. If any discussion should be necessary, it might take place previous to calling them to the bar. This course was adopted.

RAILWAYS.—The Earl of DALHOUSIE laid on the table the minute of the Board of Trade for the future regulation of railway business. He said it was the intention of the Government to do away with the Railway Board. In future, that business would be transacted by the Board of Trade as a distinct branch.—A discussion ensued upon a resolution of Lord Brougham respecting railways, but it was ultimately withdrawn, and the house adjourned at half past seven.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

There was another sitting this morning to-day.

NEW MEMBER.—Mr. Bendet came to the table, introduced by Sir John Tyrell and Major Beresford, and took the oaths and his seat for West Suffolk

The house was then occupied for some hours in discussing the Lunatics Bill.

RAILWAY BILLS.—In the evening the following bills were read a third time and passed:—The Dublin, London and Portsmouth Railway Bill; the Brighton and Chichester Railway Bill (Portsmouth Extension); and the Guildford, Chichester, and Portsmouth Railway Bill.

POOR-LAW (SCOTLAND) BILL.—On the order of the day for going into committee on this bill, a long discussion arose, and Col. RAWDON moved that the house should go into committee that day three months. On a division, it was resolved, by 99 to 36, to go into committee. The speaker, therefore, left the chair, and the Committee proceeded to discuss the different clauses of the bill.—Nothing of interest occurred up to the adjournment, which took place at a late hour.

MISCELLANEOUS BUSINESS.—COMMONS.

NEW WRIT.—On Monday, as we last week stated would be the case, a new writ was moved for the borough of Cambridge, in the room of Mr. Fitzroy Kelly, appointed to the office of her Majesty's Solicitor-General.

NEW ELECTIONS.—On Wednesday, Sir J. T. B. Duckworth took the oaths and his seat for Exeter, in the room of Sir W. Follett.—On Thursday the Attorney-General was introduced by Lord Jermyn and Mr. Forbes Mackenzie, and took the oaths and his seat, on his re-election for the borough of Abingdon.—On Monday, Mr. Moffatt took the oaths and his seat for Dartmouth, in the room of Mr. Somes, deceased.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

THE CASE OF LORD HUNTINGTOWER.—On Saturday Lord Huntingtower appeared in the Court of BANKRUPTCY on his petition. Originally, when the case came before the Court, it was adjourned, on the ground that a suit was pending in one of the Ecclesiastical Courts, between Lord and Lady Dysart, and it was expected that something would be done for the insolvent, the only son and heir to the title. Nothing, however, had been done, and it was stated that the suit was still pending. Mr. Bramwell appeared for Mr. Stephen Cox, a horse dealer, in Stamford street, Blackfriars-road, to oppose the petition, and that a debt of £9,230 had been fraudulently contracted. He submitted that a case had been established of a debt contracted under false pretences. After evidence had been heard, the Learned Commissioner, in giving his opinion, said he should dismiss from his mind the charge of false pretences. That charge, if it could have been supported, should have been brought before a jury. But there were some words in the act which he could not get over. He could not say that this was a debt incurred with any reasonable expectation of payment. Certainly it was lamentable to see the heir of a fortune and title so left by Lord Dysart, whose duty it was to have acted in a different manner. It was his duty to his son, as the heir of a title, and for the sake of the dignity, which was a public trust, and not confined to any private or personal gratification, to have seen that his son had some means afforded him. He should adjourn the case sine die, and when the public knew that whatever estate he had was vested in the Court, they would not indulge him to contract debts, and the harpies, perhaps, who had surrounded him, would disperse. The Court adjourned the case sine die.

Mr. E. James asked for a short protection. The Court refused. The adjournment without protection was meant as a punishment. The insolvent must expect a different conduct There was permission given by the act to apply at a future period.

LIABILITY OF SHAREHOLDERS IN PUBLIC COMPANIES.—In the Court of COMMON PLEAS on Wednesday was tried, Scott and another v. Hawkesley. A reference is made to this case in our Parliamentary report. The plaintiffs are ship brokers at Greenock; the defendant is the Hon. Craven Hawkesley, M.P. for Worcester. Mr. Greenwood opened the pleadings, from which it appeared this was a scire facias to ascertain whether the defendant was not a member of a company entitled "The Indian Steamship Company," against which the plaintiffs, suing their secretary in his proper officer and representative, under a statute, had recovered judgment, while execution remained to be levied. The defendant in his plea denied that he was a member of the company, at the time the judgment in question was recovered, and this was the fact the Jury had to find. Sir Thomas Wilde stated the case. The plaintiffs had recovered judgment against the company in the name of the proper officer to be sued, for the sum of £38,066 1s. 9d., in respect of a ship built by them upon contract for this company. The plaintiffs, after obtaining their judgment, looked about to see what assets were possessed by the company. They could discover none; and there, of course, they had only to see, in the alternative, who were the individuals who had rendered themselves liable for this debt as partners. The plaintiffs had therefore selected Mr. Craven Berkeley, and a fact now to be ascertained was, whether he was or was not a member of the company, and so liable for the amount of the judgment recovered against the Secretary, Mr. Manning. It might be true that he had not taken any active or prominent part in the affairs of this company, but that would not exempt him. He might have been rather ornamental than useful, but while he had his name on a paper, it might have the effect of seducing persons to give credit to the concern from the belief in his respectability and responsibility. A good deal of evidence was given, and it was finally agreed to a verdict pro formâ for the plaintiff, with liberty to move for a special case to be turned into, as far as practicable, a special verdict. The Chief Justice thought that after the subsidiary question had been disposed of, the main point might be turned into a special verdict.

COURT OF BORING EXTRAORDINARY. — In the Court of BANKRUPTCY, Wednesday was fixed for the choice of assignees in the matter of Thornton Hemsted, formerly carried on business as a stock-broker and dealer in railway shares at Copthall chambers, City, and his private residence was at Croydon, where the only assets obtained by the messengers was a collection of "waste paper." The bankrupt, Mr. C. B. Smith, had absconded, and had kept no regular books of account for the last three years. The proofs of debts were principally by parties who had entrusted him with money to invest in different securities; and in no one case had he complied with their instructions. The number of these cases has not yet been ascertained, neither has the amount of his debts and liabilities. Amongst the proofs admitted, was that of a gentleman who had been dealing with him at his SHREWSBURY, FROM THE SEVERN.

SHREWSBURY.

Next week "the Metropolis of Shropshire" will be the scene of the Great Annual Show of the Royal Agricultural Society of England. These interesting proceedings we shall illustrate in the forthcoming number of our journal. Meanwhile, as public attention will be more immediately drawn to this fine old town, by means of this great national gathering, we have deemed it a fit opportunity to introduce to our readers a few of the picturesque antiquities for which Shrewsbury is celebrated.

The town lies nearly in the centre of the county of which it is the capital: it is situated on two gentle declivities, and is formed by the river Severn into a peninsula, somewhat in the shape of a horseshoe, having an isthmus not more than 300 yards across. The first of our illustrations shows the town and river:—

> Admired SALOPIA! that with venial pride
> Eyes her bright form in Severn's ambient wave;
> Fam'd for her loyal cares in perils tried;
> Her daughters lovely, and her sirpings brave. SHENSTONE.

Shrewsbury is conceived to have been first occupied or built some time in the fifth century, after the destruction of the Roman Uriconium, as an asylum for the fugitive Britons from the devastations of their Saxon invaders.

The Britons named the place Pengwern; the Saxons Scrobbes-byrig: both are synonimous, importing a fenced eminence, covered with shrubs. The ancient Welsh called it—and do so to this day—Amwythig, signifying "the Delight." The Normans, Sciropesberie, and subsequently, Salopesberie and Schrosbury, from whence is formed its present name—Shrewsbury and Salop. Leland thus beautifully explains the etymology:—

> Built on a hill, fair SALOP greets the eye,
> While Severn, like an eel, curves gliding by:
> Two bridges cross the bark-conveying stream,
> And British alders gave the town a name.

The town has been the scene of some of the most interesting events in our history, and has been a place of importance from the earliest ages. In the time of Edward the Confessor, it had five churches. Roger de Montgomery, a kinsman of William the Conqueror, built a large castle here, in place of one destroyed by the Anglo-Saxon insurgents and the Welch, who burnt the town in 1068. The town and castle were surrendered to Henry I.; they were besieged in Stephen's wars, retaken by Henry, son of Maud, afterwards Henry II., who gave the town a charter; but the earliest charter extant, is of Richard I. In the wars between the English and the Welsh, the town was an important rendezvous; and in 1283, a Parliament was held here. Edward I. resided here in 1277; and Sept. 30, 1283, was held here a Parliament, "the first national convention in which the Commons had any share by legal authority." In 1398-9, Richard II. adjourned from Westminster here his "Great Parliament." The next great event was the memorable Battle of Shrewsbury, July 22, 1403, fought about three miles distant from the castle, at a place called Battlefield. The Queen of Edward IV. resided at Shrewsbury; and in Shrewsbury Richmond was first proclaimed King (Henry VII.). In the civil wars of Charles I., Shrewsbury contributed money and plate to recruit the Royal forces, but the town was surprised and taken by the Parliamentarians in 1644. James II. visited the town in 1685; and Dr. Sacheverel entered it in triumph in 1710.

The fine old town and suburbs, with their numerous spires and towers, are delineated in our first Engraving. The three accompanying Illustrations show portions of the most ancient parts of the town. Of these are the Interior Gateway of the Castle, with its noble semicircular arch, formerly defended by a portcullis and towers through this gateway the last Norman Earl of Shrewsbury issued with the keys, to make submission to Henry I. Next, is a Tower on the Town Wall, presenting a specimen of the ancient fortification. Lastly, is the Royal Free Grammar School, founded by King Edward VI.; and where, in the time of Elizabeth, was educated the gallant Sydney, "the miracle of the age." In our own time, too, it has maintained pre-eminent rank under the able management of the late head-master, Dr. Butler. The School is situated near the Castle, and built of freestone in the Italianized Tudor style: the building occupies two sides of a quadrangle, with a square pinnacled tower at the angle, partly rebuilt in 1831.

TOWER, ON THE TOWN WALL, SHREWSBURY.

GRAMMAR SCHOOL, SHREWSBURY.

Next week, we shall glance at the interior of the town, and its street architecture, in conjunction with our Illustrated Report of the Great Agricultural Show. By the way, Thursday was the last day for receiving the Implements, Seeds, &c., to be exhibited; and the following is the Programme for the ensuing week:—

Tuesday, 15. The Implement Yard open to the Public. The public exhibition of the working of the Implements to take place at Mr. Taylor's, Monkmoor, at Twelve o'clock.

Wednesday, 16. The Judges inspect the Stock and award the Prizes. The Implement Yard open to the Public. Council Dinner in the Concert Room, at five o'clock; when the Judges' award of Prizes (with the exception of those for Horses) will be read.

Thursday, 17. The Cattle and Implement Yards open to the Public. Dinner of the Society in the Great Pavilion, on the Quarry.

Friday, 18. Cattle Yard open at Seven. Sale to begin at Nine for Ten precisely. General Meeting of the Members in the Town Hall at Twelve o'clock.

The Cattle and Implement Show Yards, on the Race Course.

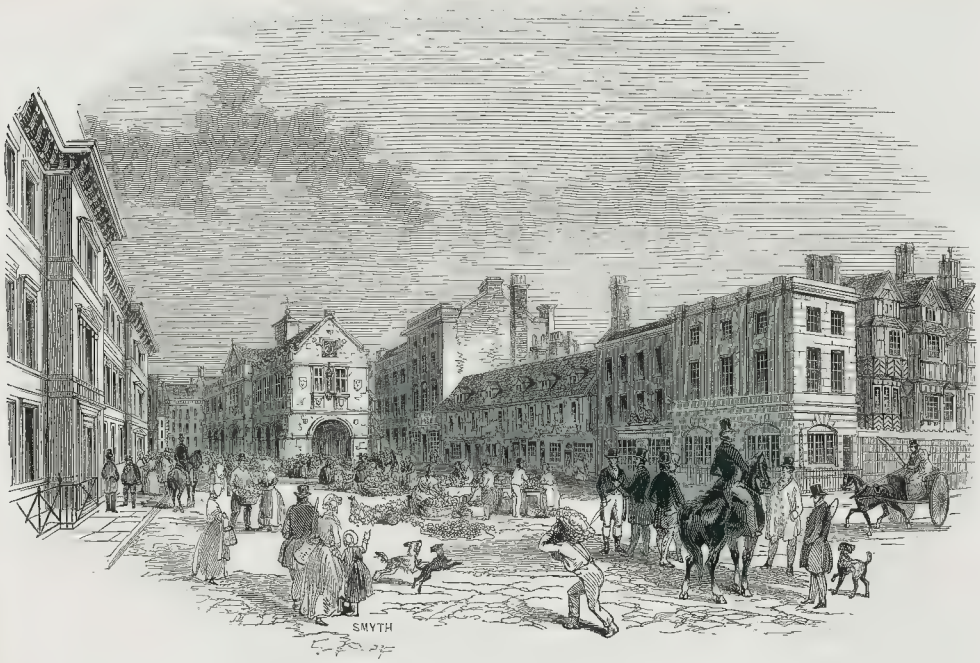
PORTRAITS OF EMINENT LIVING PAINTERS.

WILLIAM MULREADY, R.A. WILLIAM ETTY, R.A.

No two painters are more unlike than William Mulready and William Etty. They possess no one quality in common but that of high genius for their calling. Mulready delights in Village Doors—Boys at Play—Girls at School—Interrupted Fights—Domestic Incidents and Scenes from the Vicar of Wakefield; Etty in Illustrations of Heathen Mythology—Homer's Iliad, and the Fairie Queene. Mr. Mulready finds his pictures in the street in which he lives; Mr. Etty in Tooke's Pantheon or the columns of Lempriere. They can enter, therefore, into no kind of rivalry one with another, beyond that of friendly emulation in their respective branches of the Art. They are both favourites with the public, but their works will rank higher than they have heretofore done, when the hands are torpid that called them into being. But this is writing in the spirit of prophesy, and we have now to deal only with the past and present

Mr. MULREADY was a boy of twenty, when (in 1804) he exhibited, for the first time, in the rooms of the Royal Academy, at Somerset House. He had three small pictures in the Exhibition of that year:—"A View of Kirkstale Abbey," a "Crypt," in the same building; and a "Cottage at Knaresborough, Yorkshire." In 1806 (the year in which Wilkie came to London) "A Cottage Woman Hanging Clothes Out." In 1807, "A Cottage with Figures," and "Old Gaspar," from Southey's Battle of Blenheim; In 1808, a "Girl at Work," and "The Dead Hare;" and in 1809, a subject of a more extensive character, "Returning from the Ale-house," a picture which is said to have suggested to Wilkie his "Village Festival," originally known as "The Ale-house Door." Wilkie and Mulready were much together at this time, drawing from the same figure at the Royal Academy, and sitting near, and often next one another. Nor were people wanting to traduce Wilkie, and insist on the superior merits of Mulready, though it is fair to state that Mr. Mulready himself was always shy of stripping for a fight with his inimitable rival. He knew too well (no one better) that Wilkie was no common competitor in the race for fame, and that his own reputation was secure without incurring the risk of a fall with so powerful an opponent. He confined his pencil, therefore, for some time longer, to the representation of incidents akin to those by which he had at first attracted attention, while Wilkie secured a seat in the Royal Academy, and Collins appeared as a rival to oppose Mulready. It was high time, therefore, for Mulready to be about and stirring. Collins, a younger painter, already elected an Associate before him, was looking forward for the higher rank of a Royal Academician, when Mulready stripped for the day, and, in a picture with an appropriate name—"The Fight Interrupted"—won golden opinions, and, dearer still, the full rank of Royal Academician in the same year.

GATEWAY OF THE CASTLE, SHREWSBURY



THE MARKET-PLACE, SHREWSBURY.

Periods of great exertion require commensurate periods of rest, and Mr. Mulready for the two years following his election stood aloof from the Exhibition, and collected new materials for other pictures. In 1819, the year in which Wilkie exhibited his "Penny Wedding," Mulready exhibited his well known picture of "Lending a Bite;" and, in 1820, in the same room with "Wilkie's Reading the Will," the far-famed "Wolf and the Lamb," a perfect picture of its kind, and inimitably engraved by Mr. J. H. Robinson.

Mr. Mulready was never a very regular or a very industrious workman. He is a slow painter, one who achieves excellence by repeated strokes and touches. His pictures are therefore few in number, and, what is more, of a small or cabinet size. One picture a year is the utmost he ever painted; and such is the request his works are in, that a new collector must wait the turn of many years before he is likely to acquire a picture from his hand; and a prize-holder in the Art-Union, with a £400 prize, may wait for ever. Mr. Mulready's pictures are sold before they are exhibited. Nothing escapes the covetous longing and ample purses of a Vernon or a Sheepshanks; and they are right; a good collection of modern pictures is no bad investment of surplus capital. See what a good collection brings—pleasure, profit, reputation, and, when you are dead (witness the Knott distribution at Christie's the other day), seventy-five per cent. and more for your executors to see to.

That admirable picture of the year 1820, "The Wolf and the Lamb," was followed within the next ten years by "The Careless Messenger Detected," "The Convalescent," "The Widow"—

"So mourn'd the Dame of Ephesus her love;"

"The Travelling Druggist," "The Origin of a Painter," "A Boy Firing a Cannon," "Interior of an English Cottage," "Puppies' Heads," "A Dog of Two Minds," "Returning from the Hustings." "The Widow" was sold the other day at Christie's, and "The Convalescent," one of the best of his works, is being engraved by Mr. Doo for the Art Union Distribution of the present year. The picture, we believe, is Sir Robert Peel's.

"The Dog of Two Minds," in the Exhibition of 1830, was followed by "A Sailing Match," "The First Voyage," "The Last In," "Open Your Mouth and Shut Your Eyes," "The Ford," "Fair Time," "First Love," "The Sonnet," "All the World's a Stage" (we can summon each picture unmistakeably before us at this moment), "The Whistonian Controversy," from the "Vicar of Wakefield," and a scene from "St. Ronan's Well"—"Mr. Peregrine Touchwood Breaking in upon the Reverend Josiah Cargill"—one and all possessing the peculiar force and character of Mr Mulready's pencil. Touchwood's action in the scene from "St. Ronan's Well" conveys the air but audible "Hem!" of the consequential intruder. The reader may refresh his memory by a sight of the engraving in Scott's own edition of "The Waverley Novels." It is one of the happiest illustrations of Scott we remember to have seen.

WILLIAM ETTY first sought public approbation as a painter in the rooms of the Royal Academy, at Somerset House, in the year 1811; when Mr. Mulready had been seven years before the public. His fancy would appear to have been turned, from his first outset in life, to that poetic portion of his art in which he has achieved so well-merited a reputation. His earliest exhibited works were "Telemachus Rescuing the Princess Antiope from the Fury of the Wild Boar" and "Priam Supplicating Achilles for the Dead Body of his Son Hector." His future excellence is said to have been foretold by West before he had given any unmistakeable proof of high genius for his art; and when he exhibited his "Cleopatra on the Cydnus," the year after the death of West, the prophecy was thought to have been fulfilled, and the President was praised accordingly.

The "Cleopatra" was followed by "Cupid Sheltering his Darling from the Approaching Storm;" and "Cupid Darting the Shaft of Love by the Seasons." He had now done more than enough to justify his election to the honours he aspired to in the Royal Academy, and in the election of 1824 he was chosen an Associate of that body, in opposition to Mr. Allan, now Sir William Allan. "You know the claims of Mr. Etty," Sir Thomas Lawrence wrote to Wilkie, "and how much he may be said to be a child of the Royal Academy." Fuseli, Opie, Lawrence, Shee, Mulready —a former pupil of its President, and a man of the most blameless life, modest and natural manners. "The Judgment of Paris," "Judith and Holofernes," and "The Offering of Hero and Leander," were thought to have confirmed the Royal Academy in the selection, and in 1826 Mr. Etty was elected a Royal Academician. Nor could the selection have fallen on any man with higher qualifications for the place—a cultivated taste, a fine fancy, an eye alive to the beauties and resources of his art, and a hand skilful in embodying the noblest conception of the loftiest of poets

The skill with which Mr. Etty had handled the subject of Judith and Holofernes, and the untiring assiduity with which he clung to the higher branches of art, indicated the Scottish Academy of Fine Arts in Edinburgh to commission a companion picture to the former work. Nor from the good people of the North any reason to feel displeased with the picture when painted. We are not aware, however, that the commission was followed by an order of a similar description from any other of the public academies then existing; though it would be difficult to say how a surplus sum of money belonging to a public body could be laid out to greater advantage than in the encouragement of high art in one who lacks opportunity, not skill—a patron hand, not genius

One of Mr. Etty's subjects of the year 1830, exhibits the peculiar character of more than one subject he has chosen:—"Candaules, King of Lydia, Shews his Wife by Stealth to Gyges, one of his Ministers, as she steps to bed." The presumed indelicacy of the subject was thought by some to have put it without the province of Mr. Etty, with that skill which men of genius only can summon to their aid, kept it from the very first within the unregnulated confines of his calling, and men who came prepared to cavil and affect displeasure, returned well pleased with what they saw.

Mr. Etty's subjects, within the last twelve years, have been.—"Youth on the Prow and Pleasure at the Helm," Phædra and Cymochles, or the Idle Lake," from the "Faëry Queene;" "Hylas and the Nymphs," "Britomart and Amoret," "Venus and her Satellites," "Psyche Laying the Casket of Cosmetics at the Feet of Venus, while Cupid pleads in her behalf," "Samson betrayed by Delilah," "A Bivouac of Cupid and his Company;" "Mars, Venus, and Attendant, Derobing her Mistress for the Bath;" a subject from Milton's "Comus," and the portrait of the Lady Mayoress of York. A good deal has been said of late about the scene from "Comus," painted for the Summer House at Buckingham Palace, and the portrait of the Lady Mayoress of York will excite a smile in all who have ever chanced to set eye upon it. Mr. Etty is a great artist—an honour to the English school, and one who will live hereafter

A RAMBLE IN THE REALMS OF CHAT.

All our earthly kingdoms—the Kingdom of Animals, the Kingdom of Vegetables, and the Kingdom of Man—have been flourishing under the invigorating warmth of summer; the Lambs and the Lords of Creation, and the Cookery, just as the appetites of the mortal part of creation has been July'd into its Epicurean Climax. It is a fact just come to our knowledge, that two hundred dozens of pine-apples were sold in one day at Covent Garden Market for five shillings; and ham-knuckles may be boiled in a whole twelve of that fine-hearted vegetable, for which only twopence need be disbursed by the caterers. It almost follows that there should be a scarcity among the hams and a surfeit among the tailors.

Parliament in the meanwhile keeps up its debating, though rather in a chit-chat style. The Railway question has become a matter of great fun, and, except when the questions are grett, the houses are small. Privilege has continued to be a topic of conversation, but no coup de main has come off. Smith O'Brien, and "Sir Tom and Sir John" have been much interrogated their contumacy, and although some unparliamentary action against some parliamentary witness has been stopped in limine, yet the Sergeant at-Arms has been trusted to the original commission with some sincerure, and has not been ordered to take the Queen's Bench into custody.

The "Enclosing of the Commons" has been an interesting theme among the legislators; and at first blush of the matter it is the poor man's goose is for the moment forgotten in the startling idea that the Commons of England are to undergo imprisonment, and that the House is about to be enclosed. Heaven forefend—whatever they may do with the Commons in the open air —that they should shut up the elect of St. Stephen's, and do this stifling weather place the politic.ans of the nation in the durance of a Parliamentary Quod!

Macaulay's Bill for applying to the Scotch Universities the same principles which Ministers are applying to the New Irish Colleges, was thrown out on Wednesday, but with a majority for Government of only eight—the numbers being 108 and 116. This was close shaving, for a vital resistance, and appears to have been driving much too near to defeat. When Sa'fe hired his conscience, he did not take the man who said he could go within a hair's breadth of the precipice, but the man who said he wouldn't go near it at all. Peel should apply the distancing principle to his divisions, as being safer to the chances of Ministerial existence. The Government experienced in the debate some hard rubs at the hands of their opponents. It was rather a difficult fix, in truth, which obliged it, upon the same question of collegiate education, to resist in Scotland what they were urging in Ireland with all their might. Lord John Russell came out quite poetical with a simile to the point. He said, "There is an old story of two knights meeting upon different sides of a shield, and one saw the side which was blazoned on the side with silver, and that the one knight maintained that the shield was white and the other that it was black, and they fought a desperate battle, and were ready to peril their lives for the sake of the maintenance of their opinions. One would think that each, trusting to his own eyesight, acted honestly and faithfully. But to tell one of the knights to come round to the black side, and say that the shield was entirely black, and then go to the white side and say it was entirely white (a laugh), and to claim credit after that for acting upon a conscientious view, is really what no fiction could have supposed, and what, until this night, no one ever imagined would be realised in the conduct of an Administration in this country." (Cheers)

Macaulay, poet, historian, scholar, and statesman, spoke out, amidst broad cheering, in even bolder terms:—"I am indignant at the idea of a joint-equation, because he thinks we shall be teaching our neighbours the science of wooden walls. The Commodore is a jolly old tar, and there may be some reason in his philosophy; but, nevertheless, it is a noble sight for the mental eyes of Civilization to gaze upon the union of the prowess of the two greatest nations of the world, to sweep the seas in the name of Freedom, and make the badge of liberty an earthquake wherever it was a slave."

Bunn has closed Old Drury with what Plausibility would designate a good deal of address. He spoke a Farewell, in which he recited the properties of his management, and then with an earnest bow and a broad, unconcumum about his own management the harmless indulgence of an egotistical joy.

The Memoirs of Lady Hester Stanhope, published by her physician, are making a little literary noise; and the present Earl Stanhope writes to the Times in fair mood of annoyance. He seems to think that physicians have no business to prattle just upon what they see, but upon what they hash of Lady Hester's makes a very piquant-plat. What a masculine imp of merriment she was; caring for nothing she said—nothing she did—nothing for any body's opinion, and every thing for her own. The Pet of Pitt, what a beginning of lie was here; how full of calamitous indifference its middle—how strange and eccentric its end. And now out comes her biography in the teeth of society, with all its wild unrest and all its reckless personality

Last week we recorded that Henry Lytton Bulwer had been made a Privy Councillor. The diplomatist is getting on; what has become of the novelist. While Disraeli is writing such novels as "Coningsby" and "Sybil," where is Sir Edward? Are his books to be lost in his Baronetcy?

What a batch of electioneering we have had, and into what elevation of dignity has Thesiger suddenly mounted. We suppose he will be the youngest judge on the bench, when Fitzroy Kelly is Lord Chancellor. He is now returned for Abingdon after a contest with a military rival—fairly enough carried on as between man and man, but with no very creditable evidences of the independence of the borough. Kelly has a much harder fight for Chanchellorship which, indeed, is confined to the bar; but for the ungraciousness of that delay in his appointment to the Solicitor-Generalship, which prevented his accepting Exeter last week. As a lawyer, he would have walked wrestling for the mastery of Solicitor-General with Austin's critics and patriot, who left only too soon the path of eminence along which, by genius and integrity, he was so proudly led. Already we are glad to find the design of a splendid monument to his memory originated by the county in which he was born.

It has been pleasing to us to observe that the noble spirit of Charity is glowing around us with a warmth kindred to the sunny influences of the season.

The magnificent manner in which the benevolence of the merchant herd of England has exhibited itself in favour of the suffering citizens of Quebec, is every way creditable to the national character: a similar munificence towards the surviving family of the unfortunate Mr. Raggett, who perished amid the ruins of his house and his fortunes, has (we see by this day's papers) been of splendid growth, and the liberality with which the people of our manufacturing towns have paid tribute to the memory of Hood, has proved that literature is not unfostered in the toiling places of the land.

A correspondent of the Times complains bitterly of the folly of the Jesuits in Belgium, and hints that conversion to Popery is going on as fast as railway speculation in this money-cultivating region of Great Britain.

A voluntary meeting of leading auctioneers, with Mr. Raisy at their head convened for the purpose of suppressing sharp practice in the profession and discouraging certain evil suspicious alliances between auctioneers and solicitors, is one of the wholesome signs of the times. Every step towards honesty is refreshing amid a prevalence of humbug.

And here we head our tired pen's entreaty.

Which hails and ends it, as we write Valete."

THE MARKETS.

CORN-EXCHANGE (Friday). The little English wheat on sale to-day went off at prices quite equal to those of Monday last. The demand for foreign is certainly not by no means brisk. The unsettled state of the weather caused the holders to ask more money for free foreign wheat, but the sellers were not disposed to comply with their demands. There was a slight arrival in grinding barley. The malt trade was rather dull, seeing from the supply being more than equal to the demand. Oats and oatmeal were unaltered. Beans experienced in obtaining late rates. In oats, beans, and peas, no variation ARRIVALS:—English wheat, 6,670 qrs.; barley, 1630; oats, 2160 quarters. Irish: wheat, —; barley, —; oats, 2770 quarters. Foreign: wheat, 1020; barley, —; oats, 5540 quarters. Flour 5500 sacks and 1000 barrels.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 44s to 51s; ditto, white, 47s to 54s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 43s to 50s; ditto, white, 45s to 53s; rye, 30s to 36s; grinding barley, 27s to 30s; distilling, 32s to 36s; ditto, Chevalier, 36s to 38s; malting ditto, 36s to 38s; grey peas, 30s to 32s; maple, 32s to 34s; white, 33s to 36s; boilers, 36s to 38s; beans, Tick, new, 30s to 32s; ditto, old, 32s to 34s; harrow ditto, 32s to 34s; Indian corn, 30s to 32s; Kingston and Ware, 50s to 60s. Chevalier, 60s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 21s to 22s; potato ditto, 22s to 24s; Youghal and Cork, 20s to 21s; ditto, white, 21s to 22s; tick beans, new, 34s to 36s, ditto, old, 36s to 40s; grey peas, 34s to 38s; maple, 38s; white, 34s to 36s; boilers, 36s to 38s; Egyptian, 28s to 30s; flour, per sack, 40s to 45s; ditto, per quarter, 20s to 24s; Suffolk, Stockton, and Yorkshire, 35s to 38s, per 280 lb. Foreign.—Fine wheat, —s to —s; Dantzig, red, 44s to 48s; white, 50s to 52s. Retail.—Barley, per bushel, 27s to 30s; ditto, malting, 36s to 38s; beans, 34s to 36s; peas, 32s to 36s per quarter. Flour, American, 19s to —, Baltic, 18s to —, per barrel.

The Seed Market.—Linseed cakes still command a steady sale, at full prices. In all kinds of seeds next to nothing doing.

Linseed, English, sowing, 52s to 58s; Baltic, crushing, 40s to 45s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 38s to 40s. Hempseed, 35s to 38s per quarter. Carraway, 18s to 20s, per cwt. Rapeseed, Mustard seed, 8s to 12s; white ditto, 12s to 14s. Tares, 6s 6d to 7s 6d, per bushel. English Rapeseed, fine to £27, per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £11 to £11 5s.; ditto, foreign, £7 7s to £7 10s per 1000. Rapeseed cakes £5 5s to 5s 6d; ditto Baltic, £5 5s per quarter. English clover seed, per lb. 5d to 56s; ditto, 52s to 64s; white ditto 62s; extra ditto, up to 65s. Foreign, red, 42s to 45s; extra ditto, white 50s to 52s, extra, 70s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the Metropolis are from 7d to 8d; of household ditto, 5d to 6d, per 4lb loaf.

Imported Weekly Average.—Wheat, 47s 11d.; barley, 21s 10d; oats, 21s 8d; rye, 31s; beans, 35s 10d; peas, 36s 5d.

Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 47s 7d; barley, 29s 10d; oats, 22s 7d; rye, 31s 8d; beans, 36s 4d.; peas, 37s 1d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 20s; barley, 9s.; oats, 6s; rye, 10s 6d; beans, 4s 6d; peas, 4s 6d.

Cools (Friday).—New Tanfield, 12s 6d, West Wylam, 14s 3d, ditto, 14s 3d; Riddell's, 14s 9d; Wharncliffe, 15s; Eden Main, 15s 6d; Adelaide, 16s 9d; Adelaide, 16s 6d per cwt.

Hay and Straw.—Coarse meadow hay, 45s 1ls to 4l 14s; useful ditto, 4l 14s to 4l 5s 5s; fine ditto, 4l 5s to 4l 15s; clover ditto, 4l 15s to 5l 10s; new ditto, 3l 10s to 4l 5s; straw, 1l 18s to 2l 2s; wheat straw, 2l 2s to 2l 5s per load. New meadow hay is selling at from 3l 3s to 4l 4s per load.

Provisions.—We have had a very steady business doing in Irish butter, at full prices. Foreign qualities remain unaltered. The demand for bacon is steady; but not in brisk, and the terms lower. In other kinds of provisions we have no alteration to report.

Hops (Friday).—Pockets of 1844 Sus.: Kents and Sussex, 80s to 90s; Farnhams, —s to —s. Pigs were a slow inquiry, but not cheaper. Mutton cows sold at from £16 to £6 6s each.

Beef, 3s 4d to 4s 4d; mutton, 3s 4d to 4s 6d; veal, 4s to 5s 4d; pork, 3s 4d to 4s 4d; inferior ditto, 2s 8d to 3s 10d; prime ewe ores, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; prime Scots, &c., 4s 4d to 4s 8d; coarse and inferior ores, 3s 8d to 4s 2d; prime Scots, 4s 4d to 4s 6d; prime coarse woolled ewes, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; prime Southdowns ditto, 4s 10d to 5s 1d; large coarse calves, 3s 8d to 4s 4d; small ditto, 4s 4d to 4s 8d; prime ditto, 4s 10d to 5s 2d; large hogs, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; neat small ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10d, prime sucking calves, 18s 6d to 20s 6d; and suckling pigs, 16s 6d to 20s 6d each. Beasts, 2,764; sheep, 14,610; calves, 230; pigs, 280.

[illegible] and Leadenhall Market.—We have very little [illegible]

[illegible] Kenny Hayward

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The English market opened on Monday with an apparent tendency to improve, but, notwithstanding the payment of the dividends, it closes rather flatly. The Commissioners of the National Debt have recommenced their official purchases, and will take 40,000 Stock four times a week, until the 10 h of October next. Under ord nary circumstances, this has usually produced a rise, from its making Money Stock occasionally scarce. The closing quotations are—Bank Stock, 210½ to 211½; India Stock, 267; Three per Cent. Reduced, 99¾, New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cents, 102¾; Exchequer Bills, 56; Consols for the Opening, 99 to ¾.

The Foreign Market has been unusually inactive during the week, and prices have consequently been generally flat. Spanish declined a point on Monday, quoting 26½ to ¾ for the Five per Cents., and 38½ to 39¾ for the Three per Cents. Some good purchases, however, improved these quotations, on Tuesday, to 27¾ for the former, and 38½ to ¾ for the latter. These prices have been since maintained, and are about the closing quotation. Mexican remains at the same value as by the previous advices received by the Oxford packet, some fears being entertained that a collision might ultimately arise between Mexico and the United States. The Actives closed flatly at 40¼. There is nothing doing in Portuguese, Dutch, or Russian Stocks. Columbian remains about 17¾ to 18; Brazilian is 91 for the Old, and 88 for the New Bonds; Chilian is 101; Peruvian, 20; Portuguese, 65; Belgian, 99; French Five-and-a-Half per Cents., 115.

Although no great activity is apparent in the Railway Market, prices are generally well maintained. The South Midland Railway shares have been allotted, and were quoted at a premium of 1 to ¼ on Wednesday. The Eastern and Birmingham Company are said to be favourable to the line, but the Midland Company will only promise not to oppose it. The North Staffordshire Scrip is by no means in request, and the Shares are nominally unchanged, of, its present price being a satisfactory proof of the good opinion in which it is held. A curious circumstance occurred in the course of the evidence offered in the Lifford and York case. Mr. Cobbold, the member for Athlone, stated that since he had seen the Nottingham and Boston prospectus, he felt convinced that Lincolnshire required an outlet for its traffic, and consequently he should support the Nottingham line. This is valuable evidence of the importance of the line, coming, as it does, from a witness who is perfectly disinterested, and who, to render his evidence available to the Lifford and York case, must have devoted much attention to the wants of Lincolnshire generally. Dealings in the French lines are rather increasing. The adjunction of the Great Northern of France is understood to be fixed for August. The line is stated to be in a very forward state, and will be ready for traffic shortly after the Company leasing it are placed in possession. A strong feeling exists, that if the Directors proceed satisfactorily another month's inactivity will give place to a renewal of speculation, causing prices generally, and of Scrips particularly, to improve. The lacquisition of Sir Samuel Scott, Bart., to the Directory of the Great Western, Birmingham and Oxford Junction, 44; Bristol and Exeter, 94½; Ditto (New, 11; Caledonian, 10¾; Cambridge and Lincoln, 3; Chester and Holyhead, 12¾; Great Northern, 19¾; London and Blackwall, 6¾; London and York, 2; Dublin, Belfast, and Coleraine, 2¾; Dublin and Galway, 3¾; Dundalk and Enniskillen, 8½; Eastern Counties, 2⅛; Ditto New, 7⅞; Eastern Union, 4; Hull and Selby, 84; Lancashire and Yorkshire, 21; Manchester Shares, 19½; Ditto New Quarter Shares, 8¾; Great Western, 305; Ditto Half Shares, 113; Guildford, Yarcham, and Portsmouth, 3; Harwich, 1¾; Lancaster and Carlisle, 15¾; London and Brighton, 21; Ditto (New Thirds, 47; Do., 2 Shares, 38; London and Blackwall (Ex. New), 9¾; London and Brighton, 73¾; London and Croydon, 22¾; London and Greenwich, 10¾; London and Northern, 4¾; London and York, 2; Londonderry and Coleraine, 3¾; Londonderry and Enniskillen, 2¾; Lynn and Ely, 5¾; Lynn and Dereham, 2¾, Manchester and Leeds, 168; Ditto Quarters, 24; Manchester and Birmingham, 59; Manchester, Bolton, and Mailock, 3¾; Midland, 191, Ditto New, 28¾, Midland Great Western 16; Newcastle and Darlington Junction, 63¾; Ditto New Branding, 28¾; castle and Berwick 1¾; Newry and Enniskillen, 3¾; Newark and Sneffield, 1¾; North British, 26¾; Ditto New, 6¾; North Staffordshire, 2¾; Norwich and Brandon, 2½; Oxford and Worcester, 6¾; Rugby, Worcester, and Tring, 1¾; Scottish Central, 6¾; Scottish Midland, 3¾; Shrewsbury, Wolverhampton, Dudley, and Birmingham, 3¾; Shrewsbury, Hereford, and North Wales, 3; South Eastern and Dover, 4⅞; Ditto, No. 1, 19; Staines and Richmond, 1; South Wales, 5¾; Trent Valley and Holyhead Junction, 1¾; Waterford and Kilkenny, 2; Welsh Midland, 3¾; Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth, 5¾; York and North Midland, 13; Ditto Scarborough Branch 5¾; Ditto Extension, 2⅛; Great North of France (Lafitte's), 3¾; Ditto (Rothschild's), 2¾; Jamaica Junction, —; Ditto Second Midland Junction, 2¾; Louvain and Jemappe, 5¾; Namur and Liege, 5¾; Orleans and Vierzon, 1¾; Orleans and Bordeaux, 10¾; Over Yssel, 6¾; Paris and Lyons (Lafitte's, 2¾; Paris and Lyons (Commanditaire), 2¾; Paris and Orleans, 6¾; Paris and Rouen, 40¾; Paris and Strasbourg (Ganneron's), 2¾; Sambre and Meuse, 7¾; Tours and Nantes (Mackenzie's), 3¾; Verona and Ancona, 2¾; West Flanders, 4.

SATURDAY EVENING.—There was no alteration of any importance in either the English or Foreign Markets yesterday. The Share Market was rather dull. A rich sensation was created by the Report of the Committee on the South Eastern case, with reference to the North Kent Line, and the Attorney to the Board of Ordnance. The Chairman of the Committee on the Epping Branch of the Blackwall Railway, declared the preamble proved, an arrangement having been en'ered into with the Eastern Counties Company not to proceed further than Old Ford.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, JULY 8.

THE BROAD AND NARROW GAUGES.—APPOINTMENT OF THE COMMISSION. WHITEHALL, JULY 5.—Her Majesty has been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, appointing Sir Frederick Smith, Lieutenant-Colonel Reid Smith, Lieutenant-Colonel Sir James Lefroy, late Inspector General of Railways; George Biddle Airy, Esq., Astronomer, Observator in her Majesty's Observatory at Greenwich; Peter Barlow, Esq., Professor of Mathematics in the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, to be her Majesty's Commissioners for inquiring whether in future power shall be given to Railway Companies for the construction of railways, having a greater or less breadth than seven feet; and, if such power should be granted, whether it would be expedient and practicable to take measures for securing an uniform gauge, and whether it would be expedient and practicable to take measures for securing an uniform gauge, and to inquire whether any other mode of obtaining the same object would be more expedient and practicable, and to report their opinion thereon, and to make such other inquiries connected with the matters aforesaid as may be necessary to enable them to report their opinion thereon, and to make such other inquiries connected with the matters aforesaid as may be necessary to enable them to report their opinion thereon, which are represented as likely to arise from the want of an uniform gauge, could be adopted.

BANKRUPTS.—H. HARRIS, Covington grove, Camberwell, and Cole-street, Dover road, blue salesman. G. PO..OCK, Bruton-street, Berkeley-square, and Bond-street, Bond-street, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

CAPTAIN SIBORNE'S MODELS. — The Original Large MODEL of the BATTLE of WATERLOO has just OPENED at the EGYPTIAN HALL, Piccadilly, showing, on a surface of 420 square feet, the whole of the hostile armies as they were disposed and engaged when the illustrious Wellington passed the Victor. "Admirably have Captain Siborne and his artists executed their task. Napoleon, Ney, Wellington, Blucher, Bulow, Picton, Ponsonby, Alten, Gordon, Hill, Uxbridge, Somerset, Hamilton, Halkett, Kempt, Pack, Adam, Colborne, Maitland, Byng, Clinton, Cooke, Chassé, Van Merlen, Perponcher, Saxe Weimar, Duplat, Bylandt, Ompteda, Kielmansegge, Alava, Constant Rebecque, Müffling, Gneisenau, Muffling, Gneisenau, Muffling, Gneisenau, Mu

SHINNIE, BY THE CLUB OF TRUE HIGHLANDERS, ON BLACKHEATH.

CAMANACH'D OR SHINNIE.

We here present to our readers the match of this ancient Scottish game, which was played on Monday week (June 30), by the members of the Club of True Highlanders. The spot selected for the sport was Blackheath, and he mustering-place the "Princess of Wales." A considerable party of the members, accompanied by their friends and numerous visitors, numbering several ladies, were early at the appointed spot. The game, which is played with a hard ball and curved sticks, (the merit of which consists in sending the ball beyond a given boundary,) then commenced, and was kept up with much spirit until near five o'clock, during which time many clever hits were made, and many a blow on the shin both given and received; all the players being in full Highland costume. The piper, too, was in attendance, and kept up the hilarity of the day by performances of celebrated Scotch airs. After the game was concluded, the party retired to the "Princess of Wales," where a sumptuous repast was provided, and passed the remainder of the evening in mirth and good fellowship:—

> And sure and a' they're nae to blame
> For sounding out each hero's fame,
> Wi' kilt well buckled round his wame,
> Wha played wi' 'em at shinnie

The above Club was established in the year 1815, for the relief of distressed natives of Scotland, and the preservation of the music, costume, and sports of the Gael. After an existence of thirty years, and numerous distributions from their funds, they have still a considerable sum in hand, which is fast accumulating, and will enable them more effectually to alleviate the distresses of those whom misfortune has overtaken distant from their natal soil and their own country friends.

The members of the Club hold their usual meetings at the Crown and Anchor Tavern, Strand.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

The present state of affairs at this theatre is such as to excite universal wonder. So overflowing is the number of artists engaged, that it must require no small ingenuity to give to each the opportunity of display. Frequently an occasion is afforded of hearing, on the same evening, seven or eight of the greatest vocal performers of the age, each of whom has been the "bright particular star" of a Continental theatre; while in the ballet, the difficulties created by the contending claims of the great ballerine who now belong to the troupe, have been obviated by the simultaneous appearance of two or three at least of them; while on Saturday next all four will rivalise their claims for public applause. Certainly, nothing could be more calculated for effect than the appearance, at the same time, of these four dancers, each possessing a style so peculiarly her own, and each straining in that style the highest degree of perfection. The buoyant joyousness of Cerito; the stately elegance—the classical poses of Grahn; the graceful archness of Carlotta Grisi; the simplicity—the poetry—the intellectuality of Taglioni's dancing; all these form contrasts of a most perfect and most delightful order. Such a combination has not been witnessed for many years, and will not be again for many more—for the déesse de la danse, Taglioni, after this year abandons her throne to her fair rivals, who, excellent as they are in their art, have hardly yet learnt to do it so much justice, or to raise it to so high a standard. With such a troupe as now exists at this theatre, while variety is ensured, the highest possible standard of excellence is raised for the public taste.

On Saturday and Tuesday last, "Il Giuramento" and "I Puritani," by her Majesty's desire, were repeated; and, in contrasting these operas, how much is the comparison in favour of the sweet-flowing melodies of the gifted Bellini! In this opera, however, a defect we so often have occasion to comment upon impairs the effect of the composer's inspirations—the plot is unconnected, and occasionally incomprehensible, and this is the more to be regretted as the subject is happily chosen, and even in its present form affords much scope for pictorial effect. The characters of the two sturdy Puritans, Giorgio and Riccardo, with their martial ardour, their stern fanaticism, only softened in both by their affection for the daughter of the elder of them, are most dramatically elicited in the splendid duet "Suoni la tromba," while the picturesque and appropriate costume, the dignified and expressive gestures, and the imposing figures of Lablache and Fornasari, heighten admirably the whole effect. This is the moment chosen by our artists. One great charm of the performance of this opera, in addition to the intrinsic merit of the music, is the perfect ensemble of the great artists who enact it, and who from long habit are perfectly at home in their respective parts. As to its different morceaux, the execution of such arias as the lovely "Vieu diletto in Ciel la Luna," the polacca by Grisi, and Mario's "Credea si misera," &c., are so well known to every dilettante as to need no comment.

Donnetti's "Anna Bolena" was the opera selected for Thursday's performance. This opera—given but once or twice last year—presents one novelty in the cast; in other respects, filled by artists who are as much adapted to it by nature as they are by habit. Moriani's execution of this music is, however, in every respect a novelty. The beautiful "Vivi tu," which we have been always accustomed to hear garnished with the most intricate fioriture, is by him given with perfect simplicity, and with hardly a single alteration from the score. Opinions will, of course, vary with difference of taste, as to the superior effect of this simplicity and severity of style; but it must, at least, be conceded, that it is a far higher test of the intrinsic merit of the music itself, and likely to raise a better and purer standard of taste.

SCENE FROM "I PURITANI," AT HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—LABLACHE AND FORNASARI.

PRESENTATION OF THE CALCUTTA ADDRESS TO THE QUEEN.—When Dwarkanauth Tagore paid his first visit to this country, he was honoured by being made the medium through which the city of Calcutta received a very great and well-appreciated compliment—namely, a present from the Queen and Prince Albert, of their full length portraits. These have been placed in the Town hall of Calcutta, and are represented to be admirable likenesses of the Royal donors. In acknowledgment of the honour thus conferred, the inhabitants of "the City of Palaces" unanimously voted an Address to the Sovereign, and took the opportunity of Dwarkanauth Tagore's second visit to this country to have it presented to her Majesty. Dwarkanauth Tagore was honoured on Monday with an audience of the Queen and Prince Albert, when he presented the Calcutta Address, which was most graciously received by her Majesty. At the same time she condescended to prolong the interview, by expressing the warm interest she felt in her Indian dominions, and by making numerous inquiries relative to them, which showed considerable familiarity with the subject. Her Majesty and Prince Albert closed the audience by presenting Dwarkanauth Tagore with their miniatures, exquisitely copied from the well known portraits by Winterhalter. On Monday evening he had the further honour of joining the Royal party at the Palace, and of being introduced by the Queen to her illustrious relatives, the King and Queen of the Belgians, both of whom expressed a lively interest towards India

MR. C. MATHEWS AND HIS CREDITORS.—Mr. Commissioner Law (of the Insolvent Debtors' Court) has finished the audit of debts under the insolvency of Mr. C. Mathews in the year 1942. The debts proved amount to about £1300, and a dividend has been declared on the same of 4½d. in the pound. The debts originally appeared on the schedule at £37,000, and upwards.

THE MURDER IN THE SLOOP "WASP."—The names of the officers and men of her Majesty's sloop Wasp, who were risen upon and murdered whilst in charge of the Brazilian schooner Felicidade, on the 3rd of March last, have been received at the Admiralty; they are as follow:—Mr. Palmer, midshipman; James Mullens, A.B., Edward Marshall, A.B., James Mitchell, A.B., Thomas Barfoot, A.B., James Beynon, Ord. George Godding, Ord. Thomas Gould, private Royal Marines, 3d class; Jack Andrews, krooman, Joe Wilson, ditto. The ten men (eight Brazilians and two Spaniards) charged with this offence, have arrived at Plymouth, and have undergone an examination at the Guildhall there. The case is still in progress.

A letter from Rome states that an English company was in treaty with the Pontifical Government for the construction of railroads through the Papal dominions. Their offers were said to be most advantageous. They required the concession of the lines only during 50 years, and they undertook to complete at their own expense the famous church of St. Paul, near Rome, and to give 50,000 scudi to the congregation De Propaganda fide. The company was said to possess already a capital of 32,000,000 scudi.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198 Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, JULY 12, 1845.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 168.—Vol. VII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JULY 19, 1845. [Sixpence.

THE LAWS OF WAR.

The impossibility of dispensing with laws and regulations among mankind, is proved by the fact, that when civil society is broken up, and peace and order destroyed, a kind of code is established even or that state of things, and is quite as rigorously carried into effect as the one it supersedes. Thus the Laws of War are as distinctly recognised as those of Peace, and cannot be broken without bringing disgrace and infamy on those who infringe them: if both sides cease to observe this unwritten compact, war, bad as it is under its least repulsive aspect, degenerates into something the contemplation of which sickens and disgusts, and produces a feeling which it could be wished existed against war in any and every shape whatever. Enemies equally matched, conceive a mutual respect, which, when the struggle of the battle-field is over, leads each side to treat prisoners and wounded with humanity; the former, being defenceless, are spared insult or injury: the latter are not altogether disregarded, though the best intentions rarely having at such times the most effective means to work with, cannot prevent the occurrence of a hideous mass of human suffering. The history of the Peninsular War presents many instances of this sort of chivalrous feeling exhibited between the French and English armies; between the French troops and the Spanish peasantry, however, the conflict was very different; the "Laws of War" were disregarded—every atrocity was retaliated by another—and the whole struggle was a bloody series of massacre and assassination. It is, unhappily, not difficult to account for this. The natives of a country held by a foreign invader feel far more fiercely and bitterly than the soldier of another land, called in to defend them only in the discharge of his professional duty, indifferent whether he has to meet the invading force there or anywhere else. Men of a common calling, however opposed, have a certain professional understanding, and will rarely carry their enmity beyond the point of necessity; the enmity ceases when the power to resist is gone.

But even this very negative alleviation of the horrors of war, which cannot always be depended on even among the best disciplined troops, ceases to exist in two cases—civil war, and the war of a civilised race with savages. Inhumanity of men during civil conflict is proverbial, though of the same country and language. If divided by religion or allegiance, their hatred is more intense, their violence more unscrupulous, their passion more unsparing, than if oceans rolled between their climes, and they were utter strangers to each other's speech. We need not draw examples from the past; we have seen them in our own time; nothing in history is worse than the cruelties of the Carlists and Christinos in the late civil war in Spain.

In the other case, that of a war with barbarians or savages, humanity is equally outraged; and here, we must say, the crime on the part of the civilised man is the deeper. In the first place, his education has taught him much of which the savage is ignorant; and in the next, his wealth and skill make him the stronger, and the contest, unequal as it must be under any circumstances, ought not to be rendered a disgrace to humanity by atrocities committed by the strong on the weak—cruelties which the purposes of conquest or policy cannot require, and which the sternest necessity cannot excuse.

An act of needless and ruthless savagery, recently perpetrated by a portion of the French army of occupation in Algiers, has excited the detestation of Europe, and we are glad to see that it is visited by severe condemnation in France, the language of nearly the whole of the French press being that of severe denunciation. What defence or palliation will be made of the atrocity of stifling upwards of five hundred men, women, and children, like vermin, by fire kept up deliberately for nearly a day and a half, we cannot tell. From the details, which subsequent accounts have too fully confirmed, any kind of defence would seem to be impossible. If they were in arms against the French troops, the "Laws of War," the observance of which by the French armies towards ourselves we have acknowledged, were grossly violated, to the stain and disgrace of soldiership; if they were unresisting, it was a brutal and cowardly murder.

We have on a former occasion remarked on the utter failure of the French attempt to colonise the district of the North of Africa they have seized, but can be scarcely said to possess. They have devastated the land, and put an end to cultivation and commerce; they have fallen on the soil like a blighting curse, and after years of trial the natives are more inimical to them than ever. Will not such acts as this make their hatred fiercer? The whole history of the French occupation of Algiers is a deplorable one: it was begun with little or no purpose, has proved a continual drain on the resources of France, without any return; has caused a frightful loss of life to her army, which, though drawn from among a people who are passionately fond of military glory, has become gradually demoralised and degraded by the nature of the service, till men are to be found among it capable of perpetrating a deed like this, at which the world shudders, and visits with disgust and contempt the folly, or the fatality, that has changed the warriors of Marengo and Austerlitz to a band of cowardly and merciless chauffeurs. Most sincerely do we sympathise with the people of France, who, we hope, will disown and punish this worst deed of the worst part of its army, for the stigma thrown by it on the French name. Such events as this, wherever they occur, are really national calamities.

NEW PAS DE QUATRE, BY MDLLES. TAGLIONI, C. GRISI, L. GRAHN, AND CERITO, AT HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

The past week's performances at Her Majesty's Theatre have been signalised by an event unparalleled in theatrical annals, and one which, some two score years hence, may be handed down to a new generation by garrulous septuagenarians as one of the most brilliant reminiscences of days gone by. The appearance of four such dancers as Taglioni, Cerito, Carlotta Grisi, and Lucile Grahn, on the same boards, and in the same pas, is truly what our Gallic neighbours call "une solennité théatrale," and such a one as none of those who behold it are likely to witness again. It was therefore as much a matter of curiosity as of interest to hurry to the Theatre to witness this spectacle, but every other feeling was merged in admiration when the four great dancers commenced the series of picturesque groupings with which this performance opens. We can safely say we have never witnessed a scene more perfect in all its details. The greatest of painters, in his loftiest flights, could hardly have conceived, certainly never executed, a group more faultless and more replete with grace and poetry than that formed by these four danseuses: Taglioni in the midst, her head thrown backwards, apparently reclining in the arms of her sister nymphs. Could such a combination have taken place in the ancient palmy days of art, the pencil of the painter and the song of the poet would have alike been employed to perpetuate its remembrance. No description can render the exquisite, and almost ethereal grace, of movement and attitude of these great dancers, and those who have witnessed the scene, may boast of having once, at least, seen the perfection of the art of dancing in little more than its infancy. There was no affectation, no apparent exertion or struggle for effect on the part of these artistes gritées; and though they displayed their utmost resources, there was a simplicity and ease, the absence of which would have completely broken the spell that fascinated the scene. Of the details of this performance it is difficult to speak. In the solo steps executed by each danseuse, each in turn seemed to claim pre-eminence. Where every one in her own style is perfect, peculiar individual taste alone may balance in favour of one or the other, but the award of public applause must be equally bestowed; and, for our own part, we confess that our penchant for the peculiar style, and our admiration for the dignity, the repose, and exquisite pose, which characterise Taglioni, and the dancer who has so brilliantly followed the same track (Lucile Grahn), did not prevent our warmly appreciating the charming archness and twinkling steps of Carlotta Grisi, or the wonderful flights and the astounding bounds of Cerito. Though, as we have said, each displayed her utmost powers, the emulation of the fair dancers was, if we may trust appearances, unaccompanied by envy.

Every time a shower of bouquets descended, on the conclusion of a solo pas of one or the other of the fair ballerine, her sister dancers came forward to assist her in collecting them; and both on Saturday and Tuesday Carlotta Cerito offer to crown Taglioni with a wreath which had been thrown in [illegible] the dance. We were also glad to see on the part of the audience [illegible] meaning than had been displayed two or three years since, on the performance of a pas de deux between Elsler and Cerito. The applause was universal, and equally distributed. This, however, did not take from the excitement of the scene. The house, crowded to the roof, presented a most animated and brilliant faces, never diverted for a moment from the performance; and the extraordinary tumult of enthusiastic applause, joined to the delightful effect of the spectacle presented, imparted to the whole scene an interest and excitement the most rare to be imagined. Such was the effect produced on us by this matchless performance, that the lyrical portion of the entertainments has been comparatively disregarded. We must not, as passed, however, neglect to notice the admirable performance of Marie, on Tuesday, in "Il Prata." He surpassed himself in every portion of the opera. The "Ta ta vedrai" was admirably given, especially the first part. The second movement was more energy and passion than this artist has yet given to it.

On Thursday night there was an immense assembly, including her Majesty, Prince Albert, the Queen Dowager, &c., to listen to Mozart's charming opera of "Cosi fan Tutte." The principal parts were sustained by Madame Castellan, Rossi Caccia, and Ronconi. Bosio as the three soprani, but the weight of the beautiful work fell on Lablache, the younger Lablache, and Ronconi. The overtures of the tenor and two basel, compensated to a great degree for the deficiency of the lady vocalists, who, evidently, were strangers to the lovely strains of Mozart. The Quatuor of danseuses excited, as usual, the most unbounded enthusiasm.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.

The Paris papers all join in reprobating the [illegible] of cruelty practised by the French troops in Algeria towards a body of Arabian prisoners. We give an account of this atrocity under the head of Algeria.

In the Chamber of Peers the Prince of Moskowa asked Marshal Soult if it were true that a French Colonel had rendered himself culpable by an unjustifiable unaccountable act of fact, by causing a body of unarmed unfortunate Arabian prisoners—an act unheard of, unexampled, and unprecedented in the military history of France. He then read to the assembly the account, and called on the Minister of War, for the honour of the French army, to contradict the statement if false, or to make an example of Colonel Pelissier if it were true. Marshal Soult replied that the reports he had received were so contradictory that he had instituted an inquiry for fresh information; and added, that the moment he should obtain the particulars he had demanded, he would lay them before the Chamber. The Marshal then expressed his personal disapprobation of the fact, but the expression not being considered strong enough by M Montalembert, he added that he sincerely deplored it.

The two Englishmen (Williams and Parker) in whose possession four stolen Bank of England notes were found, have been tried and convicted in Paris, and sentenced Parker to be imprisoned for one, and Williams for eight months. The bank notes were confiscated, but 240 sovereigns in gold, and 400f. in silver, were returned to Williams, in whose possession they had been found.

The Royal Court of Paris has decided that, duelling constituting no crime or offence, there was no cause for proceedings to be instituted against M. Rosemond de Beauvallon, and the four seconds who figured in the duel which terminated in the death of M Dujarrier, responsible editor of the Presse.

It appears by the description of the persons to be shipped off during the Paris papers, that, of the 150 gaping wretches rescued from death, only survived. The total number of victims is, therefore, upwards of 600.

The Chamber of Peers has agreed to the law for carrying the branch lines from Dieppe and Fecamp to the Havre railroad, and from Aix to the Avignon line, by 97 votes to 6

In the same Chamber, the bill granting 28,709,600f. for the improvement of several harbours in France has been adopted, by 98 votes to 2. The bill demanding 13 000,000f. for the improvement of the harbours of Toulon and of Port Vendres has been also voted, by 103 to 1.

Letters from the south of France describe the present harvest as truly magnificent. All the hay (an immense crop) had been gathered in. The reaping of rye had become general, and that of wheat had progressed admirably. In short, a finer or more abundant season had not been known in that part of the country. More north ward that is, in the vicinity of Paris—the hay had also been saved. The grain was fine, and a very important matter in France particularly; the straw was of unusual length.

The Chamber of Peers commenced on Tuesday the discussion on the Budget of Expenditure for 1846. M. Dubouchage entered into a long argument to show that the balance in the receipts and expenditure announced in the King's speech had not been realised, and that the deficit now amounted, to upwards of 200,000,000f. M. de Boissy, who spoke next, reprobated various acts of the Administration, and, amongst others, the appointment of public functionaries to seats in the Legislature. In the course of his speech, he asked the Minister of Finance what the intentions were relative to the reduction of the interest of the Five per Cent. stock. The Minister replied, that having refused to make known in the other house, the intentions of the Government on that subject, he felt bound not to reply to M. de Boissy's question.

SPAIN.

INSURRECTION IN CATALONIA.

There have been some insurrectionary movements in Catalonia, which have led to loss of life, and at first they were considered to be very formidable. The Journal des Débats gives the following narrative of these disturbances.

"Disturbances took place in the district of Barcelona, on the 5th inst., in consequence of the quinta or levy of recruits [illegible] for the military service. Barcelona and its district had hitherto, we should observe, been exempt from that exaction. On the 6th, the day fixed for the operation, it was resisted on different points. At Molins del Rey, San Andres, Sabadell, Tarassa, Badalona, Esparraguera, Colders, and San Feliu de Llobregat. Serious excesses, it appears, were committed, and which were attended in some places with loss of life. At Badalona the riots were torn down and burnt, and two policemen killed; at Tarassa, the Alcalde was murdered; and at San Andres the inhabitants drove out the authorities, and fired upon them. At Molins del Rey [illegible] the quinta was drawn at the stage coaches."

Private letters from Barcelona of a date anterior to the forenoon, state that a number of persons, armed with pistols and daggers, were arrested on the 5th, in the act of distributing proclamations, calling on the Catalonians to fight and die for their ancle à fueros. On the 6th not a row was to be seen in the streets; the troops remained under arms, and the conscripts having all had into the convents, the quinta was drawn at the town hall, in presence of their relatives and friends. At San Andres de Palomar, a village [illegible] the insurgents were marched to their assistance, who, on reaching the [illegible] fingers entering barricades. A charge of cavalry, however, dispersed them, and 300 individuals, all natives of Barcelona, were brought back prisoners to that city.

As far as can be ascertained at present, the insurrection in Catalonia is confined to the districts in the neighbourhood of Barcelona, and as the [illegible] ones which have roused the people to this line of a local nature, it is probable that it will not spread further. General Concha is taking vigorous measures to put down the disturbance [illegible] on the afternoon of the 8th, with 2000 men and 6 pieces of artillery, [illegible] which he attacked, killing 25 of the insurgents, and taking 25 of the insurgents prisoners. The [illegible] of the insurgents, the remainder [illegible] Villafranca had declared in favour of the insurrection.

Letters from Barcelona of the 10th instant, state that the capture of Tarrassa had been attended with much slaughter. General Concha was pursuing the insurgents [illegible] at the head of 1200 men with the bayonet against the insurgents [illegible] The general had marched from Tarrassa to Martorell, on the road to Barcelona. A Carlist Junta had established itself at Igualada, whose first act was to invite Espartero to return, and to proclaim the Constitution of 1812, which fixed the majority of the Queen at 14 years. On the 10th, all the troops that could be spared with were sent from Barcelona to reinforce the columns operating against the insurgents. Barcelona was tranquil, but the authorities had [illegible] and lodged in the citadel a number of individuals implicated in the late insurrectionary movements.

Our advices from Paris state that the French Government had received a despatch dated Barcelona, the 13th, announcing that General Concha had entered Igualada without striking a blow, that the members of the Junta had dispersed, and that the revolt was almost entirely [illegible]

ALGERIA.

BURNING OF ARABS BY THE FRENCH TROOPS.

The Akhbar, of Algiers, of the 5th inst., contains a recital of an atrocious act of barbarity committed by the French in Algiers. It says:—

"There has been no exaggeration in the accounts of those terrible events which deeply affect those who witness them, even when convinced of their frightful necessity, and when they are justified in declaring that everything possible was done to prevent the catastrophe. It is known that the corps commanded by Colonels Pelissier, St. Arnaud, and de l'Admirault have been carrying on combined operations in the west. Colonel Pelissier was busy in pursuing the Ouled Riahs, who have now at last submitted, as they live in immense caverns where it would be madness for the troops to enter. On the 18th of June, finding themselves closely pursued, the Ouled Riahs flew to their usual place of refuge. After having surrounded the caverns, some faggots were lighted and thrown by the French troops before the entrance. After this demonstration, which was made to convince the Arabs that the French had the power, if they pleased, of suffocating them in their hiding place, the colonel threw in letters offering to allow life and liberty if they would surrender their arms and their horses. At first they refused, but subsequently they replied that they would consent if the French troops would withdraw. This condition was considered inadmissible, and more burning faggots were thrown. A great tumult now arose, and it was known afterwards that it arose as to the question as to whether there should be a war to the knife or to surrender or not. The party opposed to a surrender carried their point, and a few of the minority made their escape. Colonel Pelissier, wishing to spare the lives of those who remained in the cavern, sent some Arabs to exhort them to surrender. They refused, and some women, who did not partake of the savage fanaticism of the majority, attempted to fly, but their husbands and relations fired upon them to prevent their escape from the martyrdom which they themselves were about to suffer. Colonel Pelissier then stopped the throwing of the burning faggots, and sent a French officer to hold a parley with the Ouled Riahs, but his messenger was received with a discharge of firearms, and could not perform his mission. The state of things continued till the night of the 19th, when, losing all patience, and no longer having hope of otherwise subduing these fanatics, who formed a perpetual nucleus of revolt in the country, the fire was renewed, and ended in the burning to the ashes of the body of natives who were in possession of Flagstaff hill and the gullies between the upper and lower blockhouses. I did not enter the house to see their dead bodies, but remained outside on a platform in front, where the seamen from the Hazard were working two field guns, assisted by — Hector, Esq., and two of the town's people (old soldiers, I believe), in the second firing, as there was room for no more on the platform. They fired from the sloping ground on each side of the blockhouse towards the rear of the building, and on the natives on the adjoining hill, behind the blockhouse in front of the barracks, which was covered with brushwood. A very sharp fire was kept up by the natives, and was well and effectually returned by us; this continued all the morning, two or three of the seamen and a party of my regiment also assisted Mr. Campbell in the block house, as many as had room; the remainder were in the stockade with the seamen and town's people, commanded by Lieutenant Hedgcock, R.N.

"After a considerable time I went down to the stockade to get some ammunition for the ship guns, and left Ensign Campbell in charge. The fire soon after ceased firing, nor was it afterwards renewed, it had lasted for some hours. Immediately after the first attack one Captain Robertson's party, in the morning, the natives on that side of the town retired in a body from the town towards Matawai Bay, carrying off their dead and wounded. The body of natives who had surprised and taken the blockhouse on Flag staff hill, were the assailants of the lower block-house, held by the military; the stockade Mr. Polack's house) was at no time attacked or threatened, the lower block-house commanding, and prevented such an attempt. A party of seven or eight of the town's people from the stockade skirmished with the natives on the hill to the left of the block house, with the exception of this, the force in the stockade was not engaged during the day since the attack in which Captain Robertson was wounded at daybreak.

"Immediately on my arrival at the stockade to obtain ammunition, I suggested to Captain Robertson the urgent necessity of sending the women and children on board the ship Hazard, seeing Mr. Polack's house and cellars were crowded with them. Shortly after they got on board, the magazine, which was in the same house, blew up; the building was completely destroyed, and fortunately no officers or seamen were injured; Lieut Morgan, R.N., received a slight wound in the shoulder from the explosion. Whether the explosion occurred by accident or was the work of an incendiary remains unknown.

"A council was held on board her Majesty's ship Hazard, when it was agreed to evacuate the town, which was done, the town's-people embarking first; the property of natives in the block house were the last to embark. During the embarkation Mr. Polack commanded

A private letter, dated Auckland, March 28th, says: "The settlement at the Bay of Islands is now completely swept away—not a house is standing; a church and block houses are in the course of erection. All is exciting ment. alarm, and dismay. Most of the stores are cleared of their valuable stocks, which have been shipped on board the Slave Castle for Sydney, and the cabins are nearly all taken up for ladies and families who are being sent away. The whole town is in a ferment not easy to imagine, much less to describe. At least £40,000 worth of property is lost. Russell has nothing left in the world but his schooner, the Russell, and that is part sold and paid for by th Maories at Opotiki. Polack has, of course, lost everything he had at Kororarika."

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

Great preparations are being made in Bonn for the Beethoven festival, at which the Queen of England and Prince Albert are confidently expected to attend.

The Augsburgh Gazette has the following from Aleppo, June 3:—"The Pasha of the Pachalic of Damascus have gained a great victory over the Arabs, who had surrounded the town of Hama. They took 1000 prisoners, of whom they beheaded 230, and immense booty."

The Grand Duke of Nuremberg had a narrow escape on the 5th inst. Whilst at Ludwigsburg, seeing some experiments with a newly invented cannon ball, one of the projectiles burst close to his Majesty, but, fortunately, the pieces took a contrary direction. An officer and some men were slightly wounded.

According to a letter from Ostrovo, in Poland, dated June 30, the Russian General, Tolstoy, assassinated, with his own hand, in open day, at Warsaw, an unhappy hackney-coachman, who had committed the "crime" of slightly touching the sleeve of his uniform as he passed him! In vain the poor coachman threw himself on his knees before him, and begged his pardon; the General wounded him to his wounded dignity, without the least pity.

An importation has recently taken place of wild nutmegs, d-vested of the shell, in an American vessel from New York. The tariff contains two rates of duty for the article, viz., nutmegs, 3s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per lb., and wild nutmegs, in the shell, 3d. per lb. After some difficulty, these nutmegs were admitted at the low rate of duty.

The new steam basin at Portsmouth will be proceeded with immediately, the ground being now in the hands of Government for that purpose The entire purchase money was about £66,000, and the space covers as nearly four acres as possible.

Pigeon expresses are now not sufficiently expeditious for the Stock Exchange gentlemen, to convey to them the intelligence of the decisions of railway committees; they have now, it seems, a system of telegraphing the news by means of flags hoisted up at Westminster bridge, and by the aid of one or more intermediate signs, the expectants at London-bridge are communicated with. Thus is speculation the mother of invention.

Accounts have been received at Lloyd's, of the total destruction by fire, off Cape Verd Islands, of an Indiaman named the Uruguay, Captain Kelso, master, between 400 and 500 tons burthen, belonging to Liverpool, together with a rich cargo, and the ship, of the value of £30,000.

General M'Leod, who took an active part in the late Canadian rebellion, and who has been an exile since 1837, has received an unconditional pardon from Sir Charles Metcalfe, and is on his way to report himself to the Canadian authorities at Montreal.

His Royal Highness the Grand Duke Constantine of Russia, about to make a pleasure tour in the Mediterranean, has arrived at Constantinople, in the Russian steam frigate Bessaraba, and, though holding the rank of Vice-Admiral, has assumed, with a view, it is pretended, of keeping down the excitement of the Greek population, the humble designation of Captain Lieutenant, studiously shunning public honours, in the way of salutes, guards of honour, and so forth. Every honour has been paid to him at Constantinople.

A great Indian Council has recently been held within the limits of the Creek nation, at which the following tribes were represented, viz.—the Muxnogees, Seminoles, Chickesaws, Choctaws, Shawnees, Delawares, Piankeshaws, Osages, Kickapoos, Quapaws, Peolies, and Senecas. Colonel Butler, Colonel Logan, and Lieutenant Flint, of the United States army, were also in attendance Speeches were made by the Chiefs of the several tribes, all unanimous in the object of this Council, which was to endeavour to make all white where it has been spotted and darkened with blood, and to extend the white path to the very doors of their brothers, the Camanches and Apaches of Texas. The usual token, a ping of tobacco, was then smoked, attached to which were white beads; a deputation of the Cadoes bore the first, and of Osages the latter.

A quantity of unusual richness, has been received in Liverpool from Sydney, New South Wales. It contains 70 per cent. of lead, and silver at the rate of about 11b. weight to a ton of ore.

The magnetic telegraph is attracting considerable attention in the United States. A spirit commencing to connect by its means the Atlantic states with the Mississippi valley. It is said, that by "arrangements already made the line will be completed from Albany to Harrisburg on the Susquehannah, before December next, and to the Ohio at Pittsburgh and Wheeling in early spring." The whole line embraced within the proposed plan will exceed 3000 miles in extent.

The Athens Journals of the 29th ult. announce that a committee had been appointed to examine the difference which had arisen between Generals Grivas and Kalergi, so that the report given in the French papers of the death of former General is untrue. The latter, however, has been ill-treated with banditti, and two most respectable citizens, M. Patriarkea, of Peloponnesus, and M. Petzali, of Eubea, had been murdered.

A German paper notices the jealousy expressed by Russia in Poland in regard to names. Names of all kinds which bear the slightest resemblance to anything seditious, are sufficient to render the owner suspected. An Italian musician (Ricci), whose name seemed to resemble the word revolution, was to appear at the theatre, when he suddenly received an order to quit the city under pain of imprisonment. Totally unable to understand what could be the cause of this unexpected order, he repaired in all haste to the office of the Chef de Police, who, after much trouble, gave him permission to appear on the stage, but solely on condition of changing his name.

The treaty of commerce between Great Britain and the Two Sicilies, which was signed at Naples on the 29th day of April last, has been ratified by his Majesty the King of the Two Sicilies, and the ratifications were exchanged at Naples on the 9th ultimo, from which time the provisions contained in it will have come into operation.

An aeronaut named Comaschi, who ascended from Constantinople in a balloon in honour of the marriage of the Sultan's sister, has not been since heard of, although by the latest accounts thirteen days had elapsed. Mes sengers dispatched in the direction in which, from the way the wind blew at the time, it was supposed he would have been carried, have returned without any trace of him; a report, requiring confirmation, had, however, got abroad, that a body of an individual, answering to his description, and the remnants of a balloon, had been picked up in the Danube.

A letter from the banks of the Rhine, states that Prussia intends to employ its whole influence in the Congress at Carlsruhe to support the present tariff of customs in the states of the Zollverein, under which tariff those States have acquired an extent of their manufactures, and a degree of prosperity which none of them knew previously to the formation of the Zollverein.

MARRIAGE OF MDLLE. DUVERNAY.—On Monday Mdlle. Duvernay, the danseuse, was married, at Putney, to C. L. Stephens, Esq., of Rochampton.

CIVIL LIST PENSIONS.—The following pensions have been granted upon the Civil List between June last year and the 20th ult. —Mr Fraser Tytler, £200 a-year; Mrs. Hoof, now the widow of the late Thomas Hood, £100 a-year; the four daughters (Susan, Mary, Elenor, and Elizabeth) of Lieutenant Colonel Robertson Macdonald, and grand daughter of Robertson, the historian, £50 a year each; Jane, Caroline, and Frances Agnes, sisters of the late Lieutenant Colonel Stoddart, £75 a year each; Mdlle. Angelica Emma d'Este, £500 a-year; and Clara Maria Susannah Lowe, daughter of the late Sir Hudson Lowe, £50 a year; making in all, £1200 a year.

SLOANE OF RAILWAY FAME.—The opening of that part of the line between Manchester and Sheffield, which has hitherto been delayed, took place on Monday, in presence of the Directors and a large number of persons from the neighbouring districts.——The works on the atmospheric line of railway are progressing rapidly between the Dartmouth Arms and Croydon, a distance of five miles. The engine and boiler houses are nearly completed, and the boilers are already set. It is anticipated that the five miles from the Dartmouth Arms to Croydon will be opened before the close of the present month.——The Belgian papers announce the commencement of the works on the Sambre and Meuse railway. About 300 men have been set on, and a large number will be added weekly, as fast as the line is finally determined upon.——The Committee on Group X, in the House of Lords, have come to the following important resolution.—"When the rest of the Direct Northern and Farmgdon-street Extension lines are closed, the Committee will proceed to consider the merits of the two competing schemes before them, for effecting a new railway communication between London and York—namely, that of the London and York Company, and that which consists of the Cambridge and Lincoln, the Direct Northern, and the Farmgdon street Extension lines, in connection with the Eastern Counties Railway."——Last week's synopsis of new schemes embraces upwards of 18 new lines. Amongst the leading ones are the Northampton, Banbury, and Cheltenham, with a proposed capital of one million; the East and West of England Junction, from Northampton to Cheltenham; the Warrington and Stockport, with a capital of £160,000

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY

THE BREACH OF PRIVILEGE CASE.—The question of privilege which occurred last week was discussed to-day.—Mr. Harlow and his attorney appeared at the bar of the house, and stated that the ground of action against Mr. Baker was evidence he had given before a select committee of the House of Lords, which the plaintiff considered to be a libel upon both his calling and injurious to his character.—The LORD CHANCELLOR then moved that the action was a breach of the privileges of their lordships' house.—Lord BROUGHAM earnestly advocated the necessity of maintaining their privileges to be decided upon by the law of the land. In former times, the privileges of the Houses of Parliament were supported by the people, because they were considered as a barrier against the encroachments of the Crown, and it was suffered, under such circumstances, to be carried to very extreme and unreasonable lengths. Now, however, the Crown itself subjected its privileges to the decisions of the high courts of judicature; and Parliament should therefore, erect itself into prosecutor, judge, jury, and executor, for the purpose of sustaining its assertion of privileges, which, in too many cases, resulted to a denial of justice.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said that the courts of law, as well as the houses of Parliament, were judges of their own privileges, and he never knew any failure in the effect to do so. In fact, the proceedings in Parliament, in such cases, were precisely analogous to those adopted in courts below; and they would find, if they did not protect witnesses examined before them pro se ely as they would their own officers, that they might as well abdicate their legislative functions altogether.—Lord CAMPBELL contended for the propriety of defending the privileges of the house.—The Earl of WICKLOW doubted the discretion of proceeding in the way suggested, and said, the assumption of those privileges was not popular with the country.—The result was that the house ordered that John Harlow, the plaintiff, and his attorney, Peter Tait, Harlin, should be committed to the custody of the Black Rod, until the further orders of the house.

The adjournment took place at an early hour.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

The house met at noon, and discussed the Lunatic Asylums and Pauper Lunatics Bill, and the Lunatic Asylums (Ireland) Bill.

THE COLLISION AT NEW ZEALAND.—In answer to a question from Mr. Hawes, Mr. HOPE stated that despatches had been received from New Zealand which confirmed the accounts given in the newspapers of the collision which took place between the natives and settlers in the colony. The loss of property was four times that stated, and the troops, seamen, and civilians, altogether, thirteen killed, and twenty three wounded; that of the natives must have been very considerable, although the exact number had not been ascertained. The settlers had all been removed in safety to Auckland, but the missionaries still remained at the Bay of Islands, their houses and lives having been list untouched by the natives. The despatch alleged that the insurrectionary attack arose from the determination of some native chiefs to upset the sovereignty of the Queen in New Zealand

Subsequently the Coal Trade (Port of London) went through Committee, and several hours were then consumed in discussing the Poor Law Amendment Scotland Bill in Committee.

A Militia Vote was taken in Supply.

The house sat till two o'clock in the morning.

HOUSE OF LORDS —TUESDAY.

THE BREACH OF PRIVILEGE CASE.—Lord BROUGHAM presented a petition from John Harlow, in which he stated that he had instructed his solicitor to withdraw the action against Thomas Baker, and prayed to be discharged from custody. Lord Brougham said the petitioner had been guilty of the great offence of breaking an unknown law, and he hoped their Lordships would permit him to move that the petitioner be discharged out of custody upon payment of his fees.—Lord CAMPBELL thought it would not be exactly fair to the petitioner to make him answerable for the sarcasms of his noble and learned friend, and he should therefore concur in the motion.—Mr Harlow having been called to the bar, was admonished by the Lord Chancellor, and ordered to be discharged on payment of fees.—Lord BROUGHAM said that, after the rebuke which he had received from his noble and learned friend the junior law lord, and almost the junior peer in that house, he should take care not to fall into the same error again, for he must, at any venture, be committed himself for breach of those privileges which were so notorious to-night, but which were stated to be unknown yesterday. Lord Brougham then presented a petition from Peter Tait Harlin, the solicitor, who said he was not aware that in bringing an action he was committing a breach of privilege, and expressing regret. The same course was pursued with Mr. Harlin as with Mr Harlow.—Lord CAMPBELL gave notice that he would, early next session, inform the Government of some peer entitled to more weight than himself—being the junior law lord and junior peer in the house (a laugh) did it before—introduce a bill to enable their Lordships, and the other house of Parliament, when an action was brought in violation of their privileges, to stay such action in the same manner as actions were now stayed when they were brought for publishing papers under the orders of their lordships' house.

THE NEW HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT.—Lord BROUGHAM gave notice that he would, on Tuesday next, move an address to her MAJESTY for the assistance of the Government should do so, with respect to getting into the new houses of Parliament next session

SPANISH PRODUCE.—The Earl of CLARENDON then brought forward a motion similar to that moved in the House of Commons by Lord Palmerston, relative to the construction placed by the Government on the treaties of this country with Spain, which construction had led to the refusal to admit Spanish produce on the footing of that of the most favoured nations, while the same personal rights were accorded to Spanish subjects as those of the most favoured nations could by claim to. He then entered at great length into the spirit of the treaties with Spain, contending that we were not bound to treat Spanish produce on the same favourable terms as Spanish subjects.—The house divided upon Lord Clarendon's motion, which was negatived by 38 to 14.—At eight o'clock an adjournment took place till Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

The morning sitting was devoted exactly to the Lunatics Bill.

SPANISH COLONIAL SUGAR.—In the evening Lord PALMERSTON moved an Address to the Queen, praying her Majesty to direct that the subjects of the Queen of Spain should be permitted to import into the United Kingdom all the productions of the territories or possessions of the Spanish Crown, paying thereupon no higher duties of customs than are paid by the subjects or citizens of the most favoured nations, on the importation of like articles being the production of the territories or possessions of such nations. The noble lord alluded to the correspondence between the Duke de Sotomayor and the Earl of Aberdeen, and contended that no reply of the latter to the claim of the Spanish Minister was full of fallacies. Lord PALMERSTON then entered into a history of the treaties between this country and Spain, and stated the question was not one of the opinion of Crown lawyers, for the question was not one of law but of honesty, and, looked at in this way, there could, in his opinion, be no doubt as to the justice of the Spanish claim to have the sugars of Porto Rico and Cuba imported on the same terms as sugars the produce of the most favoured nations. By the course the Government had pursued they were about to cast away our trade with Spain by their breach of faith, as they were fast losing the trade of this country with Brazil.—Mr. GLADSTONE entered into a variety of details subversive of the positions assumed by Lord Palmerston, and insisted that neither by the literal construction of, nor by the spirit of, the treaties could the claim preferred by Spain be justified; and that the noble lord himself while in office had performed many acts recognising the construction placed upon the treaties by the present Government. After a long and tedious debate the house divided:—

For the motion		87
Against it		179
Majority against the motion		—88

The Arts Unions Bill was read a third time and passed.

The house adjourned at half past two in the morning, having sat fourteen hours.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The morning sitting was devoted to the Lunatics Bill, the remaining clauses being ultimately got through, with the omission of clause 113. The schedules were agreed to, the house resumed, and the report was ordered to be received on Friday.

The Drainage Bill passed through committee, after some discussion.

VALUATION (IRELAND) BILL.—Sir T. FREMANTLE then moved that the house should resolve itself into committee on this bill.—Mr R. HERON objected to proceeding with a new bill at that hour. An Hon. Member moved that the house be counted, and twenty three members only being present, the house adjourned at half-past four in the afternoon.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

THIRD READINGS OF BILLS.—The following bills were read a third time, and passed:—The Dog stealing Bill, the Drainage by Tenants for Life Bill, the Defamation and Libel Act Amendment Bill, and the Public Works (Ireland) Bill.

DUBLIN AND GALWAY RAILWAY.—The Earl of BESSBOROUGH brought up the report of the Select Committee, appointed to inquire into certain allegations which had been made against the Dublin and Galway Railway Company. The Committee had only thought it advisable to go into the allegation respecting the forgery of four names to the subscription deed of the Company, and they ascertained that the Company had been in the habit of making allotments of shares without obtaining any references as to the respectability or status of the applicants. After a short consultation, the bill was read a second time. The house adjourned at an early hour.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

At the morning sitting, several bills were read a third time and passed. Among them was the Gravesend and Rochester Railway Bill.

THE COMMONS INCLOSURE BILL.—The Earl of LINCOLN moved the third reading of this bill. Colonel SIBTHORP protested against it. It was, however, read a third time. On the question that the bill do pass, Mr. S. CRAWFORD said he should record his opposition to the bill, by dividing the house against it. On a division, the numbers were 48 for the motion, and there was not a single vote in support of Mr. Crawford.

A discussion arose on the Lunatic Asylums, and Pauper Lunatics Bill, but eventually the third reading was carried.

THE NEW SOLICITOR GENERAL.—Mr. F. KELLY took the oaths and his seat in the House.

THE JEWS DISABILITIES BILL.—After a long discussion, this bill was read a second time by a majority of 31 to 11.—The house did not adjourn till a late hour.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

The Earl of RADNOR moved for some papers relative to the late events at Syra. The Marquess of LANSDOWNE said there would be no objection to their production in a few days. The noble earl entered into some explanations upon the subject.

The Australian Waste Lands Bill was read a second time.

The Foreign Lotteries Bill was read a third time, and passed; and the house adjourned at eight o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

At the morning sitting several bills were forwarded a stage.

The Valuation (Ireland) Bill went through Committee

RAILWAYS.—In the evening the reports on the following bills were brought up and agreed to:—Epping Railway; Brighton, Lewes, and Hastings Railway (Hastings, Rye, and Ashford Extension); South Eastern Railway (Branch to Deal, and Extension of the South Eastern, Canterbury, Ramsgate and Margate Railway); East Dereham and Norwich Railway; London and Croydon Railway Enlargement.

The Small Debts Bill was read a second time.

The South Eastern (Widening and Extension of the London and Green wich Railway) was read a third time and passed.

THE WAR IN CHINA.—The house was occupied for some time with a motion of Capt. BERKELEY for an Address to her Majesty, praying for a reward to the officers and men engaged in the late war in China. The motion was resisted by the Chancellor of the Exchequer and Sir R. Peel, that it was not a constitutional principle for the house to interfere with the Crown in regard to rewards to the army and navy, and that the Government had adopted a fair principle. On a division the motion was rejected by 68 to 27.

The house then went into Committee of Supply, and voted several miscellaneous estimates.—Nothing of importance took place up to the adjournment.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

CAMBRIDGE. July 16.

The Lord Bishop of Norwich will hold his next ordination at Norwich, on Sunday, the 24th day of August, 1845

The Rev. B. Wood, M.A. (B.A. 1814) has been appointed to the curacy of Great Snoring with Thursford, Norfolk.

The Rev. S. H. Beanish, B.A. (1845) has been appointed to the curacies of Ilford and Ilford, West Somerset.

The Rev. E. N. Rolfe, M.A. (B.A 1832) has been appointed to the curacy of Thurgarton, Norfolk.

The Rev. P. S Aldrich, B.C.L. (1838) has been appointed to the curacy of Somersham, Suffolk.

The Rev. Robert Bickerstetb M.A. (B.A 1841) late curate of St. Giles's, Reading, has been elected Evening Preacher to the Magdalene Hospital, London. The rev. gentleman retains his curacy at Clapham.

The Rev. Samuel Coates, M.A. (B.A. 1830) incumbent of Sowerby, near Thirsk, has been appointed a Rural Dean in the Archdeaconry of Cleveland.

The Rev. John Farr, B.A. (1842) has been appointed to the curacy of Benacre and North Hales, alias Covehithe, Suffolk.

The Lord Bishop of London has recently licensed the Hon. and Rev. W. C. Hennker, M.A., (Hon 1834) as Minister of Berkeley Episcopal Chapel John street, Berkeley square, London.

OXFORD.

Lord Brougham and Vaux has appointed the Rev. E. Moore, M.A., Rector of Whitechurch, Oxon, to be one of his domestic chaplains.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

THE BANKRUPTCY OF MR. CHAMBERS.—In the Court of BANKRUPTCY, on Tuesday, the case of Mr Chambers was disposed of. The bankrupt, the well known banker, whose case has been in progress of litigation for a number of years, came up for his certificate. No opposition was offered, and the certificate was granted.

THE ROMFORD BANK REFUSAL OF A CERTIFICATE.—On Wednesday, in the same Court, the application of Mr. Johnson, for a certificate, was heard. A long investigation was made into the accounts of the bank. Mr. Wilkinson, a solicitor, said, that although the creditors have no wish to press vindictively against Johnson, yet they felt that they ought to press against the allowance of the certificate, for they considered there never was a case in which the conduct of a trader was more culpable or more deficient in moral propriety than this. Several witnesses were then examined relative to the pecuniary affairs of the bank.—Mr. Commissioner Goulburn said he wished to know from the official assignee what capital Mr. Johnson had when he entered into the bank.—The official assignee thought, as far as he could discover, that it was not really more than £1000 Mr. Wilkinson said that at one time it was not more than £56. Mr Cooke then addressed the Court for the bankrupt. After going over the facts given in evidence, he said there was no proof that the bankrupt was a reckless trader, nor was he charged with having lived in an extravagant manner.—Mr. Commissioner Goulburn, in giving judgment, said it was a most painful case. He then reviewed the evidence, and concluded by stating his opinion that nothing could be urged to palliate the conduct of the bankrupt. While in a state of hopeless insolvency, he had received the moneys of his customers, and instead of rendering them due payment, had applied them to his own speculation and uses. After much consideration, it was his opinion that the failure of the bankrupt in this case could not be called the result of misfortune, or of circumstances over which he had no control, but rather that it arose from years of misconduct, as a trader in a branch of business, which of all others required the greatest care and attention. He therefore, the judgment of the Court was that the certificate must be refused.

COUNTRY NEWS.

THE CROPS.—Accounts from all parts of the country represent the crops as having been much injured by the late storms. The accounts from the hop districts in Sussex show that the plants generally continue to do well, according to all appearance there will be a large crop. Some of the older plantations look sickly.

NEW MARKET AT BIRKENHEAD.—The new market house at Birkenhead was opened on Saturday last, and presented a most lively scene. The building is one of the largest in the kingdom, and certainly superior to anything in its admirable arrangements and accommodations. Large quantities of eatables of all sorts were displayed at the various stalls, and the purchases made were such as to insure success to the renters of the shops and stalls. The entire cost of the building is about £34,000, and there can be but one opinion as to the liberality which manifested in every department of this valuable addition to the township.

A YOUTHFUL PREACHER.—On Sunday last Master John Mills, of Aitrington, preached two sermons at Wesleyan Chapel, Liverpool, in aid of the Sunday Schools attached to the Methodist New Connexion in that district. This young gentleman has attained little more than his thirteenth year.

FATAL ACCIDENT AT WORTHING.—On Friday afternoon last week, two young ladies who had been staying at Worthing, went off to sea in a pleasure-boat. The weather was tolerably settled, and all four appeared to enjoy the sport. The accident was seen from the shore, and likewise by a gentleman named Reynolds, who was sailing about half-a-mile from the spot at the time. He immediately went to their assistance, and rescued one of the ladies, the man, and the boy; but the other lady, unable longer to retain her hold, had disappeared. The body of Miss Eden was picked up on Saturday, and conveyed to the New Steyne Hotel, for a coroner's inquest. The young lady was 20 years of age. Mr. Eden, who is a brother of Lady Brougham, had gone to town the day before the accident. Mrs. Eden was on the beach, and witnessed the accident; and it is a remarkable fact, that she also witnessed the death of her first husband, Mr. Baring, who, we understand, was drowned off Dartmouth Pier. Her agony on the occasion was intense. The inquest was held at the New Steyne Hotel, on Monday. The jury returned a verdict, that the deceased lady was accidentally drowned. No new facts were stated. Immediately after the inquest, the remains of the unfortunate young lady were removed for interment at Sompting. It is a singular circumstance, that while this unfortunate young lady was riding, in the course of the week, with her father, she was so struck with the quiet and simple beauty of the churchyard at Sompting, that she expressed a wish to be buried there which was, alas! but too soon fulfilled. The lady rescued is Miss Baring, daughter of Mrs. Eden by a former husband, who was also drowned by the upsetting of a boat in her sight. When brought on shore, Miss Baring was insensible, but by prompt attention bestowed on her at the baths, she soon recovered.

DEATH OF MR. J. ADOLPHUS.—We regret to announce the death of Mr. John Adolphus, the celebrated barrister, which took place suddenly at the house of his son, Mr. J. Leycester Adolphus, in Montagu street, Russell-square, at a late hour on Wednesday night.

Letters from Tunis give detailed accounts of the arrival there of his Royal Highness the Duke of Montpensier, by the French war steamer Gomer, on the 30th ult. His reception by the Bey was of the most hospitable character. His Royal Highness having been fêted by the Bey for four days successively, left the hospitable shore of Tunis, direct for Alexandria, without having touched here.

LAST HONOURS TO GENERAL JACKSON.

The American journals, just received, are nearly filled with details of the last hours of General Jackson, and of the marked testimonials of respect that have been paid to the deceased throughout the country.

Our artist has sketched the Hermitage, at Nashville, in West Tennessee, where the General breathed his last, on the evening of Sunday, the 8th of June. The villa is of handsome classic design. The Grecian temple, beneath the willow, upon the left, is the tomb of the General's wife. The entire scene is an impressive picture of repose.

We abridge the following incidents of the General's last hours :-

"He died with the utmost calmness. The public had been led to expect this sad event for many weeks. The venerable patriot himself, in the last letter he ever wrote, said: 'I am dying daily. I feel that I can no longer be of service to my country, to my friends, or myself; and I am ready and willing to appear in the presence of my Maker.'

"On the morning of Sunday, the 8th, the General had swooned, and, for a time, was supposed to be dead, but he soon after revived and lived till evening. During the forenoon he gathered around his bedside the members of his household, whom he admonished most affectionately to cherish Christianity, to be kind and loving to each other, to love their country and protect its institutions. He then gave each individual his patriarchial blessing, placing his feeble hands upon their heads as they knelt before him, and beseeching Almighty God to bless and protect them. The household then knelt in prayer, and each and all took an affectionate farewell of the dying patriot. The scene was most affecting. Every eye was bathed in tears, but the General meekly and resignedly besought them not to mourn.

"He retained his senses to the last, and, during the day, expressed the liveliest interest in the prosperity and welfare of the country. He continued to commune with God in prayer during the day, and enjoyed the brightest hope of immortality. The clergyman at his bedside (Rev. Dr. Edgar, of the Presbyterian Church) afterwards remarked that he never witnessed a more triumphant death."

The body was buried on Tuesday, the 10th of June, in the temple tomb in the garden, shown in our engraving. The funeral took place in the presence of an immense concourse of people from the surrounding country. After a sermon by the Rev. Dr. Edgar, the text of which was Rev. 7th chap., 13, 14 verses, and after the coffin had been placed in a zinc covering and soldered, and again placed in an outside coffin, it was conveyed to the tomb in the garden. Prayer was then offered over the grave, and singing; and last of all came the military of Nashville, and fired three volleys of musketry over his grave. In observance of his request, there was no pomp or display on the occasion—no martial music—and nought but solemnity and tears. In Nashville the bells were tolled, and minute guns fired, a part of the day. The stores were closed a whole day, and all seemed to feel that the country had lost a patriot and statesman, and they a father and friend.

THE HERMITAGE, THE RESIDENCE AND BURIAL PLACE OF GENERAL JACKSON.

Tuesday, the 24th of June, was the day fixed for a demonstration of patriotism and respect for the memory of Andrew Jackson, when the pageant surpassed any ever witnessed in New York. The people of the city and of the surrounding country poured into the public thoroughfares, either to join the procession, or to witness the ceremonies: business of every kind was suspended, and the city was one vast scene of mourning.

"The funeral knell tolled sadly from every spire and dome. The slow and solemn tread of military companies, civic societies, and citizens generally, with the sound of the muffled drum; the discharge of minute-guns from all the fortifications and from some of the public Parks; the universal display of flags at half-mast; banners shrouded in crape; public buildings and hotels dressed in mourning, all spoke of the great worth of the departed."—STATESMAN AND PATRIOT, and of the affectionate regard with which the people cherish his memory.

"The various preparatory arrangements alluded to in the programme were fully carried out. The different military and political bodies, civic societies, fire department, &c., &c., assembled at the Park and in the streets adjacent, with their flags and banners hung in mourning, and almost every individual in the immense gathering wearing the usual token of mourning on the left arm, and badges with the likeness of the deceased on the left breast. Among the military were large bodies of horsemen. There were several bands of excellent music, the drums and various instruments generally displaying the badge of mourning."

The procession started from the Park at 2 o'clock; it numbered from 20,000 to 25,000 men, and occupied three hours, within a few minutes, in passing a point in East Broadway. We have not room for the programme: it consisted of bands of music playing dirges, regiments of infantry and mounted troops, &c.

The second division consisted of a large number of coaches containing a number of distinguished men, among whom were Ex-President Van Buren; Colonel Backhoad, &c.; then a body of naval officers. To these succeeded the orator of the day, the pall bearers, &c., in barouches; then the Urn, drawn by four white horses, caparisoned in black, each horse led by a coloured groom dressed in Eastern costume, followed by a white horse led by two grooms, one on each side; then a large body of United States marines, infantry, and artillery; then the members of the Common Council, &c. Then came the different bodies from Brooklyn, Jersey City, and Newark; then a carriage containing Foreign Consuls, &c.

In the third division was a very large body of Freemasons, in full insignia with banner, ark, bible, &c. The entire procession consisted of thirteen divisions, consisting of Benevolent Societies and Clubs, the Fire Department (from 1200 to 1500 men), bands of music, companies and cavalcades, far too numerous for us to specify.

The head of the Procession reached the western gates of the Park about the time the end had left the eastern gate the members of the Sacred Music Society took their places upon the stand soon after six o'clock, and the Urn, with the horses attached to the car, was drawn up in front. A prayer was then delivered by the Rev. Mr. Krebs, the immense multitude standing uncovered. The Hon. Benj. F. Butler then delivered an eloquent eulogy; a requiem was sung by the Sacred Music Society; and the solemnities terminated with a benediction by the Rev. Dr. Wainwright.

Our Illustration shows the Procession at a most imposing point—rounding Union-place, entering by Bowery, and retiring by Broadway, in a brilliant sunset—time, half-past five o'clock. Our Correspondent spiritedly notes of this locality:—"Yesterday, a wilderness—to-day a splendid square, surrounded with princely mansions where reside some eminent men, Ex-Chancellor Kent being one—to-morrow an absolute desert of the old city. Such is the rapid transition from trees to bricks, chaos in the foreground, the rural pleasaunce and fine old trees of a beautiful country residence are being ruthlessly excavated and hewn into building lots."

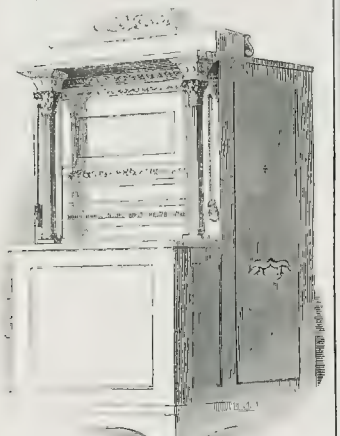
PROCESSION IN HONOUR OF THE LATE GENERAL JACKSON, AT NEW YORK.

THE EUREKA.

Such is the name of a Machine for Composing Hexameter Latin Verses, which is now exhibited at the Egyptian Hall, in Piccadilly. It was designed and constructed at Bridgwater, in Somersetshire; was begun in 1830, and completed in 1843; and it has lately been brought to the metropolis, to contribute to the "sights of the season."

The exterior of the machine resembles, in form, a small bureau book-case; in the frontispiece of which, through an aperture, the verses appear in succession as they are composed.

The machine is described by the inventor as neither more nor less than a practical illustration of the law of evolution. The process of composition is not by words already formed, but from separate letters. This fact is obvious; although some spectators may, probably, have mistaken the effect for the cause—the result for the principle, which is that of Kaleidoscopic evolution; and, as an illustration of this principle it is that the machine is interesting—a principle affording a far greater scope of extension than has hitherto been attempted. The machine contains letters in alphabetical arrangement. Out of these, through the medium of numbers, rendered tangible by being expressed by indentures on wheel-work, the instrument selects such as are requisite to form the verse conceived; the components of words suited to form hexameters being alone previously calculated, the harmonious combination of which will be found to be practically interminable.



THE EUREKA.

The rate of composition is about one verse per minute, or sixty in an hour.

"Each verse remains stationary and visible a sufficient time for a copy of it to be taken; after which the machine gives an audible notice that the Line is about to be decomposed. Each Letter of the verse is then slowly and separately removed into its former alphabetical arrangement; on which the machine stops, until another verse be required. Or, by withdrawing the stop, it may be made to go on continually, producing in one day and night, or twenty-four hours, about 1440 Latin verses; or, in a whole week (Sundays included), about 10,000.

"During the composition of each line, a cylinder in the interior of the machine performs the National Anthem.

"As soon as the verse is complete, a short pause of silence ensues.

"On the announcement that the line is about to be broken up, the cylinder performs the air of "Fly not yet," until every letter is returned into its proper place in the alphabet.

"There is on the frontispiece of the machine, above the line of verse, a tablet, bearing the following inscription:—

"'Full many a gem, of purest ray serene,
The dark, unfathom'd caves of ocean bear,
And many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its fragrance on the desert air."
Full many a thought, of character sublime,
Conceived in darkness, here shall be unrolled,
The mystery of number and of time
Is here displayed in characters of gold
Transcribe each line composed by this machine,
'Record the fleeting thoughts as they arise;'
A line, once lost, may never again be seen,
'A thought, once flown, is future never flies.'"

The primum mobile, or first moving power of the machine, is a leaden weight of about twenty pounds, with an auxiliary weight of ten pounds, applied to another part of the movement: these are occasionally wound up, and the velocity is regulated in the usual manner, by a worm and fly.

"The entire machine contains about 86 wheels, giving motion to cylinders, cranks, spirals, pullies, levers, springs, ratchets, quadrants, tractors, snails, worm and fly, heart-wheels, eccentric-wheels, and star-wheels—all of which are in essential and effective motion, with various degrees of velocity, each performing its part in proper time and place. And in the front of the interior is a large Kaleidoscope, which regularly constructs a splendid geometric figure. This action is performed at the commencement of the operation, and at the precise time when the line of verse is conceived, previous to its mechanical composition."

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

FONT IN CAISTOR CHURCH, NORFOLK.

About three miles south-west of Norwich stands the now inconsiderable village of Caistor, but which was formerly the Venta Icenorum, or principal station of the Romans in the country of the Iceni. Castrum was a common name over all Britain, and applied to the Roman stations in this country, which may now be known by the titles of burgh or caistor forming the whole or part of their present names. This ancient Castrum was one of the chief camps of defence at the time the Romans possessed this part of the kingdom. It was certainly their most important fortification in this district, as appears from its dimensions, which still remain very conspicuous. The figure of the camp is a parallelogram, with the corners rounded: the north and south sides are each 449, and the east and west sides 373 yards. The breadth of the fosse and rampart is, in some places, 18 yards, and in others not more than 30. The ruins of two old towers, one at the north and the other at the west end, were remaining in 1745. It is a square angle vallum and rampart, and has been inclosed with a strong wall of Roman bricks and flints, still visible in many places; the grand entrance was in the middle of the east part, at each corner of which there were mounts or watch-towers. At the south-east corner, within the rampart, stands the parish church, erected there on account of the convenience of the materials with which it is built; the whole being composed of flints and pieces of Roman bricks taken from the walls of the old camp.

FONT AT CAISTOR.

At the south-east corner of the chancel is a small spring, or well of water, about five feet deep, which is always full, and extremely cold. The font was erected by Richard of Castor, in 1402; and on it are sculptured, in compartments, the emblems of the Holy Trinity, the four Evangelists, with the instruments of the Passion, the arms of the last Angles, West Saxons, and Bury Abbey; and round the base is an inscription, partly obliterated:—

"Orate pro anima . . . . lis . . . . ici de Castre . . . ."

Many relics, interesting to antiquarians, have been at various times found in the vicinity of the camp—coins, according to Blomefield, amounting to hundreds, bronze lamps, and urns. In 1821, the remains of two bodies, with the teeth in a perfect state, were discovered; and within the last few years several ornaments in gold and copper have been brought to light.

Richard de Castre was Rector of St. Stephen's, in Norwich: he was a man of great piety and learning, and so beloved that he gained the name of Castor the Good. He died in 1419, and is buried in this church.

We are indebted to the "Norfolk Tour" for the substance of these details.

BURNING OF THE ACADEMY OF FINE ARTS, PHILADELPHIA.

DESTRUCTION OF THE ACADEMY OF FINE ARTS, PHILADELPHIA.

Philadelphia, we regret to state, has just lost one of its fine public buildings, and the United States some of their most valuable treasures of art. On the night of the 11th of June, the edifice belonging to the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, in one of the best quarters of Philadelphia, was destroyed by fire, an event that is ascribed to the act of an incendiary. The Academy is a chartered company, having for its object the encouragement of painting, sculpture, architecture, and engraving. It had a good collection of pictures, some fine pieces of sculpture, and a library. These were placed in the edifice just destroyed, and which contained a circular saloon lighted from a dome at the top, and several galleries. The contents of the Antique Gallery were destroyed in the conflagration of the 11th ult.: among them were an admirable copy of Titian's Venus; Canova's Graces, Hebe, Venus, bust of Junius Brutus, and the magnificent colossal bust of Napoleon, also attributed to Canova, which was intended for the gates of Rheims, but found its way to America when every souvenir of the Emperor was interdicted in France; the exquisite antiques of Meleager, Laocoon and his sons, Venus de Medici, Apollo Antinous, Germanicus, Mithridates, Apollo Belvidere, Piping Faun, Dying Gladiator, Hymen, Paris, Hercules, Two Fighting Gladiators, Silenus with Bacchus, Castor and Pollux; the bust of Jupiter, by Phidias; Lough's colossal cast of Milo, and various other gems of the sculptors' art: hardly a fragment is preserved. In the Rotunda, Gilbert Stuart's full-length Portrait of Washington was saved with some little injury, the canvas being torn and frayed. When this work was rescued from the flames, a gladsome shout from the crowd around the burning building, rent the air. It showed, indeed, that he was first in the hearts of his countrymen. West's "Death on the Pale Horse," Haydon's "Christ's Entry into Jerusalem," and Alston's "Dead Man Restored to Life," were preserved but with little injury. In the Directors' Room, Titian's Mistress, a portrait of Columbus, Inman's Portrait of a Lady, a Flemish Flower Piece, Stuart's Original Portrait of Washington, St. Mark Writing, a St. Francis, by Guido, &c., were all lost.

OPENING OF THE CORK TEMPERANCE INSTITUTE.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

Immediately after the fire, meetings of the Academy were held, and measures taken for the restoration of the building; but the greater part of its invaluable contents are irreparably lost.

OPENING OF THE TEMPERANCE INSTITUTION, AT CORK.

On Monday week the handsome building just completed at Cork, for the Temperance Institution, was opened by a public soirée, which was admirably attended. At an early hour, the chair was taken by his Worship the Mayor, Richard Howden. During the evening the Right Worshipful Chairman conveyed the thanks of the Lord Bishop of Norwich, and the British Association, to the Rev. Mr. Mathew, for his [illegible] exertions in the Temperance Movement, supported by the Rev. Mr Foley, the Rev. Mr. Whitelegg, Messrs. Aldermen J. Lyons, Dwyer, J. C. O. Donovan, Capt. O'Sullivan, and a large number of the most amiable, lovely, and intelligent of Cork's fair daughters.

In responding to the sentiment ably expressed by the President, the Rev. Mr. Mathew stated the object of the Institution to be the literary as well as moral improvement of a large number of highly respectable young men connected with the Temperance Movement; and the reverend gentleman explained how a portion of the earnings of the week was to be set apart for the reading of Essays written by members, and to Discussions on Music, and the other branches of the Fine Arts. There are to be added to the Establishment, rooms for Chess, Draughts, &c.; and, when the funds will allow the outlay, astronomical and other instruments for scientific purposes. As a commencement of the good work, the President has, in the handsomest manner, presented to the Institution several volumes of books, to form the nucleus of a library.

A delightful specimen of the enjoyment to be expected at the future soirées of the Institute was given on Monday evening by several of the Members, who favoured the company with some charming singing, most ably conducted by Mr Deane, who presided at the pianoforte. A military band also attended, and played quadrilles and waltzes until a late hour; and, at length, the company retired, with a most favourable impression of the social benefits to be expected from the Cork Temperance Institute.

Now Ready, Price Eighteen Shillings, Vol. VI. of
THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.
Elegantly bound in cloth and gold, gilt edges, rich in Illustrations of the Passing Events of the last Six Months, forming a complete and valuable RECORD OF CHRONOLOGY, together with a mass of useful and highly interesting articles on Art, Literature, and Science.—May be obtained, by order, of all Booksellers, &c., in the Kingdom, also all the previous Volumes. Vol. I., 21s.; Vols. II., III., IV., V., and VI., 18s. each.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, July 20 Ninth Sunday after Trinity—Margaret.
MONDAY, 21.—Style altered, 1752.
TUESDAY, 22.—St. Mary Magdalen—Union of England and Scotland, 1706.
WEDNESDAY, 23 Gibraltar taken, 1704
THURSDAY, 24.—Woollen Cloth first exported in England, 1331.
FRIDAY, 25 St. James Duke of Cambridge born, 1797
SATURDAY, 26 —St. Anne—Zodiac Signs invented, 547, A.C

Moon's Ages.	Rises.	Sets.	Rises.	Sets.	Rises.	Sets.	Rises.	Sets.	Rises.	Sets.	Rises.	Sets.	Rises.	Sets.
W.	m.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
1.	3	35	3	41	4	1	4	24	4	46	5	7	5	30
2.	5	51	6	12	6	35	6	58	7	22

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Amicus Certus."—We shall be happy to receive the sketch, &c.
"Merus Hibernicus."—"Belvoir" is usually pronounced "Beaver." The property returns are confidential: large incomes are usually over-stated, as in the case referred to by our correspondent.
"An Observer," Tynemouth, is thanked. The telescope: no
"E. K. O."—Colley's preparation may be purchased of a vendor of patent medicines.
"Don Quixote's" aunt shall not be lost sight of. The recommendation is of difficult determination.
"Bath Burg."—Probably, Devonshire.
"A Subscriber," Donaghadee.—The distribution of the Art-Union prizes for the year ending March last took place on April 22. The Designs to outline due to the subscribers will be delivered in September; and the print, "The Convalescent from Waterloo," it is hoped, at Christmas.
"Enquirer," Birmingham, may subscribe by remitting to our office 6s. 6d. one quarter, in advance. All the Numbers are kept in print, and may be had by order.
"A Subscriber," Sunderland.—We have not room this season.
"Veritas," Petworth, is thanked; the artist's error has already been explained.
"A Subscriber."—There are almshouses in various quarters; the choice depends upon the location of the applicant.
"An Amateur" should address a letter to Mr. Hullah, 445, West Strand. His last public exhibition took place at Exeter Hall a few weeks since.
"Amateur," Knaresborough, wishes to ascertain when one of whom is to be heir the Gathering of the Clans to celebrate the centenary of the '45.
"A. B." See our present number.
"W. X."—See the receipt in No. 106.
"B. W." Blockheath, states that he has been refused admission to the reading room of the British Museum, in consequence of the householder who signed his application not being known to Sir Henry Ellis. There must be some mistake here; he should renew his application.
"W. P. K." Plymouth.—The portraits of the pirates do not accord with our system of illustration.
"Reuters," Aldborough.—The design of the York Column was almost universally condemned by persons of taste, at the period of its completion, a few years since.
"F. J." -The confession did not state the means.
"J. F. L." Clunmel.—See our present number.
"G. C." Somersetshire, should review his application to the Income Tax Commissioners, and appeal in the second case.
"R. D.," Castle Carey.—The act of parliament and consecration are indispensable.
"G. B.," Heywood.—The paragraph in question was quoted from another journal; we are not in possession of further details.
"A Constant Reader."—The details of the Battle of New Orleans, in the sketch of General Jackson, in our number for last week, are correctly stated.
"R. R. G." is thanked, but the extract arrived too late.
"The Son of a Subscriber."—Testimonials - Offers and acceptances of money, &c., for procuring public situations are altogether illegal.
Brompton, "An Old Subscriber."—The liability depends upon which of the parties ordered the articles. In the second case the notice will suffice.
"Curiosity." -The question was answered in our last volume.
"E. M. S."—We have not room for the contributions.
"J. B. D." Cranwell.—We know nothing of the remedy in question.
"A Constant Subscriber" The article may be purchased at No. 211, Strand.
"Amateur,"—The Claspers are Newcastle men.
"Lucifer." There is an establishment called "Le Collége Héraldique de France," whose office is in the Rue des Moulins, No. 10.
"J. [illegible]"
"W. L." Hereford—A list of unclaimed dividends may be seen at Deacon's Coffee house, Walbrook.
We have not room for "The Old Lawn Hall." "Gallo . . wan;" "Song to an Early Home," "Sonnets," by H. F. L.

"R. R. G."—For "55 reasons to be presented at the opening of the Glasgow Testimonial" read "119"—two f. om Scotland.

 Next week we shall conclude our Illustrations of the Great Meeting at Shrewsbury of the Royal Society of Agriculture.

NEW PORTFOLIO.—We have received a specimen of the Perfectness Portfolio, manufactured of the size of our journal, by Mr. Harris, of York street, Covent-Garden: it is provided with moveable strings, which are fastened by safe and simple means: the article is registered.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 19, 1845.

QUESTIONS of privilege seem to have at present a very buoyant and cork-like quality of coming to the surface of the stream of public events; no sooner is one pushed out of sight in the Commons than it re-appears in the Lords. The circumstances were precisely the same in both cases; an individual considering himself injured by certain evidence given before a committee, brings an action of libel against the deposing witness, who of course appeals to the body by whose authority he was examined, for protection. In both cases too, the Houses were relieved from the necessity of proceeding to extremities, by the submission of the parties—their apology and consent to withdraw the actions. In the Lords the submission was made on Tuesday evening, the plaintiff in the action and his attorney having been in the custody of the officer of the House for about four and twenty hours, a detention involving a heavy expense in fees. It is difficult to conceive why the parties in these cases began the proceedings at all, if they were not prepared to go on with them; not knowing that the Lords and Commons would alike throw the shield of privilege over their respective witnesses must be the only excuse for embarking in a course only to bring it to so lame and impotent a conclusion. Parliament has obtained an easy triumph; what the issue would have been if it had had to deal with parties more determined is still doubtful.

Lord Brougham made one of his ablest speeches on this subject on Monday evening; it was high time he should do something to redeem himself from the public contempt that is gathering over his name; his last offence against good taste and common decency, is the insult he offered to the Earl of Devon who had good humouredly remonstrated with him for speaking ten times on one question. With a vulgar insolence that disgusted everybody present, he reminded the noble earl of the time when he sat at the table of the House as clerk, and was obliged to listen to him! Wretched as the ebullition of offended vanity was in itself, it is rendered worse by conveying a falsehood; the Earl of Devon we believe had been called to the rank he inherits by right of birth, long before Henry Brougham was made a peer. As a retort it was singularly infelicitous; if it meant to convey an imputation of inferiority of rank on the part of the Earl of Devon, it was a gross blunder. William Courtenay, third Earl of Devon, was born the direct heir of one of the oldest titles in the kingdom, and is, if Gibbon can be relied on, the lineal descendant of the last Emperor of the West; noble by ancestry, and of the same profession as the ex-Chancellor, he is at least his equal; so that the clumsiness of the taunt is as great as the vile taste in which it was made. But Brougham has lately taken to talking like an Hidalgo or a Bourbon, forgetting what all the world remembers, that he is one of the political elevations of yesterday. On Tuesday evening he spoke with great contempt of Lord Campbell as the "Junior Law Lord," and "a new recruit in the ranks of the Peers;" what miserable weakness is all this? Lord Brougham's peerage is exactly fifteen years old, and he takes on himself to remind others of their recent patent, though the ink on his own can scarcely be said to be dry. This is one too, in the presence of men whose titles have descended from the Conquest; and to them the affectation must appear especially contemptible. The anxiety to obtrude his position on every body, is the sure mark of the parvenu either of riches or rank; a Clinton, a Berners, or a Howard, would never remind a brother peer of his recent elevation; but the Lord of yesterday does, and plumes himself on his ten or dozen years of precedence. The taunt is but a weak one, after all, that is thus turned by rank. The strong intellect wins honours and station, and enables the man to wear them as matters of course, too entirely a part of himself ever to be alluded to. No one ever heard Lord Lyndhurst commit himself by such puerilities as those by which Brougham has on several occasions lowered his character; but Lyndhurst is a man of talent and sound strong sense too; in Brougham, the deficiency of the ballast of common sense is often painfully visible, but never has been more so than in the instances alluded to.

THE discussion on the interpretation, put by the Government on our treaties with Spain, by which they have refused to admit on equal terms with the "most favoured nations," the slave grown sugars of the Spanish possessions of Cuba and Porto Rico, terminated as might be expected, in the vindication of the Ministry. The claim was made by the Spanish Ambassador, because we have lately drawn a distinction by differential duties between the produce of Slave-holding and Slave-trading States, and that of countries where labour is free. Had Spain been remarkable for strict observances of her part of the obligations of these treaties, she would have come forward on this occasion with much more weight of influence on her power in Europe than has been broken our treaties oftener—the Slave Trade treaties for instance—or does more to exclude our produce from her markets, we do not so much regret the refusal her demand has met with. Her commercial system is so absurd as almost to put her out of the pale of civilised people; imagine a great nation, by exorbitant duties, practically prohibiting all legal traffic, and driving its trade into the hands of smugglers and contrabandists, and that trade, so systematically carried on, that the Custom-house officials paid by the State to suppress it, gain another and a better payment by winking at it! It is the interest of a large class of men that this system should continue; but no class can be called the nation, and it is the nation that suffers. And to sacrifice the common weal to the selfish interests of a few, has always been the policy of Spain; for this she excluded every nation from trading with her American colonies; for this she fetters the Commerce of other countries now with heavy imposts; and as the general result of her miserable and imbecile system of exclusiveness and repression, we see her stripped of her finest Colonies, her Commerce gone, her Aristocracy decayed, her people sunk in ignorance, her manufactures extinct, or in the hands of foreigners, her vast navies that once threatened the world, reduced to a few rotten brigs, and her Government, such as it is, constantly struggling with a bankrupt treasury, without being able to replenish it by credit, or restore it by a policy that would even now render credit almost unnecessary, for the land is one of great resources badly applied.

Actuated by such a policy, it is not surprising to hear Mr. Gladstone prove that no sing e treaty made with Spain has ever been observed; at the same time, as Spain in the present case, asked to be allowed to act under these treaties, we are sorry a warrant for refusing her request has been strained out of them. We fear the modern distinction we have made between articles of Commerce produced in one manner, and the same article produced in another, resting a commercial discrimination upon a moral and social ground, and not, as heretofore, on political connections, or differences of quality and value in the article itself, will not prove a sound one. If we are not to consume articles into which slave labour enters—if that principle is rigorously acted on—Manchester will sink again into a village, and the Docks of Liverpool will be empty—for our mills cannot work without the slave-grown cotton of America. We must cease to purchase many other articles now become absolute essentials, and must in fact, drop all intercourse with every nation not yet arrived at that epoch of enlightenment and civilization which we had to attain before slavery could be abolished even among ourselves. We shall then exclude ourselves from dealing with about half the world, with what result need not be anticipated. As a State we did not discover that it was immoral to purchase slave sugar till very recently; we still think it very proper to buy, make, wear, and sell, slave cotton; and while we quietly swallow this camel of commercial immorality, we cannot strain at the gnat of slave-grown sugar, without being suspected by other countries of hypocrisy.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT.—We hear in an official quarter, that, according to the present state of public business, it is likely that Parliament will be prorogued on Thursday, the 7th of August.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

VISIT OF THE ROYAL PARTY IN THE ISLE OF WIGHT.—The Queen and Prince Albert, and their Majesties the King and Queen of the Belgians, arrived at Osborne House, Isle of Wight, about a quarter-past six o'clock on Tuesday afternoon. Her Majesty and the Queen of the Belgians afterwards walked in the grounds, and Prince Albert, accompanied by the King of the Belgians, went to inspect the farms. The Royal party returned to Buckingham Palace on Thursday afternoon.

VISIT OF THREE QUEENS TO HAMPTON COURT.—On Sunday, the palace and grounds at Hampton Court were honoured with the novelty of the presence of three Queens at one time, viz.—Her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria, her Majesty the Queen Dowager, and her Majesty the Queen of the Belgians

HER MAJESTY QUEEN ADELAIDE.—We understand that the Queen Dowager, in the early part of the ensuing month, will leave Bushy Park, for Scotland, on a tour through the Highlands, and will, during her progress there, honour several noble families with visits. Her Majesty will be accompanied by her illustrious sister, her Serene Highness the Duchess Ida of Saxe Weimar.

DEATH OF THE EARL OF DUNMORE.—We regret to announce the death of the Earl of Dunmore, which took place on Wednesday afternoon, at Streatham, the noble earl's temporary residence, and whither he had gone for the benefit of his health, he having been in a declining state for some time past. The widowed Countess is one of the Ladies of her Majesty's Bedchamber. The deceased Earl was deservedly beloved in the family circle, and by a host of attached friends beyond it. He was a warm, though not conspicuous, supporter of the present Government.

ARISTOCRATIC MARRIAGES.—On Monday last, Lady Louisa Spencer Churchill, the only daughter of his Grace the Duke of Marlborough, was married, by special license, at Benheim Palace, to the Hon. Robert Charles Henry Spencer, a son of the late, and brother of the present Lord Churchill, of Compton. The ceremony was performed by his Grace the Archbishop of York. The bride was given away by the Duke of Marlborough, and was attended by the Hon. Misses Elizabeth, Jane, and Gertrude Duncombe, the Hon. Miss Spencer, Miss Jane Stewart, and Miss Dashwood, as bridesmaids.—On Thursday, the marriage of Viscount Lascelles, eldest son of the Earl of Harewood, and Lady Elizabeth Joanne De Burgh, eldest daughter of the Marquis and Marchioness of Canterbury, was solemnised at St. George's Church, Hanover square.

APPROACHING MARRIAGES AMONG THE ARISTOCRACY.—Among the aristocratic alliances about to take place we have to mention that of the Lady Frances Howard, third daughter of the Earl and Countess of Wicklow, with the Hon. Con. Lindsay, youngest son of the Earl of Balcarres.—The Hon. Miss Miller, eldest daughter of Lord and Lady Sondes, is about to bestow her hand on Mr. Edward Fellowes, of Ramsay Abbey, Huntingdonshire. The ceremony is fixed to take place in London on Tuesday next.

LORD AND LADY LYNDHURST AT HOME.—On Wednesday evening the Lord Chancellor and Lady Lyndhurst entertained at dinner her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, his Royal Highness Prince George of Cambridge, Lady Caroline Murray, the Hon. Captain Liddell, the Countess of Westmoreland, Marquis of Salisbury, Hon. Cecil Forester, Earl and Countess of Beverley and Lady Louisa Percy, the Marquis of Hertford, the Count St. Aulaire, French Ambassador, Lord Frederick Fitzclarence, Lord Marcus Hill, Earl of Granby, the Hon. Miss Copley, the Count Ravoigi, the Marchioness of Alesbury, and Lady Southampton.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

THE NEW SOLICITOR GENERAL.—Mr. Fitzroy Kelly arrived in town on Wednesday evening from Cambridge, and shortly afterwards had an interview with Sir Robert Peel, at the Right Honourable gentleman's residence, Whitehall Gardens. On Thursday morning the hon. and learned gentleman was sworn into the important office of her Majesty's Solicitor General before the Lord Chancellor, in his Lordship's private room at the House of Lords.

HOSPITAL FOR CONSUMPTION AND DISEASE OF THE CHEST.—MUNIFICENT DONATION.—Miss Catherine Lee, of Albert-terrace, Knightsbridge, has forwarded the sum of two hundred guineas in aid of the building fund of the new hospital now in the course of erection at Brompton.

FREEDOM OF THE CITY TO SIR HENRY POTTINGER. At twelve o'clock on Thursday the Court of Common Council assembled. The members being very numerous; the strangers' galleries were also crowded, and the whole seemed a scene of great excitement, from the anticipated presence of Sir H. Pottinger. After one of the Sir Knights who were on the table of the Court had been directed to be forwarded to Sir R Sale, and the other to the family of the late Sir W. Nott, Sir H. Pottinger entered the Court, and having taken his seat on the left hand of the Lord Mayor, was, after a highly eulogistic address by the Chamberlain, presented with the Freedom of the City of London, enclosed in a box of heart of oak. The gallant General expressed his acknowledgments in a speech of some length, and retired from the Court amidst loud plaudits, reiterated by the crowd outside, as he proceeded to his carriage.

IMPROVEMENTS IN THE METROPOLIS.—The Commissioners of Metropolitan Improvements, in their last report, recommend the establishment of a good medical garden in immediate connection with and as part of the present Royal Botanical Garden at Kew; to be available, under proper regulations, for the use of the medical students of the metropolis, for the inspection of plants in situ, for the supply of specimens to the various lecture rooms established in London, and for the occasional use personally of the professors of medical botany acting in connection with the several metropolitan colleges and hospitals

DISCOVERY OF ANCIENT COINS.—On Tuesday morning a very singular discovery was made by some men employed in excavating for the purpose of forming a foundation for houses intended to be erected in Maiden-lane, Battle-bridge. At a depth of between ten and twelve feet, a small iron vessel shaped somewhat like an urn was found, which, upon being forced open, was found to contain a large quantity of gold and silver coins of the reign of Constantine the Great, and his predecessors, to the date, 53. These were, however, so much defaced, that no other inscription could be traced, besides which were found, some four or five feet deeper, large quantities of bones, the many parts of which were in a remarkable state of preservation.

SEIZURE OF A LARGE DISTILLERY.—On Wednesday afternoon a seizure was made by the Excise officers of a large distillery in Hertford-place, Globe-road, Mile-end, and the premises connected with the concern were at the same time captured. The police and an excise officer obtained admission by the premises in front, which during the night were in full operation. They immediately captured four men, who gave the names of John Jones, John Watson, Thomas Welsh, and Edward Dicken, who made a show of resistance, but on the production of the Queen's warrant

POSTSCRIPT.

AFFECTING SHIPWRECK OF A DUTCH INDIAMAN—DEATH OF SOME OF THE CREW.

The ship Chance, Captain Roxby, from Sydney, has arrived in the London Docks, having on board a portion of the crew of a Dutch Indiaman, named the Java, Mr. H. W. Hakenbury, master, which was totally lost on the rocks forming St. Paul's Island, on the morning of the 29th of May, while on her voyage from Amsterdam to Batavia. Captain Roxby having, on the morning of the 3rd of June, surmised that a vessel had been wrecked near the spot, no time was lost in bearing up to the rocks, and, on nearing them, several persons were noticed on them; evidently in an exhausted state. The captain ordered the pinnace to proceed to their assistance. About twenty poor creatures were found lying about, exhausted and apparently in a dying condition. The boat not being able to take them all off, the captain, the chief officer, steward, carpenter, two seamen, and three apprentice boys, were first rescued, the remainder being assured by the boat's party that they would return and preserve them also. The ship was speedily gained, and on the captain learning that eleven persons were still on the island, he promptly ordered the long boat to be lowered, and with the pinnace started for the rocks. Only twelve minutes elapsed ere they had set out a second time for the island, but in the mean while a sharp breeze had sprung up, a tremendous sea ran, and a strong current set in to the westward. Both boats kept beating about for five hours, and it appearing evident that if they kept out much later they would be swept away, they returned to the ship, having been unable to render the promised assistance. It being probable that the gale might in some measure abate, Captain Roxby laid his ship sealine about the island, as it was impossible to anchor, there being no soundings, for ten entire days; and having seen nothing of the poor creatures, who by that time must have perished from the intense heat and the want of water and food, he sailed for England, his own provisions by this time becoming very short.

The poor fellows who had been on board the Indiaman contrived to get on the rocks when the vessel struck, and starvation stared them in the face. Of wearing apparel they had saved none, save the few drenched rags that covered them; and of food, the only things they could rescue from the wreck were a cask of butter, a cask of flour, a small biscuit, and a small keg of rice. Immediately under the lee a burning sun pouring upon them, and not having a drop of water to quench their thirst, the heat was intense, and which they could only allay by wading into the sea up to the chin, and thus remain the whole day. At night time the spirit was distributed amongst them. The single biscuit was broken up and divided equally, and then they commenced scouring the rocks, in the hope of finding further food. They succeeded in getting a few wild fowls and eggs; they were almost driven to madness. At dusk, a few drops of rain were felt descending; they instantly had out a kind of sail to catch it, and held their heads up to the heavens, with their mouths open. It soon, however, passed over.

On the third day, to their great joy, a vessel bearing American colours hove in sight in the offing. They hoisted the signal on the spar, and, to order to make doubly sure, the mate, seven feet in height, mounted the cask of oil in the only boat they had been enabled to save, with a small piece of wood to dabble along, the oars being lost, to the approaching ship, but she passed onwards, and was not seen afterwards. The poor creatures in the boat then strove to regain the island; the current was too strong for them, and they were speedily lost sight of. That they have perished there can be no doubt. They had not the slightest provision with them—no compass and no oars, the nearest place being Cape Roque, more than 600 miles distant. The sufferings of those left on the rocks, on perceiving the fate of those in the boat, were fearful; and on the fourth day they gave themselves up to death. They were rapidly sinking from the effects of the heat, the skin on their face, hands, &c., actually peeling off. On the morning of the fifth day the Chance hove in sight, and, as before notified, saved seven. Eleven, amongst whom was the doctor, were left on the island.

DEPARTURE OF THE KING AND QUEEN OF THE BELGIANS.—Their Majesties the King and Queen of the Belgians, have left England to return to Belgium.

WINDSOR, Friday Evening.—(From our own Correspondent.)—A most important decision has just been come to by the Crown, on the subject of the Royal property in the vicinity of this town, principally interested by means of a contemplated direct line of railway from Windsor to London. A Memorial to the Woods and Forests, agreed to at a public meeting of the inhabitants, held at the Town-hall, a few days since, prayed that the Commissioners would endeavour to obtain her Majesty's consent to a railway passing over the Crown property in the immediate vicinity of Windsor. An answer from the Woods and Forests was received yesterday, and of the most unfavourable nature. The Commissioners, after observing that they had duly considered the Memorial which had been submitted to them on the 24th of a direct railroad from Windsor to London, stated, that as they considered it would be highly injurious to the property under their management for a railway to pass over it in the way contemplated by the memorialists, they could not recommend her Majesty to give her sanction to such a project; and that they therefore declined to receive any deputation on the subject of the proposed undertaking. It may be mentioned that, from the situation of the property belonging to the Crown, both in and around Windsor, it would be impossible, without traversing it to a considerable extent, for any railway to get within at least a mile of the town, except by proceeding around by Slough, and crossing the Thames about a mile above Windsor Bridge. In November, 1843, a very excellent plan for draining the town, which, in this respect, is in a wretched state, was submitted to the inhabitants by the Earl of Lincoln, the Chief Commissioner of Woods and Forests; and, although it was there stated that the adoption of this plan would very materially add to the revenue of the Royal residents at the time, the project was scouted by the inhabitants, and the borough still continues to be one of the worst drained towns in the kingdom.

CONSECRATION OF ST JAMES'S CHURCH, NOTTING-HILL.—The new church, dedicated to St. James, lately erected at Notting-hill, was, on Thursday, consecrated by the Lord Bishop of London, assisted by the Venerable Archdeacon Sinclair, and many of the clergy of the diocese.

TRAGICAL OCCURRENCE. Mr. Wakley, M.P., held an inquest yesterday, at the MASON'S ARMS, Devonshire-street, Portland-place, on the body of Mr. William E. Ha Delessor, aged thirteen, late of No. 1, Devonshire-street, from the evidence of deceased's brothers, it appeared that he complained of a pain in his head last Monday, and that between seven and eight o'clock he became insensible and speechless. Mr Brixey, surgeon, was instantly sent for, who found him in the last stage of collapse, from which he never rallied. During the proceedings a youth of twelve years of age rushed into the room, exclaiming, "Martha, Martha has fallen from the window!" The jury simultaneously rose, and the medical witness, accompanied by the three young Delessors, rushed to the latter's house, where a most awful spectacle presented itself. In the back area, lay the mangled body of Miss Delessor, who is only fifteen years of age. Mr. Wakley instantly adjourned the inquest, and hastening to the melancholy scene afforded every assistance, but the young lady was quite dead. It appeared that she fell from a two pair window—a distance of forty feet—and that her head struck with great violence against the flagging in heath. The family have only just returned from Italy, and took their present residence for three months, while they claimed some property of their deceased father.

THE CONFLICT AT BALLINHASSIG. RESULT OF THE INQUEST.—The Jury on Tuesday gave the following verdict:—"We find that Colonel Forde came by his death in consequence of a gun shot wound inflicted on him by a party of police, who attended the fair of Ballinhassig on Monday, the 30th of June last, and that such party was fired on by the above named day, under the order of Sub Inspector Kelly, who commanded said party, and that in the circumstances he was placed he was justified in giving such order, and that therefore the deceased Cornelius Forde is entitled to a verdict of Justifiable Homicide." This decision, however, was not the unanimous finding of the Jury. They divided three times. The third division, as to a justification for the firing from the hill, was carried by a majority of 12. The final question was then put, and carried thus—for a verdict of justifiable homicide generally, and in each case, 14; for wilful murder, 9.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS

THE LATE ATROCITY IN ALGERIA.—The Heraldo, of Madrid, publishes a letter from its correspondent in Algeria, from which it appears that the occurrence was of a still more horrible character than was at first supposed. This correspondent says:—"It is impossible to describe the violence of the fire—the flames rose to the height of 60 yards, and thick volumes of smoke rolled into the cavern. The fire was kept up during the whole night and until day break, by which time no noise was heard within. At half past four I went towards the cavern, with two officers of Engineers, an officer of Artillery, and a detachment of from 30 to 40 men. At the entrance we found several animals dead, and already in a state of decomposition. We reached the entrance of the cavern over a layer of ashes a foot in depth, and from thence we penetrated about 30 yards into the interior. Nothing can give an idea of the dreadful spectacle which then presented itself. All the bodies were naked, and in a position which indicated that they must have suffered the most horrible convulsions. But the most horrible sight of all was to see children at the breast who had died from the most horrid suffocation, and their bodies lying about amongst those of sheep and other animals. In spite of all the exertions of the officers, the soldiers could not be prevented from searching the bodies to possess themselves of all the jewels they could find. The number of bodies amounted to from 800 to 1000. The colonel would not believe our report, and sent other soldiers to reckon the bodies. Six hundred were taken from the cavern, without counting those which were heaped one upon the other, nor the children at the breast—nearly all hidden in the [illegible] clothes. The colonel was horrified himself at the result—he dreaded one fix the attitude of the newspapers, which would not fail to criticise so deplorable an act. It is certain that, from what has taken place, the whole country will submit."

THE RIVER PLATE. Late advices inform us that the English and French offer of a joint mediation had been accepted by the Monte-Videan authorities

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

IRELAND.

RIOT AND LOSS OF LIFE AT ARMAGH.

The 19th of July has not passed over without some fighting; at least in one locality—namely, Armagh, where on Saturday evening last a fierce encounter took place, and one or more deaths have ensued, besides several casualties.

According to the Dublin Warder, a portion of the Orangemen belonging to the Armagh district, who had been with the Loughgall district, returned to Armagh at about five o'clock in the evening, and when passing out of Thomas street into Dobbin-street, they were furiously attacked with stones by what is called the Irish-street mob. The stones were thrown from the foot of Ogoie street. The Orange party received considerable damage. After the attack ceased, they became somewhat disorderly. Stones and fire-arms were used by both parties. Some of the police were obliged to take refuge in the adjoining houses, and were badly wounded. The conflict was, and continued to be, awful, until it was ultimately quelled by a large military force under the command of Major Campbell. A man named Boyle died from a gunshot wound shortly after his admission to the County Infirmary. A man called Hagen, a Presbyterian, who had not to engage, received a gunshot wound in the breast. In the Infirmary, badly wounded, are the following persons:—William Carson and his wife; Thomas Corr, guardian; Arthur Hagen, shoulder; Jane Mullen, gunshot wound in the abdomen; Eliza Henderson, gun shot wound in the foot. Four of the above are Protestants.

The Orange party, says the same paper, throughout the day deported themselves in the most orderly manner, and gave no offence to any one.

In Lisburn, though the Orangemen made a most imposing demonstration, all passed peaceably.

In Dublin, as is of occurrence, the Dublin Mail of Monday says:—"Orange spirit is revived in all its power, integrity, and might. It has arisen from a sleep of years with renovated strength and vigour, like a giant refreshed with wine; and the exhibition of Saturday proves that ere long it will present an armed and a banded confederacy, united for mutual defence and the protection of Protestantism, resting upon a broader basis, and extending into more ramifications than it could boast of at any period since its original establishment.

A letter from Armagh, dated Monday evening, contains the following:—"The inquest on the body of John Boyle commenced this day at twelve o'clock, before Mr. Magee, the Coroner. The Earl of Gosford, and several other magistrates of the county were in attendance. The first witness was David Cassidy, but from the number of witnesses at the tables, the inquiry will be a protracted one. It is stated that another of the parsons wounded died this morning."

THE CONFLICT AT BALLINHASSIG.

After a somewhat tedious investigation of seven days' duration, the case for the prosecution closed on Thursday evening. The proceedings on that day possess no novelty. The same story was told over and over again, with the usual amount of deviations in the cross examination, and little variety between the last witness and the first; every one seemingly confined to the facts of the death of several persons, that is, that those persons were killed by gun shot wounds, &c.

On Saturday the case on the part of the police implicated in this disastrous affray commenced

Mr. Scannell addressed the jury on behalf of the accused. He said it was quite unlike that the police were at the fair for a lawful purpose. After a few observations, the learned counsel adverted at length to the nature of the evidence he had to produce, and concluded by calling his witnesses.

Mr. Walsh: Whom do you call?—Mr. Scannell: Sub-constable Hickson.

Mr. Walsh: Is this one of the parties accused here of wilful murder?—Mr. Scannell: It is one of the police force who was present on the evening in question.

Mr. Walsh. Oh, we protest against such a course as that.

After the matter had been argued at some length,

The Coroner said, he would take the course as opted at Rathcormac, which was never called in question he would admit the evidence

Mr Walsh Then I shall look upon the rest of this investigation as nothing short of a mockery. I would retire altogether, only my duty compels me to remain here.

Several witnesses were examined throughout the day, but their testimony was unimportant, and the Court adjourned till Monday.

The investigation was resumed on Monday, but the evidence given throughout the day was unimportant.

THE REPEAL ASSOCIATION.—The Repeal Association met on Monday in their usual weekly convention. Mr. Loughnan, town councillor, was presented to the chair. Mr. Raw read letters from Mr. O'Brien and Mr. Fenton Steele, the former returning thanks for the address of sympathy presented to him on the occasion of Mr. Roebuck's attack, and the latter (Mr. Steele) giving an account of the proceedings of Parliament at Lisburn, which passed off within it the slightest disturbance. Mr. O'Connell moved that both these letters should be inserted on the minutes; but, with respect to the reference on the 12th of July, he was sorry to say that there was a very different and a very distressing account from another quarter, namely, Armagh, where he grieved to learn that blood had been shed. He was compelled to say, and he did so with the most unfeigned sorrow, that Orangemen were in the wrong (as he was informed), and had commenced the attack. The Orangemen, it is true, were walking through a part of the town exclusively inhabited by Catholics; but that made no excuse for them. From Repealers they should have neither support nor sympathy. (Hear, hear.) It was right to say that he had received a letter which charged the Orangemen with greatly exciting the Catholics by calling out to them "to hell with the Pope," &c., and it actually firing at the people in the first instance. Between these conflicting accounts, he did not pretend to decide; he would leave the facts to be investigated by due course of law. He regretted to say that from Cavan there was an account of the death of a young man, the son of a widow, who had been shot by the police at a place called Stradone. After the paying in of some money and the transaction of some business of little interest, Mr. O'Connell again rose, and devoted himself to an elaborate condemnation of the Irish Colleges Bill, and thence proceeded to repeat all his usual arguments for Repeal. With respect to the Colleges Bill, he intended defied Ministers to carry it into execution, and concluded by moving a series of resolutions, in the nature of a protest against it.—The week's rent was about £[illegible].

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

SUICIDE AT LONDON-BRIDGE.—On Tuesday evening, an inquest was held before Mr. J. Payne at the Vestry hall, Horsleydown, on the body of George Frederick Duncombe, aged thirty six, a silk designer, who committed suicide by jumping off London-bridge on Thursday night week. The deceased resided at Westham, Essex, and was employed at Westham Abbey as a designer of silk. He was of rather a nervous temperament, but generally of a cheerful disposition On Wednesday evening, at six o'clock, he left his work and returned home, and during the evening he felt much annoyed in consequence of a band of music playing before his residence, which had been sent from the Abbey in celebration of a wedding that had taken place that day in the village. He did not go to his work the following morning, feeling that the band had been sent to his house to insult him. He however, went to his employers, to obtain, if possible, work at home, but was told that it could not be allowed On that evening he left home about half-past six, saying that he was going to see his principal employer, Mr. Baker, but did not return. About a quarter before eight o'clock, he left London-bridge. An effort was made to save him, but it was ineffectual, owing to the tide running down so strongly. The body was not recovered until Monday afternoon, off Battle bridge stairs. The aunt of deceased said that, twenty-five years since, her nephew was bitten by a mad dog, and from that time his conduct had been very strange. Verdict—"Found drowned."

ATTEMPTED MURDERS AT OLD BRENTFORD.—On Thursday week, a man named John Eldridge, living in Old Brentford, brought house with him to tea a man named John Leary, a tailor, who lives at Mr. Talbot's-court, Gracechurch street, City, and whom he had accidentally met at the Feathers public-house, Old Brentford. Both had been drinking, and while Mrs. Charlesbridge, who kept the house, was preparing the tea, Leary suddenly rose from his seat, and pulling from his pocket a pair of large scissors, he instantly plunged it into the side of Eldridge, inflicting a wound two inches long, from which the blood flowed profusely. Eldridge feeling himself wounded knocked the scissors out of his assailant's hand, when a fearful struggle took place between them before Eldridge could prevent Leary repeating his weapon. Assistance at that moment arrived, and Leary was taken to the station-house. and Eldridge to a surgeon to have his wound dressed. The second case took place between eight and nine the same evening at a lodging house kept by a woman named Maria Pearce, in Bailey's row, Old Brentford. A man named Thomas Kent went to the house after his wife, who had left home, and who he suspected was harboured there. Mrs Pearce answered that Mrs. Kent was there, but refused to let the husband see her, and struck him twice in the face with her fist to prevent him coming into her house, when Kent said he would stay there as long as his wife did. He then turned round, and in a fit of passion, owing to some persons outside, when Mrs. Pearce came suddenly behind him with a poker, and raising it with both hands, struck him a most violent blow over the back of the head. It was instantly noticed by those about, that he had a few paces, and fell over a low wall perfectly senseless, and covered with blood. He was immediately carried to the station house, Mrs. Pearce in charge. Mrs Pearce answered that Mrs. Kent was there, but refused to called in by the police, who pronounced the man to be in the most dangerous state, and ordered his immediate removal to the Union Workhouse, where he now remains without the slightest hope of surviving. Last week Mrs. Pearce was examined before the Brentford magistrates on Monday, and was committed to Newgate for trial. Maria Pearce was also brought before the magistrates, charged with striking Thomas Kent on the head with a poker; but as the prosecutor was not present in great danger and unable to appear against her, she was discharged.

APPOINTMENT OF THE LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR OF THE ISLE OF MAN. Major General Ready, Lieutenant Governor of the Isle of Man, died on Thursday week. He had long been troubled with an incurable complaint, and was at death's door, when, it is said, his dissolution was accelerated by a mistake in the administration of his medicine one preparation, in a moment of haste, having been given instead of another. The deceased was appointed to the office in which he died in 1833 or 1834. A Coroner's jury having inquired into the cause of Major General Ready's death, returned a verdict of "Accidental death."

SUDDEN DEATH AT GRAVESEND.—On Wednesday a Coroner's inquest was held at Gravesend, by Mr. Carttar, touching the death of Mr. R. Hughes, who for many years carried on the business of copperplate maker in the parish of St. Bride, London. It appears that he proceeded to Gravesend on Sunday last, on a visit to his daughter and son-in-law, with whom he dined; after which he went to Rochester by the railway, and returned in the evening to Gravesend, promising his children that he would breakfast with them on the following morning; but as he did not arrive at the time appointed, they sent to inquire after him; when, upon the servant knocking at his bedroom door, and receiving no answer, she entered the room and found him in a state of insensibility A surgeon was immediately sent for, who declared him to be seized by apoplexy, of which he in a few hours expired. The medical man, Mr. Jones, of Gravesend, testified to that effect before the jury, who returned a verdict, "Died from natural causes." What adds considerably to the melancholy circumstance is, that on Sunday morning, a few minutes only after he left his home, his wife discovered that he had left behind him the card on which was written the address of his son-in-law at Gravesend, and fearful that he might forget the place of residence of his children, as they had only temporary lodgings at Gravesend, she determined to follow him in a cab to the steam packet wharf with it; when, on reaching Fenchurch-street, she was unfortunately thrown down by a large dog, which was running at full speed, and was thereby dreadfully lacerated on the head and face, and had her collar-bone broken.

NEW PANORAMA OF ATHENS.

Mr. Burford has just contributed to the sights of the season, a new panorama picture of Athens,

> "The eye of Greece, > Mother of arts and eloquences;"

which may now be seen as accurately in Leicester-square as from the Hill of Museus itself, the point whence the Panorama has been painted, by Mr. Burford assisted by Mr. H. C. Selous, from drawings taken on the spot, within the present year, by Mr. George Knowles. In the immediate foreground is the Monumental Philopappus, from whence are obtained the finest views of the Acropolis, ancient Athens, the open plain (nearly ten miles in diameter) in which it stands and the great ranges of mountains by which it is bounded. The eye first rests upon the splendid remains of the Acropolis, presenting in melancholy grandeur upon the crest of the Acropolis, sharp and distinct against the deep blue sky; and around it are grouped the beautiful Temples of Victory and Erechtium, the stupendous Propylæa, the Theatres of Bacchus and Herodes Atticus; behind much the mountains of Pentelicus and Anchesmus rear their magnificent heads. To the right of the Acropolis, too, is seen a portion of the new city, the metropolis of Greece; and the noble palace erected for King Otho. In this direction, the Arch of Hadrian, the Temple of Jupiter, and the Stadium of Herodes Atticus, mark, according to Thucydides, the most ancient part of the lower city; that which, in the days of Pisistratus, was the most embellished quarter. Here, too, may be distinctly traced the vale of the Ilissus; and to the whole, the long ridge of Hymettus, famous alike in ancient and modern days for its honey, forms a "noble background."

In the southern distance is the Ægean Sea, its deep blue expanse studded with islands, foremost in which lies Ægina, the cradle of ancient Grecian art. Westward is the port of Piræus, and the celebrated islands of Salamis and Cerigo, [illegible] long range of mountains, each consecrated in classic story. On the north is the Pnyx Hill, the great Athenian Council-hall, where the masterspirits held forth at Pericles; near it the elegant Temple of Theseus, the most perfect model of ecclesiastical antiquity in existence, and, in its entireness, reflecting the monotony of ruin; then, the Areopagus, where St. Paul preached; and beyond, a long grove, near which were the Academy and the Lyceum, sacred to Plato and Aristotle; the Gardens of Epicurus, and several other spots on the river Cephissus, the scenes of those celebrated schools of philosophy which have transmitted their influence to every succeeding age. Mount Parnes, and the precipice above Phyles, and the snowy range of the Cithæron, close the view. The entire scene is admirably adapted for panoramic representation; and in it, topographical correctness and picturesque are beautifully combined by the artists it is excellently painted throughout, and is, altogether, one of the most intellectual pictures that Mr. Burford has yet presented to the public. It was curious to witness the pleasures with which several visitors identified celebrated localities of antiquity, though the readiness of a greater number was directed towards the modern town; yet, such are the present facilities of travel, that "fourteen days wi l take the classical student (or any other?) from the Tower of London to the Acropolis of Athens."

We are glad to find that the Chinese Pagoda, in Kew gardens, which was rapidly decaying, is now undergoing repair; the Commissioners of Woods and Forests having determined on completing it, from the authority of Mr. Burford's Panorama, in Leicester-square.

THE SHREWSBURY AGRICULTURAL SHOW.

Old voices of the Land
Are speaking proudly here,
And Agriculture's hand leads forth
The triumphs of the Year.
The strength of Earth's broad Soil
Comes brawnily to sight,
And shows in many a chaughing form
The Symbol of her Might!

Bring forth the tillage-arms that fight
Her battles in the Sun,
That stir the earth heart of our isle
With many a harvest won!
That dig—hast plough that reap—
That work with steel and grain,
And give its pillow to the field,
Its fatness to the plain.

Come with the garner pride,
Come with the Fruit of Health,
Come with the Riches of the land,
That make the Farmer's wealth!
Come with the arts that crown
Strong Labour on its track;
And bring, on wings of young Renown,
Our olden glory back!

Come with the fatted beeves,
The rock-and-mossy kine;
Come with the ox, the steer, the sheep,
Robed in their raiment fine.
Clothed in the glory of nature's garb,
Beauty and strength grow one
Warmed within by the stontening food,
And wardroed by the sun.

Ay, let the proud
Grow'd in their grand parade;
May the pride of that beast-pageantry
Grow—not wear itself out!
Fruit shall have brought yon wine,
Corn shall have ground you bread,
But think ye these Men have done,
Stean fatten'd creatures fed.

Gone on your glorious sea
With English hearts of pride,
Parted their sails and bent their oars
And stood by the tempest's side.
Dared the battle and breeze
With the stalwart arm and strong,
With the roast beef rot through all their blood,
And its revel in all their song.

"strengthened your Soldier's frame,
In the wars and long you free,
And swell'd his veins with a lusty pride,
In the arms of Victory!
British eminence—
British sinew and blood.
Were native-born on his island throne,
But grew from his island food!

And come with the blackening steed
That hath toil'd at your trenchant plough,
Feasted at stable, or fed on the mead,
Bring racer of fiery brow.
The sinuous coat, and the lightning limb—
Creatures of sportsman's pride,
And lordly chargers that snort of war
When British troopers ride!

Still be this splendid truth
In the land's bosom graved—
O'er the good wealth of Peace, Tyrant's foot,
Ay the ruth is the Freeman saved!
Mo[illegible]orbs, and arms, and trade,
Mo[illegible] flourish above the soil,
Skilfully fashioned and finely made—
But the Soil wealth comes from God!

Bring it then proudly forth!
Let the earth hears come!
And they who have reared the richest crops
In the bright land of their home!
And they who have large stock flocks,
That have grown to a giant size,
[illegible] their strength to a glorious show
At [illegible] for [illegible] prize.

SHREWSBURY MEETING OF THE ROYAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY OF ENGLAND.

(From our own Correspondent.)

SHREWSBURY, Wednesday Evening.

The Great Annual Country Meeting of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, which the Council decided on holding this year in Shrewsbury, commenced on Tuesday last.

The inhabitants had calculated on a great influx of visitors to their ancient town, and great were the preparations of lodging-house keepers; but, I regret to say those expectations have been sadly disappointed, and fruitless were those preparations to, at least, a very considerable extent. Down to Monday evening, the streets presented their ordinary quiet aspect, hardly one strange face betokening the arrival of the looked-for visitors. Additional coaches had been put upon the road at Wolverhampton and Whitmore, but many of them came in with far from a good load. A more striking proof of the utility of railroad conveyance could not be desired than was afforded on this occasion; for, independently of the expedition and comfort of such a mode of travelling, it possesses the additional advantage of regulated fares; whereas, some of the coach proprietors here seized the occasion to charge more than double the usual rates for passengers; and if gentlemen who had got so far as Wolverhampton, or Birmingham, of Whitmore, "by rail," demurred to such charges, they were "railed at in good set terms."

THE SHOW YARD.

On Tuesday morning, the Show Yard for Implements was thrown open to visiters; and the assortment of every description of agricultural implement and machine which modern skill and ingenuity have brought to such perfection was equal to that at any previous meeting of the Society. To attempt giving you a list and description of these would be to bespeak the entire space of the ILLUSTRATED NEWS; but the Society have rendered this unnecessary, for they have published a complete catalogue of the whole, which such of your agricultural and scientific readers as were not here at the Show can readily obtain at the Society's rooms in Hanover-square. The ground selected for the Show Yard for Stock and Implements combines great natural scenic beauty with convenience, being on the new race-course, which is but ten minutes' walk from the centre of the town. Over twelve acres were occupied by the inclosed yard, which presented the appearance of a compact little town, with one dazzling roof of white canvas. The Implement Yard consisted of eighteen sheds, each 250 feet long, and the Cattle Yard of twenty sheds of the same length. The yard for the trial of Implements afforded a very interesting sight, the different steam apparatus for agricultural purposes being here set to work. The show of cattle was also both large and varied, some of the best specimens of the respective classes of fat stock being exhibited.

The Council Dinner took place this day in the Music Hall, a very beautiful modern construction. His Grace the Duke of Richmond presided, supported by a numerous and distinguished company. To-morrow (Thursday) will be the Pavilion Dinner, where accommodation has been provided for 1200 persons. There will be a ball in the evening, in the Music Hall, under the patronage of the Duke of Richmond, and a large number of the local nobility and gentry.

The weather to-day has been extremely fine, and the number of visitors considerably increased.

On Friday, the proceedings terminate with a general meeting of the Council and Members, at the Town Hall.

The Theatre has been open every night during the week, under the management of Mr. Bennett; the attendance was good—for the provinces.

PRIZE IMPLEMENTS.

On Monday, the following prizes were awarded to the several exhibitors of these implements, &c. A prize of £10 was awarded to Earl Ducie, for a wrought-iron cultivator or scarifier with five tines, covering a space of 40 inches; invented by John Morton, of Whitfield Example Farm, improved and manufactured by Richard Clyburn, of Uley, near Dursley. A prize of £10 was awarded to Mr. Cornes, for a chaff cutting machine, with three knives, to be worked by two men or machinery, improved and manufactured by the exhibitor. £5 to Messrs. Sanders, Williams, and Taylor, for a set of strong iron harrows, for three horses; invented by Samuel Taylor, of Cottonend, Bedford, and manufactured by the exhibitors. £10 to Mr. Hornsby, for a two-row drill presser, invented, improved, and manufactured by the exhibitor. £5 to Mr. Richmond, for an improved churn, invented, improved, and manufactured by the exhibitor. £10 to Mr. James, for a machine for weighing live cattle and farm produce generally; invented by M. George, of Paris, and manufactured by the exhibitor. £5 to Mr. Richmond, for an improved portable steaming apparatus for roots, &c.; invented, improved, and manufactured by the exhibitor. £5 to Mr. Locock, for a patent one-way plough, with Ransome's patent trussed iron beams; invented by the exhibitor, and improved by him, in the details of form of mould-boards and head draught, and manufactured by J. R. and A. Ransome, of Ipswich. £5 to Mr. Bruce, for a skim plough; invented, improved, and manufactured by the exhibitor. £10 to Mr. Read, for a subsoil pulverizer, with iron beam and handles; invented by the exhibitor; improved by Benjamin Stratton, of Bristol, and manufactured by Richard Stratton, of Bristol. £10 to Mr. Croskill, for a patent clod crusher roller; invented, improved, and manufactured by the exhibitor. £15 to Mr. Newberry, for a five-rowed dibbling machine, invented and improved by Saunder and Newberry, of Hook Norton, and manufactured by the exhibitor. This implement, which gained a £10 prize at Liverpool when in an imperfect state, consists of five cast-iron dibbling wheels, as described last year; improvements since then have been effected by a more perfect mode of feeding the dibbles by metal feed-rollers, and the introduction of a metal slide instead of a brush. £10 to Mr. Deane, for a machine for crushing linseed, rape, and other seeds of an oily nature; improved and manufactured by the exhibitor. £10 to Mr. Hill, for a wrought iron sheep-fold; invented by Mr. W. A. Mann, of Throwley-house, Feversham, and manufactured by the exhibitor.

MR. RANSOME. EARL SPENCER. MR. GRANTHAM. PHILIP PUSEY, ESQ. JONAS WEBB, ESQ. HENRY HANDLEY, ESQ EARL TALBOT. GEORGE WILBRAHAM, ESQ.

DISTINGUISHED AGRICULTURISTS.

THE CATTLE SHEDS ROYAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY'S SHOW, SHREWSBURY.

A silver medal was awarded to Mr. Dodson for an iron horse hoe, invented and manufactured by Benjamin Dawson, of Caistor. One of the peculiar merits of this implement is the facility with which it is capable of being adjusted to rows of any width, and to any proper depth.

A silver medal was also awarded to Mr. Bentall for a patent seed depositor, invented and manufactured by the exhibitor. It is thus described:—"The machine was invented at the suggestions of agriculturists who have for many years practised dibbling. It is put into the hands of the children to use, instead of dropping the corn out of their hands in the usual way. The evil experienced under the present system is, the irregularity of the dropping, thereby wasting seed and injuring the crop, by the profusion of seed put into the holes. This machine will tend to give increased employment to the labourers and children, and save (at least) a bushel of corn on every acre dibbled under the present system. The weight of the machine will not exceed 14lb."

A silver medal was awarded to Mr. Hill for the general character of his exhibition of implements.

Mr. Richmond received a silver medal for an improved machine for washing vegetables, constructed with a rack and pinion, so that the cylinder containing the vegetables may be raised out of the water and emptied into a trough or barrow with the greatest ease.

Mr. E. Thomas received a silver medal for a scarifier or cultivator, described as follows:—"Made of wrought iron, with seven mortices, in which the teeth are fastened with keys. It has four wheels. The two front wheels are 15 inches diameter, with a T axle going through a bush in the frame; the back wheels are 30 inches diameter, with a crank axle. Attached to this axle there is a segment, which carries a chain; the other end of this chain is fastened to another segment on the end of a lever. To this lever another chain is attached, which runs under a pulley on the frame, and is connected to the T axle at the top. The lever serves to lift up or let down the frame, so as to set the teeth at any required depth; this is indicated by figures on the guide bar of the lever."

The following prizes were awarded for miscellaneous articles:—

£10 to Mr. Frere, for a Norwegian harrow; £10 to Mr Virgo, for a seed planter; £3 to Mrs. Cartmell, for a weighing machine; £3 to Earl Ducie, for a corn crusher; £2 to Mr. Harkes, for a horse-hoe; £5 to Mr. Croskill, for an improved horse cart; £5 to Mr. Read, for a fire engine; £3 to Mr. Hornsby, for an oil-cake breaker; £10 to Mr. Samlay, for a winnowing machine; £5 to Mr. Phillips, for a turnip cutter; £5 to Mr. Spencer, for a chaff cutter; £3 to Wedlake and Thomson, for a hay-making machine; £5

(Continued on page 44.)

MR ELLIOT. W. BLACKER, ESQ. EARL OF HARDWICK. GEORGE TOLLET, ESQ. DUKE OF SUTHERLAND. DUKE OF NORTHUMBERLAND.

DISTINGUISHED AGRICULTURISTS

EVERYBODY'S COLUMN.

EVENING MELODIES.—NO. XIII.

Ye are soon past away,
Ye vernal gales that lightly fann'd our brow!
It seems but yesterday
We said, They come; and ye are absent now!

Oh! ye were beautiful
At morn's soft twilight, and at day's glad noon,
And at eve's holy hal—
But surely, sure, ye are past too soon!

It was not thus of old,
At that sweet era when ye used to play
'Midst boyish locks of gold -
Ye were not then so swift to flee away!

No! when ye bade farewell,
So long the season had remain'd the same,
Our memories scarce could tell
The things that happen'd to us ere it came.

Now childhood's vision fails;
Yet there are feelings we would keep as men;—
Oh, ye pure vernal gales,
Linger among us as ye linger'd then!

"Nay, hush! our wings pursue
An unchang'd course since first they track'd the air;
We hasten not; 'tis you,
O sons of dust, that are not what ye were!

"Each morn was like a Spring,
Each noon a Summer, save your childhood fled!
And Eve was wont to bring
A lingering Autumn, with its tints of red.

"So it seem'd then; but now,
Spring, Summer, Autumn pass so soon away,
They fade on each chang'd brow,
The Morning, Noon, and Eve of one sad day!

"The change is in your hearts!
Blame ye not us—'tis Manhood's common doom;
With Youth real life departs;
Once pass its boundary, and behold the tomb!

"So, when the whirlpool's sway
Has drawn the seaman's craft—oh! strive to win
His old track as he may,
The circles lessen, till it sucks him in!"

And is it thus, indeed?
Ye vernal gales! spread, spread your glorious wings,
And haste ye on with speed—
Our hearts shall turn, and think of better things!

Oh! we have been too fond
Of earthly flowers—have twin'd them round our brow—
Have had no thought beyond—
We'll tear them down, and seek far brighter now!

We'll seek that isle of rest,
Around whose shores Time's wave has vainly roll'd;
And in that prospect blest,
Will quietly and sacredly grow old!

R. R. S.

TO PRESERVE FLOWERS THROUGHOUT THE WINTER.

Pluck the flowers when half blown, and place them in a closely covered earthern vessel, dipping them, with the stalk, downward, in equal quantities of Pigeon Excreta, mixed with a small quantity of bay-salt. The vessel must be kept closed, and in a warm place; and then, if, on the coldest day in winter, the flowers be taken out, washed in soft water, and held before a gentle fire, they will open as if in their usual bloom.

PIGEON EXPRESSES

The following will be read with interest in connexion with the engravings of Pigeon Expresses, in the volume of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS just completed, page 341. The system of communication by means of carrier-pigeons, between London and Paris, is carried on to a very considerable extent, and at a great cost. Several private and public establishments kept up by parties interested in the quick transmission of intelligence, at the ports of Dover and Calais, and at regular distances on the roads of the two continents; whence the birds are exchanged in regular order, as they return with their little billet. The interruption occasioned by the hours of nightly roads up by a man on horseback, who, again, at daylight, on arriving at a pigeon-station, transfers his charge to the bird which is kept in readiness. The distance, by day, is accomplished in less than eight hours. It has been found that hawks have proved themselves dangerous enemies even to these quick flighted birds; and a premium of half a crown is paid for every hawk's head produced. The pay of a keeper is £50 a year; and when this is added to the cost of food, and the expense of sending the pigeons on from station to station, to be ready for their flight home, it will appear that the service is attended with considerable outlay. The duty of training young birds, and the management of the old ones in feeding them at proper times, and in keeping them in the dark till they are grown up, is very responsible, and almost unceasing. A good bird is not supposed to last more than two years.—Mr. Thompson's Note Book of a Naturalist.

GETTING YOUR HAND IN.

Whenever a pickpocket gets out of practice (says a New York paper), he needs some little exertion to get his hand in.

TO CHANGE THE COLOUR OF A ROSE.

If the stem of a white rose be placed in a solution of yellow prussiate of potash for four or five hours, and then placed in a solution of sulphate of iron, the colour will be changed to a delicate primrose, while the fragrance remains unchanged.

RAILROADS IN THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

There are 6683 miles of railroads in the State of New York, which cost for construction, 19,866,737 dollars 38 cents; for repairs and running, 793,792 dollars 81 cents. The receipts have been 1,393,688 dollars 59 cents.

ELDERLY ACTRESSES.

Miss Tidswell, Mrs. Coleman (Mrs. Gibbs theatrically), Mrs. Coates, Mrs Kendall, Mrs Harlowe, Mrs. Ivers (mother of Mrs. Oxyer), Mrs. Bannister (widow of the immortal Jack), Mrs. Wallack (mother of the Brigand), are all living. Their united ages exceed 560 years.

A DANGEROUS WEAPON.

A newly invented musket has recently been tried at Potsdam (Prussia), with perfect success. It will carry from 1000 to 1200 paces, and will fire 17 times in a minute.

ELOQUENCE OF THE CREEK INDIANS.

The last American paper announces the arrival of an assembly of Creek Indians. Black Dog the Osage chief, a man of great stature, about seven feet, powerful frame, with a voice attractive and commanding, spoke about five and a half minutes in the following words, "your talk is good, but your beef is better" He and each of his party consumed, the first four days, 12lb of beef, falling then to 8lb, which rate they main aimed throughout the time they remained

KEEPING THE LNTIES

At a meeting of the Nottingham Protestant Operative Association and Reformation Society, held a short time ago, one of the speakers declared that they "would make the walls of Rome decent IN NOTTINGHAM."

RIVER TRAFFIC

By the iron steam boats alone which pass from London bridge to Chelsea, there were conveyed last year 2 300,000 persons.

PREVENTION OF HYDROPHOBIA.

In foreign countries, instead of the common muzzle, which irritates the dog by keeping the mouth closed, and prevents drinking, the dogs wear a kind of wire nose bag, strapped sufficiently tight to the head, which does not confine the mouth, but permits drinking. With this guard a dog cannot bite. The expense is very trifling.

AUSTRIAN STATISTICS.

We learn by a German journal that the Austrian provinces contain 7 315 manufactories, amongst which there are 1072 privileged ones. The other establishments connected with trade amount to 67,415. In Transylvania there are 49,629; on the frontier called the military one, 18,472. Vienna alone contains 85,561; and the rest of Lower Austria, 43,403. Bohemia possesses 126 995; Lombardy, 118,728; Venice, 74,014; and Dalmatia, only 879.

A QUAKER WOMAN'S REPROOF.

Dear friends, there are three things I very much wonder at. The first is, that children should be so fool ish as to throw up stones, brick bats, and clubs, into fruit trees, to knock down the fruit—if they would let it alone, it would fa l of itself. The second is, that men should be so fo lish, and even so wicked, as to go to war and kil one another—if they would let one another alone, they would die of themselves. And the last thing I wonder at most of al is, the conduct of young women—if they would stay at home, the young men would come after them

TEETOTALISM

"Arrah, Teddy, dear, will you tell me what is the meaning of teetotalism? Is it repale?" Teddy took his pipe out of his mouth, and deliberately said, "It's not repale, Dennis, but it's like it. Repale is drawing a sister from her mother. Teetwotalism is cutting the heart out of a man, and sticking a lump of cold water in its place."

A RAMBLE IN THE REALMS OF CHAT.

What has come over the pure spirit of civilisation that she should be so libelled, both by the acts of potentates and people, as she has been within the intelligence of the last few days? Really, upon some points, a former barbarism might well look back upon us with a kind of cruel pride in the modern imitators of its ancient ferocity, and if superstition has driven and driven to the by the elevations of piety and the progress of useful know ledge, by the liberal tendency of religious faith and hope, we might almost fancy that the Cassandra like frenzies and prophecies of such delusionists as Lady Hester Stanhope and others of an absorbing character in the fore telling of world-turmoil for evermore at hand, were approaching those of the Trojan lady in verity, from the startling incidents of blood and murder that have been covering society with their reproach.

It was only last week that we recorded and illustrated a dreadful affray at Ballinhassig, in the south of Ireland, between the Police and the People The inquest on the bodies of those who were slain in that lamentable collision is not yet over; but, since that disaster, there has been an engagement between Orangemen and Catholics, in the north, and more blood spilt, and more life sacrificed. Anon, Barcelona disturbs Spain, and revolt springs up there in other places; executions and butcheries are the order of the day; and the trade of massacre, which has so long distinguished that ferocious country, seems as if it were never to be always. Meanwhile, the Commentaries made by this Journal upon the matters in abeyance between the Government and the Colonial Office, in reference to New Zealand, have been followed by others from the unfortunate Colony—more like the "Commentaries of the Cæsar," over oracular with war. The natives have destroyed a town in the Bay of Islands—defeated, or at least repulsed, our troops—dismayed the fugitive citizens into taking refuge in the ships—and plundered their deserted habitations of all—ay, to the uttermost farthing—all they possessed.

Last of all, and infinitely worst of all, is the news which must appal the enlightened spirit of France—strike terror into her civilisation—and deeply and dreadfully afflict the heart of her King, who, whatever his love of ambition, and his belief in the policy of employing large armies of Frenchmen in the expense and sacrifice of Colonial aggrandisement, has still preserved a strong personal respect from all Europe for his approved humanity, and the credit of an affectionate presence in his domestic circle, which must be shamed and haunted by the terrific barbarity that has been perpetrated in his name.

A French Colonel Pelissier by name—having shut up six hundred Arabs in a cave, ordered their general massacre by burning and suffocation, and the brutal sentence was carried into effect. Six hundred human souls perished in that dire adventure of ferocity, and the heart of Europe is now burning with the blood and shame of this treacherous crime. The immensity of the cruelty passed belief: its corroboration has forced it upon us. It is needless to say that the mercy, the patriotism, the generosity, and the national vanity of a country which boasts of its civilised regeneration, are almost tortured with dismay. The crime is crying to Heaven even from the very heart of France.

It is curious that a direct parallel to this enormity occurred in the French warfare of the 16th century, and is narrated by Sismondi in his History of the Republic of Italy.

"A party of citizens and of inhabitants of the neighbouring plains had chosen a place of refuge in the mountains, at whose base Vicenza is situated, where there is a vast cave, named the Grotto of Masano, or Longaro. . . . . 5000 unfortunate beings had retired there with all their goods; the women and children were at the back of the grotto, and the men guarded its entrance. A captain of French adventurers, named L'Hérisson, directed their retreat, and with his troop made vain efforts to penetrate into it; but fooled by its obscurity and its windings, he resolved to suffocate all within it. He filled with faggots the part he had occupied, and set fire to them. Some nobles of Vicenza who were among the captives, now intreated the French to make an exception in their favour, and to let them ransom themselves, their wives, and children, and all of noble blood. But the peasants, their companions in misfortune, exclaimed that they should all perish or be saved together. The whole cavern was now in flames, and its entrance resembled the mouth of a furnace. The soldiers waited till the fire had finished its terrible ravages, to enter the cave and withdraw the booty which they had purchased by such horrible cruelty. All had perished by suffocation, except one young man, who had placed himself near a chink through which a little air had reached him. None of the bodies were disfigured by the fire, but their attitudes sufficiently indicated the agonies they had undergone before death Several women were delivered in these torments, and their infants died with them. When the adventurers brought back their booty to the camp, and recounted the mode of their obtaining it, they excited universal indignation The Chevalier Bayard himself went to the cavern with the Provost Marshal, and caused him to hang in his presence, and in the midst of this scene of horror, two of the wretches who had kindled the fire. But this punishment was not sufficient to efface from the minds of the Italians the memory of so great a barbarity."

The last sentence of this narrative will apply with two-fold force after this modern outrage to the present enemies of France in Algiers. By the Arabs this outrage will never be forgotten, and the true future interpretation of the horrible massacre will be a war of extermination for the natives or for the French. The blood and treasure that must be wasted in the struggle the fearful deeds of manifold—the fearful passions aroused, will proclaim the curse of modern history to after time.

At home we are driving on the game of Parliament, and we verily believe that rather than not get into the recess quickly Ministers would hire a special train to take them there. All the heavy bills are travelling like luggage on the Birmingham line, and will soon arrive at their destination—the Royal Consent!

Elections, too, have been making a stir, and the Government has triumphed in the election of its Solicitor General, but Cambridge has been boisterous alike in its conquest and defeat, and there has been a stand-up fight in the streets very little to the honour of the partisans of either candidate. When will Englishmen arrive at that degree of political philosophy which will enable them to express their wishes and opinions with the voice of Peace?

The railways progress heartily, but we have been this week somewhat shocked by disclosures respecting members of the Board of Ordnance, and the conduct of a Government solicitor, in regard to shares, which again force us to urge the strong necessity for public integrity in political men, and unstained disinterestedness in the official conduct of their functional duties.

The Grand Duke Constantine has been promised in Athens a reception neither better nor higher than he would receive in Poland if she were free, and he has accordingly abandoned his visit. He has made himself obnoxious even in the city of the liberal Greeks, and in visiting the Mosque of St. Sophie the crowd pressed him "to the ground." The Prince was, in fact, prostrated on the pavement from which he had a moment before ordered his followers to repulse his co religionists from the temple of their worship! Sad and unseemly are these bursts of Autocratic rage.

The departure of the Experimental Squadron from Spithead, and the Shrewsbury Meeting of the Royal Agricultural Society, have been features of cheerful and national interest in the adventures of the week, and our page bestows upon them a merited celebration.

Public amusements, in the Italian Opera excepted, have given signs of flagging a little. But at Her Majesty's Theatre there has been a grand ballet demonstration; such a one, in fact, is no likely often to occur again Carlotta Grisi, Cerito, Taglioni, and Lucile Grahn, all dancing in one composition, into which Perrot had woven the characteristic graces of all the different styles of these heroines of pedestrics. It was truly a wonderful composition. By the way, à propos of celebrated dancers, Davernay has been this week married to Mr. Lyne Stephens

Books are thickening around us, and some interesting publications are within view. We shall have literary entertainment galore, but the stirring pleasures and occupations of the country are coming on etc. towards the close of Parliament, gradually beginning to subside into a calm.

EARLY CLOSING OF SHOPS.—The Committee of the Metropolitan Drapers' Association have come to the resolution of making a vigorous appeal to the public, for the purpose of inducing all shops to co operate more earnestly and actively than they have hitherto done in the efforts of the Association to shorten the late hours of business, and which the Committee appear to think can only be accomplished by the abolishing of sending out parcels evening shopping. This appeal it is intended to make by means of a short essay or tract, for which a prize is to be offered, in order that the best possible work upon the subject may be obtained, and when this is done it is to be sent to every householder in London. Such a step will of course entail considerable expense, and part of the plan of the Committee is to raise a fund of £1000, to carry the mea sure into effect. The object the Association has in view is one of great importance, and well deserving of support.

THE THEATRES.

PRINCESS'.

The only novelty at this house has been the début of a young lady, whose name, we hear, is Smythson, as Zerlina in Auber's opera of the "Syren." She is a pupil of Madame Feron, and reflects the great credit upon that lady's plan of tuition, her success having been most decided. She possesses an excellent soprano voice, of good compass, very well cultivated, and accompanies most difficult passages with apparent facility. With this, however, she has much to learn in the way of stage business; but there appears to be all the perception and intelligence required to enable her to assume a leading position, and we may prophecy a very successful career for her, as soon as the feelings of timidity and awkwardness attendant upon a first appearance shall have worn off. We believe the father of the débutante has been for some years connected with the theatrical world, but appearing on the boards, has principally engaged in various capacities before the curtain. He has every reason to be proud of his daughter's success.

LYCEUM.

A version of Mr. Jerrold's amusing "Candle" papers was produced at this house last week; but not even Mr. Keeley's inimitable acting as the loquacious Mrs. Caudle could entirely avert a few unmusical sounds that greeted its conclusion; at the same time, we must in justice state that the applause predominated. Dramatic writers have yet to understand clearly the difference between the humour that appeals to the eye in its most comic perfection, and that which speaks to the ear in a large audience. Some of Mrs Caudle's drollest bits, although given with that careful perception which distinguishes Mr. Keeley's acting, failed to raise the slightest ruffle of laughter. And the spirit of the lectures was somewhat misunderstood by the adapter. Caudle is not a sot, but a victim; the sympathies of the listeners should go with him entirely; and on his sufferings depends the chief interest ruled by the curtain colloquies. After all, the lore subject is essentially undramatic; it can be alone made attractive by establishing an extraneous interest, and then the merit of the original is in a measure lost. The humorous graphic detail, which affords such amusement in the reading produces only ennui on the stage; and the absence of action and situation must prove fatal to a piece at all times, however admirably written and played.

On Monday a new farce, and we believe an entirely original one, was brought out, called "An Object of Interest," the idea being that of representing Mrs. Keeley as a servant maid anxious to become a heroine in a "return of connected persecution," as the chief female characters of domestic dramas are styled in the suffering virtue line, which the adventures of "Susan Hopley" brought into fashion. The piece could not be said to achieve any great success, although the notion was a capital one, and some of the situations comical enough. The applause, however, at the conclusion, was not mixed with any of those unpleasant sounds, which both artists and authors seem to be keenly alive to hear, and yet so ready, having heard them, to attribute to any cause but the simple real one. The clever little children still continue to attract by their dancing; and "Cinderella" appears to send every body home in good spirits.

ST. JAMES'S.

The season of the French Plays at this house has arrived at a very satisfactory conclusion, and Mr Mitchell deserves the thanks of all who admire first-rate acting and delicately pointed dialogue for his indefatigable exertions in placing before us the best pieces and the best actors of the contemporary Paris stage. A record of the past performances may not be altogether uninteresting.

The season commenced January 27th, the series of English plays given by Mr. Mitchell in Paris concluding only on the 11th. The éclat attending these performances, and the compliments paid to the principal entrepreneur by the French King, would appear to have given a new interest to the French plays in London, as the performances here commenced with more brilliancy, and under more encouraging auspices, than in any previous season. Lafont and Mdlle Natali immediately established themselves as leading favourites with the habitues of the theatre. They were succeeded by the great actor Frederic Lemaitre and Mdlle. Clarisse. The effect produced by these accomplished artistes, especially the former, in "La Dame de St. Tropez," and Lemaitre's immitable acting in "Robert Macaire" and "Don Cæsar de Bazan," is well known.

Upon the arrival of Mdlle. Plessy, who appeared on the 21st of March, an entire change in the style of performances took place, which continued for two months with increasing attraction. Revel followed, and played on the same evenings with Plessy, by which arrangement the most delightful comedies and most amusing farces of the Palais Royal could be seen on the same evening. Revel was succeeded by Regnier, one of the most popular artistes of the Theatre Francais, and the most celebrated representative of the high school of French dramatic literature were then brought forward with excellent effect. We may mention Beaumarchais' "Marriage de Figaro," and Marivaux's "Les Fausses Confidences," as both four leading portraits of the Parisian Bouffés Parisiens appeared—Plessy, Regnier, Cartigny, and Mdlle. Bonval. "Le Mari à la Campagne," one of the latest and most popular comedies of the Theatre Francais, in which Regnier, Cartigny, and Mdlle. Bonval, whose singing and acting, especially, and sweet voice, left no favourable an impression last season. Who, that once heard him, can forget his charming song, of the different attractions of the two Grenelles, to hear of the "Pont Neuf de Paris."

The season concluded with the appearance of Arnal, an admirable light comedian, and Mdlle. Déjazet—to use a French expression—of several of the principal characters in places, the translations of which we also have had received at various times in our own theatres. The theatre was open seventy-one nights, and in that time there were eighty four pieces were produced, fifty of which were entirely new to this country. This shows the energy of the management, and the marked patronage which the theatre received from her Majesty, as well as the court and the public. In fact, by being present at his benefit, shows that his spirited endeavours to provide a first-rate entertainment were appreciated in the highest quarters. We believe on that occasion our Queen graciously expressed a hope that the season might be as prosperous; we can state, advisedly, that it has been so. Indeed, we opine that equally profitable results would accrue from opening the theatre in the dull season of the autumn and winter months, when Londoners are known to have no rival amusement likely to attract the beau monde, and the intellectual admirers of refined and admirable acting who may be in town at that period.

MUSIC.

THE BRUSSELS COMPANY AT DRURY-LANE THEATRE.

There has been no foreign dramatic speculation attempted in this country that has created a greater sensation in our musical circles than the advent of the entire company from the Belgian capital. For the first time English amateurs have been enabled to judge of the decided superiority of a perfect ensemble over the attempts of isolated exertions. We have seen and heard great singers achieve triumphs with wretched choruses and indifferent orchestras, and even vocalists of genius have been associated with a noble band, but the combination of such accomplished instrumentalists, of admirable chorus singers—who are as well as sing—and of highly gifted artists in the leading parts, has been an unprecedented event in our musical annals. The Brussels Company at Covent Garden Theatre, and now at Drury Lane, in short has been the great "fact" of the season. We believe that important results are likely to follow these unrivalled performances. It is impossible that the managers of our lyrical establishments can remain insensible to their manifold beauties. The system of "stars" has received a death blow by the appearance of an association of conscientious artists, respecting religiously the scores of the great masters, whose inspiration may not be changed to interpret. There has been no cutting out of "repeats," no unwarrantable mutilations, no scandalous liberties taken with composition, but the thoughts and intentions of composers have been respected; and there has been the natural warfare of isolated exertion

PRINCESS'.

The musical novelties at this lyrical establishment have been rare since Miss Cushman's engagement; but a new opera by Edward Loder, the composer of "Nourjahad," and many popular ballads, is announced for next week. Miss Steinson, a pupil of Madame Feron, has been creating some sensation in Amber's "Siren." She is full of promise, and, with judicious practice, will be a valuable acquisition to the operatic stage.

CONCERTS OF THE WEEK

There have been two matinées since our last impression, given by Madame Eugenia Garcia and Signor Mecatti; the former is well known as the late prima donna of the Princess' Theatre, and the latter as a tenor of no very great distinction. Madame Garcia is an accomplished artiste, who struggles bravely against a naturally defective organ, but, when dramatically excited, she sings powerfully. She has the advantage of a fine person. The programmes of these two concerts may be strikingly characterised as a long list of very indifferent music, every fashionable meeting. To the habitués, they become tiresome; to the critic, intolerable; they serve the purpose of the bénéficiaire, and that is all.

An old favourite, Leblache, takes his benefit next Thursday at her Majesty's Theatre. "Don Pasquale" is the opera selected, and none could be better suited for the occasion. In the part of the ennamoured Ser. Malatesta, he has ample display to the greatest advantage that wit and drollery of which he possesses so much a share. Besides Grisi, Mario, and Formasari, we shall have an opportunity of hearing Castellan, Rita Borio, and Herbert Parker in the evening; and in the ballet department we shall have the opportunity of witnessing the united talents of Taglioni, Cerito, and Lucile Grahn.

FASHIONS.

Nothing can be prettier or more becoming than the toilettes for this season; and this year they seem more charming than ever. The spectacle presented by morning dress, dejeuners, picnics, now in full vogue, is, when the sun shines and the air is warm, gay and brilliant in the extreme. Pity it is that the weather even now sometimes disappoints the wishes of the fair votaries of pleasure, and compels them to adopt the more solid and substantial forms of dress, instead of the light, airy costumes in which it is justly pride to display themselves.

BONNETS are now almost universally made of crape or tulle transparent, and of an open shape; trimmed with large rosettes made of tulle mixed with plain ribbon of the same colour as the bonnet. Bonnets of paille de riz are much worn, however, for toilettes of more ceremony, and are usually ornamented by a feather, either white, pink, sky blue, or cabbage green. For more durable wear, plain straw bonnets are much worn, with the ribbon simply crossed over the crown, and the inside trimmed with ribbon of a different colour from that on the outside. Fringed ribbons are very common that they have entirely disappeared from all bonnets of bon ton, and are no longer admissible by a true élégante.

Another favourite style of BONNETS for morning wear is of transparent fancy straw, called paquine, lined with pink, blue, lilac, or dark green taffetas, with a large flower placed on the side

Very pretty CAPS for dishabille are made in that kind of open tulle called illet, and are trimmed with a ruche of finer tulle, without either ribbon or flowers. The most recherché colours are two shades of green, lilac, violet, and light grey. Charming caps are also made in embroidered muslin, trimmed with lace, and ornamented with a large bow of narrow shaded ribbon, and ringlets of the same ribbon

DRESS CAPS are made of blonde, trimmed with ribbons and flowers; but the important point in this, as in most cases, is the manner in which these caps are put on; they should be placed very much at the back of the head, and the lappets should fall gracefully over the ears, behind the bandeaux or the curls

At the rendezvous of fashion and beauty—the Opera—amongst the numerous wreaths of all kinds worn, those made of green leaves obtain the greatest favour, and an admirable effect is produced by placing amongst the leaves corn ears composed of diamonds. The wreaths, à la Cérès, composed of anemones of different colours, are also much in vogue.

MORNING DRESSES are all made at Bareges in the most bizarre patterns, the skirt trimmed with three or four flounces, or tucks, each with a heading of slight frises (ruffles). The body is made high, and with little style of dress unbroken, much puckered, trimmed with lace, and a wide sash and streamer of ribbon to match, are much worn. Dresses for fêtes, &c., are often made in light-coloured glace silks, the body cut very low, and opening in front in the form of a vest, over a chemisette trimmed with lace, en jabot. The sleeves are tight from the shoulder to the elbow, from thence to the wrist loose enough to display an under sleeve of worked muslin, trimmed with lace

EVENING DRESSES are all made in the most bizarre patterns, the skirt trimmed with three or four flounces, or tucks, each with a heading of slight frises (ruffles). The body is made high, and with little style of dress unbroken, much puckered, trimmed with lace, and a wide sash and streamer of ribbon to match, are much worn. Dresses for fêtes, &c., are often made in light-coloured glace silks, the body cut very low, and opening in front in the form of a vest, over a chemisette trimmed with lace, en jabot. The sleeves are tight from the shoulder to the elbow, from thence to the wrist loose enough to display an under sleeve of worked muslin, trimmed with lace

EVENING parties are still numerous; but the dresses worn, especially by young ladies, vary but little. Tartans or crape, in white or delicate colours, is still preferred, and with justice, to any other material, being admirably fitted for dancing. The skirts are now trimmed with an echelle of quilled ribbons, or tablier; the bodies low, with a rounded point; the berthe in the same material as the dress, and bordered by quilled ribbon. The dresses for morning wear, as for evening wear, are made in striped silks; of a straw colour, blue, lilac, green, pink, on a white ground. Those in horizontal, in shaded, or quadrille stripes, are much worn; as also those in large plaid patterns in all shades

VISIT OF HER MAJESTY TO THE ISLE OF WIGHT, AND DEPARTURE OF THE EXPERIMENTAL SQUADRON.

Soon after the firing of the morning gun on Tuesday, the ships of the squadron at Portsmouth presented a scene of unusual activity and preparation. They had manœuvred on Monday night, and were "hove short" immediately after daylight. At six o'clock the fore topmast studding sails were up, and at eight the topgallant and royal yards aloft with life lines partially on, and "Blue Peter" flying at the fore gave the well known signal of departure. At this time there was a light and not very steady breeze from the N.N.E.

On shore all due preparations had been made to receive her Majesty and her distinguished visitors. A guard of honour, composed of six sergeants and 100 men of the Royal Marine Artillery Corps, under the command of Lieut. Colonel D. A. Gibsone, Captain Wesley, First Lieutenant Adjutant Savage, First Lieutant Tate, and Second Lieutenant Williams, marched to the pier in the centre of their Portsmouth quarters, and took up a position on the right of the platform of the Royal Clarence Victualling Establishment. Another guard of honour, composed of 100 men of the 97th Regiment, under the command of Major Franklyn, Captain Lewis, Lieutenants Hobson and Mushet, and Ensign Cator, bearing the colours of the regiment, took up its position on the right of the yard of the Gosport Railway Terminus. The stage leading to the stairs at Clarence-yard was decorated with an elegant combination of the flags of all nations, and the steps by which her Majesty was to descend in order to enter her barge were covered with crimson cloth. His Royal Highness Prince George of Cambridge, on board the Comet steamer, and proceeded to Spithead, under a salute from the battery and flag ship, the Tagus steamer being destined for the reception of the Hon. Directors.

At 25 minutes to twelve o'clock the Royal special train, conveying her Majesty and Prince Albert, and their Majesties the King and Queen of the Belgians, arrived at Gosport terminus, where the Royal party was received by Major-General Fakenham.

The Royal standard was immediately hoisted, the guard presented arms, and then Her Majesty and suite, accompanied by the Lieutenant-Governor and Staff, drove to the Clarence Victualling-yard, where the Lords of the Admiralty, Captain Carter (Superintendent), Mr. Town (Master Attendant), Mr. T. T. Grant, F.R.S. (Storekeeper), Captain Mowbray, Captain Sir Thomas Hastings, &c., were in attendance to receive them.

Her Majesty, leaning on the arm of the King of the Belgians, and followed by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, who gave his arm to the Queen of the Belgians, embarked in the new state barge, accompanied by their suites, and was steered by Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence to the Victoria and Albert, which lay out a short distance in the harbour. As soon as the Royal standard was hoisted at the bow of the barge to the main of the yacht, a salute thundered out from the old Victory, which was taken up by the Excellent and some of the yachts, and the smoke wreaths had nearly obliterated the whole of the brilliant pageantry from view. Then came the hurrahs of the multitudes assembled on the beach, and the more effective and spirit-stirring cheers of the seamen who manned the yards of the men-of-war.

Upon their Majesties embarking on board the Royal steam yacht, the English and Belgian standards were hoisted, and the Victory and Excellent saluted each manned yard, and the Victoria and Albert steamed out of the inner dock of the Royal yacht, immediately went aft, and spoke to the Queen Dowager.

Upon the Victoria and Albert leaving the harbour on her passage to Spithead, the forts saluted, and the tens of thousands of spectators that were congregated on either side loudly cheered.

The fleet at Spithead also hailed, with the exception of the Hibernia, which does not belong to the experimental squadron, did not man yards

The Royal yacht, followed by the Fairy, the Princess Alice, with her Majesty the Queen Dowager, the Black Eagle, with the Admiralty flag, and innumerable other steam-boats, passed under the stern of the Albion, and proceeded between the two lines of the fleet, from east to west, until she rounded the stern of the Hibernia, which lay at anchor with the westward of the whole squadron

The signal was now made for the squadron to make sail, and away the hands went aloft; and in a few minutes, topsails, top gallant sails, and royals, were let fall, sheeted home and hoisted, and the courses loosened

The squadron had been previously manœuvred, and hove short. The hands were now turned up to man the sheets and top sail tyes, and the fleet were speedily under way, and proceeding in their course to sea, the steamers paddle leading

The wind—what little there was of it was from the westward, and, consequently, the vessels, in steering towards the Nab light, had it nearly aft, on the starboard quarter. The ships proceeded on their course under courses, topsails, topgallant sail, royals, &c., flying jib, and spanker and studding sail, aloft and alow.

A more magnificent sight cannot be pictured to the imagination than that which presented itself when the squadron had reached St. Helen's. As far as the eye could behold, the waters were covered with countless vessels, all under sail, and each vying with the other to keep pace with those mighty fabrics which constitute the bulwarks of this maritime, and are the pride and glory of its people. Yachts of every description, belonging to the Royal Yacht Squadron, and all the other clubs from the Thames to the Land's End, were following, crowded with sail. Steam boats, with their hundreds each on board, were busily scattered in the midst of the innumerable sailing vessels, while, towering above the whole of them in stately magnificence, were the ships of war in full sail; and there is no more imposing sight than a fleet of line of battle ships under all sail. It was a singular, yet beautiful sight, to see these mighty monsters of the deep amongst the countless Lilliputian fleet which so thickly surrounded them and it must indeed feel proud of anything that he does, as he might well justly proud here, in having raised a superstructure that is so noble and so serviceable

Conspicuous among all the various beautiful specimens of naval architecture was the graceful little Fairy, Her Majesty's tender, which played around the Royal yacht, and turned about through the yachts and steamers with all the celerity and ease attributed to her aerial namesake. The slender tapering masts, raked immensely aft, and almost supported by the cobweb cordage of the shrouds and stays—her low and perfect mould, melting away into the bows and run—her great speed—and, above everything, the absence of sweat by paddle wheels—all combined to render her so attractive to the eye, that she won on the affections of the men of the old school, overcame the prejudices of the Pipes and Tompions, who "can't see much good in this steaming affair," and forced the unprejudiced Sallyport tar to exclaim, "Why, though she ain't fit for a nor'wester, in-shore she frisks about like a lamb after its mother."

The manner seamen mustered strongly indeed, and representatives of nearly every Yacht Club were present, in every form, from the clipper schooner of 200 tons down to the Thames cutter of 10; clothed in their snow-white canvas, big jibs, and all setting well, and fitting over the water in every direction, they formed the most beautiful coup d'œil that could be conceived, stretching away for miles, tacking to and fro, running out of every creek and bay in the Isle, and firing their guns with wonderful zeal and tolerable regularity. Among them were "the great republications" of the racing world—the Crusader, the Cumilla, the Alarm, the Gleam, Lord Yarborough's schooner yacht, &c.

The dusky forms of numerous steamers struggling under the enormous loads of living creatures who swarmed from stem to stern, on paddle box, deck, rigging, yards, contrasted with the livelier hues and motion of the sailers, and relieved their monotony.

After the vessels of the Royal cortège, came the Black Eagle, the Comet, the Rantel, the Ant, the Teazer, the Tagus, the Rattler, and the Water Lily.

Thus they proceeded towards Spithead, accompanied by so many vessels that competition was fairly baffled, until they rounded the Spit buoy, when the St. Vincent led off with a Royal salute, which was taken up and continued by the other ships of the squadron. The smoke hung so heavily round the enormous hulls of the men-of-war that it soon enveloped them in a dense cloud, through which the flashes of fire were darted fiercely out, and alone marked their position. At last the firing, which was very regular, proceeding from the ships in the order of their position, was at an end, and the smoke slowly drifted to leeward, hung like a pall over and underneath all the splendour of the scene. The men of war were drawn up in the usual order, grim and silent—ports open, guns run out scarce a living soul to be seen on board. The Royal yacht was slowly proceeding between the starboard and larboard divisions. There little flags are run up to the Admiral's main, and in an instant the rigging appears instinct with life—the yards and cord age swarm with men, until at last they take their stand in tapering rows of dark frocks and trousers, and out come three thundering cheers for the Queen. For some reason or another—probably because the signal could not be made out, as the day were scarcely distinguishable owing to the light breeze—the Trafalgar did not follow the example of her fellows, and her men remained in the tops or in the yards in silence. Another signal from the Admiral, and as if by magic the gaskets were cast off, and down soon the sweeping folds of the canvass, and the bare outlines of masts and rope were in an instant concealed by a mass of sail

At twenty minutes to one, a signal was made from the flag ship, St. Vincent, to weigh; and at one the whole squadron, comprising the St. Vincent, 120, Captain Rowley, flag of Rear Admiral Hyde Parker, Commander in Chief of the Squadron; the Trafalgar, 120, Captain Sir Thomas Hastings; the Queen, 110, Captain Sir B Walker; the Hodney, 92, Captain Collier, the Albion, 90, Captain Lockyer; the Canopus, 84, Captain Moresby; the Vanguard, 80, Captain Waller; the Superb, 80, Captain Lord Frederick Kerr, and the sloop, Commander Smith, were under sail. The Trafalgar was first to complete the setting of her sails, which were the same as those of the other vessels—viz., fore, main, and mizen, fore and main sails, and fore, foresails, and jibs; but the Rodney was first under way, the Superb being second. The usual effect of the firing was visible in the lull of the little breeze that ceased before, and the squadron soon to run out their standing sails to get any headway upon them. Presently, however, the breeze came creeping up, and after a few flourishes and "cats' paws," settled down to a weak puffy sort of breeze in S.W. and by W., when the squadron hauled their bow steadily. Great speculation existed as to which would be the first round the Nab; but it was soon evident that the Queen in the light breeze was drawing ahead, and the Rodney being second, and the Albion next to leeward of the three; then the Trafalgar, the Canopus, the Vanguard (some contended it was the Albion), and lastly the St. Vincent, which made very poor work of it in the calm. Her Majesty's yacht, with Her Royal standard flying, surrounded by thousands in the hired steamers, &c, stood boldly out to sea in the van, the Queen standing by the larboard paddle box and appearing to watch the result of the race with much interest in terest.

Her Majesty acknowledged repeatedly, and with impressiveness, the greetings which rose on every side around her, increased in warmth and intensity by the fact that she was the first of a long line of ships sailing here to Lieutenant Vibert, for a compound lever power; £10 to Earl Ducie, for a thrashing and dressing machine: £10 to Mr Dean, for a steam engine; £5 to Mr. Cambridge, for a steam-engine; £2 to Mr. Hill, for a granary crane

EXTERIOR OF THE PAVILION, ROYAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY'S SHOW, SHREWSBURY.

(Continued from page 41.)

At the stand of Mr. Nicholson, of Newark, our attention was drawn to an article we scarcely expected to meet with amongst a collection of agricultural implements—a patent copying press, on a simple and novel construction. The principal novelty is, that the wedge is adopted to give the pressure instead of the screw.

We annex portraits of some of the most distinguished agriculturists, several of whom were present at the Shrewsbury Meeting, among whom are Mr. Jonas Webb, of Babraham, in the county of Cambridge; the Earl Talbot, Philip Pusey, Esq., M.P., F.R.S.; Mr. Stephen Grantham, who has obtained many prizes for Southdown sheep; the Earl Spencer, and Mr. Ransome, the agricultural implement manufacturer, of Ipswich. In the second group are the Duke of Northumberland, the Duke of Sutherland, Mr. G. Tollett; Mr. Blacker, of Armagh; and Mr. Elliot. In the allegorical group at page 40, is a Medallic Portrait of his Grace the Duke of Richmond, the President of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, for the present year.

DINNER IN THE PAVILION.

THE EXHIBITION OF CARTOONS, IN WESTMINSTER HALL.

OPENING OF THE CARTOON EXHIBITION IN WESTMINSTER HALL.

On Monday last this National Exhibition was opened gratuitously to the public, and thousands have since availed themselves of the privilege. Our artist has sketched the vast apartment, with one exception (at Padua) the largest Hall in Europe. The Cartoons, Coloured Sketches, and Frescoes are ranged upon the south wall, and upon the screen raised as a short distance from the north wall, so as to allow a passage to the Law Courts. The old walls are literally "gay with life and colour." The Statues are arranged better than last year; the figures of the double line face inwards, having their backs turned to the Cartoons on the walls, so that the Hall is divided into three aisles, and the spectators, in examining the Sculpture, are separated from the greater number who linger by the Cartoons.

Our Engraving shows a general view of the Hall, the Frescoes of M'Clise and Cope in the foreground. Next week we shall resume our Illustration of the Cartoons.

DEATH OF J. AUGUSTINE WADE, THE POET AND COMPOSER.

"Broke is the branch that might have grown full high,
And withered is Apollo's laurel bough." MARLOWE.

Every lover of music and of poetry will regret to learn the decease of Augustine Wade who died on Tuesday last at No. 340, Strand, in his forty-fourth year.

THE LATE MR. J. AUGUSTINE WADE.

Mr. Wade's erratic career prevented him from assuming that position which his genius must otherwise have commanded, for a man of greater universal attainments has hardly met with. He was a native of Ireland, and born at the residence of the celebrated Henry Grattan, where his mother was visiting at the time of his birth. When a boy, between nine and ten years of age, Mr. Wade left home, presented himself at the gate of Trinity College, Dublin, and, addressing the porter in Latin, according to usage, obtained his admission. He was a pupil of, and especial favourite of Dr. Sands. Mr. Wade gained high academical distinction.

He subsequently studied as a surgeon, but ultimately adopted music as a profession. His opera of "The Two Houses of Granada" was successfully produced at Drury-lane Theatre, and the easy, flowing style of his melodies afforded the hope that he would have maintained a leading position amongst our native composers. His ballads of "Love was once a little boy" and "Meet me by moonlight" attained an almost unprecedented popularity. He also composed an oratorio called "The Prophecy," and was the author of "The Dwellings of Fancy," "Song of the Flowers," &c. His last work was "The Hand-Book to the Pianoforte," with a very clever essay on the genius of that instrument, and valuable introductions to harmony and counterpoint. Our columns have been often graced with many beautiful effusions of his muse and musical inspiration.

Mr. Wade was a classical scholar, a master of modern languages, and a accomplished instrumentalist, and a profound theorist. He was agreeable and courteous in personal character and conversation, generous and frank in disposition. Had he possessed more persevering industry, his excellent scholarship and natural genius would have secured to him more substantial results. We lament to learn that he has left a widow totally unprovided for.

MEYERBEER.

This celebrated composer was born at Berlin, the 5th September, 1794. His father, John Beer, a rich landholder, had several children, one of whom afterwards became a dramatic poet of much merit, and the author of a celebrated tragedy, entitled "The Pariah." His brother, Jacques Meyerbeer, also gave early indications of that dramatic genius, which, united with his musical talent, has placed him in the first operative composers of the day. He enjoyed, through his father's affection and foresight, the advantage of an excellent general education, and soon became remarkable abroad for his musical taste. At seven years of age he already performed on the piano at public concerts; and it was not till he had reached the age of fifteen that he commenced his deeper and more scientific musical studies. He was fortunate in his choice of a master. Abbé Vogler, who was one of the great theorists, the ablest musician, and first organist in Germany, had opened a school, which was numerously attended, and amongst the fellow pupils of Meyerbeer were young men whose names are now never spoken of but with the deepest admiration, such as Weber, Winter, Knecht, Gänsbacher, &c., and the first of these was Meyerbeer's bosom friend. With such worthy subjects for emulation, it is not wonderful that the young musician's genius daily expanded. At eighteen years of age he produced his first opera, "La Fille de Jephté." In this production all the ancient scholastic rules were strictly observed. It obtained a fair portion of success, and the Abbé Vogler, in his enthusiasm, signed the brevet of a maestro for the young composer, adding his blessing, and giving up his tutelage.

At Vienna, Meyerbeer appeared as a pianist; he acquired, however, such a reputation, that he was entrusted with the composition of an opera for the Court, entitled "The Two Caliphs." This, however, was a complete failure. Italian music was, at that period, in the highest vogue, and Salieri, the author, a great friend of young Meyerbeer, advised his travelling in Italy, to acquire a style of composition more in unison with the prevailing taste. Once arrived there the Italian music fascinated his imagination. Delighted with the sweet and flowing melodies and varied manner of Rossini's "Tancredi," he immediately adopted this style, and wrote an opera for the famous Pasta, entitled, "Romilda e Costanza," which he brought out in Padua, 1817, and which was very successful. In 1819, he wrote the music for Metastasio's "Semiramide Riconosciuta," and brought it out at the Grand Theatre of Turin; the same year at Venice, he produced "Emma di Resburgo," and both were extremely well received. In 1821, Meyerbeer, not unmindful of his native city, and anxious to raise in his fame, wrote, in the Italian style, "La Porte de Brandebourg," to be performed at Berlin, but he could not succeed in getting it produced there. His name was fortunate in his "Emma di Resburgo:" it was translated, and performed at all the German theatres, in spite of the violent opposition of that school of composers to which he had a short time before belonged. Even Weber deplored the change of style of his friend, and, while "Emma" was performed at the Italian Opera-house, brought forth again "The Two Caliphs" at the German Theatre, hoping to throw the balance in favour of Meyerbeer's earliest production. Meanwhile our composer produced another opera—"Margherita d'Anjou" at the Scala at Milan; and in this, Lablache says, now a distinguished actor of the Grand Opera at Paris, made his début. "L'Esule di Granata" followed—the first act was hissed on the first performance, but the second pleased, and the composer, a fine duet between Lablache and Donzelli, however, carried the audience by storm, and on the subsequent nights the whole opera was received with enthusiasm. Meyerbeer's best compositions, "Il Crociato in Egitto," "Emma," and "Margherita d'Anjou" were written for the Italian stage. "Il Crociato," obtained a more brilliant success than any of his preceding works, and the composer was crowned by the audience. This opera, after making the tour of the Italian Theatres was performed at Paris, whither Meyerbeer himself, at the invitation of M. de la Rochefoucauld, repaired. Everyone remembers the effect that Velluti produced in this opera.

MEYERBEER.

Our composer had married in 1827, but the death of his two children threw a gloom over his future prospects. He passed the winter of 1831, at Berlin, and it was a dreadful one, during the time the cholera raged there. [illegible] ast, which have so highly distinguished him as a composer of sacred music. Amongst them we may remark the "Stabat Mater" of Rossini, and "Te Deum," and an oratorio entitled "Hezekiah's Vow." But the most finished of these compositions were only a shadowing forth of the brilliant success of "Robert le Diable," brought out in Paris in 1831. The splendid [illegible] more towards pleasing the public, [illegible] adapted for representation, and [illegible] ever quits sight of the stage, and [illegible] persons and wants were not needed to advance its claims, for it addressed itself to the sight, to the fancy, and the heart as much as to the ear, and though a marvel in music, was neither ill adapted nor ill delivered by the singers and actors.

The colossal [illegible] "Huguenots," [illegible] could never equal have been a work of considerable difficulty, for an enormous reputation was to be sustained in a production of the same order and from the same pen. The success of the "Huguenots" did not, perhaps, equal that of "Robert le Diable," but it was felt and understood as a work of genius.

Certainly the best operas of Meyerbeer are those to be had written for the French stage. In his native country he has been unfortunate: having returned there after a great lapse of years, his most ambitious production, since his return, has not been the "Camp of Silesia," of which so many different opinions have been given, but it is [illegible] productions we have mentioned; and this is testified by the [illegible] performance at Berlin; the reason given by the Berlin Bank [illegible] to reserve it for state occasions alone—appearing to be merely as a feint to conceal its comparative failure. Meyerbeer, though [illegible] a peculiar style, and in that style [illegible] in operas he has [illegible] extraordinary energy. Possessed [illegible] a genius [illegible] and [illegible] back, and his fame [illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible] earth.

Much of the peculiarity of Meyerbeer's productions is to be explained by referring to the history of his life, his early studies, and predilections. In his works may be traced the deep science and thorough musical knowledge which he acquired in the course of his early studies, and the [illegible] which [illegible] characteristic of the musical taste of the French nation, amongst whom he produced his later compositions.

At the head of his style of musical art, he may be said to have founded the school to which he belongs. But greatly as the products as of this composer must be admired, his failures, not possessing his genius, will, it is to be feared, rather injure than forward the advancement of pure musical taste. The peculiarities of his style, indeed, are such as will be readily resorted to, for reasons far different to those by which he was actuated; for in finding the possibility of [illegible] combinations, many a composer who would otherwise have lived unsung, may be induced to offer his meagre and trashy productions to the world.

PRESENT TO HER MAJESTY.—During the last few days a number of distinguished persons have been attracted to the London Docks for the purpose of viewing the fine ship [illegible] Her Majesty, which has been fitted up in this country per the Caroline, being a present from the Imaum of Muscat to her Majesty the Queen. The animals, notwithstanding the silliness peculiar to their breed, have, since their arrival in the docks, exhibited a wonderful degree of docility. Captain Short (sailing master), of the Caroline, who has also been entrusted with the care of other Royal presents states that though acquainted for a number of years with the characteristic nature of these noble animals, that during a voyage of 116 days they [illegible] to them unknown to those having experience in the importation of foreign full-blooded animals. They are perfectly sound and free from all distemper, and as a present they will no doubt be fully appreciated by her Majesty. There are seven in number, five of which are [illegible] the service of the Imaum, and constantly attended them during the voyage. We believe a similar present was made from Muscat to his Majesty William IV., and the horses were disposed of at the sale which took place at Hampton Court Stables, subsequent to the decease of his Majesty.

MILITARY PUNISHMENT.—On Saturday afternoon last two privates in the 2d battalion of Coldstream Guards, stationed at Windsor, were flogged for a breach of military discipline, in having refused to be taken to the black hole, according to the orders of the officer in command of the regiment, Colonel Brickenau, in the absence of [illegible] Duke of Wellington on leave. Their names are Henry Seyman and William Lawrin. They were sentenced by a Court Martial to receive one hundred lashes "triangles" were immediately brought to the ground in front of the barracks, and placed in front of the guard room; the few soldiers who were in the barracks at the time being drawn up on the parade to witness the punishment, the gates were closed, and the barrack gates closed to prevent the admission of the public. Several of their comrades, who were outside of the gates, were refused admission by the sergeant of the guard, until the flogging was over. From information received from persons who were present at the preceding three offenders were most severe, the blood trickling down their backs in streamlets after the first 15 or 20 lashes. Their comrades, who were drawn up in the square, looked on in silent silence. The moment the culprits were loosened they gave vent to one loud simultaneous hiss. The men were tried, sentenced, punished, and taken to the hospital, all within two hours and a half.

REPAIR OF THE PORTLAND VASE.—Mr. J. Doubleday has at length completed his labours upon the Portland vase. That gentleman has accomplished his undertaking in so masterly a manner, that it would defy even the most critical to discover where the vase had been injured. We believe it is the intention of the authorities of the Museum, in order to preserve the vase from future attacks, to keep it in a separate apartment, accessible only by tickets.

FATAL ACCIDENT ON THE BRIGHTON RAILWAY.—On Tuesday night between eight and nine o'clock, the following accident occurred on the line of the Brighton Railway to a man employed in the service of the Company, in the service of the General Steam Navigation Company. Hill was on the way to London, and when the train stopped at the Reigate station he got out on to the platform, and before he retained the train, stepped on the [illegible] line, and before some distance to catch the train, and, in endeavouring to jump on one of the carriages, he missed his footing, and fell with his left leg under the wheels, [illegible] which [illegible] passed over it. The moment the driver stopped the train, when Hill was lifted up in a dreadfully mutilated state, the left foot being cut off about the ancle, and the lower part of the leg entirely crushed flat. He was taken with all expedition to Guy's Hospital, where he died on Wednesday afternoon.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE [Friday].—Our arrivals this week, coastwise chiefly of foreign and Irish, which have consisted of upwards of 30,000 quarters. This large supply has, of course, a considerable effect upon the trade, and leaves it in a very depressed state, both as to sales. The fine wea ther and the demand for English wheat to rule heavy, at barely Monday's quotations. In foreign wheat very little passing, and prices were only but all cheaper. Beans and peas were held at full prices.

ARRIVALS.—English wheat, 6,310 barley, 1,128 oats, 240 quarters. Irish, wheat, — barley, — oats, 10,800 quarters. Foreign: wheat, 3,050; barley, 2,670; oats, 53,300 quarters. Flour, 980 sacks.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 32s to 36s; ditto, white, 36s to 38s, Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 31s to 35s; ditto, white, 34s to 36s; rye, 26s to 28s; grinding barley, 22s to 24s; distilling ditto, 26s to 28s; malting ditto, 30s to 32s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 56s to 58s; brown ditto, 54s to 56s; Ringston ma, Ware, 60s to 62s; Chevalier, 64s to 66s; harvey bean, 36s to 38s; pigeon ditto, 38s to 40s; Lincoln and York boilers, 38s to 40s; ditto, white, 32s to 34s; Suffolk ditto, 32s to 34s; Yorkshire ditto, 32s to 34s; tick beans, 30s to 32s; grey peas, 32s to 34s; maple, 34s to 36s; white ditto, 34s to 36s; Kingston and Ware, 36s to 38s; Essex, English, 21s to 23s; Scotch, 22s to 24s; potato oats, 22s to 24s; Youghall and Cork, black, 20s to 21s; ditto, white, 21s to 22s; Limerick, 20s to 21s; Galway, 20s to 21s; Sligo, 20s to 21s; Londonderry, potato, 22s to 23s; Belfast, 22s to 23s; Scotch, potato, 22s to 23s; Dundee, 22s to 23s; Peterhead, 22s to 23s; Aberdeen, 22s to 23s; Inverness, 22s to 23s; Cork, 20s to 21s; Limerick, 20s to 21s; Waterford, 20s to 21s; Sligo, 20s to 21s; Londonderry, 20s to 21s; Belfast, 20s to 21s; Scotch, 20s to 21s; Dundee, 20s to 21s; Peterhead, 20s to 21s; Aberdeen, 20s to 21s; Inverness, 20s to 21

This Day is Published in foolscap 8vo., price 6s., cloth, pp. 550, Fourth Edition,

TALES OF THE COLONIES; or, The Adventures of an Emigrant. By CHARLES ROWCROFT, Esq.
London: Baines, Scholey, and Co., Cornhill.

BOOKS FOR YOUTH. FIELD'S JUVENILE BOOK ESTABLISHMENT, 65, Quadrant corner of Air street. The largest and best selected Stock of Juvenile Volumes in London, comprising the Works of the most popular Writers, in plain and coloured bindings. Also an endless variety of Children's Coloured Picture Books, &c.

THE ILLUSTRATED FAMILY JOURNAL (No. 20, for JULY 19th), Contains—Illustrated use of the Genius of Good, with a Portrait and Eleven Engravings. London Wall, with an Engraving of the Gate of the Bloody Tower. Ruth Van Winkle, by Washington Irving. Bavarian and Gipsies' Bonnet, with an Engraving, &c. &c. Price Twopence. J. CLAYTON, 230, Strand.

HOW TO LIVE—Price 1s. (by post, 1s. 6d.),
WHAT to EAT, DRINK, and AVOID; addressed to the Nervous and Dyspeptic.
By R. J. CULLEN, M.D., M.R.C.P., and M.R.C.S., &c.
SHERWOOD, 23, Paternoster-row; CARVALHO, 147, Fleet-street; HANNAY, 63, Oxford-street; MANN, 39, Cornhill; and the Author, 7a, Arundel-street, Strand.

IMPORTANT TO TRAVELLERS.
Just Published, price 10s., bound,
COGHLAN'S HAND-BOOK FOR ITALY.—North, Central, and Southern: including every information—mode of travelling, expenses at hotels, &c.—for an entire Tour. Also, a new edition of COGHLAN'S HAND-BOOK FOR CONTINENTAL EUROPE, containing Belgium and Holland, Germany, Prussia (including Parts), Switzerland and Guernsey, with a New Map of all the Railways to the present time. Price 10s., bound, or, both in one, 20s.—London: H. COLBURN, 13, Great Marlborough-Street.

SUBSCRIBERS TO THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN PUBLIC LIBRARY, CONDUIT STREET, HANOVER-SQUARE, are supplied with all the New and Popular Works for perusal in Town or Country as soon as Published. Have the choice of a numerous collection of the best Books in the English, French, [illegible] direct the purchase of any Work of general interest. Terms [illegible] and post free), on application to Messrs. [illegible]

BULL'S NEW SYSTEM Library, 19, Holles-street.
FOR FAMILIES AND BOOK SOCIETIES.
Families paying 4l. 4s. the year, have all the New and Standard Works they order; twelve volumes at a time in town, or twenty four in the country. Clubs, Institutes and Reading Societies supplied on the same terms as the New Books to RENT, at the end of each year.
The New Catalogue, with full particulars, sent gratis and post-free, on application to Mr. BULL, Librarian, 19, Holles-street, Cavendish-square, London.

CIRCULATING LIBRARY. FIVE HUNDRED AND FIFTY VOLUMES of MODERN NOVELS and ROMANCES, to be DISPOSED OF, for only TWENTY-FIVE POUNDS, including the Works of Sir Walter Scott, Bulwer, James, Marryat, Cooper, Ainsworth, &c., and many recent Works, well worth the attention of any person about commencing, or adding to, a Circulating Library. All the books may be seen, and a list obtained, at J. CLARKSON'S Magazine Warehouse, 9, Temple-street, bottom of Bouverie-street, Fleet-street. Also, One Hundred and Twenty Volumes of Modern Voyages, Travels, Memoirs, &c., for only Ten Pounds.

IMPORTANT TO PERSONS FURNISHING.—A Choice of 500 Pieces of the very best Dining and Drawing-room BRUSSELS CARPETS, of last year's designs, registered patterns all at 5s. 6d. per yard, being a reduction from last year's price of 7s. 6d., and others, not registered, at 5s., and of very superior strong Brussels, manufactured in 1844, now selling at 2s. 11d., common quality, as low as 2s. 3d.; with the best extensions and lay for the cheapest, stock of superior CABINET FURNITURE to be met with in the kingdom. List of Prices and Drawings of which may be had, gratis, on application to Messrs. Andrews, 1, WORMS and CO., 104, 107, 108, and 109, Whitechapel-road; and 2, 3, 4, and 5, Thomas-street.

LOSS OF TEETH SUPPLIED, without Springs, Clasps, Ligatures, or Wires. Loose Teeth Fastened; and Filling Decayed Teeth with Mineral Marine Paste. Mons. LE DRAY and SON, SURGEON DENTISTS, 42, Berners-street, Oxford-street, continue to restore Decayed Teeth with their celebrated Mineral Marine Paste, applied without pain, heat, or pressure, preventing any further decay in the Teeth, and rendering the operation of extraction unnecessary. They also Fasten Loose Teeth, whatever arising from age or accident, and for the disease of the gums. Impracticable Artificial or Natural Teeth of surpassing beauty, to match in colour and shape those left in the mouth, fixed, from one to a complete set, without extracting the roots, or giving any pain, on the following principle:—A single tooth, 10s.; a set, 5l. 5s. Arranged on the most approved principle, and restoring perfect articulation and mastication. At home from Ten till Six.—Mons. Le Dray's "Treatise on the Diseases of the Gums and Teeth" may be had free, on application at their residence, 42, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

JOHN CAPPER and SON, Linendrapers to the Queen, have, for the convenience of an Extensive Connexion in the West End and surrounding neighbourhood, opened an additional FAMILY LINEN WAREHOUSE, at No. 5, Oxford-street. The same high character for moderate charges, and the articles will be of the same BEST MAKES and the lowest incident to Credit Business being entirely avoided, CAPPER and SON can offer the full amount of prompt payments by such a reduction in prices as can only be sustained by selling invariably for IMMEDIATE PAYMENT WITHOUT DISCOUNT. The Stock comprises Table Linens, Diaper Huckabacks, &c. all House-cloth Linen and Cotton Goods, French Chambers and Bandanas silks, Lace goods, Hosiery, &c. Twill and Canaries, Blankets for Carriage, Opera, &c., Flannels, Blankets, Quilts, Table Covers, &c.

MOURNING.—Court, Family, and Complimentary.—The [illegible] and a note particularizing the mourning required, will insure [illegible] Parcels, and Services, of every [illegible] The Show Rooms are replete with every novelty for Mourning in [illegible] and Mrs. Stevens, Collars, Barbes, Head-dresses, trimmings, &c. [illegible]

Fancy Silks	Coloured Moires	Va eseences Lace
Black Ditto	Shot Ditto	Lisle and Lawn Ditto
Lustred Ditto	Coloured Satin Tures	French Blonde
Ditto Ditto	Black Ditto	Mantle Dresses
Ditto Gauzes	Silk Velvets	Canadian Ditto
Bareges	Ditto	French Merinos

Irish Linens, Table Linens, Sheetings, &c.

LADIES requiring any of the above Goods, will oblige KING and SHEATH by writing for an assortment of Patterns, which will be sent free of postage, and all Parcels above the value of 5l. will be sent carriage paid. In order to assist in the selection, they will find it convenient to state the price per yard of the article they require, and the number of yards, or the quantity required for any particular purpose. Every article is marked in plain figures at the lowest cash prices.

Fancy Silks, from	... ...	1s. 11d. to 6s. 6d.
Mérinolines Lace, from	... ...	0s. 6d. to 2s. 6d.
Suits for Dresses, from	... ...	8s. 11d. to 8s. 9d.
Peruvia Dresses, from	... ...	2s. 11d. to 5s. 6d.
Silk Velvets for Dresses, from	... ...	3s. 9d. to 12s. 9d.

Please to address, KING and SHEATH, 28a, Regent-street, near Oxford-street.

FOR CLEANING GOLD and SILVER PLATE, INSTANTANEOUSLY, without Labour, Dust, Dirt, Rubbing, or Scratching, by [illegible] &c. 2s. 6d. and 5s. [illegible] The following [illegible] are at once certain and the useful ness of the new discovery [illegible] SILVO GALVANIC CREAM, one [illegible] to be used occasionally if tarnished or in [illegible] Rotten Stone kind of chemical principles, it merely removes the tarnish on plate, [illegible] of which other liquors without [illegible] ANDREW URE, M.D., F.R.S., [illegible] slightest caution.

"London, 13, Charlotte street, Bedford square, March 8th, 1845.
"Gentlemen,—I have now tried your valuable discovery a fair trial, and have no hesitation in saying it is the most compound which has ever been introduced for the purpose, and will [illegible] to [illegible] SILVO GALVANIC CREAM, and shall accept the agency for its sale with great pleasure. "RIPPON and HAYWARD, Silversmiths."

"Oxford street, March [illegible] South Audley street.
"Gentlemen,—Your Silvo Compound is protected by the Stamp and Address of [illegible] Sheathe, Messrs. HUNTS and CO., LIGHT HOUSE, 201 Strand, [illegible] Sheathe, Barton Arcade, and Edwards [illegible] Bond street; Johnson, Cornhill; Jones and Co [illegible] Regent street; and [illegible] Fore-street.

SELF MEASUREMENT, AND AT ACCOMMODATION.
The following Directions [illegible] Inches, Progress, Inches

[illegible] round Back to Elbow joint	Size round top of Thigh (tight)
[illegible] round Back to Elbow joint	Size round Calf

[illegible] Trousers, from [illegible] Ditto Ditto [illegible] Spring cords (woollen) [illegible] Dress cords [illegible]

[illegible] MOSES and SON, Tailors, [illegible] the public are [illegible]

N.B.—In business transacted at the Establishment from Friday's account until noon on Saturday, when business is conducted until twelve o'clock.

APPRENTICE WANTED for FIVE YEARS, to a SADDLER, CARRIAGE and CHAISE HARNESS, and COLLAR MAKER. (Premium required) [illegible]

DANCING.—LESSONS in the MAZURKA, CELLARIUS, VALS POLKA and VALSE à DEUX TEMPS [illegible] Mr. WILLIS, 41, Sussex street, Goodge square. Private [illegible] Terms may be had on application.

EDWARDS' PATENT FIREWOOD WHEELS—the Cheapest and Quickest mode of Lighting Fires ever offered to the Public. Certain fire in a few [illegible]—Sold by every Oilman and [illegible] Penny, or 6s. per Spiller. Ascendor's Kettle Three for a Penny.—Manufactory [illegible] and City one.

JONES'S GOLD SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at [illegible] 328, Strand, opposite Somerset House [illegible] improvement, and are warranted for [illegible] Watches [illegible] other house. Gold [illegible] Watches [illegible] less than for a 5l. stamp.

THE LARGEST STOCK IN EUROPE.—FURNISHING IRONMONGERY, Stoves, Grates, Kitchen Ranges, Fenders, Fire Irons, best Sheffield Plate, ornamental Iron and Wire-work, Garden Engines, Rollers, &c., Japan Tea-trays, Japan, &c.—PARKINSON and CO.'S WAREHOUSES, adjoining Mount Tavistock, 58, Baker street, Portman square.—N.B. Every article is marked in plain figures at the lowest cash prices.

WANTED, by a Gentlewoman of Middle Age, who has been [illegible] Governess to good society, a SITUATION as COMPANION to a LADY, or CHAPERON to YOUNG LADIES. She is of a most cheerful disposition, has excellent health, and forms her high principles, sound practical education, and unexceptionable manners. Unexceptionable References can be given. A Address [illegible] F. 79, Gracechurch-street, C[illegible]

SUPERIOR FRENCH BEDDING.—HEAL AND SON'S MATTRESSES, of fine long wool and horse hair, are quite equal to the best that are made to order. List of prices of every description of bedding sent free by post. Their establishment, HEAL and SON, Feather Dressers and Bedding Manufacturers, 196, Tottenham-court-road.

[illegible] MANUFACTORY, [illegible] ISLAND, LONDON.
INFANTS' and CHILDREN'S CARRIAGES.—Children's Cars, Tip-to-Tip Waggons, and the Carriage from Tee Sa Hilton to Crown Garden. Wheel Chairs of first class comfort from 3l. [illegible] 42s. New and Second-hand Spinal Carriages, very [illegible] Goods. On Sale, or Hire.

LIGHTER and SOFTER than FLANNEL.—THRESHER'S INDIA GAUZE WAISTCOATS, manufactured expressly for warm climates, are perfectly free from every irritating or disagreeable quality. They are manufactured by THRESHER and GLENNY, and are the only Real India Gauze Waistcoats [illegible] Manufacturers, 152, Strand, London. It is very important to not se that every article is marked "THRESHER'S INDIA GAUZE," as no other material possesses the same exquisite qualities. One single [illegible] can be had on receipt of a P.O. order for 6s. 6d.

SILVER FLAT HORIZONTAL WATCHES, carefully finished, [illegible] Warranted for Seven Years, [illegible] 3l. 3s. Gilt 2l. 2s. Gilt 2l. 2s. Gilt 2l. 2

THE CAMBRIDGE ELECTION.—THE NOMINATION.

inge. He then referred in these terms to some tumultuous proceedings which had taken place:—"He was sorry that anything should have happened to mar the full effects of their triumph; that whilst it was being peaceably and harmlessly carried out, a collision took place, owing to the violent feelings of a number of their opponents, in consequence of which three unfortunate men, who were on the side of his friends, and conducting themselves inoffensively, were now lying on their beds, from the effects of the ill-usage which they had received. (Groans, and cries of "shame.") He would rather, he declared, that the Conservatives should be as they were, the victims in this outrage, than the aggressors. (Hear, hear.)"

Three cheers were given for the Solicitor-General at the conclusion of his speech.

The correspondent of the Times describes the conduct of the "navvies" bearing Mr. Kelly's colours as very violent, and states that it had the effect of inducing retaliation on the part of the Whigs. He says, "On Tuesday Mr. Adair was escorted to the Hoop Hotel by a numerous procession of his friends, and had passed the end of Downing street, in which the Tory procession had halted, when some of his followers perceiving it stopped, began to hoot and groan. Their leaders vainly endeavoured to urge them onwards and to prevent a collision. A few of them boldly rushed down the street, and commenced an attack on Mr. Kelly's partisans, in which they were soon aided by others of their companions. Between 400 and 500 persons were immediately engaged in a general fight. The object of the Whigs was to capture the flags of their opponents, who defended them with determined courage, but suffered the loss of one or two. The combat became fierce, fists were not sufficiently effective to gratify the vengeful disposition of the antagonists. Sticks and stones were brought into requisition; and the flag staves were broken into short cudgels, which being rather thick inflicted severe blows. At length the Conservative party drove the assailants back into St. Andrew's street, where they rallied again in front of Emmanuel College, and another battle took place. I believe no mortal injury has been inflicted upon any one, but broken heads, black eyes, and bleeding hands and faces were innumerable. This disgraceful disturbance lasted for more than half-an-hour, before any policeman could be found.

THE SOLICITOR-GENERAL, MR. FITZROY KELLY, M.P.

"Some of the "navvies" at a late hour on Tuesday night, in a pot-valiant state, made an incursion into Barnwell, where they met with their match. A dreadful row ensued, which the police at length stopped.

"One of the men who was injured, as mentioned by the Solicitor General, was at the point of death. When I sent off my despatch another was in a bad state; but the third was pronounced to be in a fair way of recovery."

MR. FITZROY KELLY, M.P.

The return of Mr. Fitzroy Kelly, the new Solicitor General, to Parliament for Cambridge, has only been gained by a majority of 17, another proof that even a man of first-rate talents finds it difficult to obtain popular support in the present state of public feeling, excited by the unexpected turns of Ministerial policy.

Mr. Fitzroy Kelly is a member and bencher of Lincoln's Inn, and first entered as a student in 1818, as pupil to Mr. Thomas Abraham, whom he left, and became the pupil of Mr. Wilkinson, of Pump court, Mr. Crowder, Queen's Counsel, being a pupil of that gentleman at the time. His afterwards took out his certificate, and acted as a special pleader until the 7th of May, 1824, Trinity Term, when he was called to the bar.

The late Sir William Webb Follett had been entered of the Inner Temple in the same year with Mr. Kelly (1818). They were constant readers together, and were called to the bar in the same term. Mr. Kelly and Sir W. Follett soon obtained a firm position at the bar, and were rival juniors, each being engaged in most of the principal and important causes brought before the Court, being separated only by the circuits—the one (Mr. Kelly) having chosen the Norfolk, and Sir W. Follett the Western circuit.

In 1835, on the occasion of Sir Robert Peel coming into power, Mr. Kelly received the honour of a silk gown, with Sir W. Follett, preparatory to the latter being appointed Solicitor-General. Mr. Kelly first took his seat in Parliament in that year, for Ipswich, but was, on petition, unseated, and remained out until 1837, when, at the election—having been defeated, with Mr. R. Wason, by Messrs. Milner Gibson and Tuffnell, by a small majority—he succeeded, on petition, in ousting Mr. Tuffnell, and took his seat for Ipswich.

At the general election, 1841, he was defeated; and although his opponents were unseated, and the election declared void, he declined to risk another contest, and again remained out of Parliament until 1843, when Sir Alex. ander Grant having accepted the Chiltern Hundreds, and a vacancy being thereby occasioned, he was, after a severe struggle, elected for Cambridge. He seems destined never to win Cambridge without a hard fight for it. On the death of Lord Abinger, Sir F. Pollock was made Chief Baron of the Exchequer, and Sir W. Follett became Attorney General; Mr. Kelly was then a competitor with Sir P. Thesiger, for the Solicitor Generalship, but an unsuccessful one. At the bar he stands high for his legal reputation, and of the public he has gained the good opinion, for the spirit with which he identifies himself with his client. Sir F. Thesiger never met a more uncompromising opponent than Mr. Kelly, in the great distillery case, in which he defended the Messrs. Smith: his argument in support of the Writ of Error, in the case of O'Connell, before the House of Lords, was a display of great legal ability and research. He defended the Quaker Tawell, but not successfully; it was decidedly a bad case, and little could be done with it

Mr. Kelly is verging on fifty years of age; he is rather short, but compactly built, with well-cut features. In his style of speaking he is very effective, and as Solicitor-General, he will be a great accession to the Government in the House. The closeness with which Mr. Kelly has trod upon the heels of the late Attorney-General is somewhat curious. Both entered as students the same year, read together, were called to the bar the same term, received silk gowns together, and after the remains of Sir W. Follett were conveyed to the tomb, Mr. Kelly was appointed Solicitor-General.

CHESS.

To Correspondents.—"R. W.," Exeter, is thanked for his suggestion; but to carry it into operation would require more space than we have at command

"O. D.," Leeds. Such problems are always acceptable.

"C. B.," Liverpool.—Your problem can be solved in three moves, unless of face, easily.

"M. F."—See the note appended to our last week's diagram.

"94" should purchase M. Kuiper's collection of problems. We have not room to give the solutions alluded to. "Rook" or "Castle" indifferently; authorities are divided as to the derivation of the former.

"Parvus."—"Oriental Chess, or Specimens of Hindostanee Excellence in that celebrated Game," was published in 1817. It is now out of print, but the most beautiful problems it contained were reprinted in the "Chess Player's Chronicle."

"Dane."—The first problem quoted from M. Kuiper's book in our number of the 5th would be greatly improved by placing the White Rook which stands on Q's 2nd on to Q's 4th sq.

"Juvenis."—Both the "Souvenir of the Bristol Chess Club" and R. Q. B.'s "One Hundred Ends of Games" may be obtained at the office of the "Chess Player's Chronicle."

"Septimus," Hastings.—There is a very promising Chess Club at Brighton, under the grandeeship of Captain Kennedy, of which both Lord Harrey and Captain Pechell are members.

"S. R. C." will, perhaps, have the goodness to send us corrected copies of his last two problems. The imperfect ones were destroyed.

"C. B."—Place the Rook at Q's 4th square.

"Moderate Player."—Of course Black must be "forced" into checkmate, or the problem would be worthless. Try 7*l again, you are quite wrong.*

"W. H."—We cannot see how, in Mr. Brede's amended problem, mate can be given in four moves, when the King takes the Pawn; perhaps "W. H." will enlighten us.

"J. J. M.," Yarmouth; "H. P."—Correct.

"Chess."—You may purchase a copy of Major Jacnsch's excellent work at Hodgson's, Essex street. No; Major Jacnsch is a Russian, but the book is in French.

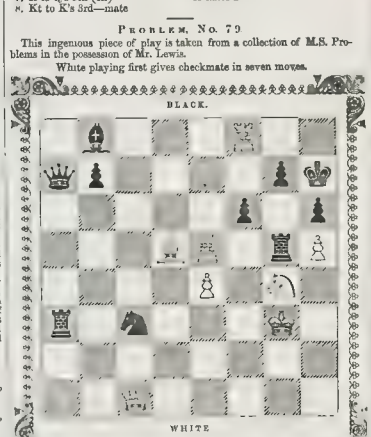
Solution to Problem, No. 78.

White.	Black.
1. Kt to K Kt 6th (ch)	K to R's 4th
2. Kt to K B's 4th (ch)	K to R's 5th (best)
3. R to R's 5th (ch)	K to Kt 5th
4. Kt to K B's 6th (ch)	K takes Kt
5. R to K B's 5th (ch)	K to Kt 6th
6. Kt to Kt 4th (ch)	K to Q 6th
7. R to Q's 5th (ch)	K takes P
8. Kt to K's 3rd—mate

Problem, No. 79

This ingenious piece of play is taken from a collection of M.S. Problems in the possession of Mr. Lewis.

White playing first gives checkmate in seven moves.



Chess in Germany.

The following game, played by correspondence, is still pending between the amateurs of Gluckstadt and Schleswig.

Game No. 18.

White (G.)	Black (S.)	White (G.)	Black (S.)
1 h P two	K P one	12 K R to K sq	K Kt to K 2nd
2 Q P two	Q P two	13 Q to K Kt 4th	h R P one
3 k P one	Q B P two	14 Q to R 5th (ch)	h Kt P one
4 Q B to K 3rd	Q to her Kt 3rd	15 Q to K Kt 5th	h P one
5 Q Kt to R 3rd	Q B to Q 2nd	16 K Kt takes K B P	Q to her B 3rd
6 Q R to Kt sq	Q Kt to B 3rd	17 K Kt to Q 4th	Q to her 3rd
7 K Kt to B 3rd	h P one	18 Q to K Kt 4th	P takes Kt
8 h Kt to Q Kt 5th	P takes Q P	19 Q takes doubled P	K R to Kt sq
9 k Kt takes P	Q Kt takes K P	20 White h Kt 7th	Castles
10 B takes B ch	Kt takes B	21 Q to K Kt 4th	h R P two
11 Castles	Q R P one	And White has to move

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, of 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, July 19, 1845.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 169.—Vol. VII. FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JULY 26, 1845. [Sixpence.

THE "CHEAP DEFENCE."

When the House of Commons compelled the Government to grant a pension to Sir Henry Pottinger, we remarked on the niggardly spirit our Governments have generally displayed in bestowing those honorary rewards which men prize above money, and which have been so well called the "cheap defence" of nations. The question has been revived this week by the petition, or—as we had better call it—the Memorial, of the Peninsular Officers, addressed to the House of Lords, urging their claim to "some honorary mark of faithful service." And that application, so well grounded, so hardly earned, such a trifle in itself, yet capable of producing such a favourable effect on the army, the Duke of Wellington—the leader of that gallant host in so many campaigns—coldly denied.

We are sorry he has done so, though, from all his past conduct on this long-agitated subject, such a denial was to be expected. Cold, stern, harsh, and unsympathising, severely exacting the strict performance of duty, he rarely had any warmth or generosity of commendation for those who went beyond that point. By the courage and perseverance of his men and officers, he was enabled to carry out the plans suggested by his own military talents, and he has gained a place in history that will transmit his name to all future ages, as the successful rival of Napoleon, in the Emperor's last of battle-fields. He is himself loaded with honours; all that his own country can bestow, he enjoys; foreign lands and foreign Sovereigns have contended with each other, as to which should shower on him most marks of distinction. Whence, then, arises the cold, grudging spirit with which he has always denied to the men and officers of the Peninsular Campaigns any mark that should distinguish them as the Army by which the Legions of Napoleon, led by his greatest Lieutenants, were driven from the banks of the Tagus to the gates of Paris?

It is one of those things which must be regretted and left unexplained; for to ordinary minds or generous feelings it is unaccountable. It is, however, one of the characteristics of the man; constantly engaged in all kinds of public discussions, it is remarkable how perfect and complete is the silence the Duke of Wellington observes as to all the military events in which he has borne so great a part. No recollections, no allusions, does he ever make to the past; no name of person or place escapes his lips; his own triumphs and his associates in them, as far as his memory of them is concerned, seem to sleep the sleep of oblivion. At times, an indifferent, common-place allusion to having been formerly "in the service of his Sovereign" may be heard, but that is all; no one could guess that the aged Minister had ever been distinguished by anything from the Peers who have crept through life unknown save by their votes for their party. He never speaks of what he has done himself; on the acts of others he is equally reserved. And when the achievements of his old companions in strife and peril are mentioned, he represses the discussion as soon as possible, as if it was distasteful to him; briefly and faintly allows their merit, and resolutely denies to them the smallest share of those honours with which he is so profusely crowned. Grievous must be the disappointment of the veterans who have bought his triumphs with their blood; but the Iron Chief is inexorable; the injustice once committed, is persisted in, for to repair an error is to acknowledge it; and there is nothing in which men or Governments will show more consistency than a course of wrong doing, where others are the sufferers, and not themselves.

The Peninsular War, extended over several years, and forms a distinct and separate chapter of the history of that long struggle that followed the French Revolution. The service was arduous and harassing, and the army was engaged in many battles which are considered the greatest of Wellington's successes, while in proportion to the numbers, their carnage was as great as that of Waterloo itself. To have shared these dangers from the commencement to the close, and to have survived them all, certainly deserved some mark of distinction, but it pleased the commander of the army to set his face against it, and it has never been bestowed; it has been often asked and always denied, for the last time on Monday in the House of Lords, when the Duke of Wellington spoke of that army and its achievements with as little praise as he could possibly award, and an intimation that, in his opinion, their services had been quite sufficiently repaid. He repeated, too, the answer he has always given to the application; an answer which everybody knows is based on a constitutional fiction which makes all honours and rewards the acts of the Sovereign. The Duke says he has always mentioned the names of those who deserved well, but, as to marks of honour, they were for the Sovereign to grant; he had nothing to do with them. We are sorry to see such a man resort to so palpable an evasion; it is notorious that the Sovereign of England does nothing without the direction of those who are called his servants, but are really his masters; and, from the position the Duke of Wellington has always held, an intimation or a wish from him would have been complied with immediately. In fact the Duke himself has furnished a proof that he has himself, on such points, the ruling and disposing power. He "asked," that is, "ordered" a medal to be given to all who were engaged in the battle of Waterloo, and his bidding was done without a word: can any one doubt that if he had chosen he might have procured the same distinction for his old comrades of the Peninsula. It is this constitutes the mortification of these war-worn veterans. Vittoria, Talavera, Salamanca, were all battles as hardly fought as Waterloo; but the subalterns engaged in all of them have nothing to show of their achievements, except the scars they got in them. To those engaged in the single conflict of Waterloo a distinction is awarded. Hence springs the discontent and sense of injury. Why, say the Peninsular men, are our many battles overlooked, and the honour bestowed upon another for one? Why should the day of Waterloo eclipse our years of struggle with the same great power? But so it is:—

> Not all the blood at Talavera shed,
> Not all the marvels of Barrossa's fight,
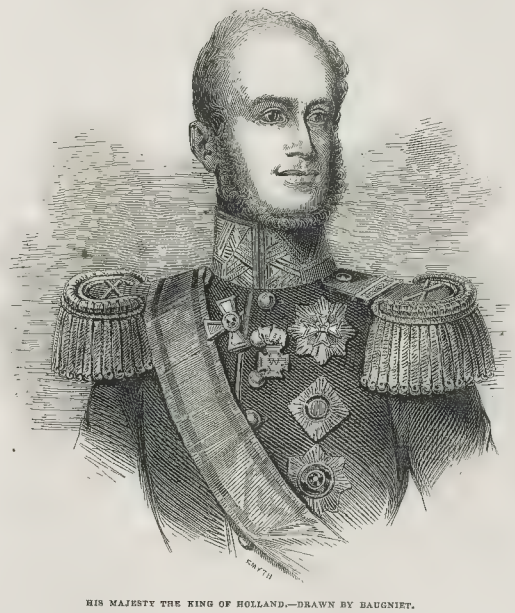
> Not Albuera, lavish of her dead, have sufficed to win us the honour which is bestowed for the short campaign of Belgium!

This is the complaint or what are called the "Peninsular Officers." But it must be understood that it is made by those who were at the time in a comparatively subordinate rank, for on the higher grades honours were distributed freely enough. The fact is, they were the prizes of which he who had the best interest gained the most. Thus, the personal staff of the Duke of Wellington got a large share of crosses, clasps, orders, and knighthoods; all who could not command that influence, and merely deserved the honour by their actions, got nothing at all but the hard knocks, their pay, and—in time—promotion. This is the system that is the curse of the British service; money and interest will obtain the most incapable anything; without them, the most deserving can get nothing. Colonel Napier, the historian of this very Peninsular War, has spoken mournfully of the disadvantages under which the English soldier fights — beneath "the cold shade of aristocracy"—which renders the rise of unconnected ability impossible. He should have added to it political and party influence, and he would have described the two powers which decide on the distribution of honours in the army. Knowing this, it is with something like contempt one reads of the Marquis of Londonderry pompously declaring that the language of supplication is unworthy of British soldiers. We wonder how many orders he would have worn had he not had the luck to be a Castlereagh? Thus, those on whom honours have descended without either earning or asking, can be virtuously indignant if others demand what they deserve. Is it that they are afraid to make such distinctions too common? Can the Great Duke himself fancy his distinctions would lose something if they were shared by those who gained him his greatness? We cannot think so poorly of him, yet the effect to the old soldier is the same; all he knows is, that he has won the guerdon, that he asks it, and is denied. "The cold shade" is upon him, and it is flung over him by the Chief he served so faithfully; who, having the power to grant, sternly withholds, and casts the odium of refusal and neglect on "the Sovereign," well knowing that that Sovereign must do just as he advises her!



HIS MAJESTY THE KING OF HOLLAND.—DRAWN BY BAUGNIET.

THE KING OF HOLLAND.

A few days only have elapsed since the King of the Belgians quitted our shores; on Thursday arrived William, King of Holland, of whom, in policy and matrimony, Leopold has been the successful rival. He was his competitor for the hand of the Princess Charlotte, and obtained her preference; when the Revolution of Belgium expelled the family of Nassau from the throne of the Netherlands, it was Leopold who was chosen King. He has thus deprived William of a Royal bride, and now wears the Crown which he seemed to be born to inherit.

William Frederic Charles, King of Holland is the eldest son of the late King, who in the latter years of his life furnished to history another of the rare examples of abdicating Monarchs; the cause was as curious as the event, for it was for love that he renounced the throne, not from that weariness of power and sense of devotion which animated Charles V., of whom Byron says:—

> The Spaniard, when the lust of sway
> Had lost its quickening spell,
> Threw crowns for rosaries away—
> An empire for a cell
> A strict accountant of his beads,
> A subtle disputant on creeds,
> His dotage trifled well:
> But better had he never known
> The bigot's cell or despot's throne.

The lady for whom this modern Antony—strangely placed among the most phlegmatic of nations—gave up his crown, was the 7th Duchess of Marlborough. Her husband, as a nobleman, and married into private life, but did not long survive the step. The present King, then Prince of Orange, was thus called to the throne, on the 7th of October, 1840; he was born December 6th, 1792, and at the time of his accession was forty-eight years of age. As Prince of Orange he served in the Peninsula from 1811 to the end of that war in 1814, the principal part of which period as extra Aide-de-Camp to the Duke of Wellington, and was present at the sieges of Ciudad Rodrigo and Badajoz, and battles of Salamanca, Vittoria, Pyrenees, and Nivelle, for which his Majesty has received a cross and two clasps. Commanded the Dutch troops in the campaign of 1815, and the first corps d' armés of the Duke of Wellington's forces at the battle of Waterloo, and was shot through the left shoulder at the close of that action, having also been present in the preceding engagements.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

Public conversation is divided between the brutal massacre of the poor Arabs and the flight of Mademoiselle Plessy. Vainly may Frenchmen seek to argue away the cool butchery in Africa. To Marshal Soult has been left the hopeless task to remove the stain. The task was both delicate and painful. He has sought to defend the officers to whom was entrusted the army of Africa; but no prestige of character or of heroism is sufficient to wash out the memory. Humanity will cease to accuse, and history will pass the verdict of guilty cannot be removed. Ah! that the illustrious Marshal could effect by his eloquence, he has effected; but the fact is there, and all the waters of the Seine cannot wash it out. And yet the Government prints would seek to neutralize its atrocity. They confess the odious contrast which the butchery affords to European manners, but entrench themselves in the rhetorician style, and in false logic. We itself, they reason, is it not the most cruel of necessities; but if we go to extremities, all armies must be disbanded—all arsenals must be burned to ashes. Every Cabinet of Europe should demand a bloody account of the French Government for the acts of its officers. The interior of the Comedie Francaise is in a state of agitation as regards the sudden flight of the beautiful Plessy. Many persons are of the opinion that she is still en secret at Paris, and that her object has no other end than to procure better pecuniary means from her copartners. This opinion rests on no other foundation than that certain theatrical agents have no knowledge of any engagement contracted by her for St. Petersburg. One of these persons, however, M Collignon, was charged, it is said, some time since, by Molle. Plessy to treat with the Russian Theatrical Directory. It appears that the reply has not yet reached France. According to other accounts, the engagement was recently concluded in London, during her late visit, by M. de Brunow, the Russian Minister. The truth I believe to be is, that the lovely artiste is married, and that her engagement is secured in Russia for five years, and at a salary that will ensure to her existence a future of wealth greater than has ever been at the command of any previous artist. One thing positive is, that she leaves behind her no fitting representative of the haute comedie. The system of annoyance so continually besetting her in the foyer of the Francais, has doubtless influenced the resolution of the young actress.

The Academie Royale of Medicine have selected as associates, from a list of twenty-two candidates, Messrs. Brodie and Lawrence, of London; Leibig, the celebrated chemist; J. Muller, the naturalist, of Berlin; and Wohler, the physiologist, of Kenisburg. There remain but three other nominations to fill up.

Paris has from time immemorial been celebrated for its superiority in all that relates to the art and mystery of bill sticking; for here it is really an art. Its battle fields, its spots of glory, have been the walls of Paris. Large sums have been expended on the affiches—private speculations and public companies have formed its typographical wealth—Monopoly has at length sought to bag its profits in the shape of a company calling themselves the Boule Rouge. They have applied from the city the authority to construct at its expence, for the whole length of the boulevards and the quais, columns styled Vespasian, on which those that run may read all that is worthy "notice or notice." The columns belong to the City, which gets for their erection, the Boule Rouge Association paying a certain tax for the right of sticking these columns full of broad posters. There was a revolution, indeed; the bill-stickers resisted the payment of the 1,737 francs per diem, but their indignation was excusable, their anger natural. One night during the past week, having at their head Perrion (surnamed the Napoleon of the craft), armed with pots of paste and with brushes of the same colour, they marched to the column, and made a woeful onslaught; more than 100 of the objectionable symbols were odiously blackened over, when they were taken in flagrante delicto. They were, however, soon bought off, and the terrible Perrion had for accomplices two of his labourers, Courty and Villedieu. They were accused of having contravened the 237th article, in mutilating public monuments. Counsel for the Boule Rouge Association entere his civil action, claiming 3000 francs damages. The Public Minister argued that the case did not reach the clause of the code. The tribunal gave a verdict in favour of the defendants. The judgment was received with great glee by the bonded brethren of the glorious posters who crowded the audience. A snuff box mounted in diamonds—query, PASTE—has been voted to the public spirited Perrion.

The consumption at Paris, during the month of June last, has been 6622 beeves, 1543 cows, 7092 calves, and 34,472 sheep. The increase of consumption, compared with that of 1844, has been considerable: 797 beeves, 491 cows, 1010 calves, and 2242 sheep. This augmentation, you will perceive, furnishes easily the annual consumption of a city containing from 10,000 to 12,000 souls. There were consumed in the first six months of 1845, 40,281 beeves, 9049 cows, 40,703 calves, and 228,476 sheep. The consumption in the first six months of 1844, was 39,294 beeves, 9049 cows, 38,511 calves, and 216,378 sheep. Comparing these half yearly accounts, there will result an augmentation in favour of the last six months, of 1238 beeves, 1464 cows, 2252 calves, and 9903 sheep. You must add to this consumption of the last half year, 956 bulls, 32 goats, and 45 kids

Now imagine the swords of ragouts and the oceans of soup that have resulted from these vast hecatombs of four-footed animals! What visions of restaurants, and tickled diseased frames, and fevered constitutions, would have arisen from the chemical alembics, under the artistic changes produced by the hidden mysteries of a Parisian cuisine! Need we wonder at pale faces, enfeebled limbs, and ruined constitutions? Need we wonder at the annual food here beats beef eating England more than thirty three and a third per centum. The Parisians are the hugest feeders in the world!

There is nothing new in the way of theatres or exhibitions, save the view of the Spanish giant in the Salle Montesquieu. It is astonishing that all the females thronged to see the little monster, Tom Thumb, whom the brave Belges compare to a pumpkin placed on a forked radish—but nature even of the dear creatures chose to see a splendid man, towering upwards of seven feet, perfectly proportioned, with strikingly handsome features, and a colossal head, that might serve for a model of the antique. There is a young Catalonian, who adds to upon him, and rejoices in sundry wonderful talents in jugglery—he does not appear in the bill. This is, perhaps, the first time that a programme keeps more than its promise.

FRANCE.

The French papers are still occupied in energetic discussions upon the subject of the late massacre in Algeria, under the sanction of Colone. Pelissier.

The Chambers were prorogued on Monday. The Royal Ordinance of prorogation was carried to the Chamber of Peers by Marshal Soult, President of the Council; and to the Chamber of Deputies by M. Dumon, Minister of Public Works.

In the best informed political circles in Paris, it was believed that the Chambers would shortly be dissolved. The last discussion in the Chamber of Deputies was upon the Tours and Nantes, and the Rouen and Strasbourg Railway Bills, which were passed. The entire budget was then put to the vote, and agreed to by a majority of 103 to Don Carlos and his Consort, the Princess de Beira, accompanied by M. de Tinan and the different persons of their household, left Bourges for Greouls on the morning of the 15th inst.

The Chamber of Deputies commenced the discussion of the Jesuits in France but without considerable excitement. At Parma, where the order was restored two years ago, some demonstrations took place against them, and a number of persons were arrested. Disturbances had likewise occurred at Modena, and the lectures of the medical faculty had been suspended. Several Carabineers had been killed in the legation of Ravenna, in collision with some young men of Carte Bolognese.

The Moniteur contains several laws, among which is that authorising the Minister of Public Works to adjudicate the concession—first, of the railroad from Paris to the frontier of Belgium, with embranchments from Lille to Calais to Dunkirk; second, of the railroad from Creil to St. Quentin; and third, of the railroad from Fampoux to Hazebrouck. The duration of the lease of the former is not to exceed 41 years; and the maximum of that of the Creil and St. Quentin, and Fampoux and Hazebrouck lines, is fixed at 72 years. No company is to be admitted to bid for the concession of those roads unless it shall have been previously approved by the Minister of Public Works, and deposited the required securities.

The Duke and Duchess of Nemours are about to set out on their journey to the Pyrenees. Their Royal Highnesses are expected to be at Gueret on the 26th inst.; at Limoges on the 28th, at Libourne on August 4, and at Bordeaux on the 5th. Their Majesties will not take their departure for Eu until the commencement of August.

The celebrated violinist, Artaut, died of consumption, at Ville d'Avray, near Paris, on the 20th inst., at the age of 20.

Their Majesties came to Paris on Monday, and the King presided at a Council of Ministers, on which occasion Marshal Soult and the Minister of the Finances took leave of his Majesty, preparatory to their departure for the country. Marshal Soult, accompanied by the Marquis de Dalmatie, goes to his estate of Soult-Berg, and to Bagnéres de Bigorre. The Minister of Finance goes to the baths of Contrexeville, in the Vosges.

Our private letters from Barcelona inform us that the insurrection in Catalonia has been carried on with the ferocity usual in these cases. It appears by a letter in the Clamor, that, on the approaching Sabadell, the insurgents, to the number of 1500, evacuated the place, retreating towards Tarra-a, leaving only the old or pe ceable portion of the population, who had taken no part in the movement but enough whom a panic took place, and numbers sought refuge in flight, but they were pursued and cut to pieces by the cavalry, so that the fields around were covered with dead bodies, no quarter being given. One letter states, in fact, that twenty-five of the relations of the insurgents were shot by General Concha after entering the town; and this, although the insurgents, who had previously disarmed 160 soldiers who were in garrison when the insurrection broke out, had not ill-treated them, and, in fact, they all joined Concha's force on its entry. The insurgents of San Andres de Palomar had retaliated for the putting to death of five of their associates in cold blood, by hanging five of the Civic Guards on the road by which the rebels were expected to march to the mountains. The bulletin added, that, on the 17th, the Queen would proceed by sea to Valencia, and that troops had been marched to that town. According, however, to a more recent communication, the Court had, in consequence of the re establishment of order in the province of Catalonia, determined to proceed, on the 17th, to Saragossa, which place they were expected to reach on the 24th. The Ministers, remaining at Madrid, still intended to be at Saragossa on the 24th, in order to compliment the Queen Mother on the occasion of her birth-day.

BELGIUM.

The grand kermesse, or festival of Brussels commenced last Sunday morning by a solemn procession of the "Holy Sacrament of Miracles," through the principal streets of that city, which was accompanied by strong detachments of infantry and cavalry, by several excellent military and civil bands, by many religious confraternities, and by an immense concourse of spectators, notwithstanding the rather unfavourable state of the weather. Nearly all the houses in the line of procession were tastefully decorated with green boughs, and wax tapers were burning in numerous windows. In the evening the theatres, ball rooms, cafés, &c., were filled to overflowing. Monday was the anniversary of the inauguration of King Leopold, and was celebrated with great solemnity. Early in the morning all the public edifices, and all the ships and barges in the canal, displayed the national flag, and many rockets announced the rejoicings.

A little before noon military detachments were posted inside and outside the military church of Ste Gudule (generally called the Cathedral), in which a solemn Te Deum was performed. The church, richly of Hong Kong had sent to Keying to demand redress and guarantee for future good conduct, but the result is yet to known. The commercial news is of little interest, trade being, as far as British goods are concerned, very dull

At Victoria, likewise, a riot had occurred, which has, fortunately, not been attended with any serious result. About fifty of the Chinese had collected at the west of the town, armed with boat hooks, axes, &c., bent upon some mischief: these gradually increased in numbers, and the affair beginning to assume a rather dangerous form, the authorities deemed it proper at once to interfere. Thirteen of the principals have been taken—some have been put into confinement for five and six months, while others have been severely flogged

Similar scenes of this description have been of frequent occurrence at Ningpo, and other places.

At Amoy, strange though it appear, so general is the Chinese hatred towards the English residents, that it has been requisite to dispatch the Vixen steamer, in order to quell the disturbances which are expected to arise; but particulars of these have not yet come to hand.

COUNTRY NEWS.

SUNDERLAND ELECTION.—Preparations are on foot at Sunderland for a new election in the room of Lord Howick, now Earl Grey. One candidate is Colonel Thompson, who comes forward in the Anti Corn Law and Free Trade interest. Another candidate on the Whig interest, whose name has been placarded on the walls of Sunderland as a Free-Trade advocate, is Mr. Bradshaw, an extensive shipowner of Yarmouth. Mr. J. J. Wright has been solicited to come forward on the Conservative interest, but that gentleman has declined being put in nomination on the present occasion, and no other gentleman has been mentioned as likely to take up the Conservative cause in this election. Mr. Hudson has consented to become a candidate on receiving sufficient assurances of support. Mr. Hudson is brought forward principally, if not altogether, on local considerations.

LAMENTABLE FACTORY ACCIDENT.—On Monday morning an accident, attended with loss of life, occurred at the mill of Messrs. William Fernley and Co., Brentnall street, Higher Hillgate, near Manchester. The unfortunate subject of the accident was a girl about 13 years old, named Catherine Pearson. The pair of frames "tented" by the deceased are placed back to back, a little better than two feet apart, and between them is an upright shaft, which was fenced off with a tin casing from top to bottom. About half a minute before the accident occurred, deceased's mistress and a girl, a fellow worker, had spoken to her. Immediately it was observed that the bobbins of the creel she "tented" were fast falling out, her mistress went round to the back of the creel, to see what was the matter, when she at once perceived the body of the deceased fast to the shaft, and whirling round in a most awful manner. An alarm was instantly given, and as soon as possible the engine was stopped; but not before the clothing and arms and legs of the deceased had been completely torn off. Her mangled remains were collected together, and conveyed to the Ram's Head Inn, where an inquest was held the same evening. After a lengthened inquiry, the jury unanimously returned a verdict of "Accidental death."

TWO PERSONS KILLED BY THE FALL OF A HOUSE.—On Wednesday morning the inhabitants of the village of East Stanford were alarmed by a loud crashing noise, which was speedily followed by the most heart-rending cries of distress. It was quickly ascertained that the end house of a row extending from the rear of the churchyard to an open plot of ground intended for the site of some new buildings, had fallen, and as it was almost certain that several persons must have been within the house at the time it fell, great consternation prevailed. The fallen house was rented by a man named Parker, in the employ of Mr. Joycelin, a maltster. Parker with his wife and two children resided on the ground floor; the upper part of the house, which consisted of two stories, being occupied by a man named Fyke, a brush maker, with two boys (his sons), and a decrepit man (his father) The brushmaker with one of his sons was seen by a neighbour to leave the house at six o'clock on the morning of the accident, going out for the day to sell his brushes. Parker always leaves his home for the malthouse at five o'clock in the morning; and Parker's wife and children, together with Fyke's son and father, were supposed to be in the house when it fell. A number of persons were soon at work clearing away portions of the rubbish, and shortly afterwards the body of the old man was discovered dreadfully crushed and quite dead. At a short distance from the remains of the old man, the body of Fyke's son was dug out, and though much injured the boy was alive, and hopes are entertained of his recovery. A faint cry issuing from the remaining portions of the ruins stimulated the people to fresh exertions, and after a painful suspense of twenty minutes, the men succeeded in taking from the ruins Parker's two children, perfectly unmjured. The children slept in a kind of press-bedstead, and part of the rafters having fallen in a sloping position across the bed, had sustained the weight of the materials above. A further search discovered the body of the mother. The remains of the unfortunate woman presented a horrid spectacle, life being quite extinct. Several houses in the row of which the fallen building formed a part have been lately pulled down, and the house in question had been shored up preparatory to erecting some buildings, which are intended to cross the space left by the demolished houses.

ATTEMPTED MURDER FROM JEALOUSY.—A violent attempt at murder, instigated by jealousy, was made last week, upon a young servant girl, named Maria Moore, by a young man named James Stanton Carrail. They had kept company together, but the female recently gave preference to another sweetheart, and Carrail met her walking with her new lover on Wednesday night. This infuriated him with rage; and early on the following morning, armed with a knife, which he had sharpened at the point, and with a ribbon twisted round the handle to secure a firmer hold, he went to the girl and stabbed her in the breast, the blade of the knife passing between the ribs. He did not repeat the blow, but returned home, where he was apprehended. The girl lies in a very precarious state, mainly from loss of blood, but there are hopes of her recovery.

AN ACCOMPLISHED SWINDLER AT NOTTINGHAM.—A case of an extraordinary character has just occurred in Nottingham, in an attempt by a clergyman to swindle several tradesmen out of goods to a large amount; but, owing to his former proceedings having been made known in the public prints, happily in this instance he has been defeated. It appears that about three weeks ago, an advertisement appeared in the Nottingham papers of a school which was about to be opened by a clergyman, the plan of education offering many advantages. Above all, the education was to be "based on strictly religious principles." This advertisement excited much interest in the town and neighbourhood of Nottingham, particularly amongst the clergy. Immediately after the announcement a gentleman, habited like a clergyman, and of polished address, called upon Mr. Jones, upholsterer, Beast market-hill, Nottingham, and gave his name as the Rev. Dr. Berrington, he stated his intention of opening a school, and referred to the terms of his advertisement, which had appeared on the Friday preceding, and expressed a wish to be supplied with furniture, carpets, &c., for his house in Castle-gate. On Mr. Jones requesting a reference, the name of Mr. Welchman, 77, Cornhill, London, was given, and he was described as a West India proprietor of great wealth. So frank and prompt were the answers to the several questions put, that Mr Jones thought all was right. Men were immediately employed in making and fitting carpets, setting up beds, and arranging the furniture, to render the mansion complete. The articles supplied amounted to £200. Finding that success had attended his efforts, Dr. Berrington then applied to Mr. Whetnall, wine merchant, Parliament-street, of whom he ordered wines and porter, which soon found their way into the cellar in Castle gate. Mr. Horst, china dealer, Chapel-bar, was also favoured with an order for china; and Mr. Paraham, bootmaker, Long-row, opened an account for shoes, the china and six pairs of shoes, all being promptly supplied, Mr. Palethorpe, engraver, speedily got ready a large brass plate, which was placed on the hall door, having had engraved upon it "Rev. Dr Berrington's Academy." A speedy end, however, was put to this extraordinary career by a clergyman who found a newspaper containing a full-length description, not to be misunderstood, of the celebrated Rev. Dr. Berrington! This paper being placed in Mr. Jones's hands, he discovered that his customer was the veritable Dr. Berrington, who figured at Graveley, in Hertfordshire, in the month of March last, by taking a large house, opening school, giving extensive orders, and obtaining credit for goods to the amount of several hundred pounds. Mr Jones determined to adopt a prompt but a judicious course. Having arranged to call in Castle-gate that afternoon, he instantly sent an excuse, as it was market day, and requested that Dr Berrington would call upon Mr. Jones at his house, as he wished to speak to him there. In a short time Dr Berrington was on Beast-market hill, and in conversation with Mr. Jones. During this interview, which was contrived to be continued three hours, twenty of Mr. Jones's workmen were dispatched, and they entering the "large house," completely cleared it of all the articles which had been furnished by their employer. Dr. Berrington on returning to Castle-gate found out his mistake; and the news of the discovery getting wind, the house became so besieged, that the occupier quickly left it to the will of his creditors. On the day he was discovered, his wife arrived by train from London, and she, as well as the children, were wretchedly attired. On seeing her, the doctor said he had got the house ready, the wine was decanted, and bouquets of fresh flowers neatly arranged upon the tables. New clothes had been ordered for the boys, and every requisite had been furnished for a splendid career. The exposé, however, had ruined his bright prospects, and on the following day (Sunday) this reverend doctor and his family set out by train for London.

IRELAND.

DISTURBED STATE OF CAVAN.—The Dublin Gazette contains a proclamation, extending the provisions of the Peace Preservation Act to the County of Cavan, which is declared to be in a state of disturbance, and requiring an increased establishment of police

THE RIOT AT ARMAGH.—The inquest on the body of John Boyle, who was killed in the late riot at Armagh by a gun-shot wound, did not terminate for some days, when the Jury agreed unanimously to the following verdict:—"That on the 12th of July last, at Thomas-street, in the city of Armagh, a procession of Orangemen, to the number of one hundred and fifty, having been marching in procession with banners and music, and armed with pistols and swords, and that divers persons comprising that procession (that is to say, thirty one Orangemen, whose names are set forth on the face of the verdict), aided and assisted by a person unknown to the Jury, made an assault on the person of John Boyle, the deceased, and that the aforesaid person did, then and there, in Thomas-street as aforesaid, inflict on him John Boyle, a gun shot wound, which caused his death, and of which he died." The person who actually fired the shot has not been identified. Boyle was indisputably one of the Roman Catholic party, and busy in the fight.

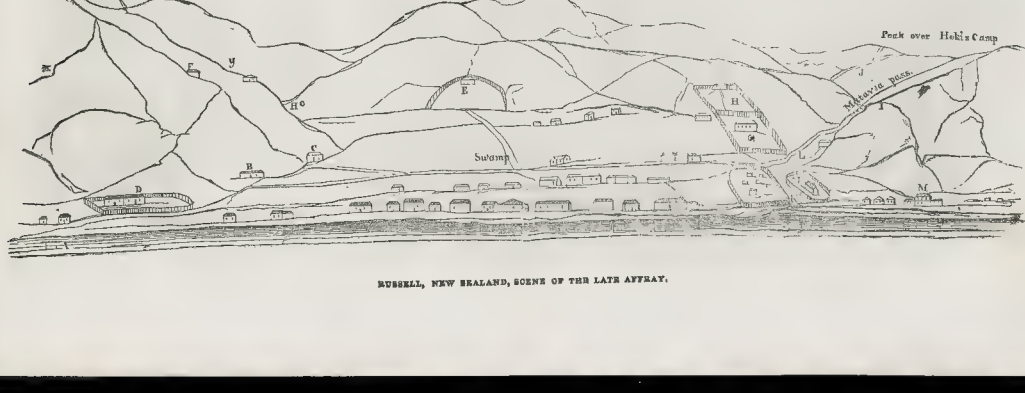
THE REPEAL ASSOCIATION.—At the Repeal Association last Monday, Mr. O'Connell adverted to the address of Mr. Fitzroy Kelly to the electors of Cambridge, in which that learned gentleman said, that agitation was ceasing in Ireland, and peace and contentment beginning to take root in the country. He wondered who gave Mr. Kelly the spectacles by which he was enabled to see those things, for he (Mr. O'Connell) was utterly unable to see them through his. (Laughter.) He was going down to Wexford to-morrow, and he hoped to meet 150,000 men there who would tell him they were as ready to agitate now as they ever had been. He should visit Galway in a few days after, where he expected to receive a similar declaration from the men of Connaught. No, the agitation was not diminishing. (Hear, hear.) The amount of the Repeal rent was steadily kept up to more than £300 a week, and that at a most unpropitious period—namely, between the two harvests. (Hear, hear.) The people would not continue to make such a sacrifice as was involved in the weekly contribution of so large a sum if their hearts and souls were not in the cause—in a word, if they were not ready to die for it; and, indeed, he believed they would sooner give their heart's blood than their money, they liked their cause so well. (Cheers.) He pledged himself that England should hear from every part of Ireland that she was determined to have her Parliament back again. He did not yet know where the next monster meeting, after those he had mentioned, was to be, but they would have at least two every three months, just to let England know there were such people as Irishmen in existence. Having strongly censured the persons connected with agrarian disturbances in this country, he came to the question of what had been done for Ireland this session, and asserted that substantially nothing had been done. He said, "substantially nothing;" for the Maynooth grant, though a good thing in itself, was good in its collateral circumstances, rather than in its amount. It was most valuable as demonstrative of the truth of his assertion, that there was in the mind of John Bull an innate hatred of Ireland and Catholicity. Mr. O'Connell, in conclusion, read an outline of eleven Acts of Parliament, which he pledged himself to draw up and complete within the next six weeks, and the necessity of adopting which is to be impressed on the Legislature. Among them are acts to enable Her Most Gracious Majesty to exercise without delay her undoubted prerogative to summon her Parliament of Ireland to contain clause declaratory of her Majesty's power and authority to issue writs of summons to all the Peers of Ireland, and writs for the election of members of the House of Commons of Ireland, not to exceed the ancient number of 300. Also, an act to provide vote by ballot. An act to establish in perpetuity the perfect equality in the eye of the law of persons of all Christian persuasions, and to prevent for ever the existence in Ireland of any legal or temporal ascendancy.—The rent for the week was announced to be £319 18s. 1d.

SCENE OF THE LATE CONFLICT IN NEW ZEALAND.

Last week we detailed, at some length, the recent disastrous affray between the Natives of New Zealand and the British troops, which terminated in the destruction of the settlement of Russell (Kororarika), in the Bay of Islands. We are now enabled to illustrate the details of last week, with a plan of Russell, as originally contemplated; and an outline of the precise locality of the affray, to which our Correspondent has affixed these references to the main incidents of the conflict:—

PLAN OF RUSSELL, NEW ZEALAND.

A Flag-staff and upper Block-house, in charge of a detachment of the 96th Regiment.
B Mr. Beckham's House, where the small-arm men of the Hazard lodged.
C The Barracks occupied by the Soldiers and Marines.
D Mr. Polack's House formed into a stockade.
E Roman Catholic Church.
F Lower Block-house, Fort Phillpotts, with three guns: a heavy fire was kept up by the Natives from x to y.
G Church, around which the Natives rallied.
H The Rev. Mr. Dudley's House.



RUSSELL, NEW SEALAND, SCENE OF THE LATE AFFRAY.

KORORARIKA BEACH, BAY OF ISLANDS, NEW ZEALAND.

H° Ongrua Pass.
I One Gun Battery, where Lovell was killed, after spiking the gun.
J Position of the small-arm Men and Marines.
K Maorie Paha
L Where Captain Robertson fell.
M Roman Catholic Bishop's, the only house now standing.

The large Illustration upon the present page shows Kororarika Beach, the principal residence of the Europeans at the Bay of Islands, from the time of its discovery by Captain Cook, who named it from the great number of islands with which it is studded: here ships of the largest burden can approach within half a mile of the shore; and the water is always smooth.

Appended are portraits of a Herald, or Peace-maker, and Bay of Islands Chief: they were selected by the artist on account of their dignified carriage and graceful costume. The Peace-maker's sole occupation is to carry messages between hostile chiefs, to prevent hostile meetings, and bring about treaties of peace. His person is held sacred under all circumstances.

A very interesting correspondence, relative to the above attack, has been issued from the Colonial Office, and details not only the disastrous conflict, but the causes in which it may be supposed to have originated. The most important information in this correspondence is conveyed in the following extract from a letter from Capt. Sir E. Home, of H.M.S. North Star, addressed to Rear-Admiral Sir Thomas Cochrane, dated the 25th of March last, and thus referring to the disasters of the 11th of that month:—

* * * * * *

"The ill success of that day is to be attributed to a want of knowledge of the peculiar mode of warfare adopted by these brave and sagacious savages, and not keeping the few troops stationed at the blockhouse on the hill, within its door, when the alarm of the approach of the natives was given; a coolness of judgment, and restraint of impulse, hardly to be expected from an officer of scarcely two years' standing in the service. He, with his men, had advanced, upon the first alarm, on one party, and his post was taken possession of by another, whose business it was to possess themselves of it. It was in no way owing to want of courageous conduct, as the lists of killed and wounded may partly show. Of the conduct of Commander Robertson I am quite unable to speak; your Excellency and their Lordships will appreciate it. His present position has caused me the deepest distress. All who were there are most loud in the praise of the conduct of the officers, seamen, and marines of the Hazard.

"The steady conduct and sound judgment displayed by Captain M'Keever, of the United States frigate St. Louis, has given confidence to the well-disposed parties of both nations, and has been of the greatest service. He still remains there, as well as the church establishment at Pahia. It is remarkable that the Protestant church at Kororarika has been burnt down, whilst the Roman Catholic establishments remain untouched.

"His Excellency the Governor has applied to the Governors of New South Wales and Van Diemen's land for further aid. Until he receives it, his intention is, I believe, to remain entirely on the defensive, and not to undertake the punishment of the offending tribes at the Bay of Islands, until his power is sufficiently strong to do it with effect. Attacks have been threatened on Auckland, and there is nothing to prevent their being put into execution if the natives were to think fit to make it a common cause. It is, however, more probable that they will divide; and Governor Fitzroy has had offers of assistance from several tribes in the north of New Zealand, of about 3000 men, which he declines accepting unless driven to extremity, lest they should become his masters.

"From the above circumstances, I believe that I should not do right, or as your Excellency would, I am convinced, have desired me to do, if acquainted with these facts, were I to leave New Zealand according to my present orders, until the colony is placed in less precarious circumstances, and it is accordingly my intention to remain upon this coast until I feel that I shall be justified in leaving it. The Hazard is not efficient, having been obliged, on the 6th of February last, in a gale of wind off the East Cape, to throw overboard seven of her carronades, and is short of complement six marines; seamen are to be obtained on shore, the guns also can be replaced by those of the Pelorus, now remaining at Port Essington.

"A force is to be sent forthwith to strengthen the posts at and in the neighbourhood of Cook's Strait.

"The present time is thought by the Governor to be the most critical hitherto experienced in this colony, and it is his opinion that, upon the events of the next few months will depend its actual tenure by Great Britain.

"The utmost efforts have been used by designing men, chiefly foreigners, to render the natives dissatisfied, and to persuade them that we shall ultimately take away their lands, and make those whom we do not kill our slaves."

In consequence of this intelligence, orders have been received at Woolwich, that the whole of Captain Turner's company (6th battalion) are to embark immediately for New Zealand.

PEACE-MAKER.

BAY OF ISLANDS CHIEF.

THE LATE VISCOUNT CANTERBURY.

Charles Manners Sutton, Viscount Canterbury, of the City of Canterbury, and Baron Bottesford, in the County of Leicester, in the Peerage of the United Kingdom, was eldest son of Charles Manners Sutton, the late Archbishop of Canterbury. He was born the 29th January, 1780, and was therefore 66 years of age at the time of his death.

His Lordship was the second child and the eldest son of the late Archbishop of Canterbury, by Mary, daughter of Thomas Thoroton, Esq., the descendant of an ancient Nottinghamshire family. His school days were passed at Eton, and his education completed at Trinity College, Cambridge, where, in the year 1802, he took the degree of A.B. His friends did not mistake his vocation when they recommended or sanctioned his adopting the profession of the law, for he possessed many qualifications likely to insure forensic eminence. After quitting Cambridge he lost no time in entering himself a student of Lincoln's-Inn, and in the year 1805 he was called to the bar by that honourable society. In two years after being "called," his Parliamentary life commenced as one of the members for Scarborough, for which borough he was returned by the influence of the Duke of Rutland, and which he continued to represent for exactly one quarter of a century.

Mr. Manners Sutton on his entrance upon Parliamentary life showed such aptitude for public business that the recommendations of his powerful family were listened to by Mr. Perceval with very favourable attention, and he received the appointment of Judge-Advocate-General as long ago as the year 1809. This situation he held till 1817, when he was elected Speaker of the House of Commons.

It was quite true that Mr. Manners Sutton possessed all the advantages of a commanding presence, sonorous voice, unperturbable temper, and that winning grace of manner for which our language affords no precise epithet, but he was wholly deficient in that extraordinary perspicuity of diction and clearness of mind which made Mr. Abbott the best possible instructor upon all questions of Parliamentary usage, or the order to be observed in deliberative assemblies. Mr. Abbott also greatly excelled his successor in that dignified and impressive eloquence which so well becomes the "mouth-piece of a legislative body. The addresses to the Duke of Wellington, for example, delivered by Mr. Abbott, in conveying the thanks of the house, were perfect models of that species of composition. His speeches at the bar of the House of Lords, and his reprimands from the chair of the House of Commons, acquired for Mr. Abbott as much and as deserved applause. Upon occasions of this kind Mr. Manners Sutton was just as ordinary a person as Mr. Speaker Abercrombie. But the m conduct of what is called private business, in advising the chairmen of committees, in governing the subordinate officers of the House, and every other duty connected with the speakership, it is by no means exaggerated praise to affirm that the merits of Mr. Manners Sutton have never been surpassed. The activity of commercial enterprise consequent upon the re-establishment of peace led to a rush of private business in the House of Commons, with which, perhaps, no man living was so well qualified to cope as the subject of this memoir. Men of all parties, those whose rights he protected, and even some of those whose designs he frustrated, have acknowledged that the skill and learning manifested by him in the conduct of their business have never been excelled by the most illustrious of his predecessors.

THE LATE VISCOUNT CANTERBURY.

He held this high office till the Parliament of 1835, when the Whigs nominated Mr. Abercrombie, in opposition to him; the cause was alleged to be an interference in the party negociations of the time, when the Tories, under Wellington and Peel, were, in right of office again, too marked and decided for the Moderator of the Great Assembly of the nation. The contest took place on the 19th of Feb., 1835, and, after one of the largest divisions on record, the numbers were—for Mr. Abercrombie, 316; Sir Charles Manners Sutton, 306.

It is rather remarkable that the rejected Speaker was kept some time waiting for his Peerage, but eventually he was called to the Upper House by the titles of Viscount Canterbury and Baron Bottesford. He was shortly afterwards selected to fill the important and delicate office of High Commissioner for adjusting the claims of Canada; but he ultimately resigned, without having ever entered upon its duties.

Lord Canterbury was twice married first on the 8th of July, 1811, to Charlotte, eldest daughter of Joseph Denison, Esq., of Denbies, in Surrey, whom he had the misfortune to lose on the 7th of December, 1813. By this first marriage he had three children. His lordship's eldest son of course succeeds to his title; and the second son is well known as member for the borough of Cambridge, and Under-Secretary in the Home Department. His Lordship's second wife is sister to the Countess of Blessington. He enjoyed a pension of £4000 a-year, which is continued to his successor.

There is something distressing in the circumstances attending his death; they exhibit a disadvantage connected with railway travelling, which at times may be something more than an inconvenience.

The noble Viscount, who had travelled from Exeter in a first-class carriage, is described by a gentleman named Perry, residing in Bedford-street, Bedford-square, who was a passenger in the same carriage with his Lordship, as having been exceedingly cheerful throughout the journey, until the arrival of the train at Slough, when he was observed to take snuff, and look at his watch very often, and appeared as if absorbed in thought. After this he leant back in the carriage as if asleep, and continued so until the arrival of the train at Paddington. When the porter demanded the ticket rather loudly, his Lordship was observed twice to make an attempt to place his hand into his pocket, but was unable to do so. It was then found for the first time that he was ill, and he was lifted out of the carriage. No one being acquainted with his lordship's person, a difficulty arose as to whom he was; but Mr. Howlett, surgeon, of 18, Cambridge-terrace, close adjoining, was instantly sent for, and, having afforded all the assistance in his power, suggested that his pockets should be searched, and his card-case and card bearing his title was found, and his luggage with a corresponding name left no doubt who he was. The Court Guide was referred to for his lordship's address, which was given as Berkeley-square, but which residence he had given up some time. After great delay, it was ascertained that his son lived in Southwick-crescent, whither he was removed at eight o'clock, having been at the station upwards of two hours.

We understand that Captain Sir Thomas Hastings is to be appointed Storekeeper to the Ordnance, in the room of Mr. Bonham.

FIRE AT TULLOCH CASTLE, ROSS-SHIRE.—Almost the whole of the fine mansion of Tulloch Castle, near Dingwall (Scotland), with a large portion of its rich and valuable furniture, some family portraits and pictures, the library, and other effects, were destroyed by fire last week. The fire was first discovered by the proprietor, Duncan Davidson, Esq., of Tulloch, who gave the alarm. Fortunately, some valuable pictures, by the Italian and Dutch masters, had been sent to Edinburgh, to be repaired, and the family plate had been deposited a short time before in the safe of the Caledonian Bank at Dingwall. The charter-chest, containing the title deeds of the property and family, was saved. The wines in the cellar were removed, and the crystal and china articles also preserved. We are happy to add that no accident occurred. The house and furniture were only partially insured. The unfortunate accident would appear to have originated from a lighted candle left in the bedroom. Among other things, a carved oak table, which had belonged to the Fowlis family, known as the "Speaker's table," with the furniture, clothes, wardrobes—in short, all above the drawing-room, is entirely destroyed. Unfortunately, the late Mrs. Davidson's jewels and trinkets, watches, &c., in a wardrobe, containing valuable dresses and other things, were in a room up stairs, to which no access could be obtained during the fire, and have perished.

SILVER VASE,

PRESENTED TO SIR ROBERT SALE.

This handsome piece of plate has just been presented by the Corporation of London to Sir Robert Sale, in approval of his distinguished services in India. The vase was manufactured by Messrs. Makepeace and Walford, of Serle-street, Lincoln's Inn: its height is 21 inches; weight, 175 ounces; cost, 100 guineas. On the side shown in our engraving is engraved the Resolution of the Court of Common Council, held December 12, 1844, by which this Vase has been presented, together with the freedom of the City, "To Major-General Sir Robert Henry Sale, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath, as a testimony of the admiration entertained by this court, in common with their fellow-citizens, of the many distinguished military services rendered by him in India, and particularly in his arduous and successful operations in the defence of Jellalabad, by which he contributed to uphold the reputation of her Majesty's arms, the security of the British dominion in India, and the honour of the British Empire."

On the opposite side of the Vase are engraved the Civic arms in relief. On one side of the cover are enumerated the battles in which Sir Robert Sale has been engaged since the year 1806; and on the opposite side are engraved the arms of Sir Robert Sale. On the inside of the cover is engraved an extract from her Majesty's speech, referring to the brilliant success of the British arms in India.

A companion Vase to the above was also manufactured by Messrs. Makepeace and Walford, for presentation to Sir William Nott, in acknowledgment of his eminent services; but as, to the regret of all, Sir W. Nott has died since the passing of the resolution by the Court of Common Council, the memorial has been presented to Sir William Nott's family.

As Sir Robert Sale is now in India, the Vase has been sent thither.

These Vases were placed upon the table at a recent Court of Common Council; when Major-General Sir Henry Pottinger was presented with the freedom of the City in a gold box, value 100 guineas, having on the lid, in bas-relief, a representation of the Signing of our Treaty of Commerce with the Chinese in the State-Cabin of the Cornwallis.

SILVER VASE PRESENTED TO SIR R. SALE

METROPOLITAN IMPROVEMENTS—LOTHBURY.

The New Royal Exchange may be regarded as the magnificent nucleus of a very important series of improvement of the City; and of these, Lothbury—on the north side of the Bank of England—presents a highly embellished specimen—notwithstanding the contiguity of Sir John Soane's design, overloaded as it is with ornament and frittered detail.

The occupation of this street by some of our metropolitan "merchant princes" and bankers, has proved favourable to its architectural pre-eminence. At the first house in the line shown in the engraving, Moorgate-street intersects: this is not distinguished by purity of design, but is, nevertheless, imposing and effective. The next mansion is far more chastely elegant in its details. Next is the Church of St. Margaret, with a tower and spire 140 feet high; to which a richly-gilt bracket clock has been added. Beyond the Church, the fine range is continued with some mansions of almost palatial pretensions.

The artistical character of these improvements is thus summed up in the "Companion to the Almanac:"—"Lothbury is growing to be a sort of City Pall-mall, in regard to architectural façades: two have lately been erected in the Italian palazzo style, which, though but of very moderate extent, exhibit much elegance of design. The first of these, or that adjoining the Church, is a stone front, four windows in breadth, consisting of a rusticated basement floor, with arches and moulded imposts, and over it a principal and second floor, crowned by a cornicione and blocking-course: unity of taste prevails throughout, together with simplicity and beauty of detail. The other building, the Alfred Life Office, which is narrower in frontage, it being only 28 feet, has likewise a basement with arched openings, and two floors above it. The manner in which the three windows of the first floor are grouped into a single composition, and also connected with those of the next, so that all those apertures are concentrated together, and brought, as it were, into a general focus, and thereby greater repose and solidity given to the rest of the façade, deserves notice."

We shall, from time to time, continue our illustration of the Splendid Improvement of the Metropolis now in course of construction.

METROPOLITAN IMPROVEMENTS.—LOTHBURY.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, July 27.—10th Sunday after Trinity—Almanac duty repealed, 1834
MONDAY, 28.—Robespierre guillotined, 1792
TUESDAY, 29.—French Revolution, 1830—Wilberforce died, 1833.
WEDNESDAY, 30.—Charles X. dethroned, 1830—William Penn died, 1718
THURSDAY, 31. Ignatius Lyola, founder of the Order of Jesuits, died, 1556
FRIDAY, August 1.—Lammas Day.
SATURDAY, 2.—Battle of Sienheim, 1704—Arkwright died, 1792

HIGH WATER at London-bridge, for the Week ending August 2.

Monday		Tuesday		Wednesday		Thursday		Friday		Saturday
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
8 56	9 24	10 0	10 36	11 16	11 50	0 0	0 23	0 48	1 13	1 33	1 57

Now Ready, Price Eighteen Shillings, Vol. VI. of

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

Elegantly bound in cloth and gold, gilt edges, rich in Illustrations of the Passing events of the last Six Months, forming a most complete and valuable ILLUSTRATED CHRONOLOGY; together with a mass of useful and highly interesting articles on Art, Literature, and Science.—May be obtained, by order, of all Booksellers, &c., in the Kingdom, as also all the previous Volumes. Vol. I., 18s.; Vols. II., III., IV., V., and VI., 18s. each.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

" R. T." Thornbury.—The Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company's packets leave Southampton for Calcutta, on the 20th, and for Alexandria, en route to Bombay, on the 3rd of every month.

" A 7th Vol. Subscriber."—I will may be seen at Doctors' Commons, upon payment of the customary fee; and a copy obtained at a cost proportionate to its length.

" A Constant Reader."—We were not aware of the vacancy at Merchant Tailors' School. The day of election has been, or will be, duly advertised.

" M. C.," Longton, is recommended to refer to "Combe's Works," published in Edinburgh and London.

" L. G."—The Prince of Leiningen is the only son of her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, and Charles Prince of Leiningen, who died 1814.

" A Belfringer."—The Cumberwell St Giles's Church peal of bells is a fine one, but there are several finer in the metropolis, as St. Marie Overie's, Southwark; St. Bride's, Fleet street; St. Martin's-in-the-Fields &c.

" A Constant Reader," Inverness.—A person born Jan 3, 1800, is of the 19th century.

" G."—We have not room for the "Lines on Taglioni."

" J. B. H." Bristol.—See our present No. Our correspondent states that Mr. Pigot's yacht does not belong to the Royal Squadron (as stated in our last), but to the Royal Southampton Yacht Club.

" R. A. D."—Address a note to the Keeper of the Royal Academy.

" Ignoramus."—Aird's "Self Instructing French Grammar," and "The Elon Latin Grammar."

" F. G. D." Bridgwater.—The covers for Vol. VI. are now ready. "Felix on the Bat" is a sound work on cricket.

" An Original Subscriber," Knutsford, is thanked for the hint, which shall be considered of.

" E. A. C." Declined

" A Subscriber," Coleford.—The address is 148, Piccadilly.

" Rosalinda," Wiltshire.—See our Journal of last week.

" Howard"—Declined.

" W. R. J."—The moon's rising and setting, with other valuable astronomical information, will be given in THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON ALMANAC for 1846

" E. M." is thanked; we have not room.

" W. T. R."—The verses are very good, but have not reached us.

" S. H. W."—Apply to the Lord Steward. We hope to illustrate the Frescoes next week.

" A Constant Reader," Mansell-street.—We are not in possession of the information sought.

J. W. A.," London.—The late Lord Hill was appointed commander-in-chief of the army in 1828, and held the office for several years.

" N. C. S." The narrative will not suit.

" A Subscriber from the Commencement."—My dear Miss ——,

" Venetia."—The questions to be answered by candidates for confirmation may be pu chased of any publisher of religious books.

" Populus." Cheltenham.—The income in question is £100,000 per annum.

" W. E. C."—The circumstance of long service named by our correspondent would, probably, aid his own application; but the requisite interest is difficult to procure.

" Ayr Reader." Apply to Mr. Nutt, foreign bookseller, Fleet street.

" J. M.," Dublin. —Ineligible.

" A Subscriber," Sevenoaks, should advertise.

" A Subscriber" is thanked for the hint as to the Marriage Fête, but we have not space for the illustration.

" An Earnest Inquirer" should apply to the Editor, &c.

" S. R. R."—The postage of our Journal to Malta is, via Southampton, free; by French packet, 3*d.; by British packet closed mail,* 3*d. To Hong Kong, via Southampton, free; via Marseilles,* 3*d. To any other part of China, via Southampton, or by private ship,* 2*d., and via Marseilles,* 3*d.*

 Owing to a press of Engravings, we have been compelled to omit further illustration of the late Agricultural Meeting at Shrewsbury.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 26, 1845.

AN adjourned debate towards the end of July is somewhat of a phenomenon, yet it has this week occurred. The New Zealand question has gained deeper interest by the arrival of the last accounts, which have verified the predictions of all those acquainted with the colony. The absurd conduct of Cap. Fitzroy, in prohibiting the settlers from forming into a militia for self-defence, has produced the twofold result of the destruction of an English settlement and the disgrace of the British flag. It is mournful to see how long men in office will resist the suggestions of common sense, when they are offered by those who have too many opportunities of seeing how little of that quality is exhibited by official acts. Long ago did the colonists of New Zealand protest against the course the Governor was pursuing, and point to the fatal consequences: the Colonial Office on this, as on all other occasions, was inexorable. Everything the Governor did was right—every complaint of the governed was wrong; and so time runs on till the crisis comes, and not even the wilful blindness of partiality can overlook the monstrous blunders and follies that have been committed. These the Colonial Office is driven to do at last, after all the mischief has happened; that which, if it had been done at first, would have prevented it.

And this is not the story, unhappily, of one colony alone; all seem disatisfied and uneasy under the present colonial regime. On a late occasion at a public dinner of gentlemen connected with the colony of Australia, Lord Stanley's name was pointedly coupled from its natural association with the toast of "Her Majesty's Ministers," that of the Duke of Wellington being substituted for it. The reason was plainly stated—the colony had no cause to be grateful for any one part of the Colonial Minister's conduct during the past, and had but very slender hopes of any amendment for the future. They would not, therefore, belie themselves by paying even a compliment of courtesy, the sincerity of which would have been open to imputation. It is not party spirit that prompts all this murmuring; it is the sense of palpable, worldly, material injury, arising from carelessness or obstinacy, on which no representations have any effect.

It absolutely seems as if Lord Stanley looked upon every colonial possession as a set of opposing factions which it is his duty to check, thwart, and crush in the attempts in every possible way. This is a fatal theory; it does for the battles of party in Parliament, but as a rule of Government for the Statesman it is ruinous; our countrymen and fellow subjects abroad are not to be looked on as enemies and crushed; nor are they fools incapable of suggesting measures for their own benefit, all whose applications are to be disregarded. The object of the department of the Government under which they live ought to be to second their efforts, if well intended and well planned, not perpetually to throw difficulties in their way. But this has long been the principle of the Colonial Office, with respect to which a recent writer well observes—"If it were this single colony, which bade so fair, and has so—

Unbeseem'd the promise of its spring,

"we should be inclined to attribute much of the disarrangement to the force of circumstances; but, when we find that complaints of grievances and petitions for redress are so general, that a happy and contented colony is the exception, and dissatisfaction the rule—when we find the evil greater than ever before, and still increasing—we cannot attribute much to circumstances and much to the system (gladly as we would see that amended), but are constrained to believe that most of it belongs to the individual Minister. We can admire Stanley's dexterity as a skirmisher in debate, and his skill in fencing; but he is wofully deficient in weight and stability, in comprehensiveness, in fitness for responsible office. He is a dashing ensign, perhaps even a slashing colonel, but he is not endowed with the thoughtfulness and the resource of the general. He bears about the same proportion to a statesman that Lord Anglesey, in the field, did to the Duke of Wellington, or Ney to Napoleon."

THE Irish Colleges Bill was read a second time in the House Lords on Monday, with less discussion or opposition than was anticipated.

On Tuesday, another privilege question raised its head in the Lords, Brougham, the great opponent of privilege, being now induced to seek its protection. It seems that his Lordship, in the Committee on the Irish Great Western Railway Bill, completely smashed, demolished, and exposed the case of the promoters, who, though they in four hundred instances broke the standing orders of the House of Commons, and were allowed to get the bill through after all, had fair warning from the ex-Chancellor that they must look for no such indulgence in the House of Lords. And he has fulfilled his own prophecy, which, in some degree, diminishes the sense of his impartial justice. But, in this instance Brougham is right; a more rotten case never figured in the annals of railway speculation. It was, in fact, an attempt en amateur to get up a railroad without any connection with agents and engineers, that is without professional assistance, the consequence is the failure is complete, not from any improper motives, but sheer want of skill, and knowledge. And every blunder has been mercilessly exposed by Lord Brougham, who revelled with a kind of savage delight in the havoc he was making. The evidence is certainly extraordinary, and deserves all the censure the noble lord has bestowed on it. Mr. F. French, who is one of the supporters of the bill, very naturally felt aggrieved at the unceremonious manner in which it was treated, and took advantage of the Boldero and Bonham discussion on Monday, to make the "retort courteous" to Brougham in language of no measured quality. It appeared of course in the papers, or rather two of them, the Times and Chronicle, and, on Tuesday, Brougham brought the speech before the Peers as a breach of privilege, and talked of calling the reporters and printers to the bar, but could not down into consenting to an adjournment of the discussion. On Wednesday, Mr. French avowed the accuracy of the speech, and made the amende, by accepting as satisfactory some explanation of various points, and withdrawing all the personal expressions he had used towards the noble Lord, under extreme excitement, and an erroneous impression. On Thursday evening, Lord Brougham accepted the apology, and "so the matter ended."

COURT AND HAUT TON.

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO GERMANY.

We have reason to believe, that her Majesty and Prince Albert will set out for Germany, immediately after the prorogation of Parliament. Several routes have been mentioned, but we hear, in consequence of the plan being informed, that the port of debarkation will be Ostend, and that the Royal party will proceed from thence to Mayence and Frankfort. It is probable that her Majesty will make a short visit to the King of Bavaria, at Wurtzburg. The German papers have the following:—"The King of Prussia and all the court will arrive at Coblentz on the 29th inst., in order to take up his residence there for the summer. During the visit of Queen Victoria will be on the grandest possible scale. The King of Prussia will reside at the Rhenish provinces during 21 days; and three court balls and several grand banquets will be given by his Majesty."

RETURN OF HER MAJESTY AND THE ROYAL FAMILY TO OSBORNE.

(From our own Correspondent.)

In consequence of the low spring tides on Saturday afternoon, there was not sufficient depth of water in the bay to admit of the Royal barge approaching the pier or platform of communication, in order to land her Majesty on her own grounds at Osborne. Her Majesty was, consequently, under the necessity of resorting to the usual landing-place fronting the Medina Hotel, at East Cowes, where the Royal family landed about half past six o'clock, amid the liveliest demonstrations of respect from the inhabitants and visitors assembled.

The presence of the Royal pair has, of late, almost become a scene of every-day occurrence, so that little is left for us to record beyond a repetition of the past; and, were it not for the fact that her Majesty is residing on the island, both her Majesty and her Royal Consort would be passed by the inhabitants unnoticed, from the absence of all pomp or pageantry attending their excursions either by land or water.

The affability and condescension of the Royal pair are the general remark among her rustic peasantry in the island; to the meanest of their subjects, they cordially acknowledge the compliment shown to them when passing. Occasionally have they been observed to take an accustomed walk, arm in arm, on the high road in the vicinity of Osborne, affably conversing with the aged whom they may perchance meet, making inquiries after some whom her Majesty may have recollected when she was formerly residing at Norris. Frequently have the Royal pair been met driving in their pony phaeton unattended, save by a single outrider; while, at other times, they have been observed crossing from one shore of the Medina to the other in the ordinary carriage ferry boat, under the guidance of John the ferryman; and all without the inhabitants intruding on the Royal presence, or subjecting her Majesty to the vacant gaze and stare of vulgar curiosity. Her Majesty's wish for privacy is, therefore, carried out to the letter.

Notwithstanding her Majesty's desire that all her movements should be conducted with as little public demonstration as possible, yet the feelings of loyalty which pervade her subjects in this neighbourhood, could not be wholly suppressed, and some manifestation of respect was consequently the result on her present return with the Royal children.

It having become generally known that they would arrive that afternoon, the Harbour and Roadstead from noon presented the usual scene of gaiety, as refers to the assemblage of visitors, and the display of bunting from the several yachts, revenue cutters, and mercantile vessels which were lying at anchor in the immediate vicinity, as well as from the various flag staffs of Cowes Castle, the Royal Yacht Squadron House, the Foreign Consulates, and the numerous wharves and quays along both sides of the harbour. Among the most conspicuous of the yachts were the R. Y. S Schooner, Resolution, belonging to the Duke of Rutland; the R. Y S Schooner, Gamilia, Thomas Hallday, jun., Esq.; the R. Y. S. Cutter, Will o'the Wisp, Captain C. H. Williams, R.N.; the R.T.Y. Club (new Schooner), the Gipsey Queen, belonging to the Duc de Stacpool; and the Revenue Cutter, Rose, Mr. Hughes, Commander; all which were dressed, from each mast-head, fore and aft, to the water's edge, with national flags, and signals of every colour, shade and hue, which, amid a brilliant sunshine, and a gentle breeze from the eastward, had an imposing effect.

At sixteen minutes past five a salute from the guns at Portsmouth was distinctly heard at Cowes, and groups of well-dressed persons were soon observed wending their way towards East Cowes, the intended place of debarkation, while, on the other hand, crowds of fashionables thronged the Marine Parade, to welcome the Sovereign when she passed between the then narrow waters of the Stag. At about half past five another salute, more distinctly than the former, was heard in the neighbourhood of Spithead, which announced that her Majesty was speedily approaching from the eastward. From this time every eye was directed over the East Cowes Point, for the indication of smoke from the Royal steamer, until thirteen minutes past six P.M., when the Royal yacht, bearing the Royal standard at the main, made her appearance round the Castle Point, gliding majestically along the Roads to her moorings, off Cowes Harbour, preceded by the R.Y.S cutter Pearl (the Marquis of Anglesey's yacht), and followed by the beautiful steam tender The Fairy. As soon as the Royal standard "hove in sight," the guns from Cowes Castle, as also from the Royal Yacht Squadron House battery, on the Parade, thundered forth a Royal salute of 21 guns. In a few minutes afterwards the Royal yacht came to her moorings, when the Royal barge was lowered, and hauled up alongside. Attwenty minutes past six her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, accompanied by the Royal infants, and suite, embarked in the barge, when the standard was hauled down from the yacht, and hoisted in the bows of the Royal barge, which, in a few seconds, was put in motion, steered by Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, to the northward, and along the "Shrape," towards the entrance of the harbour, preceded by one of the boats of the Stag, revenue cutter, in which was Lieut. Clark, R.N., her commander, who had been directed to proceed ahead, for the purpose of piloting the Royal barge to the landing-place, the barge being escorted by the tide surveyor, Mr. Hanley, in the Custom-house yacht, and several other boats belonging to the revenue cutters Stag and Rose, each with an officer therein, and their distinguishing pennants and ensigns, in the bow and stern, while other boats belonging to the Coast Guard formed a line fronting the landing place, and kept the channel clear of the numerous shore boats which had assembled with PAIR freights to greet their Sovereign

As the Royal barge was rowed along the harbour, the Royal visitors were most enthusiastically cheered by the inhabitants and visitors from the various quays; while, as the Royal party passed, each yacht in succession lowered their colours as a homage to Briton's Queen

At thirty two minutes past six the barge arrived alongside the new pier, fronting the Medina Hotel, where the carriages belonging to her Majesty and suite were in waiting for their reception. The sides of the stairs were tastefully covered and decorated with flags, while the landing from the barge to the carriage was covered with Brussels carpeting

On her Majesty alighting, she was received at the stairs by Captain Currie, R.N., Inspecting Commander of the Coast Guard at Sayle and by Lieutenant Coppinger, of the Coast Guard station at Cowes, and by them conducted to the carriage (an open landau, drawn by two piebalds). The Coast Guard men were ranged on either side of the landing, and formed a guard of honour to her Majesty, while, on the other hand, Inspector Cadingham, of the Isle of Wight constabulary force, with his rurals, kept the Parade clear from the too near approach of the crowd who had assembled to witness the debarkation.

Immediately on her Majesty landing, every hat was off as a token of respect, but not a cheer was given, it having been intimated that cheering might, have the effect of startling the horses. The compliment, we need not add was most graciously acknowledged by her Majesty and the Prince, as also by the little Prince of Wales.

Her Majesty was the first to enter the carriage, leading the Princess Royal, while his Royal Highness the Prince assisted in the Prince of Wales, the Princess Alice was then handed into the carriage, as also the infant Prince Alfred in his nurse's arms. The first carriage contained the Royal parents and their children, with the nurse to the infant Prince. In the next phaeton were the Lady in Waiting, and the Governess to the Princess Royal. The carriages immediately drove off in the dire tion to Osborne House, followed shortly afterwards by two other carriages, containing the servants and attendants. In a few minutes afterwards the company dispersed.

On Sunday, her Majesty and the household had divine service performed to them in the morning at Osborne House. In the afternoon her Majesty and the Prince took a carriage airing on the Newport road.

Her Majesty and the Prince seemed remarkably well, but the general observation was, that the children looked very pale.

The Queen, accompanied by the Princess Royal, drove out from Osborne House in a pony carriage, soon after five o'clock, on Monday afternoon. Prince Albert accompanied her Majesty on horseback, attended by Colonel Bruce, Equerry in Waiting

On Tuesday morning her Majesty and her Royal Consort walked in the pleasure grounds, and afterwards on the beach. Her Majesty and his Royal Highness returned to Osborne House in a pony carriage.

On Wednesday morning, her Majesty and her Royal Consort took exercise in an open pony carriage. The juvenile Royal Family were taken their accustomed rides and walks yesterday forenoon in the pleasure grounds of Osborne House

ARRIVAL OF THE KING OF HOLLAND.

His Majesty the King of Holland arrived off the Royal Dockyard, at Woolwich, at seven minutes after two o'clock on Thursday afternoon, in the Cyclops Dutch government steamer.

His Excellency M Dedel, the Netherlands Minister, accompanied by Lord Bloomfield, the Commandant of the garrison, proceeded in the barge of the William and Mary yacht to the Cyclops and went on board immediately the steamer was brought to its moorings.

A royal salute was fired from a field battery of the Royal Artillery.

The King, at ten minutes after two, landed. The Earl of Haddington, the First Lord of the Admiralty, Sir George Cockburn, Captain Sir F Collier, R.N., the Earl of Morton, and the Hon. Captain Hood, Col. Mercer, R.M., Col. Powell, &c., being in attendance

His Majesty on stepping from the barge instantly advanced to the Earl of Haddington, and cordially shaking out his hand, said, "How glad I am to see you, are you quite well, Lord Haddington?"

The Earl of Haddington then introduced Admiral Sir George Cockburn, and then informed his Majesty that the Earl of Morton, one of the Lords in Waiting to the Queen, and the Hon. Captain Nelson Hood, one of the Grooms in Waiting, were selected by her Majesty to have the honour of attending on his Majesty during his sojourn in the country.

A guard of honour of the Royal Marines received the King with the customary honours due to a Sovereign, the full band of that corps saluting the illustrious King by the National Anthem.

His Majesty then entered one of the Royal carriages, after taking a cordial leave of the Earl of Haddington and Lord Bloomfield; and accompanied by his Excellency M. Dedel, and attended by the Earl of Morton and Hon. Captain Hood, at thirteen minutes after two, left the Dockyard for Mivart's Hotel, amidst the deafening cheering of the spectators, and a salute of artillery.

His Majesty arrived from Woolwich, at Mivart's Hotel, Brook street, at about twenty minutes past three o'clock. The suite of rooms intended for his Majesty had been in readiness for his reception some day's previous. Up to a late hour in the evening, several of the nobility called to pay their respects. At eight o'clock his Majesty, accompanied by some members of his suite left Mivart's, for the residence of M. Dedel, the Minister Plenipotentiary to the Government of the Netherlands, Wilton-crescent, where he was entertained at dinner.

THE DUCHESS DOWAGER.—The Queen Dowager received his Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, the Countess of Jersey, and Ladies Clementine and Adela Villers, and a select party, at luncheon on Wednesday, at Bushy House. Preparations are made at Witley Court for the reception of the Queen Dowager, who is expected in the first or second week of next month.

THE MARQUIS AND MARCHIONESS OF WESTMINSTER'S PARTY.—The Marquis and Marchioness of Westminster gave an elegant entertainment on Wednesday evening to their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, at the family residence in Grosvenor-square. The Duke of Wellington, the Marquis of Winchester, the Marquis of Salisbury, the Earl and Countess of Morley, Lord Glenelg, the Earl of Wilton, and a select party were invited to meet the Royal guests.

LORD FOLEY'S GRAND BALL.—On Wednesday night Lord Foley gave a splendid ball at his lordship's mansion in Grosvenor square, when the élite of society in town graced the magnificent saloon by their presence. It was half-past eleven when dancing commenced with a quadrille. At half past twelve a supper of the most sumptuous character was announced. Their Royal Highnesses the Duke of Cambridge and Prince George of Cambridge, and his Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, honoured his lordship by their company.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE VISCOUNT CANTERBURY.—We understand that the funeral of the late Viscount Canterbury will take place on Monday morning next, when his remains will be removed from the residence of his son, No. 11, Southwick Crescent, for burial at Addington, near Croydon.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

CAMBRIDGE. July 18.

CHRIST'S COLLEGE.—The Rev. Robert Middlemist, B.A., of Christ's College, has just been appointed Mathematical Master of Harrow School.

MAGDALENE COLLEGE.—The Rev. Henry Hall, M.A., has just been appointed Head Master of the Grammar School, St. Albans.

QUEEN'S COLLEGE.—The Rev. John Sheffield, M.A., has just been appointed Head Master of the Grammar School, Rochdale.

OXFORD. July 24.

MAGDALEN COLLEGE.—The Rev. Henry George Joseph Parsons, B.A., and the Rev. William Balfour, B.A, were this day admitted Actual Fellows.

Mr. John Walker Knight was at the same time elected to the vacant Demyship.

SUMMARY OF RAILWAY FACTS.—Six new schemes, "provisionally registered," made their appearance during the past week. A new proposal for three railways upon the atmospheric principle has been projected, direct from Windsor, through Staines and Brentford, to Knightsbridge; the Windsor terminus at a point to be selected between Windsor and Runnymede, about a mile from the town, and a short distance from Frogmore. It is intended that an electric telegraph shall extend the whole distance.——The Committee of the Rye and Dover Railway Bill have decided that the preamble was not proved.——In the important case of the London and York Railway Bill, the Committee have decided that the preamble was proved.—An erroneous statement has been in circulation respecting the speed of the express trains. On the London and Birmingham line it has been ascertained that the speed, instead of 48, is nearly 46 miles per hour.——The Committee of the Runcorn and Preston Brook Railway have decided that the preamble was not proved.——The Lords' Committees have decided that the preambles of the following bills have been proved:—The Oxford, Worcester and Wolverhampton; the Oxford and Rugby; and the South Wales Railway Bill.——The House of Commons' Committee on the Cambridge and Huntingdon Railway Bill have declared the preamble to be proved.—— Yesterday (Friday) the Lords' Committees decided that the preambles of the following bills were proved:—The South Eastern (Extension to Tunbridge Wells), the Monmouth and Hereford, and the Portsmouth direct

POSTSCRIPT

PREPARATIONS AT COBLENTZ IN HONOUR OF QUEEN VICTORIA'S VISIT.—A letter from Berlin, of the 18th instant, says—"The Rhine has just ordered all bands of the eight corps of the army, stationed in the Rhenish Provinces, to assemble at Coblentz, to execute, in the evening of the 12th of August next, the day on which the Queen of England will arrive at the Palace of Brühl, near that city, a grand military concert, similar to that given some years since at Kalk, in Cologne, in presence of the Emperor Nicholas and the late King Frederick William III., when the Russian and Prussian troops were encamped in that neighbourhood. Decorations of tent and upholstery have left Berlin for Coblentz, to prepare the Royal apartments in that city, where the King proposes to give three grand balls in honour of her Britannic Majesty. The sojourn of our Court

HER MAJESTY'S EXPERIMENTAL SQUADRON.

84, Captain Moresby, C.B.; Rodney, 90, Captain Collier, C.B.; Superb, 80, Captain A. L. Corry.

Steam Sloop, The Rattler, 8, Commander H. Smith (h).

The whole squadron, which presents a total of 781 guns, and nearly 7000 men, is stored and provisioned for five months, and, with the exception of the officers and crew, may be said to be complete; the cruise will, however, benefit the whole, and render them fit for actual service, should the nation ever require them.

RELIC OF NELSON.

An interesting relic of Nelson has just been discovered; and some interest also attaches to the manner in which it has been secured to the nation. Sir Harris Nicolas, in his laborious researches for editing the hero's "Despatches," had satisfied himself that the Coat and Waistcoat which Nelson wore when he fell at Trafalgar were carefully preserved. In pursuance of the Admiral's directions, they were given, with several other things, by Sir Thomas Hardy, his captain, to Lady Hamilton; by her they were transferred, under peculiar circumstances, to a late Alderman of London; and they remained in possession of the Alderman's widow. The lady is not rich, and she asked £150 for the relic. The sum being beyond his own means, Sir Harris determined to raise it by subscription, in order that the Coat and Waistcoat might be deposited, like the coat which Nelson wore at the battle of the Nile, in Greenwich Hospital. With that view, he put the proposition in writing, and had it printed as a circular. Before issuing the circular, however, he sent a copy to His Royal Highness Prince Albert, who immediately desired that the purchase might be made for himself, as he should feel "pride and pleasure" in presenting the precious memorials to Greenwich

THE COAT WORN BY NELSON, AT THE BATTLE OF TRAFALGAR.

THE WAISTCOAT.

Hospital. Sir Harris Nicolas took them to the Royal purchaser on Wednesday week; and we understand that the Prince manifested a very fine feeling on the occasion. There is kind and generous wisdom in this act; for nothing could so help to identify the Queen's husband with the British people as such little tributes to their maritime pride. The coat is thus described in Sir Harris Nicolas's circular; and it will be seen that it has an historical value:—"The coat is the undress uniform of a vice-admiral, lined with white silk, with lace on the cuffs, and epaulettes. Four stars—of the Orders of the Bath, St. Ferdinand and Merit, the Crescent, and St. Joachim—are sewn on the left breast, as Nelson habitually wore them; which disproves the story, that he purposely adorned himself with his decorations on going into battle! The course of the fatal ball is shown by a hole over the left shoulder, and part of the epaulette is torn away; which agrees with Dr. Sir William Beattie's account of Lord Nelson's death, and with the fact that pieces of the bullion and pad of the epaulette adhered to the ball, which is now in her Majesty's possession. The coat and waistcoat are stained in several places with the hero's blood." These details originally appeared in the Spectator newspaper. The relic will, in a few days, through the generosity of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, be deposited in Greenwich Hospital.

EARL GREY.

How still hath been the name
Through many a changing year,
That once burn'd up, with soul of flame
To all the nation dear!
Of late, how little heard,
Amid the general doom,
While its proud wearer trod in peace
His journey to the Tomb!

But there shall burn a light—
A pure and warming ray—
To make that page of history bright,
Where shines the name of GREY!
The silver and the snow
Shed reverence round his brow—
But he is throned amid the glow
Of brighter halos now!

The memory of the man
Who went away from earth
With such a still and noiseless step,
Hath now its noblest birth!
Now flash enkindling thoughts
Of all his patriot-fame,
And Glory, on her altars proud,
Pours incense to his name!

All Virtue seemed to take
In that man's life a pride:
How long and splendidly he lived!
How peacefully he died!
How full of dignity he wore
The grandeur of his prime!
How calmly put it all away,
To bow to God and Time!

His guerdon was—friend's love,
His gain—respect from foes!
His character— a sun's decline,
As pure as when it rose!
His loud, full, fearless word,
Made ELOQUENCE rejoice,
Long LIBERTY shall haunt her soul,
With echoes of his voice!

His Nature one of truth,
His Fame outshone his birth;
His patriot ardour finely tried,
And finely proved of worth!
His Country now proclaims
What glorious race he ran,
Who added lustre to the PEER,
And died the STAINLESS MAN!

The death of Earl Grey has taken from among us the last of that circle of Statesmen, whose names, acts, and policy have become matters of history. And to give a sketch of the career of the noble Earl, is, in truth, to revive the history of the past, for he had for many years, withdrawn from political affairs, and ceased to interfere with the struggles and contests of these latter days. The "fatal fever" of life might be said to have ceased with him long before that great change, which the advances of age and infirmities so naturally lead all men to prepare for. The noble Earl had long outlived the friends of his youth, and the companions or competitors with whom he acted, or whom he opposed, in his manhood and maturity. And few of those with whom his name is thus associated were as happy in their closing scenes as this venerable nobleman. Pitt died in the vigour of his faculties, onworn with toils and anxieties, his heart broken, it is said, by the event of the Battle of Austerlitz, and the triumph of Napoleon, with whom it seemed impossible for the whole Continent to cope; Fox expired just as he had gained office; the last days of Sheridan were darkened by want —the man in whom princes delighted being left by princes to starve; Castlereagh fell by his own hand; Perceval by that of the assassin; and Canning sank to the grave with a "world-wearied" spirit, the victim of intrigue, cabal, and party ingratitude, for his plebeian birth was never forgotten, and his rise resented as an intrusion. Earl Grey, after a long life, occupied with labours which were crowned with success at last, has gone to the grave in the fulness of time—surrounded by an almost patriarchal family, conscious of having discharged his allotted task, and respected by a whole people, who found in him a champion in days when the popular cause was proscribed, and liberal opinions a disqualification for the service of the Crown. In English history Earl Grey will fill a high and important place. He was born March 13, 1764, being son of the first Earl Grey, who, when Sir Charles Grey, was a distinguished military commander, having served at the memorable battle of Minden, the siege and conquest of Quebec, under General Wolfe. His mother was the daughter of George Gulst, Esq., of Southwick. He received his education first at Eton, and subsequently at King's College, Cambridge. When but 18, he visited the Continent, and made the tour of several of the European states. He returned to his native country in 1786. In the latter mentioned year he was returned to Parliament for the county of Northumberland, the vacancy having been occasioned by the elevation of Lord Loraine to the Upper House. He had not, however, completed his 21st year until two or three days previous to that on which he took his seat. He almost immediately joined the Whig party, then in Opposition, under Charles Fox. His first speech was delivered in the debate on Mr. Pitt's commercial treaty with France, and gave presage of the talent by which his long parliamentary career was subsequently distinguished. The oratorical ability which he displayed on this occasion secured him a foremost position in the house, and, during the same session, which was his first, he was named one of the managers in the impeachment of Warren Hastings.

"Gathered, not harshly plucked, for death mature,"

The recently published Memoirs of Lady Hester Stanhope contain a curious reminiscence of the noble Earl at this period of his life; she says:—"I can recollect, when I was ten or twelve years old, going to Hastings's trial. My garter somehow came off, and was picked up by Lord Grey, then a young man. At this hour, as if it were in a picture, I can see his handsome, but very pale face, his broad forehead; his curbeau coat, with cut steel buttons; his white satin waistcoat and breeches, and the buckles in his shoes. He saw from whom the garter fell, but, observing my confusion, did not wish to increase it, and, with infinite delicacy, gave the garter to the person who sat there to serve tea and coffee."

In 1792, Mr. Grey became a member of the Whig Club, and shortly afterwards of the great political confederation known as the "Friends of the People," the avowed object of which was to obtain a reform in the system of parliamentary representation. At the head of this formidable association stood the names of the principal members of the Whig party. Mr. Fox, however, declined to enrol his name among them, observing, "Though I perceive great and enormous abuses, I do not see the remedy." The society, however, continued to grow in numbers and to increase in influence. A series of resolutions, passed at the meetings, and a declaration of the principles and objects of the society were printed and extensively circulated. On the 30th of April, Mr. Grey gave notice in the House of Commons of a motion which, in the course of the next session, he should submit to the consideration of the house, the object of which was a reform in the representation of the people. The debate which arose on the motion when it was brought forward in the following session, and the struggles to which the desire in the country for the attainment of the object gave rise, which were continued for numerous years, are matters of history. The contest was severe and protracted. Its progress was occasionally interrupted by various circumstances; but, like a river, the current of which has received a temporary check, on the removal of the obstructions the onward course of public opinion was accelerated, and at length restitles.

Earl Grey, though the most conspicuous of the reformers of that time, cannot, however, be strictly styled the father of reform. Reform was agitated thirty years before he was born. In 1734, Mr. William Bromley, the member for Norwich, introduced it to Parliament by a motion for the repeal of the Septennial Act. Sir Thomas Carew and Sir John Glynne afterwards introduced similar motions in 1745 and 1738; and what is the most remarkable of all, in 1782 William Pitt demanded a committee to inquire into the state of the representation; and afterwards, in 1783 and 1785, followed up the subject by motions of a more specific nature—in fact, for abolishing the rotten boroughs and throwing their representation into the counties and large manufacturing towns. It is, therefore singular enough that William Pitt was really the father of Reform, though he afterwards turned so savagely on his own child, and like old Saturn wanted to devour it. It is not the less singular that, as the Whigs were the party who deprived the country of Triennial Parliaments, and forced upon it the Septennial Act, so the Tories and Jacobites were the most strenuous of the original advocates of Reform, and spoke and voted in favour of Mr. Bromley's motion for the repeal of the Septennial Act.

He did not originate parliamentary reform in this country, but he took it up in the generous glow of his youth; he defended it in its childhood from the unnatural fury of its apostate father; he maintained its cause for half a century; and having seen it triumph to the extent of his most sanguine expectation, he retired to that honourable seclusion which not only nature demanded, but which the nature of his political views demanded also.

In 1795 he had again to denounce the suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act. He immediately afterwards moved, that Parliament should recommend to the Crown a peace with France; showing that every day only added to the fruitless expense, the bloodshed and enslavement of the people of England. This motion was again rejected by a majority of 164. To make these reckless and criminal proceedings the more glaring, and to show that Ministers were equally prepared to squander the money of the industrious portion of the nation, on bloodshed abroad and debauchery at home; a motion was made, for the second time, for the liquidation of the debts, and for a marriage settlement, of the Prince of Wales. This profligate youngster had hitherto had an allowance from the State of £60,000 per annum, which, so far from having been sufficient to pay for those shameless indulgences in which he was perpetually immersed, had left him covered with enormous debts. It was now, therefore, proposed to allow him £65,000 a year more; i. e. to pay away the taxes wrung with an unrelenting hand from the horny fingers of labour to the amount of £125,000 a year for the indulgence of the follies, the unrestrained lusts, and riot of one man, and this too at a time when the whole nation was torn between the misfortunes of the most grinding system of taxation which the world had ever seen.

These circumstances seemed to rouse all the patriotism of Mr. Grey. He threw off all the conventional delicacy of terms, which ordinarily mark the language of the aristocracy toward the royal blood, and gave vent to the voice of nature in the uncorrupted heart of man, which, when great occasions arise, puts down and silences every ordinary tone of ordinary intercourse. He boldly pronounced the conduct of the Prince, as derogatory to himself and dishonourable to the nation. Though the Prince then professed liberal principles, and the Whig party were about him, and expectant of power on his accession to the Crown; these things did not weigh for a moment with Mr. Grey against the interests of the people, and the righteous maintenance of moral truth and purity. The Prince, with a want of tact which sufficiently showed that with all the cleverness which his sycophants gave him credit for, he had not the mind to recognise the proud honour of still higher minds, had already requested Mr. Grey to deny for him to Parliament the fact of his marriage with Mrs. Fitzherbert,—a proposition which he rejected with scorn, and which more appropriately fell to the lot of Sheridan to accede to. And now, when Pitt talked of properly maintaining the dignity of

(Continued on page 66.)

A RAMBLE IN THE REALMS OF CHAT.

We are in a world of vicissitude—and Society, whether political or literary, or simply domestic, will still have its round of strange freaks. The galeties and the gravities mingle with odd satires upon each other, and what is the sorrowful pain of to day becomes, as it were by harlequinadism, the pracfi cal triumph of to-morrow. On the other hand, grievance adjusts itself into comedy, and so the world goes round

In France the shame of the massacre of the Dahra is still overwhelming the public journals with the exception of two, which attempt to justify it upon the doctrine of necessity. But, alas! there were no means in War cannot produce a condition of society against the hiding unresisting takers of refuge from hot and angry pursuit—against women and children - against eight hundred human beings without power to harm the wolves that had tracked them to their cave We can understand a necessity to drive them out and make them—easily as the alternative of immunity might have been effected—prisoners of war; but to devote them to a two days' slow fire —to forty eight hours of flame, smoke, and suff ication—to long perishing agonies, and the most heart-rending and horrible of all the triumphs of blood—is an act which is scarcely to be palliated without participation in the crime; while to speak of its necessity is to indicate a wretchedness of principle, an absence of nature, and the most reckless barbarism of mind.

How wonderfully has death reaped his harvest in this year of 45. The epoch is positively rendered eventful by its obituary—the passing away of the renowned or mighty of the age. The grave has literally yawned to the life of genius—and poets, philosophers, soldiers, and statesmen, have lent unto the common sickle, and been gathered in crowdful numbers under the Scythe of Time.

Last week an amiable poet and music monstrel—and since our last paper three members of our Lower Legislature, and two such Peers as Lord Canterbury and Earl Grey—one the long respected and able Speaker of the Commons of his country- the other a venerable patriot of the people—an orator a statesman, and the memorable Minister of Reform. We have elsewhere paid proper tribute to the memory of that conqueror.

At the Police Office, at Bow street, we have had a little domestic diversion. Mr. and Mrs. Caudle have been brought up for a street row, and the lady committed in default of being able to pay the fine. Mr. Jardine has actually imprisoned the "Curtain Lec ures," and we have not yet heard of Punch hailing them out. On the contrary, we find the following in the new of the day :—

Mr. Candle, whose loquacious letter half was committed for a month on Tuesday, attended to beg a mitigation of the fine, in order that Mrs. Caudle might be released from her personal confinement.

Mr. Jardine declined to entertain the application.

This co ncidental misfortune will be a source of delight to our country contemporaries.

There has been a slight ruffement of the smooth sea of literature, some body having put forward Mr. Ainsworth as the novelist, as the Editor of "Ainsworth's Magazine." As Mr. James is not the Editor, he has advertised a reward for the discovery of the person who asserted the fact So has Mr. Mortimer, the publisher of his new Romance in "Ainsworth's Magazine," commenced the very month of Mr. Ainsworth's removal to the "New Monthly." Now it would seem to the public- although they might have no right to set him down as Editor—that the name of Mr James was intended to replace the defalcation of the name which had seceded; and no doubt such, in enlisting it, was the publisher's intent. Mr. James, however, announces himself as a contributor to "Ainsworth's Magazine," wherein his own name leads, and to the "New Monthly," under Ainsworth, where he is only let. We confess we should have been better pleased to have found Mr. James in only one of the two periodicals. It looks like a man writing against himself, or as if an author of celebrity should pen articles of fact or fiction, not being political, at the same moment, in the Chronicle and the Times. The double engagement is not harmonious; it does not speak much for the spirit of literary independence and scrupulosity of principle in appropriating the "value that is set upon one's name;" and it is only plain and honest to say that the circumstance is unpleasant one, and calculated to impair the integrity of our common profession.

THE LATE J. AUGUSTINE WADE.

We last week appended, under feelings of true sorrow and most painful regret, a brief literary notice to the portrait of this gentle man, vered and distinguished composer. We have now to do a fairer justice to his memory than our hurried feelings would then permit, and to let Society know how much of the genius of the Gifted, and the amiability of the Good, passed away from our world of toil and trouble, when poor Wade breathed his last sigh. We who pen this our tribute to a fine Memory, knew Wade well, over a period of many, many years

We are unable to speak of his family—but he was an Irishman—a native, as we believe, of Dublin—whether, some two or three years past, he went, with a Musical Company, enrolled by Lavenu, and in the society of Lanza. We have heard that he has a sister living in the same city.

Wade commenced his young life of literature in Trinity College, Dublin, where he received his education. He was a sound mathematician, and a fine classic, retaining a good memory of the authors of ancient Greece and Rome, and in the last fond of quoting them—always with a graceful and peculiar aptitude—speaking, in his conversation or writing, in his works. He was also a better modern linguist than we ordinarily meet—a well-read French scholar—a tolerable Italian—and a smattering of German and Spanish; and, in other respects, was a person of rare accomplishment of mind—refinement of manners and almost to chivalry sentiments of heart.

His musical genius—the inherent instinct of his soul—was deep and brilliant; it was the highest of the many gifts which he derived from God. To this gen.us he early in life added, by dint of con amore study, the most profound and wide-spread musical learning. Solo living man had such qualifications for writing musical history and musical criticism, if he had chosen to enrich those two branches of the world's literature with the solid structures he had reared within his mind. But genius seldom stamps both learning and perseverance upon its works, and poor WADE was fitter for the song or the social circle, than the boldness and the toil required for giving the world permanent knowledge, and himself permanent renown

Quickly, however, he sprang into the life, breath, and exuberance of a present fame. He mixed in the musical circles of Dublin, and found himself at once understood—at once established His merits for a time as a musical city ; and at the head of every great musical movement, he led off life with a popularity as flattering to himself as it was creditable to the good taste of the community.

For a short period he travelled abroad ; and, soon pressed by invitations from all the finest musical spirits of Eng.and, he came to this country and found himself a mus cal lion in the Modern Babylon. Society never welcomed him. He took up his quarters at the. Saloman Hotel, and from one of its "stillest apartments," sent forth their musical inspiration into the drawing-rooms of fashion—flooded the evening parties and little family réunions of more domestic circles with beautiful melody wedded to winning words, and blending the poet and composer in the one oracle spoke with a voice of double evanescence which fascinated and was enjoyed at once. He shared with Harpur Bayley the palm of the hour—though when the latter fled to the salons of the noble, WADE sought the society of conviviality and the circle of kindred spirits, among whom he loved to walk and move. His "At me by Moonlight," was one of the thousand graceful stars of popularity which shot from the same galaxy, were the spoil of the organ grinders, and kept the streets alive

Suddenly the dynasty of the Italian Opera was changed, and Wade was destined to conduct the best music of the most severe audience in the world. He was appointed by Monck Mason, the then lessee, to the same high and honourable position which Costa now occupies with so much power and éclat. The good taste of the appointment was universally confessed and applauded. About the same time, Wade brought out a volume of poems, which met with the general approval of the press ; and, while all knew he was a first-rate musician, it was now admitted that he was a graceful and tend

The dynasty of the Opera again changed, and Wade soon began to discover in his own person that ability and stability are not always driven in the curricle He wanted the latter quality in the affairs of life. He was more than stable

He loved convivial society—plunged into a literary and musical happiness which he dreamily enjoyed, and sacrificed health and business to his momentary, paradise of the soul. He was an idle man in the making of wealth, when it might have been showered on him by a man always a diligent one in spending it, with the most prodigal generosity of genius.

Wade's services ceased at the Opera; and, after a short rest, in which his genius—more distinct and advanced, he was called upon by Warde, Egerton, and Abbett, to take the musical direction of the Victoria Theatre.

That undertaking did not prove prosperous, and Wade was gradually falling into difficulty, from which he never completely emerge.

The characteristics of Wade's muse of poetry were gracefulness, melancholy, sweetness, tenderness, and a love of nature. He was ever touching, but did not rise to power; and his vers'fi cation was consistently lyrical and pure.

As a musician, he was perfect in knowledge and in taste. His school of composition was the pure one of Dr. Arne, and the older school of English genius, with the introduction of more sprightliness and sparkle when his muse was pleased to play.

In musical appreciation he was enthusiastic to the last degree—a fervid inspiration dwelt in the man upon every musical theme—he loved every great genius —every true master of his art—every noble composition. He was, in truth, a child over genius; he worshipped it—ay, like an infant—and truly it was the mother to his own spirit.

His criticisms were ever acute and clear—well-judged, but sometimes too lenient—for gentleness was the atmosphere of his nature; he breathed love to all mankind, and could not bear to inflict a pang.

In temperament, he was melancholy, and fond of indulgence in sorrow that was often imaginary—and in reveries, in which he accustomed himself to clothe Poetry with Pain His mind wandered in the labyrinths of visionary thought—and he was latterly, at intervals, tearful, oppressed, and sad.

All he died poor in purse, with not one farthing to leave behind him—save, indeed, the right of publishing many poems and songs, which we should delight to see collected and published

His character may be thus summed up "Without the ambition to make his name endure long, he has a great genius, and, with his share of our ordinary frailties, he was a good man."

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

"Così Fan Tutte," "Lucrezia Borgia," and "Don Pasquale" have been the lyrical performances of the week at this theatre. The first of these operas, the revival of which we briefly noticed last week, proved a great treat to many of the older and more experienced opera votaries, who enjoy such music as this with a double pleasure—that which is the better merit of the music itself, and their thorough appreciation of a style which may now appear somewhat old fashioned and obsolete to the ears of the younger dilettanti, and that of the reminiscences of past days and past pleasures which its sounds awaken. That Mozart's music must in every case be worthy of the decent attention and admiration, and that a performance from time to time of one of this immortal composer's works is necessary, in the present state of musical composition, to maintain an even balance, and forward the advancement of a purer taste, cannot however be disputed by any judge of the art. In our opinion "Così Fan Tutte" is an opera worthy, in every respect, of the master mind from which it emanated, its only drawback being one of the most meaningless libretti that was ever written to mar the inspirations of a composer

The cast of this opera, as performed last week, was admirable, and the concerted pieces with which it abounds, were never given with greater effect. On Mario and Lablache falls the most arduous portions of the opera, and admirably did they acquit themselves. Mario, in the second act, displayed considerable improvement, and did full justice to the character he personated Of the lady singers, Madame Castellan was the one whose part called forth the greatest display of vocal power, and she sang delightfully; but on the whole we think Adler and Cesari than usual.

The part taken by Madame Rosel Cæcia was hardly equal to her abilities as a musician, though her powers as an actress were most satisfactorily called forth. It was on Saturday night that Carlotta Grisi made her last pirouette for the season before her London admirers, and though it will be hardly possible to feel her absence amidst such a number of pleasing attractions, it would be incourteous to this charming danseuse to omit rendering that tribute of praise to her talent which is so justly her due, and so universally bestowed.

"Lucrezia Borgia," performed on Tuesday night, was not a novelty; nor should we have anticipated having to say anything further on a subject on which we have already this season expatiated at much length, but its performance on Tuesday transcended all the previous efforts of general enthusiasm. The old fall justice to the character he personated Of the lady singers, Madame Castellan was the one whose part called forth the greatest display of vocal power, and she sang delightfully; but on the whole we think Adler and Cesari than usual.

The part taken by Madame Rosel Cæcia was hardly equal to her abilities as a musician, though her powers as an actress were most satisfactorily called forth. It was on Saturday night that Carlotta Grisi made her last pirouette for the season before her London admirers, and though it will be hardly possible to feel her absence amidst such a number of pleasing attractions, it would be incourteous to this charming danseuse to omit rendering that tribute of praise to her talent which is so justly her due, and so universally bestowed.

"Lucrezia Borgia," performed on Tuesday night, was not a novelty; nor should we have anticipated having to say anything further on a subject on which we have already this season expatiated at much length, but its performance on Tuesday transcended all the previous efforts of general enthusiasm. The old fall Justice to the character he personated Of the lady singers, Madame Castellan was the one whose part called forth the greatest display of vocal power, and she sang delightfully; but on the whole we think Adler and clearer

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

ROYAL ASSENT.—The Royal assent was given by Commission to no less than 93 bills, chiefly railway bills. It is unnecessary to enumerate them, as the third readings have been noticed in our Parliamentary reports.

PENSIONS OFFICIAL AND MILITARY.—The Duke of Richmond presented a petition signed by the veteran officers who had served in the Peninsular campaigns, praying their lordships to recommend to her Majesty to bestow on them some consideration for their military services.—The Duke of Wellington, while fully admitting the brilliant and most important services of the Peninsular army, deprecated the interference of their lordships in a matter which often unfortunately was the prerogative of the Crown alone. He exceptulated the various rewards the Peninsular army had received, and said that the prayer of the officers who petitioned the house could not be granted. It was out, as a matter of equal justice, likewise giving medals to every sailor and soldier who fought during the French revolutionary war.

THE IRISH COLLEGES BILL.—Lord STANLEY moved the second reading of this bill, explaining the objects of it, and contending for the necessity of giving all creeds the advantage of academical institutions.—The Earl of SHREWSBURY condemned the measure as unsuited to the wants of Ireland, or to the wishes of the Roman Catholic Clergy, and urged the Government to withdraw the bill, at least for this session.—Lord BROUGHAM eulogised the measure; the Earl of CARNARVON opposed it; the Marquis of DOWNSHIRE expressed his general approbation, but suggested improvements Lord CLIFFORD opposed the bill, and moved as an amendment, that the second reading should take place that day six months.—Lord BEAUVALE and the Bishop of NORWICH spoke in favour of the bill.—The Duke of NEWCASTLE disapproved of the bill altogether, and deeply regretted that any Government of this country should have introduced such a measure.—The amendment was negatived, and the second reading was carried without a division.—The house did not adjourn till past midnight.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

At the morning sitting the Poor Law (Scotland) Bill underwent some discussion, but, after a division, the third reading was carried

THE BOARD OF ORDNANCE AND THE SOUTH-EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY. At the sitting in the evening Mr HAWES put some questions relative to the Royal ordnance property on the subject of Sandgate, being in railway shares. Sir ROBERT PEEL, in reply, stated that the Government had taken into its consideration the report of the committee on the petition and allegations of the South Eastern Railway Company; and that, as a result, it had been his painful duty to advise her Majesty to accept the tendered resignations of Captain Biddero and Mr. Bonham; that the Master-General of the Ordnance had also dismissed Mr Burnett, the late Solicitor to the Board; and that the Home Secretary had written a letter to Mr Wray, the Receiver General of the Metropolitan Police, cautioning him that he should in future confine himself to matters connected with his official duties.—Capt. BOLDERO entered into some explanations upon the subject. He denies that there was any ground for the imputations thrown upon his character, either in his public or private capacity, and said he had tendered his resignation solely because the report of the Committee might tend to impair his usefulness to the public service.

NEW ZEALAND.—On the motion for going into Committee of Supply, Mr C. BULLER drew attention to the present state of New Zealand. He recounted the events connected with the destruction of Kororarika, in the Bay of Islands; awarded Heki very great praise for the privations and conduct he had exhibited in his warfare, and pictured the dangerous condition of the settlers, from the excited feelings of the natives, flushed by the plunder, upwards of £6,000, they had acquired, and animated by their easy victory. The settlement of Wellington, with from 4000 to 5000 colonists, who had taken out with them property to the extent of £2,000,000, was surrounded by at least 4000 natives, who were kept in check by only fifty soldiers—the rest being drawn off to protect Auckland. He threw the responsibility of this state of things on the Government: for Lord Stanley had brought about that calamity, a war of races Mr C. Buller urged the Government to change its policy towards the Colony, without which he said it was useless to have recalled Captain Fitzroy. He then strongly blamed Lord Stanley, and said he would not rest on his amendment "thimble rigging," but it was analogous to "ring dropping." After describing the differences between the New Zealand Company and the Government, or rather Lord Stanley, Mr C. Buller contended that the spirit which still animated the Colonial office was inimical to the peace, prosperity, and security of a colony so important as the one in question; and, after saying that he could not possibly have any party object in view, he concluded by moving "That this house regards with regret and apprehension the state of affairs in New Zealand: and that those feelings have originated by the want of any sufficient evidence of a change in the policy which has led to such disastrous results."—Mr. HOPE (Under Secretary for the Colonies) went into minute particulars, in order to show that Lord Stanley was not open to the charge of error, and in fair dealing in his intercourse with the directors of the New Zealand Company, and read extracts from letters, to show that the arrival of troops from Sydney had produced confidence at Auckland, a portion of these reinforcements having been despatched for the protection of Wellington. The most recent intelligence led them to believe that a general combination of the native tribes was exceedingly improbable. He then entered into the negotiations of Lord John Russel, when he was in the Colonial office, recognised the native title to their lands, which was subsequently carried out by the treaty of Waitangi; and the object of Lord Stanley, who could not possibly have any hostility towards the Company, was to maintain good faith with the natives, and from this he was not to be driven, in order to adopt a policy of confidence and application.—Mr RADCLIFFE detended at length the conduct and affairs of New Zealand, deprecated the treaty of Waitangi, and called upon the Government to annul it.—The ATTORNEY GENERAL went over the legal details of the question, in order to show that the New Zealand Company had been acting in a purely commercial spirit, had originally moved at their own risk, in defiance of the Government, and had not established a valid title to the lands which they had acquired, and that was the origin of the late strife between it and the Government, which was bound to protect the natives.—Mr. LABOUCHERE defended the Colonial Government of the Whig Administration, and said he would uphold the treaty of Waitangi, in its relation to construction; but there was a higher question involved—that of the means to be taken for the safety of a great and important colony.—After speeches from Sir R. INGLIS and Mr ANSTEY, the debate was adjourned.

JEWISH DISABILITIES BILL.—On the motion that the Jewish Disabilities Bill be read a third time, Sir R. INGLIS moved that it be read a third time that day three months.—The house divided—

For the third reading	..	..	..	44
Against it	..	..	..	11
Majority	..	..	..	—33

The bill was then passed.

The house sat til a quarter past two o'clock in the morning.

HOUSE OF LORDS. TUESDAY.

ANOTHER CASE OF BREACH OF PRIVILEGE.—Lord BROUGHAM complained of an attack reported in the Times newspap r to have been made upon him by Mr F. French, in the course of the debate upon the cases of Mr Sheehan and Mr. Holdane, in the House of Commons. Mr. French was said to have charged him with having suppressed exculpatory evidence in the committee on the fraudulent transactions connected with the Dublin and Galway and Galway Bull, and while having held secret communications with hostile parties; and these charges were said to be accompanied by strong personal language directed at the noble and learned lord. Those charges were, he contended, foul, libelous, slanderous, and a gross breach of the privileges of the house. The facts of the case were these. The Standing Orders Committee of the House of Commons had reported against the Dublin and Galway Railway Bill, but Mr. French had induced the house to recind the resolution of the Committee, and to permit the bill to be proceeded with. It afterwards appeared, said the noble lord, that Mr. French was one of the company the Board of Directors of which were resolved to make considerable sums by trafficking in shares, and no doubt gratifying their patriotic feelings at the same time. An inquiry was, however, instituted upon the motion of a Mr. Pym, by a Committee of their colleagues; and it then appeared that of 970 applications for shares in the compa nies 111 had been accompanied by references, and inquiry having been made into those of these 111, no less than fourteen were found to be fraudulent, upon which further search was abandoned, upon the principle, he supposed, that if they went further they would fare worse. The gravamen of the evidence which was charged with suppressing, was that of Mr. Joseph Parkes, the attorney, who, however, could only speak to the general practices of railway companies; while the secretary to the London and York line, a witness whose examination he had suggested, proved that the practices on the Dublin and Galway line were perfectly the reverse of the course adopted on his own. The noble lord concluded by moving that the course pursued towards Captain Boldero and Mr. Bonham, while such practices were tolerated as those to which he had adverted. The attack attributed to Mr. French he was bound to believe to be a mistake, for that honourable gentleman was incapable of such conduct. In the other morning papers to have been inaudible, and he could not conceive that the House of Commons would have passed without notice so gross a violation of privilege, if such warning remarks of the learned members of the House of Commons that privilege would not protect them in printing their speeches, and newspapers that the law would punish them for publishing libelous attacks, even though spoken in Parliament, if the matter be not in the hands of the house.—After some remarks from the Earls of BESBOROUGH and WICKLOW, the latter of whom suggested that the printer and the reporter of the Times should be called to the bar, the further consideration of the subject, on the suggestion of the Duke of WELLINGTON, who considered he case to be a grave one, was postponed till Thursday.

The Irish Colleges Bill went through committee, and the house adjourned at eight o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

At the morning sitting, the chief subject of discussion was the Lunatic Asylum Bill.

THE RAJA OF SATTARA.—In the evening Mr. HUME, whose motion stood first on the list, moved "An humble address to her Majesty, to direct inquiry into the alleged charges against Pertaub Sheaon, late Raja of Sattara; and against Ballajee Penil Natoo, who assisted Colonel Ovans at the Court of Sattara."—Mr EMERSON TENNENT opposed the motion, on the ground that any attempt to re open the case would be injurious to the ad ministration of public affairs in India.—Mr. Williams, Mr Hogg, Sr Edward Co ebrook, Mr Wakley, and Mr Bingham Baring joined in the debate, and after a reply from Mr. Hume, the motion was negatived without a division.

REDUCTION OF THE DUTIES ON BUTTER AND CHEESE.—Mr. EWART then moved for his motion for the Reduction of the Duties on Butter and Cheese. He contended that much practical benefit would be conferred by a reduction of the duty, which he also urged on the general principles of free trade and economy.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER objected to the motion on economy.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER objected to the motion on the ground, that the reduction proposed would not afford satisfactory. He would therefore recommend to his hon. friend to withdraw his motion, which he did.—Mr. MACKINNON consented to do so, on the understanding that the Government would appoint a Committee to inquire into the subject.

The Small Debts Bill (No. 3) went through Committee, and was ordered to be reported.

RAILWAY BILLS.—Mr. B DENISON said the select Committee appointed to inquire into the merits of the London and York Railway Bill, had come to a decision, and with the exception of two branches, to Wakefield and Sheffield, the Committee declared that the whole bill was proved. He had now to make an application to the house to divide the London and York Railway Bill into two or more bills, so as that that part of the bill which had been approved of might be separated from that which was still open to discussion. After some discussion, however, the motion was withdrawn.—The London and Croydon Railway Enlargement Bill and the Manchester and Leeds Railway Bill were read a third time and passed

LUNATICS BILL.—This bill was read a third time and passed

THE CASE OF PRIVILEGE: Lord BROUGHAM and Mr F FRENCH.—At the evening sitting, Mr FRENCH said that he saw in the papers of that morning a statement alleged to have been made by an individual in the London Post, complaining that a breach of the privileges of this house had been committed by the publication of a speech in the Times of Tuesday attributed to him, and an assertion that, in point of fact, that speech was never spoken at all. Many honourable members could bear him out when he said that every single word reported in that speech was spoken by him in that house. He stood by the noble lord the member for London at the time; the right honourable baronet at the head of the Government, and the right honourable gentleman the Secretary of State for the Home Department were in their places at the time, and he believed they would vouch for the report as correct. From long practice, the individual in question could write his weapons with great dexterity; but he (Mr. French) had yet to learn that those who he attacked were not allowed to wield the same weapons in their own defence. For his part, he neither courted nor feared that individual. He declined, however, to enter into a war of abuse with him, for such a war was not consistent either with the feelings as a man, or with his station as a member of the Legislature Mr French then referred to the project of the Great Irish Western Railway, and the manner in which it was got up, and concluded by stating that as the peculiarly offensive expression which made him animadvert on the individual in question, in the first instance, was discovered by him, he (Mr French had not a breath in saying that it at once withdrew his personal attack, and regretted having made it, or saying anything which would give pain to the noble lord in question, or any other individual. After a few words from Mr CLIVE, the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER expressed a hope that the observations which had just fal en from Mr. F French would allay the feelings of irritation entertained by Lord Brougham. He suggested to hon members, in consequence of what had just occurred, the propriety of not violating in future that rule of the house which prohibited so comment on the conduct of individual members of the House of Lords, either in their political or judicial character.

THE ADJOURNED DEBATE ON NEW ZEALAND The order of the day for going into Committee of Supply having been read, Captain ROUS resumed the debate on New Zealand. He recommended that a motion should be pursued, not only with respect to past differences, but also as to the future government of the colony.—Mr. WARD said he had no wish whatever to treat the question as a party one. In fact, he regarded the question rather as a colonial than as a national one. He pressed on Sir R. Peel the necessity of pointing out his own expressed convictions, and disregarding the obstinacy, aggravated by the petulance of Lord Stanley, he trusted no less than 10,000 British settlers and 100,000 brave and active aborigines the benefit a of Government by all questions of dispute would be satisfactorily settled —A discussion ensued, in which Mr G Palmer, Sir C Napier, Lord Ingestre, and Mr Hawes took part—Sir R. PEEL said he believed that Lord Stanley was anxious to act in the best spirit towards the New Zealand Company, so far as he could do so consistently with duty to the Crown and with good faith towards the natives, and the Government were willing, and, indeed, determined, to afford the Company all the assistance in their power, giving the most liberal interpretation possible to their contract) but they were also determined not to assure to the Company the possession of a given amount of land in certain localities without instituting a previous inquiry into the validity of their titles, and without the consideration of the claims of the natives. Our future policy, he contended, should be the protection and the conciliation of the natives. They should beware of imitating in New Zealand the conduct of the French in Algeria. Between Lord Stanley and himself there was the most perfect identity of opinion; they were both equally desirous of promoting the future prosperity of the Company, and he could not sanction the idea that there was any difference between himself and the noble lord, who, with so much industry and unexampled ability filled the office of Colonial Secretary.—After a short speech from Mr. ROEBUCK, Lord J. RUSSELL insisted upon the necessity of a change of policy towards New Zealand. A division then took place. The numbers were:—

For Mr. C. Buller's proposal	..	..	..	84
For going into Committee of Supply	..	..	..	150
Majority against Mr. C. Buller's proposal	..	..	..	66

The Committee of Supply was then postponed, and some other business being disposed of, the house adjourned at a quarter past one o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

THE DUBLIN AND GALWAY RAILWAY BILL.—Earl BATHURST reported from the Select Committee on the Dublin and Galway Railway Bill that they had come to the conclusion that a systematic fraud had been used for the purpose of obtaining the necessary number of signatures to the subscription list; that no attention had been paid to the proper distribution of the letters of allotment, unauthorised names had been inserted in the contract, and false addresses given, and packets of letters sent to country postmasters for the purpose of being returned to London for applications for shares. The Committee were unanimous in opinion on the Select Committee that the resolution made during the last session in the amount of deposits had had the effect of facilitating the commission of fraud. Under all the circumstances, the Committee had thought it their duty to report the matter to the house without further directions from the house. (Hear, hear.) The Earl of BESBOROUGH gave notice that he should to-morrow move that the bill be not further proceeded with. (Hear, hear.)

BREACH OF PRIVILEGE.—Lord BROUGHAM intimated that after the explanation which had been given in the other house relative to the breach of privilege complained of, he should not trouble their lordships further than to commend their lordships not to proceed further in the matter. It remained open to him, however, to prosecute the Times for publishing a libel, if he thought proper to do so, and the Morning Chronicle, for the article of which he complained was verbatim in both papers

THE NEW HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT.—Lord BROUGHAM moved that an humble address be presented to her Majesty, praying that her Majesty will be graciously pleased to give the necessary directions for having the new Houses of Parliament ready for their lordships' reception at the beginning of the next session.—The motion, however, the motion was rejected by 40 to 16.—Adjourned at eight o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

THE COAL TRADE (PORT OF LONDON) BILL.—The house discussed this bill in the morning sitting.—Sir J DUKE moved a clause allowing a draw back upon the exportation of coals under certain circumstances, but upon a division, the clause was rejected by 37 to 24. The bill was subsequently read a third time and passed.

SMALL DEBTS BILL. The report on this bill was brought up and received, and the amendments were agreed to. The bill was ordered to be read a third time on Monday next.

In the evening, the Church Building Acts Amendment Bill went through Committee.

THE SOUTH EASTERN RAILWAY (Branch to Deal and Extension of the South Eastern, Canterbury, Ramsgate, and Margate Railway) Bill was read a third time and passed.

THE LONDON AND YORK RAILWAY.—Mr. B DENISON moved that it be an Instruction to the committee upon Group X of Railway Bills, that they have power to divide the London and York railway Bill into two or more bills, if they think it fit, and that they have power to report from time to time, according as they conclude their inquiries upon certain portions of the line.—The motion was agreed to.

Nothing else of importance occurred up to the adjournment, which did not take place till a late hour.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

ANOTHER ALLEGED CASE OF PRIVILEGE.—Lord BROUGHAM presented a petition which concerned the privileges of the house. The petitioner, James Thomas Russell, of Percy street, Bedford-square, solicitor, complained of certain evidence given by John Pope, George Leadbitter, and Mr. M'Culloch, before the Gaming Committee, whereby his character had been seriously injured, and praying their lordships to give him an opportunity of vindicating his character from the aspersions which had been cast upon it. The noble and learned lord said he thought the best course would be to move that the petition be laid on the table, and he should then give notice that early next session he should move that the petition be referred to a committee.—The petition was laid on the table.

THE DUBLIN AND GALWAY RAILWAY.—The Earl of BESBOROUGH called attention to the report presented by the Committee on the Dublin and Galway Railway Bill. The Company had presented a petition, stating that they were ready to put into the contract deed a sufficient number of solvent names, but he thought the case ought not to be passed over without some mark of their lordships' reprobation, and he therefore moved that the bill be further considered that day three month.—A debate arose upon the subject, which was ultimately adjourned till Monday.

Some discussion took place upon the Pauper Lunatics Bill, the result of which was, that it was decided the Bill should be considered by a Committee of the whole house in preference to a Select Committee.

Several bills were advanced a stage, and the house adjourned at seven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

The Speaker took the chair at twelve o'clock.

The following bills passed through Committee, and the reports were brought up and ordered to be received on Monday:—The Customs Laws Repeal Bill, the Customs Management Bill, the Customs Duties Bill, the Warehousing of Goods Bill, the British Vessels Bill, the Shipping and Navigation Bill, the Trade of British Possessions Abroad Bill, the Customs Bounties and Allowances Bill, the Isle of Man Trade Bill, the Smuggling Prevention Bill, the Customs Regulation Bill.

The house then resolved itself into Committee on the Stock in Trade Bill, the several clauses of which were agreed to, the report brought up, and ordered to be received on Monday next

The report on the Documentary Evidence Bill was brought up and agreed to, and the bill ordered to be read a third time on Monday.

The report of the Assignment of Terms Bill was brought up and agreed to, and the bill ordered to be read a third time on Monday next.

The house then adjourned until five o'clock

When the house re assembled, the Bolton and Leigh, Kenyon and Leigh Junction, North Union, Liverpool, and Manchester, and Grand Junction Railway Loan Bill, was further considered, and, after some discussion, was read a third time and passed

A debate ensued upon the subject of the Scotch Church, in the course of which Sir J GRAHAM deplored the differences in the Scotch Church, and said the Government was very desirous that they should be healed.

LIGHT SOVEREIGNS.—Mr. HUME called attention to the loss the public had sustained by light sovereigns, and moved an address to her Majesty, praying for the appointment of a public officer, whose duty it would be to receive them at their real value.—Mr. S SPOONER, in seconding the motion, entered into long disquisition upon the currency.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER defended the course taken by the Government, in calling in light sovereigns, and said a memorial had been presented to it, signed by almost every London banker, complaining of the depreciation of the currency, and calling upon it to remedy the evil.—After a discussion, the house divided, when Mr. Hume's motion was rejected by 61 to 34.—Nothing else of interest occurred up to the adjournment, which took place at a late hour.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL CHIT-CHAT.

SUDDEN DEATH OF MR. BUTLER, THE ACTOR.—Letters from Manchester mention the death of Mr. Butler, the tragedian, on the evening of Thursday week. Mr. Butler, it appears, was engaged to deliver a course of lectures on Shakspeare's plays, at the Athenæum, in that town. Wednesday was the first of the series. "Hamlet" being to be play selected; but, scarcely had he concluded reading the fourth act, when he became so seriously affected with the malady which of late years has made so great an inroad upon his constitution, that he was forced to promptly conveyed home, and attended by his medical advisers. Not the slightest symptoms of recovery were perceptible afterwards, and on this following evening (Thursday), about half-past seven, as he was proceeding across his bed-room, to lie down, supported by Mrs Butler, he suddenly fell back in her arms, and, without the slightest groan or sigh, expired.

ENGLISH OPERA.—Exciting ground as a musical nation. There are at this moment four British artistes "starring" in Italy, whose names all begin with a B, namely, Miss Birch, Miss Bassano, Miss Bingley, and Mrs. H. R. Bishop. Mr. Balfe is engaged to write a new opera for Mr. Lumley at Her Majesty's Theatre in the early part of the next season.

[illegible] Venice" will be brought out at Cassel, on the 10th of August, and is also in rehearsal at Florence, under the direction of the composer, Sig. Verdi, and at Naples. Donizetti is engaged to write three operas for Paris—two for the Italiens, and one for the Académie Royale. Meudelssohn's music to "Œdipus" will be brought out in Germany, and also Auber's last production, "Le Domino Noir" (the Minstrel), by Labane, will be the earliest novelty at the Grand Opera, in Paris. Halevy has a comic opera ready for the Salle Favart, but stipulates for the engagement of Duprez only, as the prima donna. Fadini's new opera has been quite successful in Italy.

ARTOT, THE VIOLINIST.—This celebrated violinist is now no more He expired at Fontainebleau, near Paris, on the 8th of July, of consumption, in the early age of 30, having been born in Brussels, in 1815. He was a pupil of the brothers, at the Paris Conservatoire, and gained great fame in his tours in Belgium, Germany, and Russia. He had made a professional spelling tour with Count Damoreau, to North and South America, where he met with brilliant success.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

LOSS OF AN INDOR'S LIFE BY LUCIFER MATCHES.—On Tuesday an inquest was held before Mr. Bedford, at the Duke of Ormond's Head, Story's-gate, on the body of Harriet Probert, aged 14, who was burnt to death. ELIZABETH COBBETT, one of the deceased, stated that they lived with their parents, at No. 4, Rodney street, Westminster. Her unfortunate sister had been an idiot from her birth, and being unable to walk, could only get about the room by crawling from chair to chair, but she was scarcely ever left alone. On Saturday last, Mrs. Kent, a neighbour, sent out that the deceased was screaming, and on going to the room she was found sitting in the middle of the floor, with her clothes burning furiously. She could not speak, and made no signs, but was crying. A carpet was thrown over her, and the flames extinguished; after which she was conveyed to the Westmin-ter Hospital. There was no fire in the room, but she had got a box of lucifer matches from a shelf, with which she had evidently been playing, as the matches were strewed about the floor, and the box was by her side. Mr. Penny, the resident apothecary of the hospital, stated that the deceased was extensively burnt over the body and extremities, particularly the arms and legs. She was sensible when admitted, but though everything was done that medical skill could suggest, the case was hopeless from the first, and she died on the following afternoon. A verdict was returned of "Accidentally burnt to death by lucifer matches"

FATAL STEAM-BOAT ACCIDENT.—On Tuesday, an accident, unhappily attended by the loss of three lives, occurred on the river Thames, off St. Katharine's Docks, by the upsetting of a small boat, containing at the time four men belonging to the Caledonia schooner, of Pembroke, lying in St. Katharine's Docks. About half-past ten o'clock, the Caledonia, having discharged her ballast in the act of hauling in the anchor, the Prince of Wales and the Eclipse, Margate steamers, passed at full speed, one on either side of the tier of vessels. The boat was struck on one side by the paddle wheel, before she could right, she was struck on the other, and completely turned over, the whole of the persons in the boat being immersed in the water. One of the four fellows succeeded in catching hold of the mooring chain, and was saved; the other three clung to each other, and sa1 perished. The bodies were found in about three quarters of an hour

SUICIDE BY HEART IN PICCADILLY.—On Wednesday evening, Mr. John Knowles, a gentleman 38 years of age, was walking through the posts fronting the gates of Hyde Park corner, when he was observed, on reaching the centre railing opening Apsley House, to stagger and fall to the ground. A policeman ran to his assistance and he was carried to St. George's Hospital, where, in a few minutes, he expired.

FUNERAL OF EARL GREY.—The funeral of this lamented peer was to take place to-day (Saturday).

RAILWAY SPECULATORS.—The Times gives the following graphic account of the effect of the decision of the Committee on the London and York Railway Bill on Wednesday:—"At two o'clock the doors were opened, and a large audience of counsel, shareholders, solicitors, speculators, brokers, and idlers came tumbling into the room, till brought up short by the barrier, where the mass was condensed into a very impatient, hot, and anxious compass. The ingredients of which entered a sort of feu de se hatte for two mortal hours. After a great number of false alarms, and consequent 'sensations,' occasioned by the opening of the side door, the Committee at last came in. Their appearance, Lord Courtenay, the chairman, leading them, with Mr. Darby, Mr P. Scrope, and Mr. C. B. Wall. The Chairman, amid the most profound silence, then announced the following important decision. He was instructed to communicate to the parties that the Committee have come to the resolution that the preamble of the London and York is proved. (Stentorian cries of 'Bravo! hurra!' stamping of feet and umbrellas, clapping of hands, and a fearful struggle at the door between about twenty to en, each of whom wanted to get out first, followed this announcement.) Quitting, continued his Lordship, after several cries of 'O der' from the Committee—omitting the branches to Wakefield and to Sheffield, which we have thought it right to postpone, in consequence of there being other plans, which may be considered as competing lines, before them. (Great confusion about the door, and a renewed expression of delight from the successful shareholders, many of whom vanished incontinently, before the Chairman could give vent to his opinion that their conduct was 'exceedingly indecent.')"

THE LATE EARL GREY.

(Continued from page 57.)

the Prince, Mr. Grey frankly undertook to tell the Minister in what dignity that really consisted. "The best dignity and the truest greatness," said Mr. Grey, "are to be found in integrity of character, without which no respect for rank or greatness will long prevail. Let him retire to a situation, where he may, by reflection, qualify himself for the duties of his future station. I yield not," he added, "to the right honourable gentleman—I yield to no man in this house or out of it, in respect for the due power and dignity of the Crown. I am as ready to support the real splendour of the Royal Family as any slave of office, or sycophant of a court, but I think there is more true dignity in showing a heart alive to the distresses of millions than in costly trappings which encumber Royalty without adorning it. Is it, I ask, for the Legislature, for this house, which pretends to be the representative of the people, to set the example of indulging and encouraging extravagance, at the moment when the prevailing fashion of prodigality among persons of fortune and station is rapidly deteriorating their character by destroying their independence, and rendering them the contempt of the people by making them the tools of a court?"

In January, 1806, Mr. Pitt died, and Mr. Fox was called to the administration of public affairs. Mr. Grey, who, by the elevation of his father to the peerage, had become Lord Howick, was appointed First Lord of the Admiralty, with a seat in the Cabinet. In October following, the country was deprived of the services of Mr. Fox. Lord Howick then became leader of the House of Commons and Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. The abolition of the slave trade was proposed by this Administration. The Sovereign took alarm at the attempt of the Ministers to remove some of the existing disabilities on Roman Catholics, and they were dismissed. Parliament was dissolved. Lord Howick, not choosing to contest the county of Northumberland, took his seat for Appleby. The death of his father, which took place shortly after, removed him to the Upper House of Parliament. His lordship now took the title of Earl Grey.

For several years after his succession to the peerage, Earl Grey took no very prominent part in public affairs. The abortive attempt of the Prince Regent, in 1812, to induce him and Lord Grenville to join the Perceval Administration, illustrated the integrity of his principles and the consistency of his conduct. The tragical death of Perceval, who was assassinated by Bellingham shortly afterwards, again opened a path for Lord Grey to place and power. There were, however, difficulties, and the noble lord did not take office.

The retirement of Lord Liverpool, in 1827, placed Mr. Canning at the helm of affairs. Lord Grey declined to support that statesman. His lordship, after the death of Mr. Canning, in a speech on the second reading of the Roman Catholic Relief Bill, in 1829, justified himself for having declined to extend to the deceased statesman's administration his active support

Lord Grey took a prominent part in the trial of Queen Caroline, before the House of Peers, and distinguished himself in the debates upon that occasion. After this the life of Earl Grey was passed principally in the bosom of his family until the sudden termination of the Wellington Administration, in 1830, brought him forth from his retirement to assume the reins of government.

During the four years which he continued in office, he carried Parliamentary Reform and the Abolition of Slavery. Since his retirement from office, in 1834, he has taken no part in politics, but has resided principally at Howick, with his family. It is almost impossible for us, his contemporaries, to take a calm and dispassionate view of the career of Earl Grey, but his bitterest political opponents admit that his was essentially a great mind. An elegant orator, a conscientious and high-minded statesman, he carries with him to the grave the veneration of his friends and the respect of those to whom he was politically opposed.

With respect to one defect in his character—his pride, and a coldness of personal demeanour—a recent writer well remarks:—"It is the instinctive interest of supple mediocrity to decry all independence of character as personal pride." That vulgar pride, of which alone vulgar characters understand the nature the pride in externals of wealth or station—is ascribed by them to men whose minds are the farthest from any such feeling. Thus Pitt was supposed excessively proud; but, as Wilberforce says of him, 'He was a very little proud, and very shy.' Thus the aristocratic pride of Lord Grey has always been a sort of common-place against him, and against the party, which felt it so long an honour to have him at its head. We can only say—when the pride which dictated the most marked passages of his life—when that pride shall be extinct in England, all will have perished by which England is distinguished in the most honourable sense from the lands which have adopted her free institutions. The preference of individual character and conviction to power and place; and the consequent estimation of public men by a standard more elevated than that of temporary position, is pre-eminently English. There is no such notion in England as that expressed by degrees, applied to loss of power—no such idea as that of consoling with a disgraced minister, on the occasion of dismissal.

"This was the life of Lord Grey. The sycophants of the Many—a class no whit more respectable than the sycophants of the One, or the Few—may, if they will, persevere in denying him all honour for his last great measure, which was his first great motion in Parliament. What they cannot deny him is the clear stamp of independence on every word and act at every crisis, personal and political, from his entrance on the public arena to his exit from it. This was the Whig pride so often stigmatised—this was the unbending attitude, equally offensive to the whole courtier tribe, who were ready to rally round their Prince, under any Perceval or Liverpool banner—leaving any imperial interest an 'open question' and to the whole rabble tribe who hallooed after Burdett, and clamoured for Annual Parliaments."

His constitutional principles, by which he limited his obedience to the Crown, and upon which he often founded his opposition to it, are well expressed in the words of Cowper:—

"We too are friends to loyalty. We love
The King who loves the law, respects his bounds,
And lives content within them. Him we serve
Freely, and with delight, who leaves us free:
But recollecting still that he is man,
We trust him not too far. King tho' he be,
And King in England too, he may be weak
And vain enough to be ambitious still;
May exercise amiss his proper pow'rs,
Or covet more than freemen choose to grant;
Beyond that mark is treason. He is our's,
T' administer, to guard, to adorn the state;
But not to warp or change it. We are his,
To serve him nobly in the common cause;
True to the death, but not to be his slaves."

The death of this aged peer took place on Thursday evening week, at the family residence, Howick Hall, Northumberland, where he had been staying for the last few months with the Countess and some of the junior members of the family. The venerable nobleman was in his 82nd year. Some time since the state of the noble Earl's health was such as excited the worst fears of the members of his family; but after a short struggle he rallied, and was once more enabled, though only for a short time, to join the family. His illness was owing to an attack of paralysis. He continued in rather an improved state up to the 12th inst., when he again appeared to droop. On Wednesday he grew considerably worse, and his extreme age, coupled with the violence of the attack, dispelled all further hopes of recovery, and he gradually sank; his medical advisers being still in attendance upon him until a late hour on the Thursday night, when he expired in the presence of the Countess, Viscount Howick (now Earl Grey), the Hon. Captain Grey, and some of the noble Earl's domestics.

The late Earl Grey (being then Charles Grey, Esq.), was married by special license at the house of his father-in-law, in Hertford-street, May-fair, on the 18th of November, 1794, to Mary Elizabeth, only daughter of the Right Hon. William Brabazon Ponsonby, afterwards first Lord Ponsonby. Her Ladyship still survives, and the issue of their marriage amounted to no fewer than sixteen children, of whom six were daughters, and ten sons. Two of Lord Grey's sons are in the army, two in the navy, two in the church, and two (including the present Earl) not engaged in any profession. Four of his daughters are living and eight of his sons: of the latter, only four are married; of the former, four also were married—the eldest of these was the late Countess Dowager of Durham. The youngest of his children is now twenty-six years of age.

The following are their names:—

Henry George Viscount Howick, M.P., born December 28, 1802; married, August 9, 1832, Maria, youngest daughter of the late Sir Joseph Copley, Bart., of Sprotborough.

THE GREY COLUMN, NEWCASTLE.

Charles, born March 15, 1804, M.P., a Lieutenant-Colonel in the Army; married, July 26, 1836, Carolina Eliza, eldest daughter of the late Sir Thomas Harvie Farquhar, Bart.

Frederick William, born August 23, 1805; Captain in the Royal Navy.

George, born May 16, 1809, Captain in the Royal Navy.

John, M.A., born March 6, 1812; in holy orders; married, July, 1836, Lady Georgiana Elizabeth Charlotte Hervey, second daughter of the Marquis of Bristol.

Francis Richard, born March 31, 1813; in holy orders; married Lady Elizabeth Howard, fifth daughter of the Earl of Carlisle.

Henry Cavendish, born October 16, 1814; Captain in the Army.

William George, born February 15, 1819.

Louisa Elizabeth, married, December 9, 1816, to J. G. Lambton, Earl of Durham, deceased.

Elizabeth, married, May 13, 1826, to J. C. Bultcel, Esq., of Fleet House, county Devon, who lately died.

Caroline, married, January 15, 1827, to the Hon George Barrington, Captain in the Royal Navy, who died June 2, 1835.

Georgiana, unmarried.

Mary, married, July 30, 1829, to Charles Wood, Esq., M.P., eldest son of Sir F L. Wood, Bart.

HOWICK HALL.

HOWICK HALL.

Howick was a manor of the Muschamp barony, in Henry the Third's reign, and afterwards engrafted upon that of William de Vescy, of whom it was held by Adam Rybaud, by service of one knight's fee. Huntercombe, one of the representatives of the Muschamps, however, died seized of half of it, either in 1313 or 1317. Sir Ralph Grey, of Chillingham, held a mediety of it in the reign of Henry the Eighth; and the whole of it was possessed by his descendant, John Grey, Esq., in 1701, whose son, Henry, was created a baronet in 1746; died in 1759; and was succeeded in his title and property by his eldest son Henry, at whose decease, in 1808, Howick descended to his nephew Charles Grey, Earl Grey, and Viscount Howick, who for many years distinguished himself for his uniform opposition to Mr. Pitt's Administration; and, as the first Lord of the Admiralty, became a colleague in Government with Mr. Fox. The "little pile," or tower of Howick, mentioned by Leland, "was entered," says Wallis, "by a flight of steps, and was a fair structure, to the end of which, the first Sir Henry Grey built a large handsome house, and elegant offices." This pile was taken down in 1787, when the present noble structure was commenced. Payne and other architects gave designs for it; but it was chiefly executed under the direction of Mr. Newton, of Newcastle. The wings are joined to the centre by two additions, the fronts of which form the area of a quadrant; new gateways made; the approaches altered; and the lawn broken into a better style. It stands within a mile of the sea. The church, which is on the margin of a brook, that skirts the lawn, was built by the first baronet, though he was not its patron, and is an edifice of great neatness without a tower, flat roofed, and in the Greek style.

THE GREY COLUMN

Was erected a few years since, at the north end of Grey-street, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, in commemoration of the late Earl's patriotic services.

DEATHS OF THREE MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT.—We have to record the deaths of no less than three members of Parliament, Lord Bateman, the member for Northampton; Mr. E. B. Clive, the member for Hereford; and Mr. Alexander Murray, member for the Stewartry of Kirkcudbright. Lord Bateman died between six and seven o'clock on Tuesday morning, at the family residence in Portman-square. We learn that the noble lord had been rather unwell since the 13th inst., but not so seriously indisposed as to create the least apprehension as to his recovery. On Sunday afternoon his disorder assumed a more alarming character, and on Monday he gradually became worse; when the medical attendants gave no hopes of his eventual restoration to health.——Mr. Edward Bolton Clive, M.P., expired on Tuesday morning at an early hour, at his son's seat, near Croydon. He was a Whig in politics, and had for a long series of years represented the city of Hereford.——Mr. Alexander Murray died in the south of Ireland on Wednesday week, having been suddenly taken ill on the preceding Monday. Mr. Murray was on the liberal side of politics.

COURT-MARTIAL.

Military justice is prompt, both in its forms and its operation. The "law's delay" does not apply to the law as administered by a Court-Martial, a scene of which we here give a sketch. At Windsor, on a recent occasion, the arrest, the trial, the sentence, and its execution, all came within the space of two hours! It is one extreme of a scale which bears the Chancery suit at the other. In this case, however, it was a "Regimental" or "Drum-head" Court-Martial; the "District" court is more regular and formal, assembles gravely, receives evidence, hears the defence—all according to prescribed rules, which are strictly observed. The scene of a District Court-Martial is generally a large room attached to the garrison, or perhaps the official residence of the officer in command of the district, who mostly presides. The Judge-Advocate, or the officer of the court, sits at the bottom of the table facing the President; the prosecutor—if the charge is brought by one officer against another—must be in attendance; the prisoner, disarmed, stands by the side of the Judge-Advocate, near him a sentinel with fixed bayonet; in Naval Courts-Martial the Master-at-Arms fills this post with a drawn sword. The questions are put through the President, being first reduced to writing by the Advocate; the answers are also taken in writing. There is no clever pleader, no badgering counsel, no browbeating witnesses till they cannot tell no from yes: all is orderly, quiet, regular, with a sort of grim-settled formality which is rather appalling when the military offence is a serious one; in appearance, at least, the proceedings are fair and dispassionate; and the Military Court-Martial has this advantage, we believe, over the Naval, that officers of various ranks sit on them; in the navy no officer under the rank of a captain can be a member of a court, a restriction of which many complaints have been made. A "cook" who was sentenced to some punishment by such a court Swore it was not fair; "The noble is tried by the nobs, and I should have got off if it had been a court-martial of cooks!" In other respects the forms of procedure of the Naval and Military Courts are not dissimilar. An adjournment from day to day is made if necessary; time is given, if required, to prepare the defence, which is read by the prisoner or some one for him. The court then deliberates on the verdict and sentence; in the navy these are pronounced immediately; in the army the sentence is not made known till it has been confirmed by the Sovereign.

COURT MARTIAL.

THE NEW HALL OF COMMERCE, IPSWICH.

This noble structure was opened with great ceremony on Monday last. It is, in itself, a very handsome pile; and it may be regarded as the completion of a series of important improvements. Not long since a spacious Dock was opened to the shipping of the port of Ipswich; commodious quays and wharves have since been formed; and the present edifice will afford increased accommodation for business; inasmuch as the transactions connected with the Customs, Dock, River, and Excise will all be concentrated in the same building, together with a fine hall for the use of merchants.

The question of building a new Custom-house, at Ipswich, was first mooted in 1843. In March of that year, the Corporation publicly invited architects to send in plans for the proposed structure, the cost of which was not to exceed £4000. No less than twenty-three designs were sent to the Town Clerk's Office, from which that by Mr. J. M. Clark was selected as being entitled to a premium of twenty guineas. The Council ultimately decided on adopting that gentleman's plans for the proposed building; and the sum of £4000, necessary to defray the outlay, was raised by mortgage on the present building. Builders were invited to tender for the execution of the works, and the choice of the Council fell on Mr. J. A. Pettit. On Thursday, October 19th, 1843, the interesting ceremony of laying the first stone took place, by the Mayor (E. Josselyn, Esq.), attended by the Corporation, and assisted by the ancient Order of Freemasons.

The festivities on opening the New Building on Monday last were on a very extensive scale. The edges of the quays fronting the edifice were roped off, to prevent accidents; and along them were erected a number of stages for company. In the centre of the Dock was a long and imposing line of shipping; and in front of the Commercial Hall were moored six barges, whence the line of ships was continued, the whole forming an immense semi-circle: each was dressed in gay colours, and crowded with company. Interspersed among the shipping, too, was a host of yachts, covered with flags of all shapes and colours. The small craft were very numerous: they were of every description—from the tiny yacht's boat to the 36 feet galley.

The Commercial Hall was a grand centre-piece to the scene on shore. From the pediment of the building was suspended a gigantic Royal Standard, while the flight of steps on either side leading to the colonnade, and the colonnade itself, were crowded by a most fashionable company. Opposite the Union Jack was a battery of four cannons, which thundered away right bravely; and the bells of St. Mary Tower and Key Churches also sent forth their merry peals.

We have not room for the details of the day's amusements, which were really superb. There were boat-races and duck-hunts; a magnificent display of fireworks, by Southby, upon the barges moored opposite the Hall; and altogether there could not have been fewer than 20,000 persons present.

There were feasts of various grades—from the tea-drinking and smoking at the Cement Works, to the Corporation Dinner in the Commercial Hall, presided over by the Mayor (William Rodwell, Esq.), supported by 120 gentlemen: after "the loving cup" had passed, and the usual loyal toasts had been drunk, the toasts of the day were given with great éclat.

We quote the following architectural details of the New Hall, from the Ipswich Express:—

"It will be seen, from our Engraving, that the main feature of the building consists of a central portico, approached by a double flight of steps on either side, and standing on a semi-circular coved arch, of a peculiarly bold and imposing appearance, the introduction of which forms a striking novelty in the design. The Arms of the Corporation of Ipswich appear in the pediment of the portico, the execution of which is very superior. The central compartment, under the portico, is the Hall of Commerce, intended as a subscription-room or merchants, captains, and others, connected with the commerce of the port. The room is of good proportions, decorated with columns and pilasters of original design, the ceiling being finished with a cove, springing from the entablature of the order, and groined with the arches of the windows and the detached columns opposite. The inner parts are appropriately finished, the effect of the whole being elegant and chaste. To the west, on the principal floor, are the offices appropriated to the Customs Department; including a long room (the three pedimented windows in the view), with private offices for Collector and Comptroller, and rooms for stores, samples, &c. At the eastern end is a similar arrangement for the offices of Excise; each department being approached by a separate staircase from the Arcades, which also form a feature in the design, and are intended as a substitute for the Mariners' Walk, in the old building. The basement throughout is appropriated to bonding stores, and over the whole of the building are extensive corn chambers. There is also a Mezzanine, or intermediate story, a portion of which is occupied by the Dock and River offices, the remainder by individual tenants. The interior finishings throughout are judicious and simple, regard being had to expenditure. The style may be called an adaptation of the Italian, the overhanging roof being a peculiarity of the Tuscan order, which has been here chosen. The Tower is an addition in unison with the style: it gives effect to the general grouping of the mass, and serves also a purpose of utility—having a staircase within it to the lofts, and the summit being prepared for a clock. Effect has been obtained by using largely the resources immediately at hand, at small cost. A novel combination of white and red brick has been produced, and stone used only when the former materials would have been inappropriate or ineffective. The contract for the whole of the works was completed at £4250. The work throughout appears to have been soundly and substantially executed, no settlement of the slightest character being visible. The length of the building, from east to west, is 125 feet; and the depth, from north to south, 44 feet, exclusive of the portico and staircase. The height to the cornice, about 45½ feet; and the tower, 70 feet."

THE NEW HALL OF COMMERCE, IPSWICH.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

GEORGE LUCY, ESQ.

George Lucy, Esq., of Charlecote Park, near Stratford-on-Avon, M.P. for the borough of Fowey from 1820 to 1830, and High Sheriff of Warwickshire in 1831, died on the 30th June, in the 57th year of his age. The gentleman, the representative of the great Norman house of Lucy, and the possessor of its broad lands, was son of the late Rev. John Hammond, who, as grandson of the Rev. John Hammond and Alice Lucy, his wife, second daughter of Sir Fulke Luc., of Charlecote, assumed, by Royal sign manual, in 1787, the surname and arms of Lucy.

The Lucys have been of distinction in the annals and events of their country since the period of the Norman Conquest; and so far back as the contest between King Stephen and the Empress Maud, Henry De Lucy was Governor of Falaise, and Lieutenant of the Kingdom. Sir Thomas Lucy, of Charlecote, for a rebellion, in the reign of Elizabeth, the Manor House, with brick, as it now stands, was the prototype of the famed Justice Shallow, of the "Merry Wives of Windsor." A favourite amusement of Shakspeare and "his wild companions" was the stealing of "deer and conies" in the park of Sir Thomas Lucy, in the immediate vicinity of Stratford. For this, the Knight attached the post with the penalties of the law, and the poet revenged himself by sticking a satirical copy of verses on the gate of the Knight's demesne. The result is well known; the youthful bard had to fly from his native Avon, and to seek a shelter in the Metropolis, where he found friends and honour, wealth and fame: the redoubted Knight remained at home to enjoy his triumph, and yet survives as "Robert Shallow, Esquire, Justice of Peace and Coram," the laughing stock of posterity.

Mr. Lucy, whose death we now record, married, 2nd December, 1823, Mary Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Williams, Bart., of Bodelwyddan, county Flint, and has left two sons and two daughters.

SIR WILLIAM SALTONSTALL WISEMAN, BART.

Sir W. S. Wiseman, Bart., of Canfield Hall, Essex, Captain in the Royal Navy, grandson and heir of Sir Thomas Wiseman, Bart., who succeeded to the honours of the ancient baronetcal family of Wiseman, at the decease of his cousin, Sir William Wiseman, fifth Bart., Colonel in the Foot Guards, entered the navy at an early age, obtained his Lieutenancy in 1807, became Commander in 1811, and was promoted to Post rank in 1820.

Sir William, at the period of his decease, which occurred on the 1st instant, had completed his 61st year. His first wife, whom he married at Bagdad, in Persia, January 8, 1812, was Catharine, second daughter of the late distinguished Sir James Mackintosh, and by her, who died June 27, 1822, he has left several children, the eldest of whom is the present Sir Edmund Wiseman, Bart. His second wife, Eliza, eldest daughter of the Rev. George Davies, B.D., Rector of Cranfield, in Bedfordshire, still, we believe, survives.

SIR HENRY TICHBORNE, BART., OF TICHBORNE, HANTS.

This much-respected gentleman died recently, at his seat, in Hampshire, having had by Anne, his wife, daughter of the late Sir Thomas Burke, Bart., of Marble Hill (and sister of Eliza, Countess of Clanricarde, and Ellen, Viscountess Strangford), seven daughters: first, Eliza Anne, married to Joseph Thaddeus, Lord Dormer; second, Frances Catherine, the late wife of Lord Arundell, of Wardour; third, Julia, married—first, to Charles Thomas Talbot, Esq., and secondly, to Washington Hibbert, Esq.; fourth, Mary, who died, unmarried, in 1827; fifth, Catherine Caroline; sixth, Lucy Ellen, married to John Towneley, Esq., of Towneley; and seventh, Emily Blanche, widow of John Benett, Esq., jun., of Pyt House, Wiltshire.

As Sir Henry Tichborne has left no son, the baronetcy has devolved on his next surviving brother, Edward Doughty, Esq., of Snarford Hall, in Lincolnshire, who changed his patronymic for the name of Doughty in 1826, on succeeding to the extensive estates of the rich heiress, the late Mrs. Doughty, of Richmond Hill.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Although the present week has not been distinguished for its sporting achievement, there was enough stirring to preserve in healthful activity "the lazaret of bile." In the early morning of Monday, all the world of cricket assembled at Lord's, to witness the crack match of the season—as far as it has gone—whereof we shall come to speak by-and-by.

In the afternoon the racing circles of the metropolis mustered in considerable force at Tattersall's, intent on golden anticipations of the great Goodwood meeting, upon whose threshold we now stand. The first compliment addressed to them was in form of a disastrous bulletin which announced that disease had been busy with Forth's stable, and consequently that it was not likely any of his "lot" would show for the Cup. When we spoke of Folgham Ballagh's appearance at Ascot we described it as that of a horse very short of work. No doubt his legs were then queer—very probably they are now. His owner is too good a man to suspect, is run, and that as a racer he is worthless. That his price for his Sussex engagement was a fictitious one we always believed—stating our conviction that he was no Goodwood Cup winner. The same we asserted of his stable companion, Stonecliar. How one of the worst horses in England could be announced for the greatest race in the kingdom, in the present season, is beyond the reveries of our philosophy. First favourite for this great event is Valerian—a horse that has, as yet, done nothing—the cause of his non-appearance as a three-year-old being, as it was stated at the time, his incapacity to stand training. It is something now to find a maiden four-year-old first favourite for the Goodwood Cup, notwithstanding the allowance of 14lb. to which an animal so situated is entitled

The week gave existence to but one meeting of any account at all, and that was at Newton; where, however, the interest was only local. But on Tuesday next will commence, and on Friday will terminate, in the magnificent park of the Duke of Richmond, one of the grandest racing trysts probably ever held since the abolition of the Olympian Games. The amount of money to be run for in stakes and plates, and which will absolutely reach the pockets of the winners, will be, no question, over twenty thousand pounds; the fields of horses brought to the post unparalleled in the annals of the British turf. As every medal has its reverse—Goodwood has its drawback, from the comfort of those who visit it, in the general want of suitable accommodation to which they are exposed. Chichester is anything but a place to which pleasure seekers are desirous of repairing; and Bognor is always like a carpet-bag, ten times as full as it can hold. Arundel and Midhurst are in the same category with Chichester — and Portsmouth is not popular as a sleeping quarter—during the week of a Goodwood assize. In this dilemma be asked, we advise all who are pretty well off in the matter of equipage or horse transport, to try Worthing. It is not very far from the scene of action, and as for hotels, there is not its equal, size and site had in consideration, in Great Britain. If the reader doubt our assertion, let him try the Steyne Hotel, and he must be hard to serve, or that will content him. So much on the subject of Olympus.

The catalogue of regattas returns as little of moment done "by flood" as "by field." This day week there was a match of interest between Oxford and Eton, from Datchet to Old Windsor Lock, the Eton eight being the crew that will row the Westminsters in their coming contest. It was a beautiful race, won by Oxford only half a boat's length. The long-shore watermen have had some spirited rowing; but beyond that we have had nothing doing. Though not actually a sporting feat, a performance which took place on Monday last deserves our notice. They rode donkey races from Putney to Mortlake, the first prize to London. The winner was a young pigeon of the dragon breed, and did the distance in one hour and twenty-three minutes—eighty miles in eighty-three minutes.

On Thursday evening the two amateur champions of the Thames, Messrs. Chapman and Wallace, after many a field contested, with various fortune, met to settle—for a space at least—the question of their quality. The river was populous with clubs and galleys of distinction, and one of the finest matches ever witnessed was the result. It was from Putney to Mortlake, the first portion of which Mr. Wallace led over. Abreast Rose Bank, however, Mr. Chapman having drawn on his opponent, passed him, and eventually won a noble struggle by several boats' length.

On the same day also was decided the great bout of cricket already alluded to, between the Gentlemen and Players of England. It commenced on Monday, and, from unpropitious weather and wary play, was thus prolonged. On Wednesday, in very severe rain, the game was severely fought, the gentlemen having then 74 runs to get, with six wickets to go in. The final play was very fine on the part of the professors—especially the bowling of Dean and Illywhite—by which the the fate of the match was soon put out of jeopardy. The concluding score was—Players, 276; Gentlemen, 209; the former thus winning by a liberal score.

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—Mr. Forth having denuded the Goodwood Cup of its interest, by scratching Folgh-a-Ballagh (said to be lame) and by declaring that he is not likely to start anything, the betting this afternoon was almost exclusively confined to the Stakes. For that event the "lions" were Venus, Lightning, Bowling School Miss, Ægis, Miss Ellis, Wee Pet, and the Laird o' Cockpen the first for—r having decidedly the strongest parties. Pythia, The Libel, Rowena, Queen Mab, Warp, Europa, John o' Gaunt, and Una were backed, but had few supporters. No change of any moment, either in the St. Leger or Derby.

GOODWOOD STAKES.

10 to 1 agst Pythia	16 to 1 agst Venus		22 to 1 agst Laird o' Cockpen
13 to 1 —— The Libel	16 to 1 —— Ægis		22 to 1 —— Warp
14 to 1 —— Lightning	20 to 1 —— John o' Gaunt		30 to 1 —— Lothario
14 to 1 —— Bowling School	20 to 1 —— Miss Ellis		30 to 1 —— Roderick
—— Miss	22 to 1 —— Wee Pet		30 to 1 —— Una
17 to 1 —— Rowena	22 to 1 —— Europa		40 to 1 —— Queen of Tyne(t)
16 to 1 —— Queen Mab

GOODWOOD CUP.

5 to 1 agst Valerian	18 to 1 agst The Ironmaster
13 to 1 —— St. Lawrence	15 to 1 —— Refraction

Folgh-a-Ballagh is declared not to start; nor is it probable that anything out of Forth's stable will run.

ST. LEGER.

5 to 1 agst Weatherbit (t)	8 to 1 agst Nestor	50 to 1 agst Red Robin (t)
5 to 1 —— Merry Monarch (t)	12 to 1 —— Pam	50 to 1 —— The Pacha (t)
30 to 1 agst Brocardo (t)	33 to 1 agst Tognet	50 to 1 agst Corumba c (t)

THURSDAY.—Business was again confined almost exclusively to the Goodwood Stakes, and with an effect on the prices that could scarcely have been anticipated. Boarding School Miss came with a rush, and, giving Pythia, who, nevertheless, had a strong party, the go-by, settled firmly at the top of the tree. Ægis and Lothario were also in force, but we did not observe any decided feeling in favour of any others—on the contrary, most of those mentioned as having been fancied on Monday, were either in very slight estimation, or were altogether laid on the shelf. The Cup and St. Leger betting was little more than nominal.

GOODWOOD STAKES.

9 to 1 agst Boarding School	17 to 1 agst Queen Mab	33 to 1 agst Warp
—— Miss	17 to 1 —— Venus	33 to 1 —— Una
10 to 1 —— Pythia	20 to 1 —— Ægis	33 to 1 —— John o' Gaunt
13 to 1 —— The Libel	20 to 1 —— Miss Ellis	33 to 1 —— Rowena
14 to 1 —— Lightning	22 to 1 —— Wee Pet	33 to 1 —— Rochester
15 to 1 —— *Æ*gis	25 to 1 —— Glossy

GOODWOOD CUP.

3 to 1 agst 7 Day's lot	12 to 1 agst Ten master	20 to 1 agst Alice Hawthorn
9 to 1 —— St. Lawrence	14 to 1 —— Ironmonger	25 to 1 —— Stonecliar
11 to 2 —— Valerian	15 to 1 —— Mr. Ellis

ST. LEGER.

5 to 1 agst Weatherbit (t)	12 to 1 agst Ironmaster	33 to 1 agst Fitz-Allen
9 to 2 —— The Merry Monarch	17 to 1 —— Pantaloon	35 to 1 —— Red Robin
	20 to 1 —— Nestor	40 to 1 —— The Pacha
10 to 1 —— Ord England (t)

DERBY.

50 to 1 agst Corumba colt (taken freely).

CRICKET.

THE GENTLEMEN OF ENGLAND v. THE PLAYERS OF ENGLAND.—At length this match has been brought to a conclusion, and in favour of the "players." The players won by sixty-seven runs; and that many thousands of pounds were not only dependent on the issue of this match, but changed hands.

AQUATICS

BERMONDSEY REGATTA.

The annual boat race amongst the watermen at Bermondsey for a new skiff and some good money prizes, came off on Tuesday, and was well contested and most numerously attended. The match was with six scullers, in five heats.

First Heat — J. Warwick, East-lane stairs (dark blue), 1; B. Jones, Fountain stairs (light blue), 2; James Moore, East-lane (pink), 3. A good start was succeeded by Warwick taking the lead and keeping it.

Second Heat.—W. Williams, Mill stairs (red), 1; W. Messenger, Cherry-garden (green), 2; G. Legon, Fountain stairs (yellow), 3.

Third Heat.—Legon, 1; Messenger, 2. It was a very smart race throughout for the first place.

Fourth Heat.—Williams, 1; Legon, 2. They went away together, and a beautiful race followed, which was continued throughout, the two Winners and Warwick coming in at almost the same minute.

Grand Heat.—Williams, 1; Legon, 2. The winner took the lead, and although pressed closely, kept it during the heat. The heats extended from Mill stairs down to the floating engine, King's stairs; the distance being twice round in each heat.

MATCH BETWEEN THE ETONIAN EIGHT AND OXFORD ROOMS CREWS.—This match, which has always been looked forward to with considerable interest, in consequence of the Etonian crew being the eight selected to compete with Westminster School, in the contest, or the latter coming off on the following of Saturday last, the portion of the Thames selected being from Datchet Bridge to Old Windsor Lock, a distance of about two miles A great number of persons were present to witness the contest. The heats extended from Mill stairs down to the floating engine, King's stairs; the distance being twice round in each heat.

The Etonians took the lead at once, and were shortly after onwards gained upon by the Oxonians, and both were boat and boat for upwards of a mile and a half. The Oxonians, by their superior strength and weight, then drew a little a-head, and won the race by only half a boat's length. The match was beautifully contested by the Eton crew.

REGATTAS.—The Barkside Regatta took place on Monday; the grand heat was won by James Bass.—St. John's, Westminster, Regatta, also took place on Monday; the grand heat was won by Meekiff and Gaudy, of Horseferry, beating Bray and Coombes, of Vauxhall.

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

We have received a letter from a Correspondent at Smyrna, which gives an account of another terrible fire, which took place there on the 3rd inst. It broke out in a barber's shop, and, aided by a high wind, was not extinguished until it had reduced to ashes no many as seven thousand houses, embracing the whole of the Greek and Armenian quarter, and the Dutch Consulate. It is reckoned that the loss of property will amount to £100,000 sterling. 5000 souls are thrown out of their habitations, and the misery that prevails is beyond al. conception. Entire families, from a state of affluence, have been reduced to abject misery and destitution.

On Saturday last some of the elder brethren of the Trinity Board put down an iron tube of two feet six inches in diameter into that part of the Goodwin Sands which is most dangerous, as a preliminary to the erection of a lighthouse thereon. It is on the Calipers, and at a short distance from a bank, which forms a steep declivity to the depth of ten fathoms. The tube descended 23 feet into the sand in an astonishingly short time, by the application of Dr. Pott's process, in which atmospheric pressure is the principal agent.

The Journal des Flandres says—"Lamentable accounts have been received from the Republic of Guatemala. A new revolution has broken out, fol owed by all the acts which an uncivilised people can suffer from such an event"

At the recent Somersetshire Sessions, held at Bridgwater, an old woman, 105 years of age, from Long Ashton, near Bristol, gave evidence in an appeal case. The venerable dame was cheerful, and appeared in good health.

Last week, the immense manufactory of Messrs. Motte, Rosser, and Co., at Rouboux, Belgium, was totally destroyed by fire, which broke out at two in the afternoon. The loss is estimated at upwards of a million and a half of francs (£100,000 sterling). The manufactory was not insured at its full value. It gave employment to 500 workmen.

A Frankfort journal receives, from Athens, June 26, that a proposition made by M Coletti, to send a deputation to Constantinople, to compliment the Grand Duke Constantine, and invite him to visit Athens, had not been acceded to by the Ministry, as it was considered inopportune to make any public demonstration in his favour, under the existing state of affairs. The King, it is said, will send one of his aides-de-camp with an autograph con gratulatory letter.

The Augsburgh Gazette states that the Prince and Princess de Metternich would start on the 20th for the chateau of Johannesberg. It adds that the Prince has received a formal invitation from the King of Prussia, and from Queen Victoria, to be present at their approaching interview.

A latter from Arles, of the 18th, states that a serious collision had taken place between the workmen on the railroad, and that several of them had been wounded. The authorities, however, had interfered and restored order

The Heraldo of Madrid announces that the British Government has given orders for the removal of the hulk at the Havannah, and that in return the Spanish Government is to grant a portion of land for the reception of slaves rescued by British cruisers

Letters from Bayrout, of the 29th of June, mention that intelligence had just arrived there of a general rising of the Greeks in Crete, but no par ticulars are given.

The Gazette of the Senate of St. Petersburgh publishes an Imperial Ukase relative to the rights of hereditary or personal nobility acquired by the service of military and civil officers. The Ukase places certain restrictions on the existing privileges with a view of checking the enormous increase of the class of nobility, but maintains the principle of elevation.

A letter from Cassel of the 15th of July, mentions that that city has been visited by a destructive fever, which has almost desolated the place. Among the victims is Baron de Stauber, the minister of foreign affairs. He is succeeded by Baron de Koch, as minister ad interim. The whole of the corps diplomatique had quitted the place

The Royal Academy of Paris have elected Sir Benjamin Brodie and Dr. Lawrer ce foreign associates of their body.

The following horrible suicide is related by the Courrier de Lyon of the 18th :—"A journeyman shoemaker, living in the Grand Rue Sainte Catherine in a state of great poverty and who had just lost his wife, yesterday in a fit of despair threw himself out of a window on the sixth floor, with his child, four years old, in his arms. They were quite dead when they were picked up."

During the sitting of the 17th the Helvetic Diet discussed the question relative to the revision of the federal compact. A majority of eight against the expediency of discussion caused it to be put off till next year. The principal of a new project for the revision of the compact had, therefore, only gained the concurrence of the five most radical cantons—Berne, Argovia, Basle, (country), Glaris, and Vaud.

A convict at the Hague, at Brest, named Lejique, was executed last week, in the interior of the establishment, for attempting to murder a fellow-prisoner. More than 3000 of the convicts were present at the execution, being a Protestant, he was attended by a minister of that persuasion, and bore his fate with great resignation

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—Since Monday, the receipts of English wheat for our market have been very lo ited, viz., 2640 quarters, principally from Lincolnshire and Essex. The supply, to-day, being poorly filled with samples, and the weather by no means favourable to the ge wing crops, the demand for fresh parcels of home produce was active, at an improvement on Monday's quotations—of from 1s to 2s. per quarter, and at which nearly the whole of the parcels fo ind room. The news of the fine weather which was setti ng in for the inquiry was the cause, at 1s. to 2s. per quarter more money. In parcels under lock more business was doing, at that improvement. Foreign was dull. For barley but a slow inquiry for malting, and the quotations generally qualities were well supported. The late arrivals of malt were taken at full prices The following are the returns of the Corn Exchange for the week ending this day:—

ARRIVALS: English wheat, 2,111 quarters; barley, 2 oats, 20 quarters; Irish wheat, — barley, 100 oats, 1,000 quarters; foreign wheat, 4,600 quarters; barley, — oats, — quarters; flour, 1,000 sacks.

AVERAGES: Wheat, 37s 8d; barley, 22s 11d; oats, 15s 6d; rye, 25s 8d; beans, 30s 1d; peas, 30s 1d.

Aylesbury, Friday.—Fine red wheat, 42s to 44s; ditto, white, 2s to 44s; Norfolk and Suffolk ditto, 42s to 44s; fine barley, 30s to 32s; ditto grinding, 28s to 30s; fine malting ditto, 34s to 36s; ordinary ditto, 30s to 32s; fine beans, 30s to 32s; ditto grinding, 28s to 30s; fine peas, 30s to 32s; ditto grinding, 28s to 30s; fine oats, 20s to 22s; ditto, 18s to 20s; Scotch and Irish ditto, 20s to 22s; Flanders ditto, 20s to 22s; fine flour, 45s to 48s per sack; seconds, 40s to 42s; Essex and Suffolk ditto, 40s to 42s; Kent ditto, 40s to 42s; Norfolk ditto, 40s to 42s; Lincolnshire and Yorkshire ditto, 40s to 42s; Cambridgeshire ditto, 40s to 42s; Northumberland and Scotch ditto, 40s to 42s; Irish ditto, 40s to 42s; Canada ditto, 40s to 42s; Baltic ditto, 40s to 42s; American ditto, 40s to 42s; fine wheat, 40s to 42s; fine barley, 28s to 30s; fine oats, 22s to 24s; fine beans, 30s to 32s; fine peas, 30s to 32s; fine tares, 30s to 32s; fine rye, 30s to 32s; fine linseed, 50s to 52s per quarter; fine rapeseed, 50s to 52s per last; fine cloverseed, 40s to 42s per cwt; fine trefoil, 20s to 22s per cwt; fine ryegrass, 20s to 22s per cwt; fine canary, 40s to 42s per quarter; fine hempseed, 40s to 42s per quarter; fine tic beans, 30s to 32s per quarter; fine white peas, 30s to 32s per quarter; fine flour, 45s to 48s per sack; seconds, 40s to 42s per sack; fine wheat, 40s to 42s per quarter; fine barley, 28s to 30s per quarter; fine oats, 22s to 24s per quarter; fine beans, 30s to 32s per quarter; fine peas, 30s to 32s per quarter. Flour, American, 21s to 22s; Baltic 2 s to 23s, per barrel.

Tea Seed Market.—A very limited amount of business has been doing in this market since our last, and prices are nominally unaltered:

Linseed, English, sowing, 40s to 42s, ditto, crushing, 42s to 43s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 40s to 42s; Hengstand, 42s to 44s; Baltic, 42s to 43s; Archangel, 42s to 43s; Petersburgh, 42s to 43s; Riga, 42s to 43s; Dutch, 42s to 44s; Calcutta, 42s to 44s; Bombay, 42s to 44s; Egyptian and Turkish, 42s to 44s; Odessa, 42s to 44s; Marseilles, 42s to 44s; Leghorn, 42s to 44s; Genoa, 42s to 44s; Trieste, 42s to 44s; Venice, 42s to 44s; Ancona, 42s to 44s; Naples, 42s to 44s; Sicily, 42s to 44s; Malta, 42s to 44s; Gibraltar, 42s to 44s; Portugal, 42s to 44s; Oporto, 42s to 44s; Lisbon, 42s to 44s; Cadiz, 42s to 44s; Barcelona, 42s to 44s; Valencia, 42s to 44s; Alicante, 42s to 44s; Carthagena, 42s to 44s; Malaga, 42s to 44s; Tenerific, 42s to 44s; Madeira, 42s to 44s; Bahia, 42s to 44s; Rio Janeiro, 42s to 44s; Buenos Ayres, 42s to 44s; Montevideo, 42s to 44s; Coast of Africa, 42s to 44s; Mexico, 42s to 44s; Vera Cruz, 42s to 44s; Havannah, 42s to 44s; Matanzas, 42s to 44s; Cuba, 42s to 44s; Porto Rico, 42s to 44s; Jamaica, 42s to 44s; Honduras, 42s to 44s; Campeachy, 42s to 44s; Carthagena, 42s to 44s; Maracaibo, 42s to 44s; Laguayra, 42s to 44s; Cumana, 42s to 44s; Barbadoes, 42s to 44s; Trinidad, 42s to 44s; Demerara, 42s to 44s; Berbice, 42s to 44s; Surinam, 42s to 44s; Cayenne, 42s to 44s; Guadaloupe, 42s to 44s; Martinique, 42s to 44s; St. Lucia, 42s to 44s; Grenada, 42s to 44s; St. Vincent, 42s to 44s; Antigua, 42s to 44s; St. Christopher's, 42s to 44s; Nevis, 42s to 44s; Montserrat, 42s to 44s; Dominica

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, JULY 22.

WAR-OFFICE, JULY 22.—16th Light Dragoons: Lieut. C. W. Hinxman to be Lieutenant, vice Sleigh.

Scots Fusileer Guards: Battalion Surgeon W. H. Judd to be Surgeon-Major, vice S. Good; Assistant-Surgeon J. Richardson to be Battalion Surgeon, vice Judd; Assist.-Surg. J. Gray to be Assistant-Surgeon, vice Richardson.

Coldstream Guards: Ensign and Lieut. —— Hinxman, 38th: Major Gen. Sir [illegible] to be Colonel, vice Sir R. D. Jackson, K.C.B. 40th: Lieut.-Gen. Sir G. H. Berkeley, K.C.B., to be Colonel, vice Lieut.-Gen. Sir [illegible], K.C.B. 60th: Major Hon. Rev. [illegible] to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice [illegible]. 72nd: Lieut. Col. Hon. Rev. [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. 74th: Lieut. Col. Andrew Clarke to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. 78th: Lieut. Col. Andrew Clarke to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice Cumming. 79th: Lieut. Col. Sir [illegible] to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice Clarke. Rifle Brigade: Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Lieut. W. Lawrence to be Captain, vice Carpenter. [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice Lawrence. G. Graham to be Ensign, vice Pope. [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. Ensign W. Gordon to be Lieutenant, vice Warburton. F. J. Lloyd to be Ensign, vice Gordon. Assistant-Surgeon to be Surgeon, vice [illegible]. Assistant-Surgeon W. A. Anderson to be Assistant-Surgeon. 97th: Lieut. Lieutenant-Colonel W. Williams, vice E. J. Taylor, dead. 2nd Dragoon Guards (Queen's Bays): Lieut. Col. Sir [illegible] to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 3rd Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. Frederick Barlow to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice Hewitt. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 4th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 5th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 6th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 7th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 8th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 9th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 10th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 11th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 12th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 13th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 14th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 15th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 16th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 17th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 18th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 19th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 20th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 21st Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 22nd Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 23rd Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 24th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 25th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 26th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 27th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 28th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 29th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 30th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 31st Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 32nd Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 33rd Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 34th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 35th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 36th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 37th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 38th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 39th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 40th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 41st Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 42nd Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 43rd Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 44th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 45th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 46th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 47th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 48th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 49th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 50th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 51st Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 52nd Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 53rd Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 54th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 55th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 56th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 57th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 58th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 59th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 60th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 61st Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 62nd Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 63rd Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 64th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 65th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 66th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 67th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 68th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 69th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 70th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 71st Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 72nd Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 73rd Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 74th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 75th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 76th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 77th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 78th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 79th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 80th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 81st Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 82nd Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 83rd Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 84th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 85th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 86th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 87th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 88th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 89th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 90th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 91st Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 92nd Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 93rd Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 94th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 95th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 96th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 97th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 98th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 99th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 100th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 101st Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 102nd Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 103rd Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 104th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 105th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. Col. [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Major [illegible] to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice [illegible]. Captain [illegible] to be Major, vice [illegible]. Lieut. [illegible] to be Captain, vice [illegible]. Cornet [illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 106

CARTOON, (49) "THE CHAMPION OF ENGLAND AGAINST ALL COMERS."—BY EDWARD H. CORBOULD.

"THE CHAMPION OF ENGLAND AGAINST ALL COMERS."

BY E. H. CORBOULD.

FROM THE PRESENT WESTMINSTER HALL EXHIBITION.

Some one called Mr. Corbould's Cartoon of "The Champion of England against all Comers," the Dymock of the Hall. The saying was a happy one. Some such notion must have filled the minds of the Committee when they gave Mr. Corbould's Cartoon its present prond position in Westminster Hall. "A gentle knight was pricking on the plain." But Spenser's well-known lines will hardly suit Mr. Corbould's Champion. Perhaps, the figure before us was meant to represent King Edward III., and the well-known distich :—

Hay, hay, the white swan,
By God's soul I am thy man!

Perhaps, for a Crusader "bound for holy Palestine," or Henry Howard, Earl of Surrey :—

Bold in the lists, and graceful in the dance;

Or, better still, for Harry of Hereford, in the lists at Gosford Green, near Coventry :—

Harry of Hereford, Lancaster and Derby
Am I, who ready here do stand in arms,
To prove by Heaven's grace, and my body's valour,
In lists on Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk,
That he's a traitor foul and dangerous,
To God of Heaven, King Richard and to me
And as I truly fight defend me heaven.

The "gage" upon the ground would signify as much—"Here I throw my gage, my honour's pawn;" or Mr. Corbould may have Sir Philip Sydney in his mind and his noble Sonnet, which Charles Lamb admired so much :—

Having this day my horse, my hand, my lance,
Guided so well, that I obtain'd the prize,
Both by the judgment of the English eyes,
And of some sent from that sweet enemy France;
Horsemen, my skill in horsemanship advance,
Townsfolks my strength; a daintier judge applies
His praise to sleight, which from good use doth rise;
Some lucky wits impute it but to chance;
Others, because of both sides I do take
My blood from them who did excel in this,
Think Nature me a man of arms did make:
How far they shot awry! The true cause is,
Stella look'd on, and from her heavenly face
Sent forth the beams which made so fair my race.

Mr. Corbould's "Champion" is full of fire and animation; Scott would have admitted his knight into the lists at Ashby-de-la-Zouch, and Sir Samuel Meyrick will sanction the faithful character of his armour and accoutrements; nay more, the Directors of the Horse Armoury at the Tower of London may learn something from the action of Mr. Corbould's "Champion."

MR. J. ADOLPHUS.

The newspaper reader whose memory can carry him back some years, will well remember the name of Mr. Adolphus, the Old Bailey barrister; it was then one of frequent occurrence in our criminal and police transactions, scarcely a case of any importance occurring in which he was not engaged. The learned gentlemen expired on Wednesday the 16th, at the house of his son, Mr. J. Leycester Adolphus, Montague-street, Russell-square.

Mr. Adolphus was one of the oldest members in the criminal courts of this country, and father of the Old Bailey bar, to which he was called in 1807. The deceased gentleman, in early life, raised himself to distinction in the metropolitan courts of criminal jurisprudence, and in a few years worked his way into a large and lucrative practice. Mr. Adolphus on various occasions throughout his professional career had distinguished himself in a very remarkable manner by his extraordinary talents, judgment, and energy, especially during the memorable trial of Thistlewood in 1820, when he was only retained as leading counsel on behalf of the conspirators a few hours before the trial commenced, notwithstanding which, though the trial was one of the most interesting and momentous which perhaps ever took place in a criminal court involving as it did the liberties and lives of many individuals, he displayed as much legal knowledge, mental acuteness, acquaintance with the facts of the case, and professional talent generally, during the protracted proceedings, as if he had devoted an entire month to the preparation of the defence. The manner in which he acquitted himself was equally the admiration of the bench, the bar, and the public. That he was physically equal to the subject was the surprise of all who were aware of the fact that he had set up the whole of the previous night for the purpose of mastering the principal facts of the case, scattered as they were over an immense mass of evidence. His statements and arguments were as clear and ingenious as his cross-examination of witnesses was skilful and felicitous. Mr. Adolphus spoke with much ease and fluency, and on all important occasions displayed talent and eloquence of the highest order. He has died sincerely lamented by a very numerous circle of friends. Among the literary efforts of the deceased gentleman may be mentioned the "History of the Reign of George III.," the seventh volume of which has just appeared; the "Political State of the British Empire," 4 vols.; "Biographical Memoirs of the French Revolution;" "Life of Bannister," 2 vols., &c.

His reading was very varied and discursive—running into the drama, history, French memoirs, Facetiæ, the last French novel, German theology, Scotch metaphysics, and the philosophy of Kant and Schelling; but withal, his understanding was purely and entirely legal, though he had never made himself a profound lawyer. But in sessions and parish law, and in the law of evidence, he was as apt and ready as any man of his time. He made no blunders, and he left no advantages unimproved. An erroneous idea has spread abroad that he was a man of a coarse and rugged nature. Nothing can be farther from the truth. He had to deal with men of coarse and brutal manners; and an eager, excitable nature, and a warm temper, often led him to retort in the strain in which he had been attacked; but treat him as a gentleman and no man was more courteous or kindly in his practice.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—"P."—Rules for playing "the Double Game of Chess" may perhaps be got at the office of "The Chess Player's Chronicle."
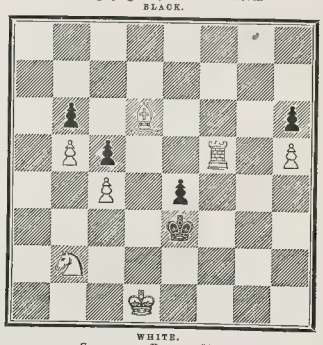
"Chell."—In mating with a bishop and knight the adverse king is driven into one of the corners of the board commanded by the bishop. The method of forcing him there may be learnt from any good elementary treatise on the game.
"J. L." must be ignorant of the primary laws of Chess. The first move of his pretended solution would leave the white king in check.
"N. D."—In the last No. of the "Chess Player's Chronicle" it is announced that a complete translation of Bilguer and Hyrdebrant's celebrated "Handbook of Chess," accompanied by copious notes and an appendix on games at odds, by Mr. Staunton, is in progress. The other work mention d has not been translated.
"R. M. S."—The great match at Chess, by correspondence, between Pesth and Paris is not yet terminated.
"S. H. G." Bridport. The problem received shall be examined.
"Peter Simple" is thanked. His solution is the true one.
"A"—When the pawn and three moves are given it is always stipulated that the first player shall not move any piece beyond his own half the board, until his opponent has moved. Your solution is wrong.
"Marma."—We have not got the paper containing No. 78 at hand. Look again.
"Miranda."—The suggestion deserves consideration.
"Alpha."—Your solution is incorrect.
"C. H. C" - You are quite mistaken. The mate cannot be effected as you propose.
Solutions by "M. E. G.," "A. H. G." "J. R. M." "W." "S. T. V." "T. R." "H. B." "M. M." "G. R." "W. S. H." are correct.

PROBLEM NO. 80.

BY HERR K—G.

White playing first, mates in four moves.

BLACK.



WHITE.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM NO. 79.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. B to K Kt 8th (ch)	K to R's sq
2. B to K B's 7th (disc ch)	K to R's 2nd
3. B to K Kt 6th (ch)	R takes B
4. P takes R (ch)	K takes P
5. Q takes K R's P (ch)	P takes Q
6. R to K Kt 8th (ch)	K to R's 2nd or B's 2nd
7. Kt takes P (mate)

GAME NO. 19.

Played at the St. George's Chess Club between Mr. Staunton and Captain Kennedy, of the Brighton Chess Club, Mr. Staunton giving the Pawn and two moves. (Remove Black's K B P from the board before playing over the game.)

WHITE (Capt. K.)	BLACK (Mr. S.)	WHITE (Capt. K.)	BLACK (Mr. S.)
1 K P two		14 Q Bto K R 4th	Q Kt to K Kt 6th
2 Q P two	K P one	15 Kt to Q R 4th	K Kt takes K P*
3 K B to Q 3rd	Q B P two	16 B takes Q	K Kt takes K B P (ch)
4 P takes P	Q to her R 4th (ch)
5 Q Kt to B 3rd	B takes P	17 K to Kt sq†	K Kt to K R 6th (giving double ch)
6 K Kt to K 2nd	Q Kt to B 3rd
7 Castles	K Kt to B 3rd	18 K to R sq	Q Kt to K B 7th (ch)
8 K Kt to his 3rd	Castles	19 R takes Kt	Kt takes R (ch,
9 Q R P one	Q to her sq	20 K to Kt sq	B to K 6th‡
10 Q Kt P two	B to Q Kt 3rd	21 Q to her Kt sq§
11 Q B to K Kt 5th	B to Q 5th	And Black gives checkmate in three moves.
12 K Kt to K 2nd	B to Q Kt 3rd
13 K to R sq	Q Kt to K 4th

* This unexpected coup changes at once the aspect of the game. Play as White may, now, we believe he must lose.

† By taking the Knight, White would only have enabled his opponent to win in fewer moves.

‡ This move secures to Black the advantage already gained by the sacrifice of his Queen. If, instead of so playing, he had taken the Queen, White would have escaped from the mêlée the winner of a piece; e. g.

20 Kt takes Q (discovering ch)
Q R P takes B
21 B takes B
22 Q Kt takes P, &c.

§ Perhaps his best play was Q's B to K Kt's 8th; but, even then, Black remains with a pawn and "the exchange" superiority.

FOX CLUB.—On Saturday last the noblemen and gentlemen of the Fox Club had their annual whitebait dinner at the Crown and Sceptre Tavern, Greenwich, Lord Charlemont in the chair. There were present Lord Zetland, Lord Scarborough, Lord Sudeley, Lord Desborough, Lord Marcus Hill, Lord Cranmore, Lord Edward Howard, Mr. Langston, Mr. J. Abel Smith, Mr. Stephenson, Mr. George Stevens Byng, Mr. Alston, Dr. Lushington Mr. Denison, Mr. Cavendish, Mr. Roberts, &c. &c.

An enormous cucumber was cut, a few days since, in the garden of Sir Thomas D Acland, Baronet, M.P., Killerton House, Broadclist, measuring two feet four inches in length, and nine inches in girth.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198 Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, JULY 26, 1845.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 170.—Vol. VII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, AUGUST 2, 1845 [Sixpence.

INCOME TAX OPPRESSION.

There is a prevailing opinion among the people of this country, that they are governed by a Constitution composed of Queen, Lords, and Commons. It is, however, a popular error, of which the reader of the debate on Wednesday last will be entirely disabused; a fourth power must be added, greater than the other three put together, since it is confessed they cannot control it; we are really ruled by Queen, Lords, Commons, and Income-tax Commissioners.

The close of the Session, occupied, as it is, by the mere passing of bills, without discussing them, rarely produces a debate that so completely brings before the public the errors of past legislation as that of Wednesday last. It was a day well spent, for it is impossible such an exposure of gross injustice and oppression can be made without bringing about a remedy. The discussion rose out of an individual case, but it represents a class; there are thousands like it; though few may exhibit the injustice in so striking a light, or on so extensive a scale. A brief outline will suffice to put the reader in possession of the most material facts.

Mr. Fielden is a great manufacturer, a large employer, and member for the borough of Oldham. During the disastrous years which preceded the accession of the present Government to power, it is well known that the manufacturers of the country had to contend with extraordinary difficulties: some worked their mills half-time, some discharged the greater number of their workmen, some closed their establishments altogether; others continued to work, but at a continual loss; and among the latter was Mr. Fielden. The effect of this suspension of work was frightful: thousands in our most populous districts were in a state verging on absolute starvation; but the laws that govern trade are as inexorable as the laws of nature. The cessation from producing on the part of the employers was an unavoidable necessity; for production at a loss, if continued for any time, will end in the annihilation of a small or moderate amount of capital, thus destroying the fund which must provide employment for the future. At such a crisis the country suffers throughout every class; but with every risk there is only one course to be taken. As soon as capital ceases to return a profit, it will cease to employ labour; it will employ it while a shadow of profit remains; it will employ it even when it merely returns itself; but when activity is only the wearing out of destruction, it is withdrawn, and remains at rest, till better times arrive.

And during this time of trial, in which the losses of the masters were great, and the sufferings of the workers extreme, Mr. Fielden continued to employ and produce, though at a certain loss. The Income-tax was imposed, and that part of it which levied a per centage on profits, was to be calculated on what had been derived from every trade and business in the three previous years. Mr. Fielden, being in a position that did not depend on credit or opinion, would not assume the prosperity that had not existed, and at once returned his profits at what they really were—nil. The Commissioners, however, knowing his affairs much better than he did himself, settled it that a mill, worked at a period when the produce could not be sold, must be an El Dorado—made a bold plunge of conjecture, and estimated a loss, as a profit of £24,000 a year! They subsequently amended their guess, by reducing it to £12,000; but Mr. Fielden would no more pay this than the first refused, the demand, appealed to no purpose, offered to produce for inspection his books, accounts, and the balance-sheet of the concern—all in vain. A levy was made, his stock seized, and sold by auction for an amount that far more than covers the unjust demand, leaving him in every way a loser—robbed by the most moral and moderate of Governments, strictly "according to law."

This is a gigantic wrong, like which there are thousands of small ones that have not been, and never will be, heard of. Many a firm would not dare to return its profits as "nil," though painfully conscious of the fact: reputation is credit, and they must assume the possession of the wealth they have not. With credit and time they may retrieve their position; without them, ruin is certain. Nor are all men members of Parliament, with the opportunity of exposing an injustice; and the great bulk of busy traders cannot engage in an endless dispute with Government Boards and Departments, to be sent from Assessors to Commissioners, from Locals to Specials, and back to the Locals again, sure only of this, that no redress is to be got from either, and that to the first loss of money, that of time and temper will be added in looking for the remedy. This has long been a general conviction, but it is only now made known that no remedy exists. It is acknowledged, on the best authorities, that neither Parliament, nor the Treasury, nor the Exchequer, has any control over the Income Tax Commissioners. The people have nothing to do but to pay the money, the Government must be content to receive it. Supposing it possible that the people complained of paying too much, while the Government thought it was receiving too little, even in such an extreme case as this, there is no remedy. The nation and its rulers are alike "bound by the act."

ELY, FROM THE RAILWAY STATION.—(SEE PAGE 76).

By some strange omission, inexcusable even when the act was supposed to be passed for three years, the appeals can only be made to the Local Commissioners, or the "Specials" who sit at Somerset House; the aggrieved person may choose which horn he will be impaled by, but there can be no resistance; the Treasury is annihilated, save as the recipient of proceeds; the Chancellor of the Exchequer has no existence; the Home Secretary may supersede magistrates, but on a Commissioner of the Income Tax he has no power; the Sovereign is an Eidolon, a phantom. The Commissioners form an imperium in imperio, and like the proud city of old, on which, however, destruction came at last, they can say "we are and none else beside us."

This is a great defect; except on the express declaration of the Government itself, we could not believe that such enormous power had been given to any set of men without check or responsibility. They levy and assess under an Act of Parliament; but the result is pretty much the same, whether a man's property is confiscated by the ukase of an Emperor, or the decision of a Board of Commissioners, confirming an assessment of which a per centage remains behind, and does not find its way to the Exchequer.

A tax on property is fair and just, and can be easily collected; a tax on income and profits will always be arbitrary, inquisitorial, unjust, and a constant occasion of anger, disputes, and bitterness. It will be always difficult to collect, for many of those who have to pay it will return the amount as much too low from design, as those who levy it will fix it too high from ignorance. In the present case every source of information was proffered to the Commissioners; the man who was evading the due payment would shrink from inquiry. All those documents proved a loss; the law only authorises a tax on profit. Yet the Commissioners choose to say, "You have made £12,000 a-year; the tax is levied; the appeal is only from Commissioners, and beyond them there is no power on earth can give any redress." What is this but confiscation?

The remedy must be provided by the same power that created the evil –an Act of Parliament. Some department of the Government should be invested with a controlling or discretionary power in such cases. There may be many objections to a power of inquiring into private pecuniary affairs being given to the Executive; it may be doubted whether it would be so mischievous in effect as giving the same power to men of the same locality, who will be free to exercise it over their neighbours, their rivals, in business or politics. At all events the Government, by some means, should have a control over the collectors of its own revenue; and, if the parties complaining were so confident of their case as to offer all their books and accounts for inspection, there can be no objection to the constitution, by law, of a Board of Appeal, to receive such evidence, and to possess a releasing or reducing power over the assessment. Till that is done, the gatherers of the Income-tax are Law, Queen, and Constitution. In the days when Whig patronage was in full blossom, Sydney Smith said, the destinies of the human race were falling into the hands of that universal agent, the "Barrister of seven years' standing;" the fate—that is, the fortune—of every man now is at the mercy of the Income-tax Commissioner!

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

The influx of residents to Versailles is greater than at any period within our memory—indeed it almost approaches its pristine splendour. As in the olden time, it is not unlikely to walks to meet a Princess or a Queen threading the greensward beneath the giant chestnuts. The truth is, Versailles—born beneath regal influence—stands impassive in its exclusiveness At the theatre no murmur of applause disturbs its equanimity—the brilliant cascades which attract so many sight-seers do not elicit the slightest exclamation—the ci devant air of our friend Horace casts its spirit over the spot. It is the spot for a royal abode, and indeed those kings who have not been taken off by human hands have enjoyed themselves epitahy here—for instance Louis XIV. and XV., and save the 5th of October, of lug obrious memory, no case can be cited wherein the Royal peace has been disturbed. Their power may be pardoned in the admiration of the palace it has erected. The errors of one epoch become the benefit of another—the money spent by the "million" for various pleasures has more than repaid to the nation the original sum disposed on its erection by Louis XIV. Hindoos, Egyptians, and Greeks are now seen admiring its splendid galleries—and each Wednesday and Saturday are given military concerts in the Park. The pity is that the time selected for performance is when all the world is at dinner I was present a few days since at the examination of the scholars belonging to the chief primary school established at Versailles. The one to which I allude is the most important, it being under the special control of M. Filhon, and the religious protection of the excellent curé of Nôtre Dame. The Queen, Madame la Duchesse d'Orleans, and the Comte de Paris honoured the examination by their presence. The effect was touching, from the contrast of royalty and the hard simplicity of the establishment. The entire furniture consists of strait wooden forms, with balls running on a wire for the teaching of addition—a white wooden table, and two images of the Virgin holding the holy child to her bosom. Certainly no building better merits the Royal confidence; to shelter from vagrancy the child of the workman, while its parents are obliged to labour, and unable to watch over it—to impart to its earliest years habits of regularity and order; to sow the seeds of emulation into its young mind to train these half orphans in good thoughts by a system which, under the guise of play, will not disgust the infant mind, is rendering an immense benefit to society. The larger number of the children were not aware that the visitors were the Queen; to be sure they had the natural idea that the two ladies and the pretty boy had come purposely to see and give them something if they behaved well; but the buzzas of the crowd, and the members of the adjoining Normal School, who were now in the garden, soon apprised them that the boy was the Comte de Paris. The delight of the children was excessive at the sympathy excited by their improvement, called forth the praises of the young Prince The children spelt their words without hesitation, counted their balls without massing, marched round singing the hymns, and repeated themselves at the sign of the instructor, each carrying its small basket One of the smallest of the number could not reach the second range of balls to finish its sum; the Duchess of Orleans hastened to its assistance, and lent the baby her parasol to reach it. The course of studies finished, there arrived four immense baskets filled with toys. The effect was delightful. The Queen placed a sum of money in the hands of the Mayor, and observed, "It is my wish that the sum should be placed at the disposal of the other schools, for though to the King belong the splendours of France, to me belongs the care of its suffering subjects." Upon the departure of the Royal visitors the shrill shouting, of the children, and the buzzas of the crowd, were deafening.

Anything so harrowing as the accounts which are about relative to the discipline of the army at Algiers, surely were never conceived by the heated brain of the wildest writer of romance. The treatment of the soldiery out rages every sentiment of humanity, violates the laws, and is opposite to the very spirit of modern usage and society. And yet not a single French journal has raised its voice to call the aggressors to account. We do not wonder at the atrocities perpetrated by General Pelissier, for such a course of treatment cannot fail to brutify the feelings. The National certainly has, upon occasions "few and far between" hinted at the proceeding, but the accounts which have just arrived put the truth beyond all doubt. My space will not admit my citing many of the proved cases of the terrible cruelties which have been come itted. In 1844, a pioneer of the fi st company, named Pelegrouca, was attached to an iron bar affixed to his hands and feet, and exposed for two days, in a temperature of 112 degrees of Fahrenheit, on the plain of Sig. When he arrived at Oran, his wrists had so rubbed and he died during the night. Some months after, a soldier of the first battalion of Africa suffered the same punishment, and amputation of the arm followed. In the month of August, 1842, a man, having sold some cartouches, was condemned to be exposed for eight nights. One day when he refused willingly to go to the place designed, for fear of being devoured by the wild beasts, he was fastened to a tree and rubbed over with honey, and, as the torture was beyond his endurance he craved for the means of blowing out his brains. "He shall have them," said the Colonel, and ordered a pistol to be given to him The poor fellow loaded it himself, placed the barre in his mouth, and pressed the trigger with his foot, but, by an extraordinary chance, the stock missed fire and it only burst on discharge. These facts not exaggerated details, and the list of names of the poor tortured beings react to some hundreds. Captain Castellan has properly said, if the formation of the corps of discipline among the marines without having recourse to such inhumanities it would be a million fois better to suppress it altogether

The equestrian statue of the Duc d'Orleans has been placed upon its pedestal in the Court of the Louvre The head of the Prince is turned in the direction of the Pavillon de Flore and of the Tuileries The transporting and the raising of the statue, without the slightest accident, does great credit to M Rochet. The horse is perfect: it is a vigorous animal of the Norman breed. The general effect is admirable, and reflects honour on the artiste

You are aware that during the last year the Marine Department agreed with avidity to the proposition made by the Governor of Senegal, to import into France, for the purpose of being brought up and educated several children, sons or nephews of the Chiefs of the Black Countries. There were six of these children, varying from nine to fifteen years of age: Lobo, son of Peter, King of Great Bassam; Gogs, his brother; Scray, son of Waise, King near Great Bassam; Quaben, Horton, and Louis, sons of three Chiefs of Gabon Upon their arrival at Paris, in September, 1844, they were confided to the care of the principals of the Paris institution, MM Regnier and Bessac at In the black, named Sarah, was admitted to participate in the mode of education adopted for the six others Their progress has been most promising Independently of these Africans, the local administration has caused to be embarked at Senegal nine more for France, in the Nisus, six Senegalians; three of whom are destined to enter the School of Arts and Trades, to acquire a theoric ic and practical knowledge, directed by preference to agriculture. The three others have been designated by the Governor as having a decided vocation for the priesthood The realisation of these views will be one of the surest means to accomplish for the mission of civilisation and humanity, which France is called upon to fulfil on the continent of Africa.

FRANCE.

The Paris papers are much occupied with the murder of M. Leu, of Lucerne, which we mentioned in the greater part of our impression last week

The Basle Gazette, of the 24th July, states that the conductors of diligences just arrived from Lucerne, announced that Redlinger, the supposed murderer of M. Leu, had been arrested Redinger was a woodman employed by M. Leu, and had been prosecuted by him for debt Some of the Paris Opposition journals persist in affecting to believe that the death of M Leu had been a suicide The Débats and the Presse reject this supposition, which, they contend, is unwarranted by the published and admitted facts One consequence of the murder strikes the Journal des Débats as inevitable and calamitous a conflict between the Catholic party and the "Liberals," or in Switzerland also, scepticism in its worst form assumes the title of "liberalism"

"The Prince de Joinville," writes a correspondent of the Constitutionnel, "resides at Randau, within two leagues of Vichy. Every morning at six o'clock, he drives into town and takes a bath. At six he stops, passes the water, and returns at eight o'clock He has hired a small piece of ground in the house of a tobacconist He, however, sees nobody; but the inhabitants, who place great confidence in the Prince for the prosperity of their town, hope that he will accept a fête on the arrival of M. Cunin Gridaine, the Minister of Commerce"

The Moniteur publishes the law authorising the Minister of Public Works to adjudicate the Paris and Strasburg Railroad, with an embranchment upon Rheims on one side, and upon Metz and the Prussian frontier, towards Saarbruck, on the other, as also the Tours and Nantes line The maximum of the duration of the lease of the former and its embranchments is fixed at 44 years, and that of the Tours and Nantes road at 33

The Moniteur likewise prom ulgates the law relative to the embranchments of Dieppe and Fécamp upon the Rouen and Havre line, and of Aix, on the Avignon and Marseilles railway

M. Guizot has left Paris for Val Richer, his seat in Normandy. M Duchatel supplies the place of M Guizot at the Foreign office, during the absence of the latter. M. Duchatel returned to Paris, from Eau, on Sunday.

SPAIN

Our accounts from Spain state that the Queen, her mother, and the Infants, arrived at Saragossa on the 23rd ult., in the evening. They were received at the limits of the district by the Governor-General Quesada, the Political Chief, and a number of the principal inhabitants, and on reaching the city were met by General Martinez de la Rosa, who had preceded the Roya party, and the four ministers who had arrived from Madrid. The Queen, her sister, and the Queen-Mother, were in the same carriage, followed by General Narvaez and the Secretary in a second carriage with the Infants, and came the Royal suite. There was no enthusiasm manifested on the Queen's arrival, and this was the case when the Court left Barcelona On the 24th there was a reception to congratulate Queen Christina on her fête day, which was attended by the Ministers and civil and military authorities, as well as by several notabilities who had arrived from Madrid

The English experimental squadron which lately left Portsmouth, is cruising on the coast of Spain. A letter from St Sebastian states that it had made its appearance off that port, and that, from the Chateau de la Mota, the crew and the inhabitants on board might be distinctly seen

The Chamber of Commerce of Barcelona was preparing to address all the Chambers of Commerce in the kingdom, calling on them to petition the Cortes against the Treaty of Commerce with England, and to second their wishes. Should England persist in excluding them, the Barcelona merchants recommend recourse to reprisals, and propose to prohibit the importation into Spain, Cuba, and the Philippines, of various articles of English manufacture, such as linens, cloth, hardware, muslin, machinery, &c.

THE UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.

The Acadia has arrived at Liverpool. The intelligence from the United States, Canada, Mexico, and Texas, is of more than usual interest, and extends over the period of a fortnight

The Acadia brings to England the Hon. Louis M'Lane, the Minister to the Court of St. James. Mr M'Lane has come to this country with special reference to the settlement of the Oregon question, although Mr Buchanan, the United States Secretary of State, at Washington, may reserve to himself the signing of the ultimate treaty. The papers convey the important news, that the treaty with Mexico had been rejected, and that the Texan Congress had agreed to the annexation of Mexico to the United States.

The annexation of Texas to the United States was announced by President Jones in a long message to the Texan Congress.

The Washington Globe, of the United States Government organ, contains the whole of the diplomatic correspondence between the respective Governments of the United States and Texas, in regard to annexation, the publication of which appears to have given great offence to the American press, inasmuch as the United States Government, through its Executive, distinctly guarantees its assistance to Texas, in case of aggression from foreign powers The correspondence is rather interesting, as showing the opinion of Major Donelson, on the part of the United States, to promote immediate an exation, at all hazards.

The Sun of Monday, of June 28, gives an account of another terrible fire in that city. On the previous Saturday, about eleven o'clock, flames were discovered issuing from the hangard of M Fessier, Esq., N.P., in Augustus street, in a suburb called St Antoine The alarm of fire was soon accurately given, but at the earliest moment possible a number of persons were on the spot, who lent every assistance towards arresting the progress of the fire (which, it is said, arose from the explosion of a can of hot ashes on a dunghill.) By degrees it crept from street to street, and the final result was that "the entire suburb of St. John," including that denominated St Lewis Suburbs, is, with the exception of a few paltry streets, in which out few houses had been built, entirely devastated

This destruction of property was not effected without loss of life. One man was killed by the falling materials, and several persons received severe injuries, some serious fractures, of which one, M Kenna, has since died.

At eight o'clock on Sunday morning the fire may be said to have been stayed

In the two fires (that of the 28th of May and the present one), at the least 3000 houses have been consumed, and 20,000 persons rendered houseless.

The New Orleans Picayune of the 2nd of July, says:—

"FROM MEXICO.—REVOLUTION IN TOBASCO.—By the Mexican schooner, Alvarado, Captain Sanchez, arrived from Campeachy, we learn that a revolution broke out at Tobasco, on the 15th of June, which resulted in the overthrow of the constituted authorities and central system

"But few particulars have reached us, but, from a letter received by a highly respectable commercial house here, we learn that the people of Tobasco, headed by General Martinez and Colonels Montero and Bruno, declared in favour of the Federal Government, and for the authorities that figured in 1834, with the exception of Santa Anna, who opposed the said system at that time. They were successful in the movement, meeting with little or no opposition The people remained quiet, but the commercial community were all in favour of the movement, fearful of its consequences, and of the losses they might sustain."

Another of those frightful accidents for which the Mississippi steam boats are so unenviably notorious, happened at New Orleans on the 1st ult. The steamer was the Marquette, which was about leaving for Cincinnati. The boiler, deck, and the cabin, as far aft as the wheel-house, were torn to pieces by the force of the explosion. The number of persons standing on the boiler deck was variously estimated at from 10 to 15, among whom were some cabin passengers. They were all blown to the height of 150 to 200 feet in the air. Some had their limbs rent asunder, and all of them fell into the river, a throat exhibiting any signs of life, and sank instantly to the bottom. The number killed, wounded, and missing, was, as nearly as could be ascertained, about 30.

The scene presented on the lower deck was one of the most heartrending description. In one place lay a body with a head severed from it; another man both legs torn off above the knees; some with frightful wounds and gashes upon their heads and limbs; others without scarce y a particle of skin upon their bodies, from the effects of the steam and scalding water. A lad, of some fifteen years of age, was thrown upon the Levee with both legs broken. The ladies and children in the cabin were all saved, and escaped injury, except a little girl, who was scalded, but not mortally. The boat immediately took fire, and was entirely consumed

The New York Express of the evening preceding the Acadia's departure publishes the following:—

GREAT FIRE AT MATANZAS—LOSS ESTIMATED AT EIGHT HUNDRED DOLLARS

We have a Havannan paper of the 26th ult., which gives us the details of a great fire in Matanzas that happened on the 26th. It appears that a severe calamity has befallen the rich city of Matanzas. At half past eight in the morning the bells of the parish churches announced that the richest part of the city was seized by the flames. In fact, the fire had burst out, as we are informed, in a carpenter's shop in the Marina, where a large collection of timber supplied abundance of fuel to the flames. The fire immediately extended to the adjacent buildings, which were all of wood, and of such large as to be highly combustible, so that the conflagration extended toward the Royal Custom House, and to the opposite corner and to the house of Don Bartolomé de la Mater, which was soon seized by the devouring element, threatening to consume the whole town. If is three o'clock in the afternoon, and we have just left the scene of the catastrophe; and, while the ruins of the edifices of the whole Marina are consuming, the principal block and another adjoining it have disappeared A great part of the contiguous blocks in the west have also been destroyed in part. We may truly say that what has been the general desolation of the great part of the commercia. wealth of their city has now been made a prey to the flames. The losses have been incalculable; and consternation so great that the streets were blocked up with men, women, and children flying for their lives from the flames. The splendid house of Don Vicente de Junco has been destroyed.

BUENOS AYRES.

The following important information has been received per Danish brig Henrietta Sophia, which left Buenos Ayres on the 29th of May. The letter from which the extract is made is dated the day previously:

"Since Mr. Ouseley's arrival here nothing has occurred to materially alter, as yet, the appearance of political affairs in this quarter.

"Negotiations are going on for the pacification of the other side of the river, but what will come out the slightest idea they will find successful, unless the Governor of this place be allowed to have entirely his own way, or instead of negotiating, force be used, and then probably other evils would arise of a more hopeful nature as far as the war in the Oriental Republic, for Rosas will not be forced into making peace or rather be forced to withdraw his army from the state—without taking revenge in some way on Engli-h commerce.

"Rosas supporting the war with Monte Video at an end, another would begin with Paraguay or Brazils, for both of which our Governor is disposed. He never will be at peace. But for wars he would have no pretence for resisting the full power of the Anglo-French force. Unless there were somebody to make an outcry against there would be no motive for keeping a large army; without an army he would soon be overthrown

"The Brazil packet is said to have arrived at Monte Video, and also the new French Minister or Commissioner. English and French men of war are almost daily coming and going between this place and Monte Video It is said Mr Ouseley is going down to Monte Video The rumoured change in the Ministry at France may have considerable effect on the negociations here Dollars have risen from 200 dollars to 208 dollars within the last month. Immediately after Mr. Ouseley's arrival they rose to 200 Dollars as above. Exchange on London has fallen from 4d. to 3¾d."

ARRIVAL OF THE OVERLAND MAIL.

INDIA.

The Bombay Mail has arrived with news from that Presidency to the 20th of June, from Calcutta to the 9th, Madras to the 11th, and from China to the 5th of May.

We regret to state that cholera has been very prevalent in Bombay and Poonah, and that it has raged in Lahore to a fearful extent

The Governor General has received the announcement, brought by the last mail, of the appointment of the Sadar Jowahir Singh to be the Prime Minister, and the retirement of Gholab Singh to his fortress of Jumoo

Prince Peshora Singh is stated to be in rebellion against the authorities at Lahore

The attack on Peshawur has been abandoned by Dost Mahomed and Akbar.

The Governor General remained in Calcutta, but it was expected he would proceed in October to the north-west provinces to reduce the Sikhs to order

In commercial affairs there has been no material change. Although money continued scarce, Government securities were in demand at the last quotations.

CHINA.

From China we learn that a riot had taken place at Vittoria; it had been suppressed without much difficulty. The British troops had been withdrawn from Koluugsoo, in accordance with the terms of our treaty, on the 23rd of March, and the Chinese took possession.

An English merchant having built a vessel of 70 tons, gave the command of it to a Chinese named Fowqua, to enable him to levy a species of black mail on the native smuggling boats engaged in the opium trade. Suspicions were excited. Fowqua was seized, tortured, and denounced a hundred per sons as being implicated in the transaction

The mate and gunner of the Ariel, having on board upwards of 100,000 dollars, escaped in a native boat, but were ultimately defeated. The mate was killed, and the gunner wounded

POLICE.

A MAN COMMITTED FOR ATTEMPTING TO MURDER HIS BROTHER.—At SOUTHWARK Police office, on Tuesday, Thomas Pearce, a tripe dresser, in Bermondsey street, was placed at the bar before Mr. Cottingham, charged with attempting to murder his brother, James Pearce, on the preceding afternoon.—The complainant stated that he keeps a tripe shop in Bermondsey street, and that the prisoner, who is his brother, carries on business of a similar description, and within two doors of him, in the same street. On the preceding afternoon the prisoner came in front of complainant's shop, and complained that he would have to leave the neighbourhood that night He was in a state of considerable excitement. Shortly afterwards he was observed to enter a barber's shop contiguous to his house, where he remained for some time, and when he returned the prisoner was rushed into complainant's shop, and into the parlour, where he was sitting with Mr. Mowley, a barrister, who had called to transact some business there. The moment the prisoner made his appearance he exclaimed, "Is this your shop, or is it mine, James? I have come to ask that question, and I will have an answer." Complainant, in reply, said the shop did not belong to either of them, but to Mr Messenger, of the borough market The instant he had given expression to the words quoted, the prisoner, who had in his hands a razor, made a sudden effort, struck the prisoner's arm with such force as to prevent the intended attempt upon his brother's life The complainant added that the prisoner was then charged, and in addition to the razor he had in his hand, another was found in his trousers' pocket; that some time ago the prisoner was held to nail for threatening his life, and in default of sureties was committed, and that since he had got release he had on many occasions threatened to murder him. When the prisoner was called upon to answer the charge, he said that of late he had experienced great vexatious in business, that on the preceding day an execution was put in his house for £8 15s. for rent due to the landlord, which he was unable to meet: that as he was on bad terms with his brother he did not at first make known the circumstance to him, but intended to have gone and borrowed the money of him, and not such has caused in such an extremity. Instead of carrying that project into effect, he suffered himself to be enticed into a public house, where he drank more than he ought to have done, and that when he left it he was not aware what he had taken, he had unfortunately made use of some threatening language to his brother, and afterwards rushed into his house. He (the prisoner), however, would declare that he had no wish whatever to take his brother's life, although he admitted having had razors about him at the time The complainant shed tears, and expressed himself to the effect that he had no desire to hurt his brother.—Mr. Cottingham said that the magistrates appeared for many cases too late, and that he should not be doing his duty to the public if he suffered either his own or the complainant's feelings to operate on the occasion, and that he should, therefore, commit the prisoner for trial.

A HORSE ATTACKED WITH HYDROPHOBIA.—Last Sunday morning a labourer in the employ of Mr. Hallett, a farmer at Cuckfield, took three horses from the stable and turned them into the field. Shortly afterwards one of the animals began to evince symptoms of hydrophobia, tearing up the earth, dashing wildly about the field, biting the other horses most fearfully, and gnawing the gate-posts and rails, seizing the stones in the path with its teeth, and throwing them into the air with great violence. What the fit was on, a boy accidentally passed through the field, and had a most miraculous escape. He was attacked by the infuriated animal, and he may attribute his fortunate escape to an umbrella, which the horse seized with great violence bursted into tear, and the bounded off The fit was on in several more, during which time he had lacerated himself in a shocking manner. At length he became exhausted, and dropped dead in the field. The other horses have since been destroyed.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

PUBLISHING THE LIVES OF DECEASED PEERS.—Lord CAMPBELL made a motion to rescind the standing order, prohibiting the publication of the lives or letters of deceased peers, and gave some account of the circumstances under which it originated. In 1795, the peers were startled by their publishing an adve tisement in the Postboy, intimating that the famous Co l was about to pub ish a volume, containing Pope's correspondence, for thirty years, with Hanbax and other noble personages. Whereupon the Black Rod was ordered to be rig ht the copies of the book he could find, and the publisher himself, before them; and the standing order was enacted, and was still standing, a dead letter on their journals. He moved that t he rescinded, which was agreed to

The Commons inclosure Bill was discussed in Committee, and the various cla ses agreed to.

Much other miscellaneous business was disposed of, the house having sat till eleven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

At usual, the house sat at 12 o'clock. The Games and Wagers Bill went through Committee. Many bills were advanced a stage.

EDUCATION.—In the afternoon sitting, on the motion for the house re solving itself into a committee of supply, Mr. EWART moved the following resolution:—"That a statement be made, on the part of the Government, of the condition and prospect of such edu ational establishments as are supported wholly or partially by a vote of this house. That it is expedient that the formation of public libraries, freely open to the public, be encouraged. That it is expedient that schools for the training of masters be more extensively promoted. That it is expedient that appointments be made in the public offices of Government be made (as far as possible) by examination of the merits of the candidates for such offices."—Sir R. PEEL entered into a statement of the views of the Government, having for their object the extension of the sound and increased educational grants more generally useful in a double point of view—that of elevating the status of the teachers and the quality of the education given to the pupil.—After some observations from Mr. Wyse, Mr. Hume, and Mr. Hawes, Mr. EWART withdrew his motion.

THE SCHOOL OF DESIGN.—Mr. WILLIAMS next called attention to the constitution and management of the School of Design, moving for a committee to inquire into the allegations contained in the petition of the senior students.—Sir GEORGE CLERK gave some explanations of, and comments upon the discontents of the pupils, which he ridiculed as out of those causes, ignorance, conceit, and pique of a few amongst them, and which were utterly unworthy the attention of the house. The school had made satisfactory progress, and the exhibition this year would be one exceedingly creditable.—After some observations from Mr. Ewart, Mr Wakley, and Mr. Hawes (who, as one of the council, defended the management of the school, as did Mr. Wyse), the motion was withdrawn.

The house at le gth got into committee of supply, and many estimates were voted.

Sir J. GRAHAM then intimated that he should withdraw the Physic and Surgery Bills till the next Session, when he should most certainly re introduce them

The house sat till two o'clock in the morning.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

THE DUBLIN AND GALWAY RAILWAY BILL.—The Earl of HARDWICKE moved the resumption of the adjourned debate on the Dublin and Galway Railway Bill; the question before the house being that the further consideration of the bill be postponed to that day three months.—The Marquis of CLANRICARDE exculpated the promoters of the scheme, on the ground that, though gross frauds had been committed in making up the share list, other companies had been guilty of similar practices. He threatened their lordships with a renewed cry for Repeal of the Union, should they do justice through

CELEBRATION OF THE FETES OF JULY IN PARIS.

The anniversary fêtes of the "three glorious days" have been celebrated this year in Paris with rather more theatrical display than usual. Tuesday, the last of the "three days," presented the most remarkable features. Salvos of artillery were discharged at the Hotel des Invalides at six o'clock in the morning and at six in the evening. Military pantomimes were performed at the two theatres, from two o'clock till six at night, in the square of the Champs Elysées. A huge pole (the Mât de Cocagne), ornamented with six prizes, was raised in the centre of the square. Four orchestras for dancing were prepared. At the Barrière du Trone there was a theatre for pantommes and another for tumbling and rope-dancing, two orchestras for dancing, and a pole with prizes. At eight o'clock in the evening there were pyrotechnics. The Grand Square, the Grand Avenue of the Champs Elysées, the Avenue d'Antin, the Place de la Barrière du Trone, and all the public édifices were grandly illuminated. At three o'clock there were boat-races and other nautical diversions on the Seine, between the Pont Royale and the Pont de la Concorde. A grand concert was executed in the gardens of the Tuileries at seven o'clock in the evening. At nine o'clock the Pont de la Concorde and the Pont des Invalides were illuminated—the craft garlanded and illuminated. The banks of the Quai d'Orsay, from the Pont Royale to the Pont des Invalides, were ornamented with obelisks illuminated and banners with the national colours. At the same hour there was a grand demonstration of fireworks from the Quai d'Orsay.

The fountains in the Place de la Concorde played in the course of the day, and as usual were a source of great attraction.

On Tuesday, in consequence of the fêtes, the Exchange and the public offices were closed.

On Monday, funeral services were performed in all the churches in the capital and the neighbourhood, in honour of the victims who fell during the struggle. In the church of St. Paul, in which parish the Column of July is placed, a special service was celebrated, which was attended by the Prefect of the Seine, the Commandant of the National Guard and his staff, General Sebastiani (the commandant of the First Military Division), General Aussick (the commandant of Paris), with the higher officers of the whole of the garrison of Paris. The Column of July was hung with crape, and the flags on the public offices were all hung half-mast high during the day.

The MAT DE COCAGNE, or pole, which is climbed for prizes, of course was a great object of attraction with the honest bourgeois of Paris. Most of our readers are probably aware that the struggle for prizes is carried on by means of a high pole fixed in the Champs Elysées, and the prizes, which generally consist of a watch and some articles of jewellery, are placed at the top of the pole. The pole is well soaped or greased, particularly near the top, so that it is a very difficult matter to attain the summit. Some of the cunning competitors fill their pockets with sand to neutralise the effects of the grease. Sometimes one man mounts on another's shoulders, and they thus render each other mutual assistance to gain the summit; but the moment a slip takes place, it is impossible to maintain a hold of the pole, and down comes the competitor amidst the jeers of the multitude. It is only by dint of perseverance, and from the number of persons who have climbed, that the greasy substance wears off, and the summit is gained. This event is usually announced by a tremendous fanfare; and there is, perhaps, scarcely any occasion upon which a more boisterous expression of the genuine gaiety and fun of the French populace is exhibited than at the result of the important struggle at the Mât de Cocagne.

The papers, of course, take advantage of the occasion of these fêtes to review the history of 1830. Upon one side we have a picture of peace, plenty, and security; upon the other a lamentation somewhat discordant, for the choristers are rabid Republicans, unforgiving Legitimists, and violent Napoleonists. The state of the weather has been pressed into the service of philosophers, who would be shocked at the supposition that they were superstitious. The Courrier Français sings, in the style of Ossian—"The sun of July, that once beamed with promise over Belgium, Italy, and Poland, now hid behind a cloud, ashamed of the degeneracy of France." "As if to spoil this fine burst (says a Paris letter of Tuesday), the sun shone out very respectably at eleven o'clock, and gave promise of a return of fine weather."

THE MAT DE COCAGNE.

PLACE DE LA CONCORDE, PARIS.

RELIC OF NELSON.—It appears that the coat and waistcoat worn by Nelson at Trafalgar (and engraved in our Number of last week), together with his cocked hat, and several other articles of his property, were detained for some years, for the debt of £129, under the following circumstances:—The late Alderman Jonathan Joshua Smith was executor of Lord Nelson with Lady Hamilton, and, prior to his death, goods sufficient to fill six crates (amongst which were the coat, hat, breeches, &c.) were placed in the Town Hall, Southwark, under the care of Mr. Kinsey, the chief officer, and who now attends the aldermen at the Central Criminal Court. Kinsey was Alderman Smith's confidential servant for a number of years, and to him £120 was owing at his master's death. Application was made to the Court of Aldermen by some members of the Nelson family for the restitution of the property. After a long discussion Alderman Lucas consented to act as the arbitrator between the family and Kinsey, and £30 was paid to the latter in satisfaction of his claim; upon this the things were re packed and sent to Mrs. Smith, at Heroncourt, Richmond, in whose possession they remained until the purchase was made of the coat by Prince Albert.

SAFETY OF RAILWAY TRAVELLING.—Since the opening of the London and Birmingham Railway throughout, in September, 1838, upwards of 5,600,000 persons have travelled upon the line. These persons have each, on the average, travelled over 65 miles of the railway. This shows the number of miles travelled to be 325,000,000. With this enormous amount of work done on the London and Birmingham Railway, one passenger only has been killed upon the line. It was observed by Mr. Wakley, at an inquest held by him on Saturday last, to be "a singular fact, that during the six years he had filled the office of coroner, although 15 miles of the Great Western, and 14 miles of the London and Birmingham lines of railway passed through his district, he had not held an inquest on a passenger who had met his death on a railroad. During the same time he had held several inquests on passengers by stage coaches—a fact which showed the superiority of railway travelling."

LIVERPOOL AND MANCHESTER RAILWAY.—The proprietors in this railway company held a special general meeting at Liverpool on Wednesday for the purpose of declaring a dividend for the half year ending June 30, out of the clear profits of the undertaking. The report stated that there had been an increase of gross receipts in each department of traffic, as compared with the corresponding period of last year; the number of miles run by the engines in the six months had been about 60,000 more than in the previous half year. The receipts amounted to £134,124 18s. 8d., and the expenditure to £65,510 9s. 1d., leaving a net profit upon the half year of £68,514 2s. 4d To this was added a surplus balance on the 31st of December last of £15,999 0s. 9d., thus making a disposable sum of £83,513 0s. 1d. The directors recommended a dividend of £8 upon the half year, which would absorb £73,144 10s., and thus leave a balance of £10,468 19s. 1d. to be carried to the next half-year's account. The report was confirmed, and the resolution for the dividend unanimously carried.

A DOG KILLED BY BEES.—On Tuesday week a dog belonging to Mr. Thompson, Back Sandholes, Paisley, which had been chained in the garden, for the purpose of watching it and some bee-hives, had snapped at a few of the bees that were humming about him, and killed some of them. As is the usual practice with these busy insects, the whole swarm turned out to revenge the death of their fellows. The dog was accordingly attacked by the humming tribe in hundreds, and so unmercifully punished for his temerity, that he died in the course of the afternoon. On examining the dog after death, it was found that 69 of his tormentors had fixed their stings in one ear

NEW STOCK EXCHANGE AT LIVERPOOL.—A new Stock Exchange was opened in Liverpool on Monday week, in a larger room of the extensive premises, in Moorfields, recently occupied as the British Hotel. The members of the new association commenced business with great spirit and energy, and the transactions of the week have been, considering the infancy of the concern, tolerably numerous. The lists of current prices and of the daily sales have been duly issued, and have exhibited a very fair amount of operations, particularly in that description of stock that has been most popular in the market. The new association has received the designation of the Royal Stock Exchange. The rates of commission are the same as those in the older association.

FASHIONS FOR AUGUST.

(Abridged from the "London and Paris Ladies' Magazine of Fashion.")

Shot silks have become so common, that plain colours are now considered more elegant; stripes are still fashionable. Redingotes and peignoirs are the favourite style, the material and form alone distinguishing the négligé from the toilette. For young ladies, instead of redingotes, robes of coutil, or plain foulard, embroidered in wide braid; gimp is more worn than ever, and equally applied to dresses of coutil as taffetas d'Italie: it harmonises well with the buttons so much used: narrow ceintures, with small buckles and long ends are reappearing; for the sea-side and country wear, foulards écrus are much in request, with deep flounces, festonnés in the same colour, the bodies very high, but open in front, and chemisette embroidered or plissé.

FASHIONS FOR AUGUST.

As jackets continue to be used with some dresses, they have been introduced to put on and off at pleasure, thus entirely changing the style of a dress, and forming two different toilettes. Leghorn bonnets continue as ever the favourites of the Parisian ladies; they are ornamented with three tips of feathers, termed panaches, or a single ostrich feather laid flat across. The Pamela bonnets are not very generally adopted, but the small bonnets are expected, are long, to yield to them; the form is spread, and rounded at the ears; they are made in paille de riz, crape lined with pink gauze, or tulle bouillonné.

Mantelets écharpes are often preferred to the real mantelet, being smaller both in the pelerine and ends. Mantelets écharpes are pretty of white poult de soie, trimmed round with a new kind of lace fringe, the long ends forming three folds, which are fixed, and straight down from the waist.

Caps are all small in form, and very few have brides, though some have long lappets, but the majority are rounded.

FASHIONS FOR AUGUST

The Pamela cap is with embroidered crown, tied with a single nœud, and long ends, on each side three rows of clear Mechlin lace, or a single wide one, which serpentines over the forehead, and turning round the head, is tied at intervals with choux of gauze of two colours.

Funeral of Lord Canterbury.—On Monday, the remains of the late Viscount Canterbury were removed from Southwick Crescent for interment in the family vault at Addington, near Croydon. The mournful cavalcade consisted of a hearse drawn by six horses, preceded by mutes on horseback; six mourning coaches, each drawn by four horses; and followed by the carriages of several of the nobility and gentry, friends of the lamented deceased. The first mourning coach contained the present Viscount Canterbury, the Hon. H Manners Sutton, Under Secretary of the Home Department (sons of the late Viscount), Lord Manners and Mr. Sanderson, M.P., and Captain Powlson (son in law), who attended as chief mourners. The other carriages were filled with the private friends and distant relatives of the late Viscount. The coffin is of solid mahogany, and covered with rich crimson velvet. It bears the following inscription:—"Charles Manners Sutton, First Viscount Canterbury, Lord Battesford, P.C., G.C.B., LL.D., died the 21st of July, 1845, aged sixty five years." The remains of his Lordship were interred in the same vault at Addington with those of his father, the late Archbishop of Canterbury. Lady Canterbury still remains at Teignmouth. Her Ladyship is not sufficiently recovered from her late indisposition to return to town.

Will of the late John Marshall, Esq.—The will of the late John Marshall, Esq., of Hallsteads, in the parish of Greystoke, Cumberland, has been proved. His personal property within the province of Canterbury is sworn under £160,000. He appoints his sons, William Marshall, Henry Cowper Marshall, and James Garth Marshall, his executors. Bequeaths to his wife an annuity of £3000 for her life, and a legacy of £50,000 absolutely. To his daughter, Lady Montesgle, a legacy of £20,000, and a like legacy of £20,000 to each of his other married daughters, and leaves to each of them a large share from the residue of his personal estate. To his daughter Ellen £30,000, and large pecuniary bequests to others of his family, and legacies to his servants. The freeholds and surplus residue to his sons. To his eldest son, William, he leaves the mansion at Hallsteads, as well as all his securities and stock in Pennsylvania and Ohio. The will was made on the 19th of October last, with a codicil written at the foot thereof of the same date.

ASCENT OF MR. GREEN'S BALLOON, ON MONDAY LAST.

ASCENT OF THE NASSAU BALLOON.

On Monday evening, Mr. Green made a very beautiful ascent in his monster Nassau Balloon, from the grounds of Cremorne House, Chelsea, which were crowded with company to witness the spectacle. There was on the occasion of this ascent some novelty to attract the spectators and to amuse them. In addition to Mr. Green, to Lord George Beresford, and an officer of the 1st Regiment of Life Guards, to one or two other gentlemen, and to Mrs. Green and another lady, there was amongst the "intrepid aeronauts" the celebrated Mr. Thomas Matthews, the Clown of Drury Lane Theatre, who immediately before the ascent favoured his companions in the car, and the thousands of persons who surrounded it, with the favourite ballad of "Hot Codlins." Mr. Matthews was equipped in full theatrical costume; the rest of the party in clothes more appropriate for an aerial trip. The ascent was a fine one; it took place shortly before 7 o'clock, the wind blowing lightly from the west. On its departure from Cremorne Gardens, the balloon was carried east by north, and passed over Chelsea Hospital, the new Bridewell, and the Middlesex end of Westminster bridge. It subsequently went directly over the Post-office, going towards Haggerstone, Dalston, and Clapton, over Stamford hill, towards the reservoir of the New River. The sudden change of temperature, which took place in a space of about four minutes (the altitude having varied from between 1000 or 2000 feet to 6500) produced a sudden shivering in the aeronauts. After being in the air about two hours and twenty minutes, the balloon was safely landed in a large marsh, at Tottenham, near the residence of Mr. H L. Small, a director of the Northern and Eastern Counties Railway. Mr Small and his family hospitably received the adventurous company. When at a height of about 3000 feet, Mr. T Matthews, upon being requested, sang a new comic song, called "Pigs' Petitioes," which was rapturously encored.

VISIT OF THE KING OF HOLLAND TO QUEEN VICTORIA AT OSBORNE HOUSE, ISLE OF WIGHT.

(From our own Correspondent.)

On Friday last, about half-past twelve, her Majesty's steam tender yacht, the Fairy, got under weigh from Cowes Roads and proceeded to Made Hole for the purpose of conveying his Royal Highness Prince Albert to Portsmouth, to receive his Majesty the King of Holland, on his arrival at the Clarence Yard.

A little before three o'clock, his Royal Highness embarked in the Fairy, and the yacht immediately hoisted at the mainmast head the Prince's private standard, which was quartered with the Royal arms; the yacht then got under way, and proceeded direct to Portsmouth Harbour. There being no men-of-war lying at Spithead, no salutes were fired until the arrival of the Fairy off the Platform Battery, when its artillery, at about half-past three, poured forth a salute of twenty-one guns, which was immediately followed by salutes from her Majesty's ships Victory and Excellent; the former manned yards on the occasion, but did not dress ship, as on previous occasions.

On the Fairy arriving in Portsmouth Harbour, the engines were stopped when the yacht was near to the Royal Yacht Squadron cutter Intrepid, the property of his Grace the Duke of Beaufort; his Royal Highness thereupon embarked in the commander-in-chief's barge, with Commander Lowe, of the Excellent, and Acting Flag-Lieutenant Triscott on board, and, steered by the former officer, proceeded on board the Intrepid, and shook hands most cordially with the Duke and his family, who were on board. His Royal Highness, after remaining some little time on board the yacht, again embarked in the barge, and proceeded to Clarence Yard, to await the arrival of the King of Holland. His Royal Highness landed at the Clarence Yard about four o'clock, where a guard of honour of the 97th regiment, under the command of Major Gilbert William Franklyn, Captain Lewis, Lieutenants Hobson and Pelly, and Ensign Cator bearing the colours of that regiment, were drawn up and presented arms, the band playing the national anthem.

At ten minutes past four, his Majesty the King of Holland arrived at the ARRIVAL OF THE KING OF HOLLAND AT OSBORNE HOUSE, ISLE OF WIGHT.

Gosport terminus of the South-Western Railway, accompanied by M. Dedel the Dutch ambassador extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary; his Excellency M. Baud, minister of the colonies; Lieutenant Baron Mulet Carboorn and the Count Bylandt, his Majesty's aide de camps. Earl of De La Warr, lord chamberlain to the Queen; and Viscount Stamarden, lord in waiting, and the Hon. Captain Hood, groom in waiting to the Queen.

His Majesty was received, on alighting from the carriage, by Major General the Hon. Sir Hercules R. Pakenham, K.C.B., the Governor (at whom his Majesty very cordially shook hands), and by several of the Directors of the South-Western Railway Company, and was conducted by the 8th Regiment, under the command of Major Longfield, Captain Greathed Lieutenants Dickenson and Baynes, and Ensign Baynes bearing the colours of the regiment. His Majesty inspected the guard of honour, then accompanied by his suite, entered the carriages which were in waiting for their reception, and, preceded by the Major General on horseback, as Town Major, W. White, advanced to the Clarence Yard, where his Majesty was received by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, G.C.H., Captain Moubray, of her Majesty's ship, Victory, Captain Carter, the Superintendent of the Royal Clarence Yard, Captain Bing, and T. T. Grant, Esq., Storekeepers, and several other distinguished officers.

The King and his Royal Highness walked up the stage together, followed by their respective suites, and embarked at Portsmouth harbour, on the barge of the Commander-in-Chief, under salutes from her Majesty's ships Victory and Excellent; as also from the Platform Battery, when his Majesty introduced his suite to Prince Albert, a gentleman bowing to Prince Albert in the Prince to his suite. On arriving on board the Fairy, the Dutch standard was hoisted at the mainmast of the yacht, and Prince Albert's flag was hoisted at the fore.

The Fairy was again in motion, and as she proceeded out of the harbour, the Royal party were cheered by the men on the yards of the Victory.

At half-past four o'clock the yacht was out of Portsmouth harbour, and proceeded direct for Mede Hole, off which the yacht arrived at five o'clock. His Majesty and the Prince, accompanied by their suites, embarked in the Royal barge, and, in about ten minutes afterwards, landed at the pier, or jetty, on the beach. The whole of the Royal party then entered her Majesty's carriages, which were waiting for their reception, and proceeded to Osborne House.

As the Fairy steamed into the bay, the R.Y.S. schooner Camilla, T. Halifax, Jun., Esq., was, under all canvass, proceeding to Cowes, with a light breeze from the eastward; the yacht was immediately luffed round, with her head to the shore, and hove to with her head sails aback; a Royal salute was fired from the yacht, the R.Y.S ensign and barge being at the same time lowered The Camilla then proceeded to Cowes.

Lord Aberdeen, the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs; the Earl of Jersey, Master of the Horse; and the Marquis of Exeter, Groom of the Stole, landed at Cowes at four P.M., from the Ruby, one of the Southampton Royal Mail steamers, and proceeded to Osborne House, to be in attendance on his Majesty the King of Holland.

During the afternoon H.M. steamer Comet arrived in Cowes roads, from Portsmouth, with the band of the 8th Regiment, and were landed at East Cowes. This splendid band was sent over by command of her Majesty, to perform at the entertainment that evening given at Osborne House, to the King.

The Royal party, with their distinguished suites, sat down to dinner at eight o'clock, and the band performed on the lawn fronting the mansion until past midnight, when they were dismissed by her Majesty and the Prince.

His Majesty and suite slept at Norris Castle, the seat of Robert Bell, Esq., who had kindly vacated the Castle for the reception of his Majesty and suite during their brief sojourn on the Island.

The following morning, Saturday, the Fairy, at a quarter past ten, got under way from Cowes Roads, and shortly afterwards was followed by the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert, and proceeded to their moorings off Mede Hole, for the purpose of receiving on board Her Majesty and the Prince with their august visitor and suite, and proceed on an excursion to the westward.

At noon the Royal party embarked from the pier at Mede Hole, in the Royal Barge, and proceeded on board the Victoria and Albert, when the Roya Standard of England and the Royal Standard of Holland were hoisted together at the main on board the Royal yacht, which then immediately got under way, followed at a short distance in the wake by the beautiful Ada Fawn, steam tender at seven minutes before the Royal yacht arrived at Cowes Roads, passing inside of the shipping, when a Royal salute was immediately fired from Cowes Castle, and also from the Royal Yacht Squadron House Battery on the Parade. The Royal standard being hoisted at the R. Y. S Semaphore on the occasion As the Royal yacht passed through Cowes Roads, the following R. Y. S. yachts manned their yards and rigging, viz.—Alva, schooner, Sir B. R. Graham, Bart.; Camilla, schooner, Thomas Halifax, Jun., Esq.; Georgiana, schooner, Captain Lyons; Pearl, cutter, The Marquis of Anglesey; Sparrowhawk, cutter, Thomas Hallifax, Esq., &c.

The Fairy at the same time got under way, and proceeded to the westward.

His Royal Highness Prince Albert and his Majesty the King of Holland, attended by Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, and other distinguished personages, were in conversation on the starboard platform or bridge erected for her Majesty's accommodation. The yacht proceeded in shore as far as Egypt, which is about the Royal party's view the beautiful scenery of the cliff, with its detached villas peeping as it were, out of the luxuriant foliage which almost envelopes them, and was then steered over to the north shore towards "Lepe," and approached that coast at about half-past twelve, when it put it mint, from whence the yacht bore up to the eastward, and, having rounded Calshot Castle, entered the Southampton water, and, after viewing the beautiful scenery on either side as far as Netley, returned to Osborne about a quarter past one o'clock, where the Royal and illustrious personages partook of refreshment, and, at about three o'clock, his Majesty and suite, accompanied by the Prince, proceeded on the Fairy to the Royal Clarence Yard, where his Majesty was received with similar honours which attended his arrival, and left by special train for the terminus at Vauxhall.

The Fairy returned about five o'clock to Mede Hole.

The Comet steamer arrived from Portsmouth during the afternoon, and conveyed the band of the 8th Regiment on its return to Portsmouth

On Saturday afternoon her Majesty rode out on horseback in the neighbouring grounds of Osborne.

On Sunday her Majesty, accompanied by the Royal children and their attendants, took an airing in the beautiful grounds, and afterwards accompanied by his Royal Highness the Prince, Lady Portman, and their suite unexpectedly attended the morning service at Whippingham Church, where an impressive sermon from the 13th chapter of Daniel and the 13th verse, was preached by the Rev. Mr. Protheroe, the respected rector: "But go thou thy way to the end be, for thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of thy days."

On Monday, her Majesty and the Prince, in their phaeton, followed in another with Lady Portman, the Lady in Waiting, and the Earl of Jersey, Master of the Horse; also a detachment of Royal Yeomen of the Guard, Colonel Buckley, and G. E Anson, Esq., left Osborne House about eleven o'clock, for a tour in the island. The three carriages being provided with post horses, the Royal party proceeded through Newport, to Appuldurcombe, thence to Ventnor, where the Royal suite took refreshments, at Keatley's Hotel. Her Majesty and the Prince proceeded on a visit to "St. Lawrence," and appeared at short intervals at the cottage windows. Sir Peter Pelham, son of the Earl of Yarborough, Commodore of the R Y S, and afterwards returned to the hotel, where a relay of post-horses were provided. The Royal pair, followed by the Royal suite, took their departure from Ventnor, and proceeded along the Undercliff to Shanklin, returning over Arney Down to Osborne House, where the Royal party arrived about half past six o'clock. The weather was extremely fine, which enabled the Royal party to enjoy, in their open carriages, the beautiful scenery of the island.

On Tuesday the Queen, Prince, and Royal children, took riding exercise in the grounds of Osborne till ten o'clock. The Queen returned to the beach, and sketched from the marquees erected near Mead's Hole. The Royal dinner party consisted of the Queen, Prince Albert, Lady Portman, Lady Hardwicke, Lady Lyttelton, Col. Bouverie, Mr. Anson, &c. On Wednesday the weather was very unfavourable; neither her Majesty nor the Royal children left Osborne house

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

OXFORD. July 25.

This day the Rev. Henry George Joseph Parsons, M.A., and the Rev. William Scholefield, B.A., probationary Fellows of Magdalen College, were admitted actual Fellows of that society; and at the same time Mr. John Walker Knight, of the County of Northampton, was nominated and admitted a Demy of the same College.

PROMOTION OF THE REV. HUGH M'NEILE.—The Rev. Hugh M'Neile and the Rev. Hugh Stowell have been appointed Honorary Canons of Chester Cathedral by the Lord Bishop of that See. The appointment is viewed as indicating the bishop's approval of the course the rev. gentlemen pursued with regard to the Maynooth question.

A WIFE SHOT BY HER HUSBAND.—About six weeks ago, we gave an account of an occurrence which created considerable excitement at Durham. Lewis Henry Goode, the Superintendent of the Durham Police, in a fit of jealousy, shot his wife, who died a few days afterwards. The Coroner's jury gave a verdict of wilful murder. Goode was tried at Durham, on Tuesday, before Mr. Baron Rolfe. The commission of the act was fully proved, but evidence was given that the prisoner had received a wound in his head during the miners's strike, which affected his reason, and the jury acquitted him on the ground of insanity.

Now Ready, Price Eighteen Shillings, Vol. VI of
THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.
Elegantly bound in cloth and gold, gilt edges; with 11 Illustrations of the Prairie Scenes of the last Six Months, forming a most complete and valuable ILLUSTRATED HISTORY, together with a mass of useful and highly interesting articles on Art, Science and Society. Also, Cases for Binding Volumes, 2s. in the Old Cloth, as well as the previous Volumes. Vol. I., Vols. II., III., IV., and VI., Sets complete.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, August 3.—Eleventh Sunday after Trinity.—Columbus first sailed for America. 1492

MONDAY, 4.—St Dominic, founder of the Black Friars.

TUESDAY, 5.—Printing presses licensed, 1799

WEDNESDAY, 6—Transfiguration [between Europe and America, 1846.

THURSDAY, 7.—Name of Jesus.—Queen Caroline died, 1821

FRIDAY, 8.—Riot Act passed, 1715 —George Canning died, 1827.

SATURDAY, 9.—Isaac Walton born, 1593. —Accession of Louis Philippe, 1830.

HIGH WATER at London Bridge, for the Week ending August 9.

Monday.		Tuesday.		Wednesday.		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday.
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
2 27	2 52	3 18	3 43	4 10	4 35	4 58	5 23	5 45	6 10	6 30	6 59

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Boz," Isle of Man.—There is a multiplicity of opinions respecting the full age or natural life of trees. The oldest tree in the world, of which there is any record, is a cypress in Lombardy, of the age of 1891 years. There are oaks in the New Forest of date anterior to the Conquest; and a Sherwood a tree has been felled of the age of 700 years. Mr. M'William, a practical authority, in his "Essay on Dry Rot," states that many trees might be mentioned, in this and other countries, which bear sufficient testimony of their being for above 1000 years old. The elm acquires its full growth in about 150 years, but will live 500 or "00 years. The yew and the cedar are, unquestionably, two of the longest lived trees.

"Angler," Birmingham.—"A Subscriber," Liverpool.—The reply to "A Constant Reader," Inverness, in our last No., should have been, "A person born January 3, 1800, would be of the 18th century."

"E. P." Brighton.—The Medical and London Institution for Asthma and Consumption is at 32, Wells street, Oxford street. The physicians are D. W. Wilson and Sir James Eyre, M.D.; surgeons, Mr. Carter and Mr. B. Travers, F.R.S.

"A Subscriber," Wimborne, may obtain all documents issued by the Royal Agricultural Society of England, at their office, 2, Cavendish square.

"A Subscriber," Bristol.—The town address of the Marquis of Westminster is Lower Grosvenor street.

"A Subscriber," Warrington. Miss Angela Burdett Coutts is under the age of thirty-five. She was born April 25, 1814.

"Semper Fidis."—Lord Leslie, who so greatly contributed, as Lieutenant-General of the Horse, to the defeat of the Royal army at Marston Moor, was the same David Leslie who was created, after the Restoration (August 31, 1661), Baron Newark.

"G. E. K.," Dublin.—We have received the pamphlet, but cannot interfere.

"A Lady"—From 130 to 150 boys are admitted annually into Christ's Hospital; the age of admission is from seven to ten years, and the mode is by recommendation of a governor, or the order of the committee and treasurer, signed by the chief clerk.

"Hampshire."—The Ordnance maps may be purchased of Mr. Wyld, Charing-cross.

"J. B. P."—We fear that we shall not be able to include in our Illustrations the Cartoon suggested.

"A Glasgow subscriber" may receive our paper on Saturday, by applying to Mr. M'Leod, news agent.

"A Constant Correspondent."—"To be drunk on the premises" is correct

"J. C.," Westbourne Grove, is thanked for the sketch; but we have not room to insert it.

"Cathering," Nottingham, and "W. X."—See several receipts for hair dyes in the "Magazine of Science," No. 105, price 1½d.

"Enterpe"—Declined, with thanks

"Hare-ness"—Ere censures of England and Wales, and Ireland and Scotland, are published in two Supplements to our Journal, price 6d each, to be had, by order, of any bookseller.

"G. R.," Birmingham.—Her Majesty's Visit to Lichfield Cathedral is described in No. 83 of our Journal, but the press of illustrations prevented our engraving Chantrey's exquisite sculpture

"Curiously" is a contraction of "curiously," see our No. 152

"Marco."—We have not room for the republication of novels in our Journal. It is understood that her Majesty will not visit Paris this year

"R. W." The title, &c., of the Magazine referred to may be discovered by dipping them into boiling water for a moment before drying them

"W. L.," St. Albans, is thanked; the "Nook" shall appear

Phonography is a mode of writing according to pronunciation.

"T. R.," Alnwick, is thanked, but we have not room for the illustration.

"J. M. C.," Ipswich.—The view of the New Hall of Commerce, in our last week's No., was taken by Mr. Frederick Basset.

"Ignorance."—"The printers' annual feast is termed a Weigh-goose, from Ways goose, a stubbe goose (Bailey); it is mostly held in July, stubble geese being then in season.

"Amicus," Amsterdam.—Tawell was usually termed a Quaker notwithstanding the statement to the contrary

"A Subscriber," Newcastle.—The drawing of Corbould's Cartoon in our last week's No. is correct.

"C. B. W.," Bridgnorth.—The term cannot, with propriety, be used in the sense in question.

"Philomimos"—No.

"J. E. C.," Edinburgh, is assured that he is altogether mistaken.

"L. L."—The squadron is expected to return in five months.

"G. B.," Manchester, is thanked.

"A Subscriber." Falmouth—There are several pamphlets published on Mesmerism, to be had, by order, of any bookseller.

"T. C., a Subscriber."—The Times.

"G. H.," Heywood, and "A Subscriber" (Label case), should apply to a respectable solicitor.

"Seligo," Umbre Cottage, should consult the University Calendars.

"Retfordiensis."—The coloured photographs are generally satisfactory. The price of the Dictionary is 12s. The obituary will be found in our own Journal

"G. F. T.," Manchester, is thanked; but we have not room for the Illustration.

"H. F.," Southwark, should apply to an optician.

"G. B.," Leeds—The "Delphin" Classics are the edition printed for the use of the Dauphin at Paris; the "Variorum," those "cum Notis Variorum," the notes of various commentators; and the "Bipont," the editions printed at Bipontium, now Deuxponts, in the Bavarian province of the Rhine.

"Anti-sus"—The subject shall not be lost sight of.

INTELLIGIBLE.—"Lyre," "Lines by Juvenis," and "E. P. M.," Ranelagh.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 2, 1845.

RAILWAY accidents, like other misfortunes, rarely come alone; after an interval of quiet, during which nothing is heard of, the papers all at once record a cluster of casualties, some fatal, many dangerous, all of them startling and disgreeable to the locomotive part of the population. The past week has produced several of these events, that serve to show, like memento's, how dependent the world is becoming for life and limb on the managers of railways. It is beginning to be thought that sending General Pasley after the catastrophe has occurred, to inquire how it all happened, is not quite satisfactory; some caution before hand, it is suggested, would be more advisable as a preventive. As far as can be judged, two at least of the accidents arose from want of care. One train came in before it was due, and ran into a luggage train; another left the "tail lights" behind, and they were sent after it by an engine, which, going rather recklessly, produced a collision. Some accidents cannot be avoided, but both these might have been. As usual, they have been alluded to in Parliament, and the great familiarity that body has recently had with railroad companies, has evidently emboldened the members to express a growing disposition to exercise as real a supervision as over the "King's highway," which they are superseding in all directions. We never before heard Sir Robert Peel speak so decisively on the subject. He plainly warns all railway companies, if they do not expend a proper share of their profits in increasing the means of giving security to the public, the Government will interfere. This is—from Sir Robert Peel—bold language:—Government had a right to expect from those who were deriving large profits that they would take every precaution against casualties of this kind. Nothing could be more unfortunate than disturbing the public mind by the occurrence of these accidents on the railways. He thought that a further degree of caution must be taken to prevent the recurrence of them. There was, of course, a certain description of accidents which it was impossible to guard against; but he must say that many of those which had occurred could have been prevented by a proper degree of caution. (Hear, hear.) He was certain that if better measures were not immediately adopted on the part of railway companies, Parliament would step in and demand a reduction of their profits, in order to enforce the establishment of a better precautionary system than had been in many cases hitherto adopted."

The last point is not made so clear as could be wished; the "enforcing the establishment of a better precautionary system," does not seem a natural sequitur to the demand of a "reduction of their profits." If the Government insisted on a fair portion of the profits being expended in giving good salaries to intelligent and careful men, and building strong and powerful engines, instead of sacrificing too many of the elements of safety to the desire of making a good dividend at the shareholders' meetings, something might be effected. This determination on the part of the Government, now it is made known, may go far to silence those clamorous "proprietors" who may be heard carping at every item of the Directors' expenditure, thinking that a railroad can be managed like a retail shop, and that it is wisdom to get everything done at the cheapest possible rate. With men too few for the work, and those few underpaid, accidents are certain; if the Government frightens this kind of men into reasonable conduct by asserting that they shall not make a profit inconsistent with the lives of the public, very great good will be effected.

A PROPOSITION has just been made of an alteration in the hours of the sitting of Parliament—the cue day of the week, which will assimilate the practice of the House of Commons to that of the French Chamber of Deputies.

The extreme pressure of public and private business has never been more severely felt than during the present session. On Wednesday last, the House met at noon and sat continuously till a quarter to three on Thursday morning, occupied, not with one or two, but with a series of important discussions, on the Income Tax, the Defences of the Country, New Zealand, Railway Accidents, and other matters. But such prolonged sittings are not to be recommended, and they but imperfectly make up for the time lost at the beginning of the session for the want of better arrangements. Mr. Hume has proposed that the Government business shall next session be taken on Wednesday, the House on that day to meet at twelve o'clock, and rise at six. Sir R. Peel approves the suggestion, and there seems but little doubt that it will be carried into effect; under the present regulations Wednesday is often a dies non; the proposed plan would at all events make sure of as much progress as could be made in six hours, and the rising early would give an interval of one night by way of relaxation.

METROPOLITAN NEWS

THE POST OFFICE "EARLY DELIVERY."—Although no official order has up to the present time been made known to the public, it is ably probable that before long the "early delivery" of letters in the metropolis will cease. No answer to a memorial presented to his lordship, the Postmaster General, some time since, the Secretary of the Post office, Colonel Maberly, said that the system had been reported against, and that its abolition was merely a question of expense. The growing state of the finances of the department, however, having materially altered the case, it is rumoured that the Lords of the Treasury have the matter now under consideration, and that steps will be shortly taken to compensate the letter-carriers for their loss of fees, so that the advantages arising from a simultaneous distribution of the morning delivery of letters in town may be preserved. It is estimated that the abandonment of the early delivery practice will cost the Government about £7000 per annum

LONDON BRIDGE AND GATE.—Notwithstanding the interest excited by the probable destruction of this ancient specimen of monastic architecture, when at the commencement of the New Building Act notice was given by the overseers of the Parish, that unless great alterations were made it would be pulled down, it is likely soon to be demolished. A scaffolding was about six months ago erected around the dangerous portions of the building, and a public subscription entered into to save it; but we believe that, as we suggested that the abandonment of the early delivery practice will cost the Government about £7000 per annum

LONDON BRIDGE AND GATE.—Notwithstanding the interest excited by the probable destruction of this ancient specimen of monastic architecture, when at the commencement of the New Building Act notice was given by the overseers of the Parish, that unless great alterations were made it would be pulled down, it is likely soon to be demolished. A scaffolding was about six months ago erected around the dangerous portions of the building, and a public subscription entered into to save it; but we believe that, as we suggested, turned out quite inadequate for the purpose.

THE ROYAL EXCHANGE IMPROVEMENTS.—The space at the west end of the new Royal Exchange, which has been partially blocked up for so many months, in consequence of the boarding which was put up during the erection of the houses facing the above magnificent structure by the Mercers' Company, has at length been thrown open to the public. In a few days the spacious area will be entirely laid down with large flag stones. This thoroughfare, previous to the desecration of the late Exchange by fire, was known as Freeman's-alley and Change-alley. It is to be called in future Freeman's-place.

MORTALITY OF THE METROPOLIS.—The total number of deaths registered in the metropolitan districts during the week ending Saturday, July 26, was 873, an amount considerably below that in the summer and annual averages, in which the numbers stand respectively 904 and 963. During the same period the number of births registered was 1232, being an excess over the mortality of 359.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.

TRIAL OF THE FOREIGN PIRATES FOR THE MURDER OF TEN ENGLISHMEN.

Friday in last week was fixed for the trial of the ten Spanish pirates at the Assizes at Exeter, and considerable excitement prevailed in that city.

Precisely at nine o'clock Mr. Baron Platt took his seat on the bench, when the prisoners were placed in the dock.

They were Francisco Ferrera Santo Serio, Jamis Majaval, Manuel Jose Alnes, Florenco Ribeiro, Juan Francisco, Jose Morin Martinez, Antonio Joaquin, Sebastian de Sandos, Manuel Antonio, and Jose Antonio. They were all dark looking men, and appeared to be well fed; the prisoners being present at the time of the murder, aiding and assisting him. There was another count in the indictment, charging the prisoners with having thrown Thomas Palmer over out of the vessel and drowning him

Mr. Sergeant Manning for the prisoners) claimed to have a jury composed half of Englishmen, and half foreigners.

The prisoners being called upon to plead,

Mr. Sergeant Manning said, before the prisoners pleaded, he had to state that he considered the indictment bad in point of form, and he should raise the question by demur to the indictment.

The counsel for the Crown having joined in demurrer,

Mr Sergeant Manning said that the indictment stated that the prisoners, with force and arms, on the high seas, in and upon one Thomas Palmer, then being on board a certain vessel called the Feiendade, did make an assault, &c. Now this being a statutable offence, the indictment should have concluded contra formam statuti.

Mr. Baron Platt considered murder to be an offence at common law, and that the indictment was good.

The prisoners then pleaded not guilty, and a jury de medietate was sworn, and they were charged with the prisoners.

Mr. Godson opened the case on the part of the prosecution, entering minutely into the facts, most of which are known to our readers Mr. Godson then called several witnesses, but the chief points of the case are comprised in the following evidence:—

Antonio di Cirquira:—I am a Brazilian. I was born in the Brazils. My wife and family are there. That is my home. I am a seaman. I had the command of the Feiendade. I took the command January 2nd. She was fitted out for smuggling: by smuggling I mean carrying slaves. I had no cargo to take out with me except provisions and water. The cargo I was to take back was slaves. The vessel was fitted out to take slaves I had 30 men on board. Majaval was cook. I left Brazils on the 5th of January. I had known Majaval only the day that I sailed. We arrived off the coast of Africa on the 5th or 7th of February. I saw the Warg when I arrived off the coast, and then knowing that she was the Warg. When I first saw her I tacked and stood off to sea. The English ship gave chase until night. She did not overtake us then. We left Lagos, to avoid her, for three or four days. Then we came back to Lagos again. We tacked ship and went off to sea again. The English vessel chased us, but did not come up with us. The next English vessel which we saw was the Star. We stood off to the north, and then went to the southward of the Star. She chased us also, but did not overtake us, as we got out of her way. The next day we came and anchored at Onen (in English, Lagos). The next morning, I believe, we saw the Warg. We then got under way, and stood away along the shore. The Esg ish vessel was coming towards us. She gave chase, but could not come up with us. She then lowered her boats, which came up with us She had colours hoisted. The boats came up to us about seven at night. We offered no resistance, as I gave orders to my men to heave all our muskets and powder overboard; and I then gave up possession. The launch first came alongside, and all hands came on board, and about half an hour afterwards the other two boats came alongside. I could not see whether Lieut Stuart was on board or not. All hands were ordered into the boat except myself. I was taken out of my vessel, but not at that moment. I was taken out about nine or ten at night. All the crew were then taken out of my vessel. They were taken on board the Wasp. The next day I was brought back in my own vessel, when I came back, the chief mate, the second mate and supercargo were there. I came back with English sailors in the boats. Majaval did not go into the boat the night before. He remained in the vessel all night. He, as cook, was considered an officer. When I came back the two mates, supercargo, and cook, were on board. When I returned, the two mates, supercargo, and cook, were on board the Wasp, and two (viz. the two mates and supercargo) were taken on board the Wasp, and the cook remained. An officer was in command, who had come from the Wasp I believe he was a mate. When we departed from the Wasp Lieut Stuart came on board, with Mr. Palmer. They came on board the schooner the evening we came up with her, and the officer fired a gun, to make her heave to. She did not heave to, but sailed on. They were taken about eight or nine. They were boarded by the young officer, who is dead. He came back the next day. The vessel was the Echo. When the officer got on board of her, twelve of her men were sent on board the Felicidade. All the prisoners were among them except Majaval. They were put in the fore castle, and a sentry put over them, except Serva and his brother in-law, who were allowed to remain on deck. They remained there all night, and the officer remained on board the Echo, when Senhor went with the Wasp. That night I had no communication with them. The next morning Serva and his brother in-law asked me the time of the day. Serva asked me if I had any coffee to drink. I answered no, but said there was some tea. Serva sent a lad to take some coffee out of a bag. After it was made, we all sat down to drink it—myself, Serva, his brother in-law, and Mr. Stuart. Then the officer got up to go below. Serva put the question to me about killing the Englishmen. The first word he said was, "We have got something here to do. I have four men I can put confidence in, to kill all the English, and throw them overboard, and then take the schooner; and after that we can, the brigantine." "I said, "Don't you forget that you are here between the English cruisers, which are crossing to and fro; that a steamer was cruising, and likewise the Star." Serva's answer was, "You are a man in want of spirit. I have four men I can put confidence in," repeating what he had before said. I then answered him as I had done before. Serva said that I wanted spirit; on which I said if he did not hold his tongue on such a thing as that, I should make it known to the officers. Serva said he would say nothing more about it. Immediately after the lieutenant and Serva's brother-in-law went with him to the Echo. The boat, and Serva's brother-in-law went with him to the Echo. Serva's brother-in-law was present during this conversation, and could hear it. Three Englishmen and two Kroomen were standing on the deck all the time. Serva and the officer could not hear what was said

GOODWOOD RACES.—1845.

THE COURSE.

THE PRIZE PLATE.

The Prize Plate, still conventionally called "Cups," consists of three groups, of exquisite design. We have engraved two of these beautiful productions.

The first, "THE GOODWOOD CUP," is a very characteristic prize for a race-course; illustrating, as it does, an event of great interest in the annals of racing, viz., the presentation by Charles the Second of the first Gold Cup ever run or at Newmarket. Charles, it will be remembered, was the first to abolish the now obsolete custom—Paisley excepted—of running for a pair of bells. The King is on horseback, and giving the cup to the fortunate jockey. This compliment to the Princely originator of the Goodwood meeting, by the personation of his Royal ancestor in the design, is in excellent taste.

THE GOODWOOD CUP.

THE STEWARDS' CUP.

"THE STEWARDS' CUP" consists of a magnificent group, in a war-chariot, leading the Iceni against the Romans. All the figures in the group have been modelled by Mr. Bailey, and its elaborate details have been admirably executed by Messrs. Hunt and Roskill, late Storr and Mortimer.

"THE CHESTERFIELD CUP" has been manufactured by Messrs. Garrard, from a beautiful design by Mr. Cotterell, the subject from Scott's "Tales of a Grandfather," representing Mary Queen of Scots shortly after her marriage with the Earl of Darnley, at the head of her troops, on horseback, clad in light armour, when expecting the attack of the Covenanters.

ENTRANCE TO THE PARK, GOODWOOD.

ELSENHAM STATION.

THE EASTERN COUNTIES RAILWAY.—OPENING OF THE LINE TO CAMBRIDGE AND ELY.

The views illustrating the opening of the branch line from the Eastern Counties Railway to Cambridge and Ely, and the line from Norwich to Ely, which appear in this number of our journal, represent the principal points in the new line. In a former number we gave illustrations of the principal points of the line then opened, so that our subscribers will now be in possession of a perfect illustrated itinerary of several hundreds of miles of railway through a country comparatively little known to those who live at any distance from it, yet full of interest, and worthy to be visited by the traveller, the artist, the agriculturist, and the man of general business.

On Tuesday last, at ten minutes before nine o'clock, a train of thirteen double carriages, with an open carriage, in which were the band of the Coldstream Guards, conveyed the worthy Chairman of the Eastern Counties Railway, the Directors and their friends, a host of men of science, engineers, and others, the Earl of Roden, and Lord Braybrook, the Bishop of Norwich, and many members of the House of Commons, from the London terminus, at Shoreditch, to Ely and Cambridge; and on the same morning, at half-past ten o'clock, a smaller train of carriages left Norwich, conveying many of the principal inhabitants, and the gentry of the county of Norfolk, to Ely, to meet the London train, and thence proceed in company with it to Cambridge, to partake of the banquet there prepared by the liberal hospitality of the Directors. We shall mention the places through which the trains passed, which will show the line of country creating the connection between the distances, and describe some of the points as fully as our limits will allow.

The first station, after leaving Shoreditch, through which the London train passed, is Stratford; a suburb of the Great Metropolis, of which the appearance conveys to those about to enter our vast emporium of commerce, science, arts, learning, and riches, but little idea of its magnificence and wealth. Indeed this is the worst entrance into London: the houses are mean, the inhabitants, though most industrious and respectable, are unfortunately not opulent. There is little to admire, and nothing to emprize. Lea Bridge, the next station, is somewhat picturesque. All Cockney fishermen find something here to recollect. The shade of Walton still hovers on the banks of the river, and the reminiscences of early times revive. At Tottenham the appearance of the country mends still more; the topographer recalls to mind the Cross which the piety of his ancestors erected on the spot within a short distance of where the railway passes, and the general aspect of the country is rural and pleasing.

(Continued on page 76.)

CHESTERFORD STATION.

CAMBRIDGE STATION.

WENDON STATION.

ICKLETON STATION.

A RAMBLE IN THE REALMS OF CHAT.

The week has been, if not exactly enlivened by the variety of its intelligence, at least stimulated A few of its results we could have wished far distant; othe s have worn a joyous and festive aspect; and some have put on the mantle of absurdity, to tickle the quizzing spirits of satirists and men of fun

The c mpact of European Sovereigns to continue on visiting terms with each other acts beneficially for their friendly relations, and wins the favour able regard of the people. And while this spirit progresses our own Victoria will soon be as popular in other nations as she is in her own And more severe sense affectionately regarded in her own Not particularly anxi us to run away from her beautiful home of "Peerless England," she yet reciprocates the friendship of other lands; nor would it be unnatural if a brief cultivation of health and pleasure mingled with her thoughts of travel after a session of hard-by thought-and which the natural cares of the Royal mind must have been tried and tested by no small share of anxiety and fatigue. So we will say that her Majesty is even now longing for the next three weeks of Parliament to bury themselves—as she would fondly hope in the bosom of the people at large—that the hour of Queen Victoria and Prince Albert of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, enjoy less of the mere pomp of royalty than of the domesticity of a kindred.

Par parenthese, in writing the word husband with reference to Royalty, it jarred upon our ears, from our memory of its awkwardness upon such occasions, and of its being unmentionable as a matter of etiquette. In the code of politeness we are told, "Never say how is your wife, your mother, your husband, your grandmother?" and mi vien in mente, that two of the strangest offenders against this rule were Nollekens the sculptor, and Dolpini the Clown. Nollekens invariably asked George the Third "how his wife and family were doing;" and Delpini once said to the Duke of York, whom he was getting to interfere with Sheridan for the payment of his salary "Sare, if he no pay me soon, I shall be put to your papa's bench," meaning the King's Bench Prison.

Mais revenons à la Reine and the Royal visits. The rumour that her Majesty would revisit Louis Philippe at the chateau d'Eu, has been dispelled by a paragraph in the Globe; nevertheless the King of the French has been preparing his palace for some other guest of sovereign distinction. Our own courtly hospitality to Royalty is at present confined to the third "how his wife and family were doing;" and Delpini once said to the Duke of York, whom he was getting to interfere with Sheridan for the payment of his salary "Sare, if he no pay me soon, I shall be put to your papa's bench," meaning the King's Bench Prison.

At last a proclamation l as taken place of the Annexation of Texas to America. It is the vo untary act of the Texan Legislation. We have yet to learn what Mexico will say to the business, and how far European mediation will stir or stay At present America "reasons" that she has "lamation" baffled the foreign diplomacy of this quarter of the globe

In France the press is still as king of the "National Massacre," as Pelisier's crime has been sarcastically designated

A dash of regretful feeling must mar the lightest spirits in this crisis of railway speculation, to find that while the Legislature is honestly engaged in the detection of imposture and in a desire to establish a general extension of trade benefit to the community flashes of horrible misadventure alarm the public mind from similar sources of wealth and convenience already sustaining the traffic and the travel of a large body of the people The next den s on the South Eastern, Dover, and London and Birmingham lines, really strike a panic to confidence; and again press but with too powerful weight the immense responsibility of those management railway companies and the almost prescient care, knowledge, and caution which the public have a right to demand

In domestic affairs, the working of Magisterial Law in the rural districts is still so cruel, that the voice of grievance is loud indeed. The sad case of Eliza Price, which a Committee has reported upon, and for which Sir James Graham has already passed censure in the House of Commons, is but one of many that have been succeeded, in the same quarter, by abuses of the same kind, and enacted, too, under the same employé, under the same magistrate. Two little girls, accused of a petite theft before two newspapers! We need not enter into the question of the absurdity of such a resolution in this Rambie of Chat

Ireland is comparatively tranquil—Dan, however, has been spouting pretty vociferously at Galway—and Mr. Lucas's resignation created an under current of political speculation.

Let us now look out for the sunshine, and hope for the harvest.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

Of late choreography has been in the ascendant at this theatre. The unprecedented combination of the greatest "stars" of the ballet in the world, and the appearance amongst us of Taglioni, so soon to be lost to the stage, have almost engrossed even that portion of attention and interest which properly belong to the musical part of the entertainments, and to the great lyrical geniuses which it presents to us. On Tuesday, however, though the opera "La Sonnambula" was somewhat curtailed to make room for the pas-de-deux in her separate divertissement—of Lucile Grahn, Cerito, and Taglioni, the warmth of applause bestowed on the efforts of Marlo in the splendid finale of the first act, and of Castellan in the "Ah non giunge," even surpassed that called forth by the divinities of the ballet. Well it dead was the performance of the "Sonnambula" worthy of such a preference. We fancied that Castellan rather wanted her usual vigour and power of intonation, but her exquisite feeling of the music, and simple, tender, acting, were more than sufficient to compensate for such a deficiency, if it existed. Mario, on his side, in the finale we have mentioned, and in the "Il pin triste dei mortali" was admirable; his voice appeared to us to have been gradually acquiring additional sweetness, and his style more expression and pathos, but, on the other hand, there is still, at times, a vexatious want of energy in the performance of the gifted artist, and it is above all remarkable in the last touching scene of this opera. In spite of the attractions offered by Balfe's charming music this evening, we must confess that on Tuesday Lucile Grahn caused us little distraction in "La Bachante," which was introduced between the acts. Her steps are certainly wonderful; the opening one is perhaps the most perfect and graceful imitation of flying that has been yet achieved, while the little twinkling pas with which she concludes, are no less remarkable. To offer a contrast to this classical dance, with a garden in the imagination to the days of Heathen Mythology, by the "Manola" of Cerito and St. Leon, so gay and so characteristic of a modern nation, was next given. This dance is deservedly a great favourite with the public, and always elicits universal applause; on the present occasion it was warmly encored. It possesses much of the national peculiarity, but at the same time avoids those ungraceful tours de force of the legitimate Spanish dance, which strongly savour of a barbarous origin, and cannot please, though they may astonish and amuse, a refined audience like that of the Italian Opera in London St. Leon performs his part in this dance with a grace and agility which is truly admirable: but when we see as in this pas de Cerito and herself, we cannot join in it without reserve: for, pretty as she looks, and graceful as she always is, the precision and neatness requisite for a characteristic dance like this, are not her forte, and do not suit her peculiar style

"Diane," the novelty of the past week, has been highly successful. The first effect of the scenery is charming; the idea and subject are highly poetical, and are done more than justice to by the contrast of the different dances in which she appeared—in all of which she has at one time or another been triumphant.

There has been another week of inactivity at the theatres, which have, however, been well attended, although town is rapidly thinning The "Hon pianist," Leopold de Neger, has been engaged for six nights at the HAYMARKET, and his ordinary performance has been mightily applauded by the crowds Beyond this we have nothing to report, except a vague rumour that COVENT GARDEN is to be opened for the winter

A new company is to be organized at the LYCEUM on Monday: it is written by Mr. Mi denhall; and a new burlesque is in preparation, by the authors of "Valentine and Orson," "Cinderel a," &c., founded on one of the stories in the "Arabian Nights Entertainments"

Mr and Mrs Caudle, of tin quotus celebrity, are advertised to make their appearance at the HAYMARKET this evening, supported by Mr. Buckstone and Mrs N Clifford Miss Woolgar takes a benefit at the Adelphi on Wednesday, when' 'Sweethearts and Wives" will be represented, the fair benefisiare playing the character of Laura. In addition to this, some of the stock favourite pieces will be performed.

MUSIC

THE CONCERT SEASON OF 1845

A curious document has been published, contain ne a list of the musical meetings in the metropolis during the season The statistics are of value for reference, but the prudential prudence and reserve which not unregretfully for some additional information as to the details of the annual displays of art

The lovers of sacred music have resorted to Exeter Hall, for the grand performances by the Sacred Harmonic Society of the sublime oratorios of Handel, Haydn, and Mendelssohn Established in 1832, this institution is now regarded as national in its objects The time, however, will come, when it will occupy a much higher g ound in our musical annals The members are fated, no doubt, for the exertions of the professional men, who, at an early period, brought them into notice; but when, in the nature of things, the question shall be mooted of the engagement of a new Conductor, the choice will become of the deepest interest, and it will be expected that the Sacred Harmonists shall select such a master spirit for the responsible position, that their fame will no longer remain at a fixed point With effective organization, the triumphs of art may be rendered complete. It is proper that the Practical should be attended to, but the Ideal in Music is a development not to be neglected

The Melophonic Society, established in 1841, has held its meetings at the Music Hall, Store-street. This is an offshoot of the Harmonists. To the Melophonists one place of advice must be tendered; namely, to enlist more artists amongst them

The Choral Harmonists, established in 1834, have been making way. Their concerts this year at the London Tavern were of much interest as works were heard, excluded from Exeter Hall by the rigidity of the regulations

The Cecilians congregated as usual in Aldersgate-street, and maintained their fame of sixty years' character.

The ancient Concerts, established in 1776, achieved additional glory at their eight concerts, by the introduction of gems from the stores of the old masters. The research and learning of Sir H R. Bishop, the conductor, have produced the most curious and interesting results. Although the Earl of Westmoreland, who is a most accomplished amateur, has not been able to take his usually active part in the direction, being absent on his diplomatic duties at Berlin, his Lordship's place has been ably filled by Prince Albert, whose enthusiasm has been remarkable in the rescuing from oblivion of many noble works. To his Royal Highness were the subscribers indebted for performances on many antique instruments The Prince is most zealous in his endeavours to keep alive the taste for music.

It should be mentioned that the series of concerts given by Miss Mounsey, at Crosby Hall, afforded the lovers of amateurs excellent opportunities of appreciating the beauties of sacred music.

The lovers of madrigals had their hearts content at the meetings at Freemasons' Hall, of the Society which dates from 1741, and of the modern one of 1840, the Western Madrigal Society, greatly increasing in fame

The harmonious réunions have been the Melodists (1826), the Albey Glee Club (1842), the Round and Canon (1843), the Catch Club (1762), the Glee Club (1787), and the Concertores (1795) Another class of entertainment has been the illustrations of Scotch, Irish, and Gipsy melody, by Wilson, Lover, and Bransford. The two former have had much popularity, but the latter was of too coarse a nature for these refined times

The four concerts of the Royal Academy of Music, established in 1822, have been creditable to the establishment, although it has been a matter of regret that the powers of the pupils have been, in too many instances, overtaxed, and that a disposition exists to bring them before the public prematurely. This, by the way, is a besetting sin among English students in music. The moment the indications of a voice appear, a début is made, before the best exercises are even acquired.

Of the eight concerts of the Philharmonic Society, founded in 1813, and the instrumental glory of this country, we propose, at a future period, to speak in a separate article.

We have come to a class of concerts which seem destined to exercise an important influence on art in this country That the taste and intelligence of amateurs have elevated the character of music and musicians, there can be no question. We have no affectation of the assertion of professional power, but they are generally too confined to mechanical details to attend to progressive development in art. The formation, this season, of the Beethoven Quartet Society, will be indeed memorable in the annals of musical art. The chorus of classic composition, and the inspiration of genius, have there found constant worshippers. The varied pleasures of Beethoven's musical works were presented in one programme To Mr Ashdown, a well-known amateur, appertains the glory of having established these delightful meetings, at which the great executive skill and profound feeling of Sivori, Vieuxtemps, and Sainton, alternating in the first and second violins, the Milanollo, the excellent Rousselot, and judicious Mr Rousselot on the violoncello, and Hill on the tenor, were displayed to the enthusiastic admirers

The réunions of the Musical Union, founded in 1844 by Mr. Ella of the Opera orchestra, were more or less of delight to the admirer of this kind. The cause of classical music had another eloquent champion in Bologna, to whom, in fact, the honour is due of having established Chamber Concerts in this country. The series of which Mr Lucas, a violoncello performer, and a composer of great merit, the pianiste matveres of Moscow, and the sœurs Madame Dulcken and Mr Dando, were also homages to the genuine beauties of musical composition. Mr Lucas's concerts, like those of Ella, at their concert at Erat's Harp Salon, fully vindicated their claims to be enrolled as supporters of art. There was a less exhibition of prejudice, and an increased distribution of elegance, which gave to the concerts a charm. The Harp England party received a death-blow, and its ruffianly journalism put down and exterminated, it is hoped, for ever.

The concerts of individual speculators have been numerous this year, not less than seventy in fact; of the h gher class were those of Bernulds Bennett, Cipriani Potter, the Choral Fund, the Society of Female Musicians, Mr John Parry, Mr and Mrs. W. H Seguin, Mr. Richards, Mrs. A. Shaw, Miss Hawes, Harriet Goodwin, Miss Bolby, Mr. Osborne, Madame Dulcken, Mrs Anderson, Caradori Allan, Benedict, Leopold de Meyer, Standish, Madame Puzzi, Brizzi, Mehlenfeldt, Hutchinson, the Mandolin, &c. The existence of these concerts deserve more notice than our space will allow us to give in the present summary, which is intended to afford a notion of what has been done in quantity more than in quality. On the latter head we shall have something to say in a future article.

DRAMATICAL AND MUSICAL CHIT CHAT.

The musical expeditions commence immediately after the closing of the Opera, which supplies artists for three separate and first concerting of Grisi, Mario, Lablache, Jun., Benedict, and John Parry; the second of Rossi Cacc a, Brambilla, Morlani, Gallinari, and Puzzi; and the third of Castellan, Formasari, Bozzi, and Miss Dolby. Miss Delcy, the daughter of Eugene Lacy, is expected for a tour in the United States Ariot, whose decease we announced last week, was brother to the celebrated performer on the kettle-drums, and to the Chorus Master in the Brussels Opera.

Next Thursday night's performances at her Majesty's Theatre will be most brilliant That clever artist, Formasari, takes his benefit on that night, and "La Gazza Ladra" will be performed for the last time this year. The cast is admirable, including Grisi, Brambilla, Mario, Formasari, and Lablache "Alma, o la fida in Feu," that splendid ballet in which Cerito has achieved such triumphs, is reviving with numerous other novelties will be given, in which Castellan, Rossi-Cacchi, and Morlani, will appear. Lucile Grahn is also included in the choregraphic department.

THE LATE AUGUSTINE WADE.—From the Liverpool Chronicle:—"Closely following to the chamber of death those choice spirits, Hood Blanchard, Barham (Ingoldsby), Augustine Wade has to be added.—"I knew him well.' three or four years ago. Forty years he did not see his native land. A confirmed invalid for his wealth, he would have been held up as a prodigy in learning. He was a pr found musician, critic, author, and composer; one of the best linguists of the day, and a living and dead; he was a mathematician, knew chemistry, a rgery, music my—in a word, his stores of varied knowledge were prodigious. In conversation, Wade never was at fault, in the city pointed out the architectural beauties of the new edifices, he mastered every body. As a musician and a classical scholar he will long be remembered. His rapidity at notation as a musical composer, when at the zenith of his approaches. "O Nicht Mir Je Mondlight," a ballad, for which he got about fifteen pounds sterling, realized more than as many thousands for the publishers." He composed it, words and all, while his dinner—a fricassee of steak, or something of that sort—was being cooked For some time he was a member of 'The Owls,' a social, literary, and dramatic society. Among other things, it was the custom to put questions in writing, addressed to 'the Owl of Minerva,' contained over the chairman. The hoot ing of the owl—which really appeared to know what was going on—was given by the chairman in a true fashion; a free one, if apt and witty, was held equivalent to a verbal answer learned one. A composer of eminence, an Israelite, one evening wrote down a question in Hebrew; the owl hooted, but the chairman, one of the most successful dramatists of the day, could make nothing of the Hebrew. Wade slily got a hold of the slip of paper, translated the question, and handed it unobserved to the chair man, who thus confounded his querist. Poor Wade had long suspected he was troubled with a disease of the heart; this and dropsy, combined, carried the gallant little soul off to the Mansions of the Blessed, assumed over the chairman. The hoo ting

COURT AND HAUT TON.

HER MAJESTY'S PROPOSED VISIT TO GERMANY.

It is now finally determined that the Court shall remain at Osborne until the day before the prorogation of Parliament. Her Majesty will come to town to prorogue the Parliament in person, and the day after will embark at Woolwich on board the Royal yacht for the Continent. This being the case, her Majesty will not be present at the festivities at Bonn in honour of Beethoven, as that ceremony will take place on the 10th of this month. It will terminate on the 13th at the Island of Nonnenwerth—an excursion by steamboat to that romantic island being proposed for Sunday as a finale to the interesting ceremony of the week. Her Majesty's visit to Bonn will be confined to an inspection of the university at which Prince Albert was educated. The same night Coblentz will be the head quarters of England. Royalty during their brief stay in the Rhenish provinces.

It is believed that the King of Prussia will proceed to Frankfort on the day previous to the arrival of the Queen (which date is not yet positively known), and, after having showed her Majesty all the remarkable places, &c., of that ancient city, escort her to the Palace of Brohl, near Bonn. There is also a report that the Prince of Prussia will meet her Britannic Majesty on the Belgian frontiers, at the railway station of Herbesthal. The Augsburg General Gazette states that Queen Victoria will arrive at Cologne on the 1st of next month, remain five days at the Archiepiscopal quarters of England, and proceed by Royalty during their brief stay in the Rhenish provinces.

It is believed that the King of Prussia will proceed to Frankfort on the day previous to the arrival of the Queen (which date is not yet positively known), and, after having showed her Majesty all the remarkable places, &c., of that ancient city, escort her to the Palace of Brohl, near Bonn. There is also a report that the Prince of Prussia will meet her Britannic Majesty on the Belgian frontiers, at the railway station of Herbesthal. The Augsburg General Gazette states that Queen Victoria will arrive at Cologne on the 1st of next month, remain five days at the Archiepiscopal quarters of England, and proceed by Royalty during their brief stay in the Rhenish provinces.

A Coblentz paper says—"As the day for the commencement of the approaching festivities draws nearer, the bustle of preparation becomes still greater, and a wonderful activity is displayed on all sides. The orange trees and flowers belonging to the castle of the Count de Sayn (which is not generally known), and, after having showed her Majesty all the remarkable places, &c., of that ancient city, escort her to the Palace of Brohl, near Bonn. There is also a report that the Prince of Prussia will meet her Britannic Majesty on the Belgian frontiers, at the railway station of Herbesthal. The Augsburg General Gazette states that Queen Victoria will arrive at Cologne on the 1st of next month, remain five days at the Archiepiscopal quarters of England, and proceed by Royalty during their brief stay in the Rhenish provinces.

A Coblentz paper says—"As the day for the commencement of the approaching festivities draws nearer, the bustle of preparation becomes still greater, and a wonderful activity is displayed on all sides. The orange trees and flowers belonging to the castle of the Count de Sayn (which is not generally known), and, after having showed her Majesty all the remarkable places, &c., of that ancient city, escort her to the Palace of Brohl, near Bonn. There is also a report that the Prince of Prussia will meet her Britannic Majesty on the Belgian frontiers, at the railway station of Herbesthal. The Augsburg General Gazette states that Queen Victoria will arrive at Cologne on the 1st of next month, remain five days at the Archiepiscopal quarters of England, and proceed by Royalty during their brief stay in the Rhenish provinces.

It is believed that the King of Prussia will proceed to Frankfort on the day previous to the arrival of the Queen (which date is not yet positively

(Continued from page 73.)

The next station is Marsh Lane, which to describe would be an idle task; and then comes Edmonton, where once the "Merrie Devil" played the strange pranks recorded by the early dramatist; and next to this is Waltham, situated in a pleasing country, famous for its "Cross," and more famous still for its ancient Abbey, in the vaults of which repose the bones of hundreds of the slain at Hastings, and among them the last remains of the ill-fated Harold. At Broxbourne, the next station, the appearance of the surrounding country is very delightful; there is little of the hill and dale, by which magnificent scenery is formed, but there is much to be admired both by the artist and the general spectator. The line then passes through the stations of St. Margarets, Ware, and Hertford. The name of Ware revives the recollections of John Gilpin and his adventurous ride, which Cowper has made immortal—

Said John, it is my wedding day,
And folks would gape and stare,
If wife should dine at Edmonton
And I should dine at Ware

Here, also, a few years ago, and here, also, may still remain, for ought we know to the contrary, the great bed which attracted the attention of visitors in days gone by. At Hertford, the county town, are held the assizes, and on the outskirts is the College of the East India Company for the education of its civil officers.

The railway next passes the stations at Brydon, Burnt Mill, Harlow, and Sawbridgeworth — all pleasing villages standing in a good country, well wooded and watered, and luxuriant in its produce. And then comes to Bishop Stortford, at the distance of thirty-two miles and a quarter from Shoreditch, and the old terminus of the branch line now carried on to Ely. The distance between this place and London was performed in the short space of one hour and a quarter, although the train stopped ten minutes at Broxbourne; so that the pace was upwards of thirty miles an hour. Here it is that the newly laid down rails commence; and highly to the credit it is of the engineer, Mr. Robert Stephenson, and of the contractors, that the work has been executed in so admirable a manner; during the whole transit of the train, no jolting, no undulating motion was perceptible; the engine and the carriages ran as smoothly as balls on a billiard-table, and not an oscillation was felt. Leaving Bishop Stortford station, the train passed on by Standstead station, close to the pleasant village of that name, by Elsenham and Newport stations; all built in the Elizabethan, or Tudor, style of architecture, neat and commodious; the houses of the last-named village presenting their white sides and fronts to the spectator, and standing out well from the green landscape by which they are surrounded. The scenery here is very delightful—a perfect English landscape, trim, neat, and highly cultivated; a village church—an ancient mansion—on the right hand, Short Grove Hall, the seat of Mr. Smith, a gentleman highly respected in his neighbourhood, and a fine specimen of an English squire. At Wendon station, or rather just before it is arrived at, the railway passes through an embankment of chalk, and a cutting of some length, the only thing of the kind throughout the whole line. At Littlebury are two specimens of tunnelling, the long one about a quarter of a mile, or rather more, in length; the other, shorter. The entrances are good specimens of the bold and early style of arch, over which are, as in our illustration, the armorial bearings of the noble house of Neville and Griffin, Lords Braybrooke. Quarterly, first and fourth, sa.—a griffin segreant ar. beaked and forelegs or, for Griffin; second and third quarterly; first and fourth, gu. on a saltire ar. a rose, seeded and barbed, ppr., for Neville. Second and third, or fretty sa. on a canton per pale, erm. and gold, a galley, with sails furled, of the second, also for Neville. Badges: on the dexter a rose gu. seeded or., barbed vert;

LITTLEBURY TUNNEL.

BRANDON STATION.

on the sinister, a portcullis or. Crests: first a talbot's head erased sa., for Griffin; second, a bull ar. pied sa. armed gold, and charged on the neck with a rose gu. barbed and seeded ppr. Supporters: two lions ramp. reguard. ar. maned and tufted sa. gorged with a chaplet of laurel vert. Motto—"Ne vile velis."

We give the heraldic notice of this nobleman more particularly, because it is here that his extensive property is intersected by the railway, and because he has lent the weight of his great interest to its perfecting. His seat, Audley-end, one of the grandest mansions in England, is close by this point, and well deserves the visit of the tourist.

We next come to Chesterford, a small village, in which is the celebrated inn kept by Mr. Edwards, well known, and long frequented, by the aristocratic visitors to Newmarket Races, the turnpike-road to which here branches off to the right of the line, which passes over the old London road.

Whittlesford, Ickleton, and Thetford, are the only places now between Chesterford and the town of Cambridge which require mention. The stations at these places are of the same character as the small stations along the line. The country here loses its picturesque appearance, and is flat and without interest, till the spectator comes in sight of Cambridge. The first thing which strikes the eye on approaching this ancient and time-honoured town and University, is the celebrated chapel of King's College, erected in the reign of Henry VI., and endowed most richly with broad lands and rich manors by that sadly, but unfortunate monarch. Here—

Grateful Science still adores
Her Henry's holy shade;

and here still exists the noblest specimen of Gothic architecture, of its class, in Europe. The four turrets which surmount the corners of the building, are conspicuous at a great distance. The University Church of St. Mary's is also seen from the Railway: a heavy square tower, without ornament or elegance, rises in the view, and attracts the eye.

The train reached the station at Cambridge at half-past eleven o'clock, having passed over fifty-seven and a quarter miles in two hours and forty minutes, the rate of speed, allowing for stoppages, being more than twenty-eight miles an hour!

It was in this town, that something more than two hundred years ago, lived the celebrated Hobson (from whose peculiar mode of doing business, comes the saying, "Hobson's choice—this or none"), the greatest carrier and post-master of his day, in England. The old man lies buried in the town, honoured by an epitaph by Milton:—

Here lieth one who did most truly prove
That he would never die while he could move;
So hung his destiny, never to rot,
While he might still jog on and keep his trot.

Here, also, lies the most celebrated coachman of modern times, the well-known Richard Vaughan, whose soubriquet involves the naming of a place not mentionable to ears polite. Alas! what would these men say, could they now behold the railway, and witness the speed of the locomotive engine, with which compared, their utmost efforts would be but the crawling of a caterpillar.

The view we have given of the station, shows that building precisely as it is. It is a light and elegant structure, yet sufficiently substantial removed on arriving at the station at Ely. As you emerge from this point of the Railway, the Cathedral bursts upon the sight in all its magnificence. It stands upon a hill, or rather a circular mound, and in appearance, almost artificial, covered with the richest verdure, and studded with noble trees. The great tower is majestic; it reaches the sublimity of the style of architecture of which it is one of the most perfect specimens in this or any continental country.

NORWICH STATION.

On alighting from the carriages, the whole party from London, and those who had arrived here before, by the train from Norwich, made their way up the hill, to get a nearer view of this majestic structure, and to inspect the interior. They were met at the entrance by Dr. Peacock, the Dean of the Cathedral, and several of the clergy, who most kindly explained the history of this great Temple, and acted as cicerone for the visitors.

THETFORD STATION.

A few words must be said of the cathedral, for, though our limits for all the purposes for which it is intended. There are within, commodious waiting-rooms, offices, places for luggage; and, in a word, all that is requisite for such an edifice. In our view, the front, and one of the ends, or sides are seen. The rail outside, and through the arch, are also depicted. The front of the building is supported by fifteen arches. The style of the architecture is Italian. The general effect is exceedingly chaste and appropriate.

The train left Cambridge after a stay of nearly half an hour, and proceeded at a very rapid rate to Ely, passing through Waterbeach, and reaching the Ely station at a quarter-past twelve o'clock. The station here is very plain, but sufficiently commodious for the public. The whole country on both sides of the line between Cambridge and Ely, is one vast plain—a perfect flat intersected on one side by the "Fenny Cam," and on both sides by narrow canals, or dykes. It reminds the traveller strongly of Belgium, and more particularly of the railroad from Ostend to Bruges. The soil is rich, and there are great breadths of corn land. As you approach the city of Ely, luxuriant meadows are passed through, in which are numerous herds of cows. There are no houses of any consequence to be seen; but in the distance, on both sides of the road, are many farm-houses, barns and homesteads. There is no woodland, and but few trees. The sameness of the scene causes weariness, which is, however, immediately are confined, it would be a most barbarous omission to overlook some description of its beauties. The tower and west front were originally built by Geoffry Ridel, the third bishop, in the middle of the twelfth century. The whole of the design of that prelate is Norman, the ranges of arches above the basement being semi-circular. In the year 1880 an additional building sixty-four feet in height, and over that a spire, was added: the spire was taken down some years ago, but the tower still remains, and on the top of it, at this time, there is a small temporary building erected as an observatory for the survey being made by the Ordnance. The portico or entrance is very fine, and on entering the nave, the spectator is struck with the great length west and east. The long vista between the rows of lofty arches affords a fine proof of the sublimity of effect produced by simple grandeur of outline and amplitude of dimension without the detail of ornament. The columns and arches are unadorned. This portion is said to have been completed about the end of the twelfth century. The side aisles correspond with the nave, but the transepts are more decorated. The south-west transept is now restored, or nearly so, and a view of it has been taken by our artist, from which, in our next number, our readers will be able to estimate the singular beauty of the place. We should have given this view in our present number, but want of space has prevented us carrying our original intention into effect. To Dr. Peacock and the Prebends the restoration of this transept is to be ascribed, and the public will be their debtors for the great gratification their labours have afforded. The choir is not large, but in admirable taste, and there are some small shrines or side chapels at the eastern end, which are of the more decorated and florid Gothic.

Having brought the London train to Ely, we will say something about the train from Norwich which joined at that point previously to returning to Cambridge. This train passed through Wymondham, Attleburgh, Thetford, and Brandon—at all which places there are stations. The Brandon Station is built of flint, edged with greystone and brick of the same colour; the style of architecture is Elizabethan, and the appearance is peculiarly neat. The country here is not without beauty, though it wants the boldness of a grand landscape. The church, on the right hand, is very picturesque. At Thetford the station is built in the same style, and with similar materials. At Attleburgh and Wymondham there is little to be noticed. The Norwich Station is very good, built in the same style as those just mentioned; but larger and more imposing in appearance, and of grey brick and stone. The view from this station of the city of Norwich and of the ancient cathedral is very fine.

At Ely the two trains, being met, took the journey to Cambridge together, leaving Ely at 20 minutes to 2 o'clock, and reaching Cambridge at 5 minutes past that hour—the distance is nearly 15 miles. On coming to the station, all the visitors were received by the thousands of spectators with cheers and shouts of "Welcome." Cambridge poured out the whole of her population to greet the directors and their friends. The ringing of the church bells, the discharge of cannon, the shouts of the joyful groups—all demonstrated the estimate—and it is a true one—which everybody made of the importance of the completion of this gigantic undertaking.

An elegant and enormous marquee, erected by Mr. Benjamin Edgington, of Duke-street, Borough, in which was spread an ample feast, provided by Mr. Gunter, of Berkeley-square, received upwards of six hundred guests, over whom presided Mr. Bosanquet. Among these were the noblemen and gentlemen already named, the Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge, Dr. Phelps, and many of the heads of colleges; the Dean of Ely, and many of the clergy; the Mayor and Corporation of Cambridge, &c., &c. Healths, toasts, and sentiments were drank; all was gaiety and good humour. The band of the Coldstream Guards playing the loyal and national airs appropriate to the occasion, and the people shouting with delight—nothing could have been better arranged or conducted. There was no dissatisfaction, no complaints, no confusion, and no accidents. At 6 o'clock the trains left—the one returning to London, and the other taking its departure for Norwich.

The importance of the completion of this undertaking is more than is at first apparent. It will bring into almost juxtaposition places hitherto unvisited and to most people almost unknown, and it will open a very wide prospect for industry, commerce, agriculture, and manufactures.

CHESS.

To Correspondents.—"M. P. F."—The quotation occurs in the writings of Sir Thomas Elyot, 1534. "The Chesse, of all games wherein is no bodily exercise, is most to be commended, for therein is right subtile engyne, whereby the wit is made more sharp and remembrance quickened." There is no misprint, as our correspondent supposes, in the word "engyne," which simply means ingenuity, contrivance. In Ben Jonson, we find it used for understanding; and Shakspeare has "engener" for a poet, an ingenious person, in which sense it is nearly akin to the Greek Ποιητης, maker.

"W. H. S."—"The Hundred Ends of Games," published by Mr. Lewis many years ago, are out of print. You may possibly obtain a copy by applying to Mr. L. Mr. Bryan's "Collection of Original Positions on Diagrams" is still on sale, and can be procured of Hastings, Carey-street, or Goode, Chess Rooms, Ludgate-hill. The masterly problems by the Rev. Mr. Bolton and Mr. W. Bone have never been published in a collected form.

"F. G. C."—Penzance.—Your solution (7) is all wrong.

"P. R."—The problem received shall be examined.

"O. M."—In the position sent the black king is stale-mated.

"One of the Old School."—Both the works mentioned, Mr. Bryan's "Pamphlet on the late Great Chess Match," and Major Jaenisch's admirable "Analysis of the Openings" (one of the most complete and masterly treatises on the game ever published), may be got in England, at the office of "The Chess Player's Chronicle."

"A Moderate Player."—Incorrect. The initials "K—g" are those of the inventor of the problems to which they are attached.

"Shamrock."—Mr. Stephens and Mr. Forth were generally considered the best players in Ireland. The death of the former we saw announced in "The Chess Player's Chronicle" of yesterday, and it is a painful and remarkable coincidence that his rival, and competitor in the game there published, should have survived him but a few days. Mr. Forth, we regret to hear, expired at Waterford, on Sunday last. Both were in the prime of life.

Solutions, by "J. H.," "H. P.," "Andrew P.," "D. B. S.," "E. M.," "Novice of Fowey," "P. R.," "W. W.," "H. G. F.," "A. Z.," "Juvenis," "H. B.," "I D." are correct.

J. H.—The quarterly subscription to The Illustrated London News is 6s. 6d. Send your address and a post-office order.

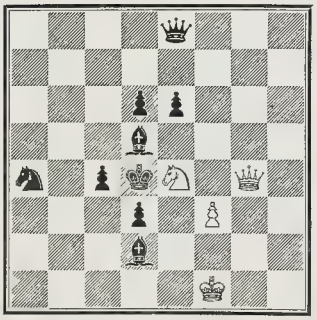
Problem, No. 81.

By G. D. of Leeds.

White to play first and mate in five moves.

BLACK.



WHITE.

Solution to Problem, No. 80.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. B to K B's 8th	K to Q's 5th
2. B to K Kt's 4th (ch)	K to his 6th
3. R to K B's 6th	K to Q's 5th
4. R to K B's 3rd discovering ch. and mate.

The Grave of Sir Walter Scott.—A monument at Dryburg Abbey, to the memory of Sir Walter Scott, will be immediately commenced. Various obstructions and delays have occurred to interfere with this pious and patriotic duty. Sir Francis Chantrey had promised a design, but died ere he had carried his intention into effect. Mr. Allan Cunningham, the friend and assistant of Chantrey, knowing what was proposed, drew a sketch of a monument; and it is a melancholy and interesting fact, that the last letter ever penned by "honest Allan," was one transmitting this sketch to Mr Cadell, Edinburgh. The same day that he sent off his design for the tomb of Scott, Mr. Cunningham suddenly died, and followed his illustrious friend, the poet and sculptor, to the grave. After a delay of thirteen years, the original object, however, will be obtained, and, beautiful as is the poet's tomb in Mary's aisle, the spot will be rendered still more impressive by this external commemoration, the offering of gratitude and affection, combined with those higher and more solemn feelings which consecrate the grave of genius

The Weather.—We had in the metropolis on Wednesday, in the course of the afternoon and evening, a great deal of heavy rain, with a low temperature. Towards eleven o'clock the rain ceased, but it lasted long enough, and was heavy enough, to increase the apprehensions which begin to be felt for the crops. On Thursday, also, there was much rain, and the weather was cold and gloomy.

THE SPIRIT OF RELIGION.

BY EDWARD ARMITAGE.

FROM THE PRESENT WESTMINSTER HALL EXHIBITION.

"Religion, unfolding her mantle, reveals herself to Mankind. The Clouds of Error recede before the Star of Truth

"Faith kneels in humble adoration, holding the Palm Branch, the emblem of Martyrdom

"Hope, with one hand on the Gospel, and the other pointing to the Cross, bids the Captive, the Dying, and the Broken-hearted, look up to Religion, while Charity, uninfluenced by human prejudices, extends her protection to the Helpless and Outcast."

Such is the artist's own account of his Cartoon, for which he has been awarded a premium of £200 by the Royal Commissioners of the Fine Arts. It reminds us a good deal of the anecdotes that are told of painters, when art was in its infancy among us; when the ambition of our painters was greater than their skill; and when, aware of their own defects, they were compelled to explain what they meant, by writing underneath, "This is a Dog," or, "This is a Hare." All allegories are more or less obscure. "I would rather," said Dr. Johnson, "have the portrait of a dog I know than all the allegories that were ever painted." We are not altogether of the Doctor's way of thinking on this subject and should really be sorry to see Hope, Faith, Charity, and the several personifications of Poetry and Painting banished altogether from the realms and limits of art. Mr. Armitage has wrestled with some energy and with considerable success, it appears to us, with difficulties not of his own making. The figure pointing upwards to the skies is full of breadth and vigorous conception, and much in the manner of the old masters—those "fountains undefiled"—from whom Mr. Armitage borrows with a bold license of allowance. The Dying Man, on the left of the picture, is a wholesale adaptation of Correggio's Fainting Figure in the "Ecce Homo," so near home as our own National Gallery. The system of wholesale larceny observable in the present Exhibition is really quite wonderful—but Criticism disdains to trace schoolboys to their common-places.

CARTOON (46) THE SPIRIT OF RELIGION.—BY EDWARD ARMITAGE. PRIZE £200.

LITERATURE.

Manual of Agricultural Analysis. By John Mitchell. Simpkin and Co.

Not the least striking feature of the age is the subdivision of education, which, in its broad sense, is the work of a life, not of a day. The volume before us is an exemplar of this special instruction. Agriculturists have little time for the study of such an extensive science as chemistry; and the aim of this book is to furnish the best methods of chemical analysis, as applicable to agriculture, without requiring the operator to study the entire science. This, the author, Mr. John Mitchell, who writes himself down an "Analytical Chemist," allows to be an apparent impossibility; but he assures us that, by a few simple rules, which he has given, the agriculturist may ascertain the composition of any soil or manure. Hence, he gives instructions in analysis, the preparation of tests or re-agents, the composition of soils and vegetables, &c.; the whole illustrated with engravings of apparatus, and accompanied by an appendix of results of experiments with manures, &c. The work appears to be systematically and lucidly compiled; and, as a royal road, is but a portion of the forcing system.

Lost Happiness; or, the Effects of a Lie. A Tale. By Lady Chatterton. Burns.

The accomplished authoress of this tale for children, has taken for her motto Johnson's awful denunciation of the sin of lying:—"The liar, and only the liar, is invariably and universally despised, abandoned, and disowned," &c. The interest of the tale itself turns upon the career of a liar, from his youth upwards; he begins with getting his father's servants into trouble by his own wicked ways, and ends with losing a lovely bride by the same means. The mendacious scion drives the servant to desperation, from which, however, he is ultimately reclaimed, and is made happy; whilst "the young gentleman," me-dicted at his loss, sinks into the vices and misfortunes he had been the means of bringing on poor John. The tale is very nicely written; and seeing how temporizing with truth, if unchecked in childhood, may become the habit of after life, the circulation of this elegant piece of morality may effect great good. The frequency of sin, by no means lessens its enormity, but demands increased means for its prevention; such as will doubtless be found in these impressive instances of "The Effects of a Lie."

SACRED VERSES, WITH PICTURES. Part I. Burns.

These "Sacred Pictures"—twelve in number—have been engraved on wood, from some of the ma-terpieces of Albert Durer in that branch of art: they are cleverly executed and cannot fail to leave upon the minds of children, for whom these "Pictures" are intended, lasting impressions of the sublime and touching scenes and events which they seek to commemorate. The subjects are, "The Good Shepherd," "The Flight into Egypt," "The Cleansing of the Temple," "The Widow of Nain," "The Daughter of Jairus," "The Agony," "Washing the Disciples' Feet," "The Burial," "The Resurrection," "Behold, I stand at the Door," "The Guardian Angel," "The Child in the Storm." To each picture is appended appropriate letter-press, in verse or prose, consisting of translations of Latin hymns, Reflections from Bede, &c.: the whole edited by the Rev. Isaac Williams, B.D.; there being two pages devoted to each subject. The little collection must prove attractive to childhood and youth, and even to those of riper years: there is a sacred simplicity in the pictures themselves which must strike the mind of every beholder; and there can scarcely be more devotional aids to holy living, than keeping such divine instruction constantly before us, so that religious exercise become the habit and silent worship of the heart. The peaceful thoughts which will be fixed by early and constant communion of man with his Maker, it has never entered into erring nature to conceive.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS, RECENTLY DECEASED.

MR. BUTLER.

This tragedian—of high respectability, and more than ordinary talent—was the son of Samuel Butler, an actor and manager, who died some years ago, in Yorkshire, and whose tomb, in St. Mary's, Beverley, bears the following quotation—one of melancholy truth in too many instances—

> A poor player,
> That struts and frets his hour upon the stage,
> And then is heard no more.

Mr. Butler, senior, had two sons—Samuel and George Blyth, who may be said to have been on the stage from their infancy. The elder, Samuel Butler, the subject of this notice, first drew public attention to his merit while performing at Hull, about seventeen years ago. He afterwards came to the metropolis, and soon acquired reputation at the Surrey, and other minor theatres. He made his début at Covent Garden, during the management of M. Laporte, and played Hamlet there, with considerable éclat. He subsequently went a successful tour through the provinces, and became an established favourite at Manchester. He was the leading tragedian at the Theatre Royal there, during the season when that building was burnt down; and on the occurrence of the catastrophe, he took a prominent and laborious part in the readings given by the members of the company, at the Manchester Athenæum, for the benefit of the sufferers. Mr. Butler also made a distinguished and profitable professional journey through the United States of America.

He subsequently played the principal tragic parts at the Sheffield Theatre; but, unhappily, a long and painful surgical complaint, from which he had suffered excessive torment, and of which he was eventually to become the victim, now so increased that he could only act two nights a week. He resided a short time at Manchester, where he was obliged to undergo an operation, and where, amid much pain and debility, he endeavoured to continue professionally employed by giving a course of his popular lectures from Shakspeare at the Athenæum. On Wednesday, the 16th ult., while delivering a lecture on "Hamlet," he was seized with a violent and violent attack of his malady, and was compelled to retire. The next night, as he was supported across his bed-room, he expired, without struggle or groan, in the arms of his wife. He died in the prime of life, being but forty-one years of age. He was interred in the cemetery at Ardwick on the 23rd ultimo.

As an actor, Butler evinced ability far above the common order. He had great strength and harmony of voice, combined with much taste and feeling. He was an excellent Hamlet, and he also could powerfully portray the darker human passions in such characters as Iago and Macbeth. His representation of Tyke, in the "School of Reform," was deemed a masterpiece. Mr. Butler has left a widow in circumstances of some embarrassment—the natural consequence of her husband's tedious and agonising illness, which rendered him incapable of achieving that independence he so well deserved. We understand a subscription has been commenced in her behalf among poor Butler's friends; and we trust sincerely that something will be done to show that, though the player's hour be past, and his voice is heard no more, his high character, his acknowledged talent, and his various good qualities, live in the remembrance of the many who have known him in his best and brightest days.

THE EARL OF DUNMORE.

Alexander Edward Murray, Earl of Dunmore, Viscount Fincastle, and Baron Murray of Blair Moollin and Tullamet, in the peerage of Scotland, and Baron Dunmore, in that of the United Kingdom, was the son of George, the fifth Earl, and was born on the 1st June, 1804. He succeeded his father the 11th November, 1836; he married, the 27th September, 1836, the Lady Catherine Herbert, fourth daughter of George, eleventh Earl of Pembroke, by whom he leaves issue, one daughter, and a son, only four years old, Charles Adolphus, now Earl of Dunmore. His Lordship, the late Earl, expired on the 15th ultimo, at Hill House, Streatham

The Murrays, Earls of Dunmore, are of very ancient and noble Scot tish descent, being a branch of the ducal house of Athol. The first Earl of Dunmore, so created in 1686, was Master of the Horse to Queen Mary The aunt of the Earl recently deceased, the Lady Augusta De Aumond Murray, was married, in 1793, to the late Duke of Sussex, and was mother of Sir Augustus and Mdlle. D'Este. She died the 5th March, 1830.

LORD BATEMAN.

William Bateman Hanbury, Baron Bateman of Shobdon, in the county of Hereford, was the son of William Hanbury, Esq., of Kelmarsh, in the county of Northampton, and the lineal descendant of a former William Hanbury, of the same place, who married Sarah, eldest daughter and coheiress of William Western, Esq., of Rivenhall, in Essex, by Anne, only daughter of Sir James Bateman, Knight, Lord Mayor of London, in 1717; and sister of William, created Viscount Bateman in the Peerage of Ireland, in 1725. This peerage became extinct with the death of the second Viscount, in 1802, when the family estates passed to Lord Bateman's grandfather, and they were inherited by his Lordship, on the demise of his father, in 1807

Lord Bateman was raised to the peerage in 1837, and he since, by letters patent, assumed the name of Bateman before that of Hanbury. His lordship was a peer of Lord Melbourne's creation, and invariably supported Whig measures. Lord Bateman, who was born the 24th June, 1780, married on the 16th August, 1822, Elizabeth, second daughter of the late Lord Spencer Stanley Chichester, and niece of the present Marquis of Donegal, by whom he leaves issue, with five daughters and two other sons, a son William, a minor, now Lord Bateman. The late lord died after a very brief illness, on the 22nd ultimo, at his mansion, Portman-square.

ALEXANDER MURRAY

Alexander Murray, Esq., of Broughton, in the county of Wigton, was born on the 11th of September, 1783, and married the 18th July, 1816, the Lady Anne Bingham, daughter of Richard, second Earl of Lucan Mr. Murray sat in Parliament for the stewarty of Kirkcudbright, and always advocated Whig principles. He was the representative of an ancient family in Wigtonshire, which was enriched by a marriage with the heiress of Lennox of Colley, and the grants made by James VI. to George Murray of Broughton, one of the gentlemen of the Queen's Bedchamber. Mr. Alexander Murray died in the south of Ireland, on the 10th ult., after a short illness.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The Echo de l'Orient of the 9th July states, that the last occasioned by the conflagration at Smyrna was calculated at 30,000 to 40,000 piastres. The following is a list of the buildings which had fallen a prey to the flames:—600 houses and shops 40 khans, the French church, the convent of the Capuchins, 4 Turkish convents, 2 mosques, the establishment of the Sisters of Charity, the Hospital of St. Antoine, the consulates of the Low Countries of Belgium, and Tuscany, 40 of the most beautiful houses, composing the Armenian quarter, but 40 remained The Kenu-uno Makala, chiefly inhabited by native Catholics, the Rue Franque, parts of the St. George, San Dmitri, and des Hopitaux quarters have been destroyed.

A letter from Vienna, of July 15, says .—"The Duke de Bordeaux arrived h re yesterday, and after paying a short visit to Schœnb-unn, re turned to Hohenburg, where he now resides. The Archduke Francis Ferdinan press, the Empress Mother and Grand Duchess Maria Louisa, as well as the Prince and Princesses of the House of Este now here, have visited her Royal Highness this day. The wife of the Duchess of Este all leave about the time already stated, on her way to meet the Queen of England."

A private letter from Beyrout announces that a melancholy accident had occurred to the barge's crew of her Majesty's ship Vengeance Being sent on the 22nd ult to the terrace of his own house and talking to some peasants who have land on his property. A gun was discharged at him, and several balls were lodged in his body. The assassins escaped. The house of the receiver-general at Chalons has been swept away by a regularly organized band of robbers, who succeeded in carrying away 47 000 francshas of the public money. Some of the robbers have been taken, and are brought to trial

The Great Britain left Liverpool on Saturday last for her first trip across the Atlantic to New York She carries out 45 passengers, and about 350 tons of bale goods at £5 per ton, some of which is addressed to a very number of newspapers, and 150 tons of coal, a portion of which is authorised on account of its superior heat

The Cologne Gazette gives some details of a collision which had recently taken place on the frontiers of Bosnia, between the Turkish and Austrian soldiers, and in which a number of men had been killed on both sides. It appears that the Bosnians were the aggressors, and had killed an Austrian officer, on which a body of Austrians crossed the frontiers and attacked the Turks, whom they defeated with loss. The latter then prepared to take their revenge, which had caused a body of Austrian troops to be marched to the frontiers to prevent the entire collision and to preserve order.

Dr. Steiger has addressed a letter from Winterthur to the ladies of Lucerne, expressing his gratitude to them for the sympathy shown him in the time of his captivity and condemnation. The letter concludes by an appeal in favour of the prisoners who still remain in confinement. The news of the escape of Dr Steiger was received with enthusiasm in Germany, and celebrated by ball, concerts, and convivialities. He was received at Aarau, and was serenaded by the inhabitants. At Olten he was met by the first burgomaster, an old man of 70 years of age, addressed the meeting in favour of political and religious liberty.

On Tuesday week, an aged man, named Charlesworth, was released from York Castle after an imprisonment of 294 years. In 1816, he was committed for contempt of the award of a referee, who had been appointed to decide a dispute between him and another party respecting the height of a dam attached to a mill belonging to him, in the neighbourhood of Holmfirth. He has been discharged by a Judge under the provisions of an Act of Parliament passed in the last session of Parliament.

There are strange accounts from Erzercom about the weather. On the 2.st of June, at M dsummer, a heavy snow storm set in, which lasted for eight days and fifty hours, and covered the earth to the depth of 7 feet. The snow in the town Beaif was a foot and a half deep, and on the tops of the mountains four or five feet. It was not till the 24th that a return of mild weather and sunshine commenced. The passage over the mountains in the black Sea was at the time wintry and dreadful. Many persons perished by the capsizing of boats; and it is apprehended that the bockading squadron of Russia, on the coast of Circassia, has suffered severely.

The Glasgow Saturday Post alludes to an extraordinary character in the person of one Robert Arkless, aged seventy three in the employ of Mr. J. Sadler, Whitley-hill Point. He has been wedded to five wives, and has been the father, up to three months ago, of fifteen children, twenty-nine have died, and of his wives four. This gives thirty-three funerals As all his wives were churched for each birth, he has paid for thirty-three churchings. As his children, up to the present, have been christened, this gives thirty-three christenings. Having been five times married, he has paid for five weddings He is now working for his a day, and his wife for 8d, but they are both very poorly at present.

We have received advices of the 4th of June from the Cape of Good Hope; but, except that the Natal people were greatly dissatisfied at the proceedings of the Commissioner sent to adjust the land claims, and that it was hoped the Governor, Sir Peregrine Maitland, would effect a better arrangement, we find nothing of prom lent interest in the papers

The Cumbrian, 36, has arrived at Chusan with a freight of two million dollars in Spycee silver, being a portion of the Chinese indemnity money.

The Grand Junction Railway Company have made another reduction of their fares. This they have been enabled to do, in consequence of the great increase of their traffic This increase of traffic is confirmed to the Grand Junction line. On the Liverpool and Manchester, and other great lines, the reduction of fares has been attended with an equal if not a greater increase of passenger traffic This seems to have been anticipated by engineers as rendering it impossible to create a great traffic, a very extensive one is springing up under the influence of greatly reduced fares.

The Cologne Gazette gives an account from the frontier of Bosnia, of the 10th ult., stating, that the Bosnians having killed an Austrian cadet, the Captain in command of the Cordon near Glina collected a force of a thousand men, with which he entered the Ottoman territory on the 9th, and attacked the Turks, who had assembled in large numbers to resist the invasion A bloody battle ensued; the Austrians remained masters of the field, but not without having sustained a serious loss. That of the Turks was much greater.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday) Since Monday the arrivals of English wheat for our market have been on the 1 ncreased 1 ns, letters per the steam were rather scanty, 2,140 qrs English and 1,400 qrs foreign. Owing to the unfavourable weather, holders of home-grown were very firm in asking full prices for fine qualities, 1s per quarter more money for selected qualities, the value of fine qualities of new wheat was fully supported In foreign wheat a good business was done, at extreme rates, while new crop remained as before. Barley, oats, beans, and peas were in no alteration in value since our last. Malt was somewhat inquired, and prices were supported. Interior oats and beans were somewhat lower. In other grain no alteration

ARRIVALS—English: wheat, 440; barley, — oats, 190 quarters. Irish: wheat, — barley, — oats, 1,250 quarters. Foreign: wheat, 3,850; barley, 200; oats, 1,200 quarters; flour, 1,600 sacks; malt, 2,160 quarters

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 56s to 62s., ditto, white, 60s to 68s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 48s to 54s, ditto, white, 56s to 60s; rye, 36s to 38s; grinding barley, 26s to 27s; distilling, 29s to 30s; malting, ditto, 30s to 34s; Lincoln and Yorkshire ditto, 32s to 36s; Kingston and Ware, 35s to 38s; Chevalier, 42s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 18s to 20s; potatoe ditto, 22s to 24s; Youghal, Cork, black, 23s to 24s; ditto, white, 26s to 28s; beans, new, 40s to 46s; ditto, old, 50s to 56s; grey peas, 42s to 46s; maple, 46s to 48s; white, 46s to 50s; boilers, 52s to 54s; per quarter. Town-made flour, 40s to 44s; Suffolk, 37s to 39s; Staffordshire, 41s to 43s; per 280 lbs. Foreign.—Fine wheat, 56s to 58s; fine barley, 30s to 32s; fine oats, 20s to 22s; fine beans, 40s to 42s; fine peas, 40s to 42s; fine flour, 36s to 38s; per sack.

Seeds.—Linseed, English, sown, 52s to 56s; sold, 48s to 52s per quarter. Foreign, 40s to 44s per quarter. Coleseed, new, 42s to 46s per last. Rapeseed, £25 to £27, per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £6 to £6 5s., ditto foreign, £5 10 to £5 15s. Rapeseed cakes, £5 to £5 5s. Hempseed, 36s to 38s, per quarter. Canary, 40s to 52s, per quarter English Clover seed, red, 45s to 56s, extra, 60s to 70s; white 50s to 62s; extra up to 68s Foreign, red, 40s to 48s, extra, 50s, white 60s to 68s, extra, 70s per cwt

Bread. The prices of wheaten bread in the Metropolis are from 8½d to 9½d. of household ditto, 6½d to 8d, per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 51s 7d; barley, 32s 2d; oats, 22s 6d; rye 31s 7d; beans, 40s 3d; peas, 39s 10d.

Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 49s 0d; barley, 30s 6d; oats, 22s 7d; rye, 32s 1d; beans, 39s 4d; peas, 39s 6d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 20s; barley, 9s; oats, 6s; rye, 10s 6d; beans, 5s 6d; peas, 5s 6d

TEA.—On the whole, only a moderate business is doing in this article, yet prices are generally supported. The deliveries continue large. Very few imports in a taken place for some time past

SUGAR.—In West India sugars the transactions have been again extensive, and the rates have improved upon last week Mauritius, East India, and Refined parcels were off freely, at full prices while refined goods are so unsettled on the advance—brown lumps selling at 50s to 57s, and refined lumps at 58s to 60s per cwt.

COFFEE.—This market has still a good demand for every sort, with very little in value The public sales of this week comprise about 2,000 bags, of which about 1,200 were disposed of at full prices. The following are the quotations:—Ordinary to fine ordinary native Ceylon, 42s to 44s; middle to fine middle, 45s to 47s; good to fine ordinary native Java, 44s to 46s; middle to fine middle, 47s to 49s; good to fine ordinary Mocha, 48s to 50s; middle to fine middle, 51s to 53s; fine and fine pale Mocha, 54s to 56s; ordinary to middle Cheribon, 42s to 44s; good to fine ordinary Sumatra, 44s to 46s; middle to fine middle, 47s to 49s; good to fine ordinary Costa Rica, 46s to 48s; middle to fine middle, 49s to 51s; good to fine ordinary Havannah, 48s to 50s; middle to fine middle, 51s to 53s; good to fine ordinary Brazil, 44s to 46s; middle to fine middle, 47s to 49s; good to fine ordinary Jamaica, 46s to 48s; middle to fine middle, 49s to 51s; good to fine ordinary Berbice, 48s to 50s; middle to fine middle, 51s to 53s; good to fine ordinary Demerara, 48s to 50s; middle to fine middle, 51s to 53s; good to fine ordinary Porto Rico, 46s to 48s; middle to fine middle, 49s to 51s; good to fine ordinary Cuba, 46s to 48s; middle to fine middle, 49s to 51s; good to fine ordinary Dominica, 46s to 48s; middle to fine middle, 49s to 51s; good to fine ordinary Trinidad, 46s to 48s; middle to fine middle, 49s to 51s; good to fine ordinary Barbadoes, 46s to 48s; middle to fine middle, 49s to 51s; good to fine ordinary Cape, 46s to 48s; middle to fine middle, 49s to 51s; good to fine ordinary Manilla, 46s to 48s; middle to fine middle, 49s to 51s; good to fine ordinary Timor, 46s to 48s; middle to fine middle, 49s to 51s; good to fine ordinary Sumatra, 46s to 48s; middle to fine middle, 49s to 51s; good to fine ordinary Java, 46s to 48s; middle to fine middle, 49s to 51s; good to fine ordinary Mocha, 46s to 48s; middle to fine middle, 49s to 51s; good to fine ordinary Costa Rica, 46s to 48s; middle to fine middle, 49s to 51s; good to fine ordinary Havannah, 46s to 48s; middle to fine middle, 49s to 51s; good to fine ordinary Brazil, 46s to 48s; middle to fine middle, 49s to 51s; good to fine ordinary Jamaica, 46s to 48s; middle to fine middle, 49s to 51s; good to fine ordinary Berbice, 46s to 48s; middle to fine middle, 49s to 51s; good to fine ordinary Demerara, 46s to 48s; middle to fine middle, 49s to 51

BIRTHS.

At Clayton, Flintshire, on the 22nd ultimo, the lady of John Young Black, Esq., of a son. —At Haswell, the wife of the Rev. John Mar, of a daughter. At Whitehall, the lady of Hyn Lab Charleston, of a son. —At Derwent Bank, near Derby, the lady of Edward Strutt, Esq. M.P. of a still. ter. —At the Vicarage, Tamworth, the wife of the Rev. Frederick Myddelton Myddelton, of a son. —At Castle-Ashby, Lady William Compton of a daughter. —At the Palace, Naples, on the 14th of July, the Lady of Francis Hastings Medhurst, Esq., of a daughter

MARRIAGES

Alfred Higgins, Esq., to Mary Caroline, second daughter of Thomas M'Jeet, Esq. —At Totter ham, John Gale, to Hall, Esq., to Elizabeth Ann, youngest daughter of the late Rev. John Hall, Esq., of Bath. —At Hackney, Robert Cox, Esq., to Rose Bonar, second daughter of Edward Cowder, Esq. —At Ashby-de-la-Zouch, Thomas Gisborne Stonehead Esq., to Catherine Grace Maude, second daughter of Sir William Jardine, Bart. —At Clapham Church, the Hon. Wade Fitz, to the only daughter of the late Rev. Charles Fawcett, Esq. —At St Marylebone, Hector Christopher second son of A. W. Roberts, Esq. to Jane Mary, second daughter of the late Major-General Sir Miles Nightingale, K.C.B. —At Kent Knot Rev. Beauchamp Esq., to Mary Frances Elizab th, fourth daughter of the late Sir Stephen Glynne, Bart. —At Hampstead, Edward Hodges, Esq., to Elizabeth Emma, youngest daughter of the late Rev. William Bennett, Rector of Ashwell. —At Bath, Rev. Robert Mercer Nisbett, B.C.L., to Elizabeth Emma, youngest daughter of the late William Bennett, Esq. —At St. Margaret's Church, Westminster, Lieut.-Col. David Jones, Esq., to Margaret Christie Campbell, eldest daughter of Sir George Campbell

DEATHS

At Sea borough, Eleanor, the wife of George S. Slater, Esq. —At St Omer, aged 52, the Right Honorable Earl of her Majesty's service. At Chalfont Park, Bucks, aged 75, Richard Hoare, Esq., for many years M.P. for Bristol. —At Hampstead, Dorothea, widow of the late Sir Wm. Wallace, Knt. —During his passage to Madras, William, eldest son of the late Sir Wm. Wallace, Knt. —At Thingwall, Lieut.-Colonel Thomas Case, late of her Majesty's 34th Regiment of the Line, in front of the day previous to the 3rd of August, aged 52. —At Bath, Sir George Edward Magd, Knt., M.D. —At Pau in France, Harleyford-road Kennington, George Colmore Hall, aged 27. At Bath, Lieut.-Col. Keeling —At Brighton, Aretha, relict of the late Reverend Goodall, Esq., aged 77. —On the 3rd inst., Fanny Creed Ribourdin, the daughter, and on the 20th ult., Mrs. Ribourdin, the wife of Rene Antoine Ribourdin, Esq. —In Newstreet, Spring gardens, after a few hours' illness, Miss Mabel Coudurier, aged 9

ADVERTISEMENTS.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Signor FORNASARI respectfully informs the Nobility, Subscribers to the Opera, his Friends and the Public, that his BENEFIT will take place on THURSDAY NEXT, AUGUST 7, 1845, when will be performed for the Last Time this Season, Rossini's Opera, LA GAZZA LADRA Nimeta, Mdme Grisi; Lisa, Mdme Bellini, and Pippo Mdlle Rosa Balfe. Giannetto, Sign Marini; Podesta, Sir Lanciarotto Isaac, Sign Ba. Fiorti; Fernando, Sign A. Giubilei; and Fernando Villabella, Sign. Fornasari. To be followed by an EXPERIMENTS, in which Mdlle. Lucile Grahn and Mdlle. Cerito will appear. And, a new DIVERTISEMENTS, in which Mdme. Amalie Caste.lan and Mdme. Rosat Carelli, and also Sign. Mozzini, will appear. With the admired Ballet, ALMA; ou, LA FILLE DU FEU. Alma by Mdme. Cerito

Applications for boxes, pit. orders, and tickets, to be made at the Box office, Opera Colonnade. Doors open at Seven, the Opera to commence at Half-past Seven

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.— Proprietor and MANAGER Mr. ANDREW ASTLEY. The new Spectacle pre-eminently successful. The French Equestrians succeeded to popularity nightly.—On Monday, August 4, and During the week, the last one Military and Equestrian Spectacle, pourtraying the triumphant entry of the British troops into Northern India, called THE CONQUEST OF SCINDE, or, the Heroism of the Ameers, and the Siege of Hyderabad. After which, New and Extraordinary SCENES IN THE CIRCLE by the Unrivalled Equestrians with the highly commended Pantomimic Performances of various Great Equestrian Manœuvres, and highly increasing attraction of the IL DIAVOLO DI ARCEDI; or, The Brigand Chief, and the Demon of the Cave. Signor Il Pe'ffalo Lamp of the Horse Beda, over the Bosom and Burning Bridge.—Box-office open from Eleven till Five

COLOSSEUM. - Patronised by Her Most Gracious MAJESTY and H. R. H. PRINCE ALBERT.—Open daily from 10 till 6. Equal to Six Exhibitions, the Gigantic three stupendous Works of the first Artists, Mount Blanc and Mountain Torrent, Society Panorama, and Noble Army Classic Ruins and Fountain, illuminated with Gas, and painted by Mr. Parris, &c. &c. Admission, 3s., Children Half-price. The Splendid Cascade in full play

EVENING EXHIBITION, open from 8 till 11, consists of an entirely New Panorama of London by Night, or the Scene in front of the day painted by Mr. Parris, the whole forming the 40,000 square feet. Projected and carried out by Mr. W. Bradwell, and painted by Mr Danson and Mr. Parris. The Cascade and Fountain Playing at Night. The Gallery, Promenade and Refreshment Room brilliantly illuminated. The whole Exhibition erected by Mr. Bradwell, exhibited at the corner of the new Family Theatre, to take Four persons, at each, to be taken at the North Lodge, Colosseum, from 11 to 6 o'clock. Messrs. Mitchell Old Bond-street; Mr. Arrowsmith, Old Change; Mr. Ebbs, Cheapside; Messrs. Hammond, Cornhill and Hodgson, Oxford-street, and Messrs. Addison and Co., 7, Regent-street.—Children under 12 years of age, Half-price

SUNDAY AFTERNOON.—More than Ten Thousand respectable Individuals, including Family Tea Parties, visit on the CREMORNE GARDENS and FOREST last Sunday Evening. No charge for admission on Sundays. Every Visitor is entitled to take Refreshment to the amount of Sixpence. Regent's Park and LITTLE QUEEN. The Gardens are open every day. Dancing commences at Six o'clock on THURSDAY and FRIDAY Evenings, by Mr. Gill and Mr. Hemmings's Band. A GRAND NIGHT ASCENT from the Lawn of this Establishment. A GRAND BALL will be given on the occasion of the Royal Duke Wedding. Omnibuses to Library or returning. Entrance to the Gardens Park, Forest, and Manor, are situated on the Banks of the Thames at Chelsea, and can be reached from all parts of London by Omnibus for 6d; by Steam-boat, 4d. Come on Sunday.

CAPTAIN SIBORNE'S MODELS. — The Original Large MODEL of the BATTLE of WATERLOO has just OPENED at he EGYPTIAN HALL, Piccadilly, and is a set of 120 square feet, and contains upwards of 1,000 figures in the very large no an engage on when the Duke Wellington and the Victory. Admission to the Hundred Days.—Naval and Military Museum, 3s. 6d. Children half-price. Open from 10 till 5. GRAND CHARGE of the BRITISH CAVALRY, led by the Marquis of Anglesey, at 12 and 3 precisely. The Battle Picture, in the last days of Napoleon, for the memory by Mr. Parry. "The life and spirit with which Captain Sibo ne has imparted into this model, is to us almost a step indeed."—Naval and Military Gazette. Morning, till Nine Evening. Admission to each Model, 1s. "The Models are for Sale.

MESSRS. RICHARDSON and SONS ORIGINAL ROCK BAND, now performing DAILY at the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly on Instruments made entirely of ROCK. The Band was established 3 years and consists of several Overtures, Symphonies, and Selections of Operatic and Sacred Music will be performed, for the first time, next week, without the present popular exercises). Admission is each. Reserved seats 2s Private parties attended

HIS R. h. the PRINCE of WALES, by gracious permission of Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, Buckingham or Windsor Castle. The HOUSE of BRUNSWICK, ALONE VIEW, George I., George II., George IV., William IV., Queen Victoria, Queen Caroline, Princess Charlotte, Coburn, Duke of York, Kent, Cambridge, Sussex, the Duke of Brunswick, Napoleon, Marshal Ney, Wellington, Blucher, Sir Robert Peel, Sir Patrick. The National Group, Mr. Gough, and Tom Thumb. "This is one of the best objects in the metropolis."—Court Journal. Open from 10 to 10. Admission 1s. Catalogue and Book Binding; Napoleon Rooms, Soho-square. MADAME TUSSAUD and SON'S Bazaar, Baker-street, Portman-square

MONS. BOUTIGNY'S EXPERIMENTS on the FREEZING of WATER in RED-HOT CRUCIBLES, &c., will be repeated by Dr. Ryan, in his Lecture on the LIQUID FUEL and STEAM-NAVIGATION, daily at Half-past three, and on the Evenings of Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays at Nine, at the ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION. The ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY, carrying from Six to Eight Visitors at once, is lectured upon and exhibited in action, daily, at Half-past three, and in the Evenings. The art of SWIMMING and DIVING illustrated by a Youth Eight years, a half years of age, Son of Capt. Stevens, the celebrated Channel Swimming, on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at Two o'clock, and on the Evenings of Tuesdays and Thursdays at half-past Eight. All the other popular Lectures and Exhibitions as usual.—Admission to Schools Half-price

ROYAL ADELAIDE GALLERY, Lowther-arcade, Strand.—DR. SCHERZER'S RAILWAY and TELEGRAPH, illustrated in a new, extensive, and perfect manner. Lecture will be given to illustrate the MODEL every Day, at Two o'Clock, and in the Evening, at Nine o'clock. The MODEL will be shown in operation at various parts of the Day, and in the Evening at a Quarter past Seven. LECTURE in CHARACTER, by Mr. J. RUSSELL, each Morning at Twelve, every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday Evening. KOLLMANN'S PATENT LOCOMOTIVE, for Working RAILWAY CURVES, every Day and Evening. Also, the MODEL of REALLY'S ROTARY STEAM ENGINE, which makes 500 Revolutions in a Minute shown every Day and Evening. LECTURES on MISTRY, Mr. ROBERT WOODS, every Morning at Eleven o'clock. Thatcher's ARTIFICIAL MEMORY every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday Evening. Admission to "THE PANORAMA," in the Evenings of those days. The GAS MICROSCOPE (JHO MATHOD), DISSOLVING VIEWS, and BEAUTIFUL SCENES, &c. Daily. Admission, 1s. Schools Half-price

A NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION OF MAXWELL'S HECTOR O'HALLORAN In a large volume Octavo, embellished with 37 humorous high wrought, now reduced to the low price of 5s., stripper's Strand in stitch.

THE FORTUNES OF HECTOR O'HALLORAN, and his Friend ANTHONY O'DAUB. By the Author of "Stories of Waterloo," "The Bivouac," &c. &c. MAXWELL, Author of the "Life of Wellington" "A better story than Hector O'Halloran, has not been published for years Parts of the work will compare with any of the most striking and dramatic in 'Oliver Twist.' Hector O'Halloran is one of the most amusing and original characters we have met with in modern fiction."—Sun.

London: Printed for THOMAS TEGG, 73, Cheapside and sold by all other Booksellers

RAILWAY AND STEAM BOAT READING

In large octavo, price 4s. 6d., illustrated by numerous Portraits and Views in one vol. 8vo. and gilt,

THE EDINBURGH TALES—Volume the First. Containing Sixteen Stories or Novelettes, by Mrs. JOHNSTONE (the Connector), Mrs. Gore, Miss Mitford, Mr. Crowe, &c., and an immense of latter, press to the of make volumes of it, to ordinary novel size."—This very handsome volume contains the first half-year's issue of a publication of which we have only to express a wish that it may go on for many numbers to come, and we are much more grieved than we should be to see it come to an end. There is a rare both of amusement and instruction in such a tale as 'West Country Wit,' than in a dozen of the ordinary novels, and it is given at a mere fraction of their price."—Scotsman

CHAPMAN and HALL, 186, Strand.; W. TAIT, Edinburgh

THE NEW

MONTHLY BELLE ASSEMBLÉE, for AUGUST, a Fashionable and Literary Magazine, under the immediate Patronage of her Royal Highness THE DUCHESS OF KENT.

Is beautifully Illustrative, with Highly Finished

PORTRAITS OF FASHIONABILITY,

And coloured

EXQUISITE ENGRAVINGS OF MAIL, &c.

AND A

LANDAFF CATHEDRAL,

AND

TWO COLOURED PLATES OF THE FASHIONS,

Situated in the Fine Park, as they arrive from Paris.

CONTENTS

The Elder Sister. By Mrs. Abdy — Lines. By Justina L.
Hearts. By J. J. Reynolds — Lines on Bathing. By E. C. L.
The Grave of Madame de Genlis. By Clara Payne — The Comparis n. By Mrs. F. B. Scott
The Widower's Dream. By George Bailey — Summer Reminiscences. By J. J.
The Afghan Hunter and his Mother. By Miss Jessie — Fragment. By Miss Sarah
Song. By Mrs. F. B. Scott — Answer to Mr. Mary H. Archer
Specimens of Correspondence. By Georgina C. Wood — The Maid of Honour—Part IV. By Maude
The Last Lay. By D. J. — Answer to Mr. Mary H. Archer
Adelle: The Story of a Picture. By Grace Aguilar — The Elder Tree. By Mrs. F. B. Scott
Lines. (On the Question Being Asked, "When Would You Like to Die?") By Joseph Fearn — Lines. By J. H. L.
To Augusta. By E. am — Love-time
To a Pale Friend, on whose Vi leas. By Mary Anne — Secrets of the Month
To Sir at Peak of Love, Song. — Fashion
In reply — A Story of the Rhine. — Description of the Plates
Elsinore. By Cam Jackson — Not responsible
May be had, by order, of all Booksellers. Also, 24, Newstead-abbey, Nottingham, and 30, Paternoster-row, London.

Third Edition, price 5s., with Maps, Cuts, &c.,

BRETTELL'S HAND BOOK TO THE ISLE OF WIGHT. Considerably Enlarged and Improved

London: MITCHELL, Old Bond street, and CUMBERLAND, 193, Strand

G. H RODWELL'S LAST NEW BALLAD. "AH! WOULD OUR EYES HAD NEVER MET." will with the Music to be published in the Seventh Number of the 3D MONTHS OF AN UMBRELLA with extra plates

E. Mackenzie, 13, Dyott street. To be had of all Music Sellers

THE DAGUERREOTYPE PATENT.—The injustice and validity of the Patent exposed in THE PRACTICAL MANUAL of PHOTOGRAPHY, price 1s. 6d., with Illustrations, containing Twenty-four Specimens of the Art, beautifully done from the Sun, engraved in the office of Portraits, Views, &c., with Six to 12 Hours' sole tuition in the process and Apparatus complete, with Daguerreotype Plates, &c. By a PRACTICAL CHEMIST and EXPERIMENTALIST. Sent to any part free, 2s.

I. M'A ERRON, 135, Fleet-street. Instruments of all kinds at the lowest prices.

HOW TO LIVE.—Price 4s., 6d. post free,

WHAT to EAT, DRINK, and AVOID; addressed to the Nervous and Dyspeptic

By R. J. CULVERWELL, M.P. M.R.C.S., &c.

SHERWOOD, 23, Paternoster-row; CARVALHO, 162, Fleet-street, HANNAY, 63, Oxford-street; and CHURTON, 26, Gornhill; and the Author, 21, Arundel-street, Strand

Library, 19, Holles-street.

BULL'S NEW SYSTEM for FAMILIES and BOOK SOCIETIES.—For only £6 the year, or £3 the half year, to the New and Standard Works as they appear; twelve volumes at a time in town, or twenty from the country. Cotal sizes and Town Society can subscribe at the rate of One Guinea per Member only

The New Four-Guinea Series, with full particulars, sent gratis and post-free, on application to Mr. Bull, Librarian, 19, Holles street, Cavendish square, London.

THE PIANISTA, for AUGUST, No. 56, contains Ten Songs by Francesco Schubert, as Piano Solos, New and Copyright Song, by John Barnett; and New Song by Charles Horn. Price 2s., or sent post free for 24 stamps, new lined to Editor of "Pianista, at the Office, 67, Paternoster-row." The office has been removed to the end of every number of the "Pianista." "Pianista" and "Musical Bee" can be had to prevent parties being again disappointed in obtaining particular Numbers. "Pianista" and No. 27 "Musical Bee"

OCEAN WORK, A NEW JUVENILE BOOK

In a handsome pocket volume, with Two Hundred Engravings and Gilt, Price 5s. 6d.

OCEAN-WORK, ANCIENT AND MODERN; or Evenings on Sea and Land By J. HALL WRIGHT.

"A perfect mine of information, and written in a pleasant, free, and spirited style."—Literary Gazette.

"A very pleasing little book."—Spectator.

London: Printed for Tegg and Co., 73, Cheapside, and sold by all other Booksellers; of whom may also be had, by the same Author, "BREAKFAST TABLE SCIENCE". Third Edition, price 2s. 6d., elegantly bound.

Now Ready, at all the Libraries, in 3 vols.

COUNT KONIGSMARK,

AN HISTORICAL NOVEL

BY CAPT. THOMAS EGERTON, R.N

"Count Konigsmark was one of the most remarkable characters of a wild and adventurous age. His life abounded in romantic incidents. The murder of the fair Swedish Countess Konigsmark, a vicarious fraud, as to the interest of the reader he never suffers to flag for a moment, as the story rises from more to be 1, in love, war, gay living, and, in short, His Lamentable bravery throughout, which made him so so essful in his amours, furnishes a wide canvas worthy for every reader."—Literary Gazette.

HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough street.

THE DUBLIN UNIVERSITY MAGAZINE for AUGUST, 1845, price 2s. 6d., contains:—Researches in Greece—Leaves from the German Oak Seventh Draft.—O'Donovan's Practice of Angling Reconnoitres of the Gifted.—Wills's Poetical Works. Miscellanea, Mystics I. Hector Kinnaird—II. Ecstasy III.—How the Devil Spoke Truth, and S. aimed a Priest.—Italian Poets No. IV. Alfieri. The Two Masters.—Confirmed Gallery. No. XXVII. Dr. Wahley Stokes; with an Etching Portrait Reminiscences of the late Sir James Mackintosh—No III.—Modern City Surgeons.—Dr. Cheyne.—The Treasury.—Soldier—Songs from Berenger.—Ireland.—The Quarterly Review."

Dublin: Wakeman, Curry, and Co.; W. S. Orr and Co., London; and all Booksellers. Of whom may be had

THE OPENING of PARLIAMENT, by BARRY LOBRREQUER. No VIII. Continued Monthly, with Portraits of Pitt Price 1s

THE GO-A-HEAD JOURNAL for AUGUST, full of SPLENDID ENGRAVINGS! and the price only TWOPENCE!!!

CONTENTS

The Triumph of the Go-a-Head Cadet — The Flower Show: With Illustrations
Bentoven's Grave at Bonn — The Modern Lovers an the Happy Family
Real Perils. Miscellanea. Mysteries I. Hector Kinnaird — II. Ecstasy III. — How the Devil Spoke Truth, and S. aimed a Priest.—Italian Poets No. IV. Alfieri. The Two Masters.—Confirmed Gallery. No. XXVII. Dr. Wahley Stokes; with an Etching Portrait Reminiscences of the late Sir James Mackintosh—No III.—Modern City Surgeons.—Dr. Cheyne.—The Treasury.—Soldier—Songs from Berenger.—Ireland.—The Quarterly Review."

Dublin: Wakeman, Curry, and Co.; W. S. Orr and Co., London; and all Booksellers. Of whom may be had

GOVERNMENT SCHOOL OF DESIGN.

The Exhibition, this year, of the Prize Designs in the various branches of Decorative Art, at the School of Design, evinces a very considerable advance in that excellent Institution. Its prosperity, too, is indicated by the great increase of attendance and fees; and, in the language of the Report of the Council, just presented to both Houses of Parliament, by command of her Majesty, "Schools of Design, as the means of attaining improvement in the productions of Ornamental Art in this country, are very highly estimated throughout our commercial communities; and there appears to exist in the minds of all who are most competent to judge, and most interested in the prosperity of our national manufactures, a decided conviction of the practical importance of continuing and extending the instruction which it is the object of Schools of Design to impart."

Again: the Report states, that, "in the course of last year, numerous applications have been received for the execution of designs in various departments of ornamental art; and every endeavour has been made to comply with these requests, as far as the execution of such commissions has been consistent with, and could be made to form a part of, the prescribed exercises and course of study in the School. Designs for different purposes have thus been furnished to manufacturers in London and in several provincial towns: and, from time to time, manufacturers and others have purchased of students various designs which have been produced in the performance of the exercises of the School. In the number of such commissions, and in the extent to which the productions of the students are applied to commercial purposes, a constant increase is evident; and the numerous communications which come before the Council at each monthly meeting of the Committee on Correspondence, as well as the frequent visits and inquiries of persons connected with ornamental manufactures, may be noticed in proof of increasing relations between the School and those commercial parties whose interests this Institution was especially designed to promote. The importance which such correspondents and visitors attach to its agency in producing improvement in designs, and the favourable impressions they express with regard to the means it affords for the attainment of that object, seconded, as in several instances those assurances have been, by presents of valuable specimens of manufactures, appear to warrant a satisfactory opinion of the usefulness already effected by the School, and a confident hope of increasing benefit from its further operations."

MR. STRUDWICK'S DESIGN FOR A GOTHIC CHANDELIER.

MR. WILDE'S DESIGN FOR A VASE.

The Distribution of Prizes, which took place at Somerset House, on Wednesday week, afforded the most gratifying corroboration of the above statement. The rooms were hung with specimens of the students' skill, including designs for carpets, porcelain, glass, shawls; as well as paintings, drawings, sculpture, &c. The Right Hon. Lord Colborne presided, and was supported by Lord Ashburton, the Right Hon. H. Labouchere, M.P; the Hon. Hugh Cholmondeley, M.P.; B. Hawes, Esq., M.P.; H. T. Hope, Esq., M.P.; H. G. Knight, Esq., M.P.; R. M. Milnes, Esq., M.P.; S. Pusey, Esq., M.P.; Sir R. Westmacott, R.A.;

MR. PIERSE'S DESIGN FOR A CANDELABRA.

Thomas Wyse, Esq., M.P.; J. G. Lefevre, Vice-Chancellor of the University of London, &c. Mr. Heath Wilson read the Report, which stated that the students had made great progress in their studies, and that the designs this year were greatly superior in execution, and displayed more taste, than those of any former year. The Report was adopted, and Prizes distributed to the successful students, the Chairman accompanying each with a few encouraging remarks. The rewards consisted of sums of money, from 30s. upwards, and were sixty in number. We have engraved seven specimens of the Designs.

First, is a design by Mr. Pierse, for a Candelabra, intended to be executed in bronze; for this classic work Mr. Pierse received an extra prize of five guineas.

Next are designs for two Chandeliers, in glass: that by Mr. Pierse obtained a prize of five guineas; and the Gothic design, by Mr. Strudwick, received a prize of three guineas. The latter has been purchased by Mr. Apsley Pellatt of the Falcon Glass Works, for ten guineas.

EMBLEMATIC VASE.

The central Illustration shows a Model for a Sacramental Cup, emblematic of the Elements, Bread and Wine; the vessel being covered with vine leaves and grapes, and the handles formed of the Indian corn-

PORTION OF THE ARABESQUE, IN OIL, BY MISS FILMORE.

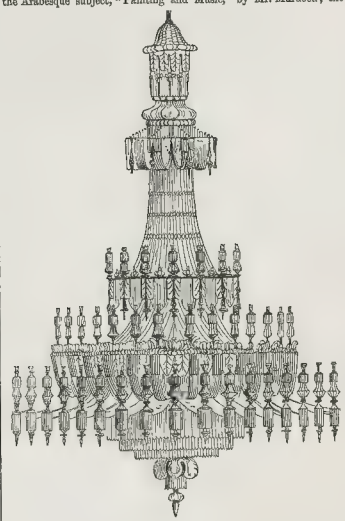
plant. This highly-imaginative work by Mr. Farrer, obtained an extra prize of five guineas, the Council not having offered a prize for such a work.

The pair of designs for Porcelain Vases are very meritorious. The first includes a group of figures, termed "The First Lesson in Archery," by Miss Emma Angell. The design covered with Elizabethan ornament, is by Mr. Wild, and obtained a prize of five guineas.

One of the most striking works is a panel, nine feet in length, and the principal prize for an "Arabesque in Oil," painted by Miss Filmore The entire design comprises a pair of figures—a Fisherman, and Fowler with the thistle and convolvulus ornamentally arranged around them; the ground colour being a superb blue.

We have engraved a portion of this design—the young Fowler laden with birds of brilliant plumage. For this design Miss Filmore obtained eight guineas, or three guineas more than the prize offered; the addition being a testimony to her merit. Miss Filmore has since received a commission from Messrs. Holland and Son, for a design. Miss Chamson's copy in tempera of an Arabesque, from the copy in the School, made from the original in the Vatican, received a prize of £3, and was purchased for £5 5s. by the Council. This excellent copy by Miss Chamson is better than the original that it was taken from.

The Report also stated that three of the principal designs, namely, the Arabesque subject, "Painting and Music," by Mr. Murdoch; the



MR. PIERSE'S DESIGN FOR A CHANDELIER.

Arabesque, called "Peace and War," by Mr. Stewart; and that in the Pompeian style, by Mr. Hammersley, had not been executed in competition, but were the works of the Assistant Masters, who had been engaged in the study of ornament, and employed as elementary teachers in the School during the past year. The Committee had also much pleasure in alluding to a Cartoon by Mr. Murdoch, which he had executed at home, and which was most creditable to his industry and advancement in his studies.

We have not space further to detail the remaining Prizes: a design for a library bookcase, in the Elizabethan, or rather, cinque-cento, style, by Mr. Weeds, highly merited the prize it received—eight guineas. The Shawl designs were a great improvement upon the old patterns: one, of a rich architectural character, was very beautiful.

Among the gratifying circumstances peculiar to this Exhibition, it may be mentioned that Messrs. Holland and Son, upholsterers, of Marylebone-street, expended £50 in the purchase of Designs from the School; and, what is still more satisfactory, they gave for the designs more than the usual prices for such subjects: other manufacturers have made similar purchases. On the subject of employing Pupils of the School as designers, it may be mentioned that Mr. Thompson, of Clitheroe and Manchester, has recently engaged several pupils, who have been wholly educated here, to design for his calico-printing works; and this is, by no means, a singular case.

MISS ANGELL'S DESIGN FOR A VASE.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, August 2, 1845.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 171.—Vol. VII. FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, AUGUST 9, 1845. [Sixpence.

THE CLOSE OF THE SESSION.

With the present week closes a Session which has been, in many respects, a remarkable one; and while the senators, liberated by the gracious speech of her Majesty from their toils, are dispersing to the "moor and the loch," or wherever pleasure or business may lead them, a brief glance at the results of their labours will not be out of place.

The Session has been remarkable, in the first place, for the amount of work it has imposed on the Legislature. For general business, it has sat with a regularity and perseverance almost unexampled; the noonday sun has often shone on its deliberations, and the next day's dawn broken ere they had concluded. In addition to this, the Committee business—by which the members are broken up and divided into a kind of small Parliaments, under the wing of the large one—has been enormous. The greater part of this business was created by the increase of railway enterprise, which is covering the face of the land with the means of rapid communication, bringing together distant points—making whole counties the suburbs of the vast Metropolis—and almost annihilating all the old difficulties caused by distances, and the time consumed in passing them. A whole system of Parliamentary procedure has been created especially for this kind of business. An attempt was made to relieve the Legislature of part of the duty, by transferring some of its functions to a department of the Executive Government, but it did not succeed; the impartiality of the tribunal became suspected, and, as its decisions did not bind the Legislature, they soon became of very little importance. Parliament is still the great source of power, and by it alone will men consent to have questions decided which affect the fortunes of thousands. The Railway Department of the Board of Trade did not supersede the functions of Parliament, however glad the members of the latter would have been to find themselves relieved from an irksome task; public opinion would not permit them to divest themselves either of their powers, or the labour to which those powers subject the possessors of them. From the extent to which they have been called into action, this might almost be called the Railway Parliament. The money it has voted for the service of the State seems a small sum, compared with the enormous amount of capital it has set in action—the whole of it proffered by the people themselves. The readiness with which these vast amounts are raised, is one of the most extraordinary phenomena of modern history. It proves the unspeakable advantages of Peace and Commerce to the world, for it could not have accumulated amidst the destruction and the waste of war. The millions that would have once been squandered in campaigns, that produced no result to nations, save mutual ruin and mutual hate, are now bridging rivers, piercing mountains, and obliterating those boundaries which have so long made

> Enemies of people, who had else
> Like kindred drops commingled into one.

The moral and social changes that will be produced by the extension of railways over the whole face of Europe can scarcely yet be anticipated. But they will be changes for which statesmen and rulers will have to provide. The facts and details of a system may be dry and petty—even mean and repulsive—but the results of that system when in opration may be mighty. All the discussions about gradients, and levels, and tables of traffic, of broad and narrow gauges, of scrips, and shares, and deposits, may be tedious enough, as are most processes towards any result; but the thing effected is a power that will change the face of the world; and, considered in this light, with all its controversies, intrigues, and exposures—much time, labour, and thought have been devoted to the great social question of our time; and, for its great development of railway communication, we have had a memorable Session in that of 1845.

As to what may be more strictly called the national and public business of the Session, it has been regarded with very mingled and divided feelings. The course of policy Sir Robert Peel commenced he has continued; the surprises of 1842 have had their counterparts in 1845; the questions alone are different. Then, the man chosen expressly to defend the principle of protection in all its integrity, proved to be the Minister who did the most to break it down. He was elected to uphold the Corn Laws; his first measure was to alter them, and that by diminishing the amount of protection—as far as that is secured by the scale of duty. He has this Session passed from the matters of Trade and Commerce, to questions of higher interest—those of Religion and Education; and, with regard to both, has taken a course exactly opposite to that which the principles of the great body of his party would have sanctioned. It is the history of 1829 over again; the energetic opponent of Catholic Claims was the Minister who removed Catholic Civil Disabilities; the denouncer of Catholic doctrines has now endowed the College in which the Catholic priesthood are trained. The step may be a right one to take—on this, opinions are greatly divided; but that it should not have been taken by the present Premier and the existing Government—on that, all men are agreed. If they think their present policy is right, their past lives have exhibited a singularly prolonged career of error, for they have always opposed it; if they believe it wrong, they condemn themselves as deserters from their own opinions without a conviction of the truth of those they have embraced. These unexpected changes of opinion in the leaders have not been followed with much alacrity by their supporters; dismay, division, alienation, anger at the past, mistrust for the future—all these feelings are to be found in a large section of the Conservatives, and in time they will produce their effect. The large numerical majority of the present Government on these questions, is not altogether a sign of strength or stability. A Ministry relying on the votes of the Opposition is in a perilous state, and must remind every one of the house built on the sands Yet the spectacle has been more than once exhibited in the session of 1845. The policy has been successful, the measure is carried; but it has been at a most damaging sacrifice of political consistency and public character.

The establishment of Colleges in Ireland, without religious tests of any kind, is another instance in which the Government has condemned the principle of our old collegiate establishments, by abolishing it in the new ones. Yet no men can have contended more strenuously for the maintenance of those tests in all their rigour; therefore, we again have an exhibition of inconsistency; if tests are supported in the old establishments because they are right, just, and beneficial, why are they not enforced in the new? If they are wrong, unjust, and mischievous, it is very proper to keep them out of the new establishments;—but, then, why are they at the same time upheld in the ancient abodes of wealthy and well endowed erudition? A principle cannot be right and wrong at the same time, or in different places. By this question also the Government has widened the breach between it and many of its supporters, and again been invested with numerical strength by the Opposition.

In fact, the whole Session of 1845, has set all political calculation, founded on old party principles, at defiance. If "Measures not Men," is to be the motto of the future, the new course is undoubtedly entered upon; if we have commenced the era of mere expediency, let us hope the best from it; but we must talk no more of principles, for they are virtually abolished and exploded. The tree can no longer be known by its fruits, for with Tory men and Whig measures we see reversed that natural course of things which forbids us to expect to gather grapes from thorns, or figs from thistles.

SKETCH FROM THE GRAND REVIEW IN HYDE PARK, ON MONDAY LAST,—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

We have no wish to go over the several acts of the Session, or enumerate the bills that have gone to the Limbo of Legislation at various stages of their progress. Amidst such a pressure of ultramaniac sufferances, have been passed. The police are missing active inquiries, and with hopes of success A second edition of the Semaphore of Marseilles, of the 2nd instant, gives some additional details It states that when the alarm of fire was given, on all sides people were at a loss what was the matter. But soon an immense column of smoke rising from the Mourillon told the sad tale. Crowds of people rushed to the spot, whither the fire engines were despatched repairing. Workmen from all quarters, all the troops of the garrison, the Maritime Prefect, the Maréchale de Camp commanding the department, the Mayor, and all the officers of the Municipal Corps, were speedily collected about the scene of disaster. But, alas! all their efforts were but of little avail. The flames had hardly been perceived before they had gained the principal magazine, where the building timber was piled. From that moment the Mourillon appeared a heated furnace We have, hitherto succeeded in saving the sawing-machinery, which cost so much money, and also the shipping on the stocks; but our losses are already valued at 25,000,000f. (1,000,000*l.* sterling.)

The harvest has pretty extensively commenced in the neighbourhood of Paris. The rye is for the most part cut; the oats are in progress; and it was probable that the wheat would be all down this week. The crops appear to be very much as regards grain and straw, and particularly the wheat and barley. Oats is less remarkable, but the crop will be rather more than an average one. In some parts the corn has been laid by the rain, but the only mischief anticipated from it is a little more labour for the reaper.

The Ville de Bordeaux steam packet, which arrived at Marseilles on the last inst. from Algeria, brings word that the Duke de Nemours had left the camp of Aïn el Arba on the 22th ult., and proceeded against the tribe of the Ouaqenonns, on which he had cited a severe chastisement. The packet brought also letters from Tripoli, dated the 18th ult., which show that no apprehension of any disturbances the Regency was entertained from the appearance of the Turkish troops at Tripoli. It would even appear from these letters that the sending of the Albanian soldiers arose from no other cause than the change of garrison, and the necessity of protecting Tripoli from attacks by the mountaineers of the Gebel. In fact no idea of a war was entertained either at Tunis or Tripoli

Some of the Paris papers (the Siecle for example) contain articles on the late reference in the House of Commons to the capabilities of this country to meet a war with France, but they are not of sufficient interest to require extract.

The departure of King Louis Philippe for the Chateau of Eu took place on Monday. All the household left for that residence on Sunday The Royal family were attended by Generals Athalin, Pajol, Hoguelett, Colonel Dumas, M. Vatout, Baron de Gerente, and other officers. Admiral Mackau is the only minister who accompanies the King to Eu, and his colleagues will visit him there successively.

The papers discuss the annexation of Texas to the United States, which the Constitutionnel regards as prejudicial to French as well as British interests. The Commerce Français remarks, that during the Treasury, that of the United States, backed by the French Ministry, has triumphed over the efforts of the Mexican Government and the resistance of England. We imagine that Mexico will not engage in a war with the United States in order to retake Texas. As to England, no doubt she will resign herself to it, and our Ministry will follow the example of that of Sir R. Peel. But now that the Texas question has been settled, we still wonder at Oregon, and we shall be much astonished if the British Government does not seize the occasion to be revenged for this affair.

The Moniteur contains a notice from the Minister for Public Works, fixing the adjudication of the Northern Railroad line, and of the Branch Railroad from Pamponx to Hazebrouck, for September 9.

Don Carlos and the Infantas Princesses arrived at Grenoux on the 24th ult, and immediately took up their residence at the bathing establishment. The Duke de Nemours left Limoges for Pompadour on the 30th of July.

The Journal des Debats says, that during the last two days the Custom house officers had seized in Paris English smuggled manufactures to an enormous amount. In one tailor's shop alone, a seizure of "macintoshes" to the amount of 50,000f. was made.

The squadron of evolution, under the orders of Admiral Parseval, had anchored in the Toulon roads. Several vessels were to be detached from it and sent to Algeria.

The Algerie states, that Abd-el-Kader had evacuated the territory of Algeria and retired, with about 100 horsemen, to the south-east, into a desert which neither belongs to the Emperor of Morocco nor to the ordinary column of the division of Oran, which, operated during the last three months in the neighbourhood of Saida, watching the movements of the Emir, had been accordingly dissolved. The Emir has already taken measures to prevent the recruiting of Abd-el Kader from returning into his dominions, and had lately sent 12 "cherriff-s" of the reigning family to prevail on his deira to submit quietly to the government threatening, in case of refusal, to compel them by force, to acknowledge his authority.

SPAIN

Our accounts from Spain state that the Queen reached Pampeluna in the morning of the 31st ult. Her Majesty was only to stop two days in the capital of Navarre, and to repair directly thence to the waters of Santa Agueda, in Guipuscoa. The Queen, on the 2d inst. reached San Sebastian, the municipality of which place gave her a brilliant reception

At Saragossa, the enthusiasm of the inhabitants for the Queen exceeded anything that could be imagined. Her Majesty and family were in the enjoyment of perfect health. El Clamor Publico, however, says that the immense number of troops that accompany her Majesty in the streets, the churches, &c., it would appear as if she was in a hostile country; and that the armed force did not look more menacing even at the time Marshal Sucbet occupied the country after having devastated it, and had Saragossa in ruins. The shouts and vivas proceeded from the military.

The Madrid Espectador states that the Ministers have resolved to convoke the Cortes for the 10th October next. According to the Postdata, several persons were arrested at Madrid on the night of the 29th ult. Among others, an officer named Luis Sagasti is mentioned. The Government, fearing no further alarm on the side of Catalonia and Valencia, has ordered the expeditionary column, which had been sent to Cuenca, to return to the capital.

El Tiempo publishes the treaty of commerce between England and Naples. It hopes that the treaty now negotiating between the Spanish and Neapolitan Governments will be formed on a similar basis

El Espectador, in an Barcelona correspondence of the 27th, denies that tranquility is restored, as the Government despatches would have the public believe. Five companies of soldiers entered Barcelona on the 26th, disarmed by the bands still wandering in the neighbourhood.

Shelly, Captain General of Seville, ordered an inhabitant of that city to be bastinadoed for having cried "Viva la Libertad." He received fifty blows of a stick on the back in the public square.

THE WEST INDIES.

The Dee has arrived from the West Indies. The dates of the intelligence brought by the Dee are, Jamaica, July 9; Vera Cruz, July 8; Havannah, July 11; Nassau, July 12; and Bermuda, July 21.

The sugar crop throughout the West Indies has most abundant, but there is a great falling off in the coffee crop. The Hill Coolies work well in all weathers, and are found to be very satisfactory.

The Jamaica Railway progresses rapidly, and it is positively expected that the first train between Jamaica and Spanish Town will begin to run on or about the 1st October. A Privy Council has already taken place to the great satisfaction of the gentlemen invited to be present on the occasion, and exquisite astonishment and delight of the "natives" who were gathered by the event.

By the Jamaica letters have been received from Mexico to the 28th of June. They state that since the abortive attempt at revolution on the 7th of June, the city of Mexico had remained perfectly quiet; but a federalist pronunciamiento had been made at Guadalajara.

STEAM BOILER EXPLOSIONS.—Dr. Ryan delivered a very interesting lecture on Tuesday afternoon, in the Theatre of the Polytechnic Institution, on the recent explosions, performed by Professor Boutigny, at the meeting of the British Association at Cambridge. These experiments, it will be remembered, related to the spheroidal shape of bodies when at high temperature, and to applications to steam boilers, and to the freezing of water in red hot vessels. In connection with this subject, Dr. Ryan detailed the principal causes of explosions in steam-boilers, commenting on the danger of allowing the fires to burn over unprotected, and the accidents which proceeded from such neglect. He then went on to prove that the maximum point of evaporation was much below the red heat of iron, being, in fact, not higher than the deg. Fahr., proving that no explosion could take place until the metal had cooled down. The doctor illustrated this part of his lecture by the experiment of pouring water into a platinum crucible at a white heat. The water immediately assumed the spheroidal shape, and continued in a state of action until the platinum had cooled down, when suddenly the water became converted into steam with great violence, and in this way there could be no doubt that boilers had been injured even after the fires had been removed. The lecture was concluded by an experiment which excited much curiosity and interest amongst the audience. It was the production of ice in a vessel at a glowing red heat, in the following manner:—A deep platina capsula was brought to a glowing red heat, at the same time liquid sulphureous acid, which had been preserved in a liquid state by a freezing mixture and some water, was poured into the vessel. The rapid evaporation of the volatile sulphureous acid, which boiled the freezing point produced such an intense degree of cold, that a large lump of ice was immediately formed, and being thrown out of the red-hot vessel, was handed round to the audience, who loudly expressed their approbation at the result.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY

The business, to-day, was of a routine, but rather important character. The Royal assent was given, by commission, to various bills. The Commons Inclosure Bill, and the County Rates Bill, were read a third time and passed. The Report on the South-Eastern Railway Extension was received, after some discussion. A long debate took place upon the Taxing Masters, Court of Chancery (Ireland), Bill; but, ultimately, the bill was read a third time and passed.

THE LONDON AND YORK RAILWAY BILL.- The Marquis of CLANRICARDE presented a petition against this bill The petition alleged that half a million of money had been subscribed for that scheme under fictitious names

THE BRAZILIAN PIRATES.—In answer to a question from Earl FORTESCUE, Lord STANLEY stated that doubts having been raised as to the legality of the sentence of the seven men condemned to death for the murder of Midshipman Palmer and the English seamen on board the Friendable, the legal question had, with the consent of Baron Platt, been reserved for the opinion of the fifteen judges, and the prisoners would, of course, be respited during the interval

THE PORTSMOUTH RAILWAY.—On the question that the report on the Portsmouth Railway should be received, the Duke of RICHMOND moved that the bill be re committed, on the ground that the committee reported in favour of the atmospheric line to Portsmouth, without having any evidence on the subject before them, in preference to the usual line by Guildford. The amendment was carried, on a division, by 13 to 11.

Lord Stanley withdrew the Valuation (Ireland) Bill; and an adjournment took place at half past four o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY

THE LONDON AND YORK RAILWAY.—Mr HAWES presented a petition from the Chairman of the Cambridge and Lincoln Railway Company who stated that his attention had been called to the subscription list of the London and York Company, and by the aid of himself and agents he had discovered that the names professing to have subscribed half a million to the contract deed, represented persons who were not living, or whose places of abode were wrongly given. In addition to which were many names of papers or persons who had no visible means of meeting their engagements. The petitioner's reasons were not yet ripened for full, but the petition expressed that he had no doubt he would be able to discover many more frauds and forgeries in addition to those already set forth.—This petition excited a general discussion upon railway proceedings, after which the third reading of the bill was proposed, Mr. ROEBUCK moved, as an amendment, that it should take place but day three months. The amendment, however, was no. pressed, and the bill for reading was carried.

THE LATE ACCIDENT ON THE SOUTH-EASTERN RAILWAY. Lord PALMER STON said he had been requested by the directors of the South Eastern Railway Company to state that the late accident that occurred was in consequence of the engine having been too weak to perform the work required. In October last, when they found that their engines were too weak, they gave immediate orders for a fresh supply. He assured the House he would make this statement, but that he should say at the same time that he thought their explanation no justification whatever of the course the company had pursued. For, when they found that their engines were too weak, they ought to have proportioned the weight of the train to the capacity of the engine; and instead of employing two engines to draw a heavy train, they should have put a stronger engine to draw a lighter train. As to getting an engine behind their train, they assured him that that was only done on one part of the road where there was a considerable incline, and that the trains in that case never went faster than twelve or fourteen miles an hour.

ADMISSION TO PUBLIC BUILDINGS.—Mr HUME drew attention to the subject of the exaction of fees on admission to cathedrals and public buildings, urging, as on former occasions, the absolute necessity of the cessation of the custom.

This raised a short conversation, during which Sir R PEEL intimated that the Dean and Chapter of Westminster intend to admit the public freely to the great body of the cathedral, to all parts except the Abbey chapel.

MR. WRAY AND THE SOUTH EASTERN RAILWAY Mr. HAWES then submitted a motion respecting Mr Wray, the Metropolitan Receiver of Police, the purport of which was that the conduct of Mr. Wray, in acting as the agent for the transfer of £300 derived from the sale of South Eastern Railway Shares, as a consideration for the Parliamentary services of Mr Bonham in 1844, be considered blameworthy, and highly derogatory to the upright service, and that consequently the letter of the Home Secretary censuring his conduct, fell short of the justice of the case Sir J. GRAHAM said he did not defend the conduct of Mr. Wray, for whom he had the personal acquaintance. It was on his own responsibility, and without communication with any one, that he had written him a letter pointing out the impropriety of his conduct, and cautioning him against the future, and in so doing he no indeed that he had carried out the Report of the Committee, which had set forth that the conduct of Mr. Wray was deserving of serious reprobation. That was all that Mr. Wray's case had been satisfied by the forfeiture of the places of Captain Boldero and Mr. Bonham, the latter of whom he still emphatically called his friend, though he had taken up a stronger engine to draw a lighter train. As to getting an engine behind their train, they assured him that that was only done on one part of the road where there was a considerable incline, and that the trains in that case never went faster than twelve or fourteen miles an hour.

ADMISSION TO PUBLIC BUILDINGS.—Mr HUME drew attention to the subject of the exaction of fees on admission to cathedrals and public buildings, urging, as on former occasions, the absolute necessity of the cessation of the custom.

This raised a short conversation, during which Sir R PEEL intimated that the Dean and Chapter of Westminster intend to admit the public freely to the great body of the cathedral, to all parts except the Abbey chapel.

MR. WRAY AND THE SOUTH EASTERN RAILWAY Mr. HAWES then submitted a motion respecting Mr Wray, the Metropolitan Receiver of Police, the purport of which was that the conduct of Mr. Wray, in acting as the agent for the transfer of £300 derived from the sale of South Eastern Railway Shares, as a consideration for the Parliamentary services of Mr Bonham in 1844, be considered blameworthy, and highly derogatory to the upright service, and that consequently the letter of the Home Secretary censuring his conduct, fell short of the justice of the case Sir J. GRAHAM said he did not defend the conduct of Mr. Wray, for whom he had the personal acquaintance. It was on his own responsibility, and without communication with any one, that he had written him a letter pointing out the impropriety of his conduct, and cautioning him against the future, and in so doing he no indeed that he had carried out the Report of the Committee, which had set forth that the conduct of Mr. Wray was deserving of serious reprobation. That was all that his case had been satisfied by the forfeiture of the places of Captain Boldero and Mr. Bonham, the latter of whom he still emphatically called his friend, though he had taken up a stronger engine to draw a lighter train. As to getting an engine behind their train, they assured him that that was only done on one part of the road where there was a considerable incline, and that the trains in that case never went faster than twelve or fourteen miles an hour.

ADMISSION TO PUBLIC BUILDINGS.—Mr HUME drew attention to the subject of the exaction of fees on admission to cathedrals and public buildings, urging, as on former occasions, the absolute necessity of the cessation of the custom.

This raised a short conversation, during which Sir R PEEL intimated that the Dean and Chapter of Westminster intend to admit the public freely to the great body of the cathedral, to all parts except the Abbey chapel.

MR. WRAY AND THE SOUTH EASTERN RAILWAY Mr. HAWES then submitted a motion respecting Mr Wray, the Metropolitan Receiver of Police, the purport of which was that the conduct of Mr. Wray, in acting as the agent for the transfer of £300 derived from the sale of South Eastern Railway Shares, as a consideration for the Parliamentary services of Mr Bonham in 1844, be considered blameworthy, and highly derogatory to the upright service, and that consequently the letter of the Home Secretary censuring his conduct, fell short of the justice of the case Sir J. GRAHAM said he did not defend the conduct of Mr. Wray, for whom he had the personal acquaintance. It was on his own responsibility, and without communication with any one, that he had written him a letter pointing out the impropriety of his conduct, and cautioning him against the future, and in so doing he no indeed that he had carried out the Report of the Committee, which had set forth that the conduct of Mr. Wray was deserving of serious reprobation. That was all that his case had been satisfied by the forfeiture of the places of Captain Boldero and Mr. Bonham, the latter of whom he still emphatically called his friend, though he had taken up a stronger engine to draw a lighter train. As to getting an engine behind their train, they assured him that that was only done on one part of the road where there was a considerable incline, and that the trains in that case never went faster than twelve or fourteen miles an hour.

ADMISSION TO PUBLIC BUILDINGS.—Mr HUME drew attention to the subject of the exaction of fees on admission to cathedrals and public buildings, urging, as on former occasions, the absolute necessity of the cessation of the custom.

This raised a short conversation, during which Sir R PEEL intimated that the Dean and Chapter of Westminster intend to admit the public freely to the great body of the cathedral, to all parts except the Abbey chapel.

MR. WRAY AND THE SOUTH EASTERN RAILWAY Mr. HAWES then submitted a motion respecting Mr Wray, the Metropolitan Receiver of Police, the purport of which was that the conduct of Mr. Wray, in acting as the agent for the transfer of £300 derived from the sale of South Eastern Railway Shares, as a consideration for the Parliamentary services of Mr Bonham in 1844, be considered blameworthy, and highly derogatory to the upright service, and that consequently the letter of the Home Secretary censuring his conduct, fell short of the justice of the case Sir J. GRAHAM said he did not defend the conduct of Mr. Wray, for whom he had the personal acquaintance. It was on his own responsibility, and without communication with any one, that he had written him a letter pointing out the impropriety of his conduct, and cautioning him against the future, and in so doing he no indeed that he had carried out the Report of the Committee, which had set forth that the conduct of Mr. Wray was deserving of serious reprobation. That was all that his case had been satisfied by the forfeiture of the places of Captain Boldero and Mr. Bonham, the latter of whom he still emphatically called his friend, though he had taken up a stronger engine to draw a lighter train. As to getting an engine behind their train, they assured him that that was only done on one part of the road where there was a considerable incline, and that the trains in that case never went faster than twelve or fourteen miles an hour.

forward others, of submitting to modifications, of giving them up altogether at the end of the session, he might have found ample materials for his accusation; and the plastic and surgery measure alone would afford him sufficient scope for lengthened comments. The noble lord having referred to the satisfactory state of our foreign relations, took a review of the domestic measures introduced by the Government, and first noticed those which were framed for Ireland. He congratulated Ministers on having progressed to a prosperous declaration, including that "that concession had reached its limits." They had admitted that the Irish people were entitled to equal and legal and effective rights to the privileges of Englishmen or Scotchmen. But while they had given forth these liberal principles they had brought forward no measures to secure to the Irish a municipal franchise, or a right of voting for Members of Parliament, equivalent to those possessed by the English or Scotch. They had issued, too, a landlord and tenant commission, which had excited undue hopes in the minds of the tenantry, and the only result of that dangerous experiment was a bill the most extraordinary, unpractical, and absurd ever imagined, which they abandoned almost as soon as they had propounded. They likewise proposed a bill for the Endowment of Maynooth, which, though good in itself, was so introduced, and so defended, as to raise a clamour, and excite the most puzzling doubts as to their future intentions with respect to the endowment of the whole Roman Catholic Clergy of Ireland. These concessions to Ireland were by no means perfect. Lord John Russell turned from the consideration of Irish measures to those connected with finance and trade, which he admitted had never this answer his expectations; but though the principle of free trade had been adopted to a considerable extent, he thought they ought to have been further carried out in respect to timber, sugar, and corn. Every session the language of these Ministers, with regard to protection to agriculture, was growing "small by degrees, and beautifully less." The noble lord concluded by moving for a return of the quantity of wheat in bond on the 1st of July every year since 1826. Also, for a list of the public bills which have passed a second reading, distinguishing those which have since become law, during the present session.—Sir J. Graham said it was not unnatural that at the close of such an important session, the noble lord should take an opportunity of passing its measures in review; and he had, therefore, no reason to complain of that, nor, indeed, of the general spirit of his observations, which were entirely in accordance with what was to be fairly anticipated from his side of the house. The right hon. baronet then defended the Government from the allegations urged against it by the noble lord, and, in reference to the bills of importance which had been postponed, said that when it was found impossible to carry through Parliament the great number of important measures contemplated by Ministers, they were compelled to pause a selection of such as to them seemed to be of the most pressing importance, not abandoning the others, but merely postponing them until next session. It was very possible that, in making that selection, they might not have chosen those which the noble lord might have thought most important; but he believed the course adopted by the Government was, under the circumstances, the most advisable that could be adopted. The right hon. gentleman then contended for the necessity of maintaining the Established Church of Ireland, the overthrow of which would give a violent shock to all other institutions. But the principle which they proposed to govern Ireland was that of equality of civil rights, and impartial justice, firmly administered. To the harmless motion of the noble lord, for returns respecting the progress of the various bills which had been brought under the consideration of Parliament during the session, there was no objection whatever.—Mr. M. J. O'Connell, Mr. Humphre, Mr. Moffatt, Mr. Villiers, and Mr. Shiel, addressed the house, and the motion was agreed to. Mr. Hawes obtained leave to bring in a bill to amend the laws relating to bankruptcy and insolvency.—The house adjourned, at half past one to Friday.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

Their lordships met at five o'clock.

The Consolidated Fund Appropriation Bill was read a second time. The Tarpaulin (Ireland) and the Municipal Districts (Ireland) Bills were read a third time and passed. The Commons' Amendments to the Lunatic Asylum (Ireland) Bill were agreed to His Majesty's Visit to Germany.—Lord Campbell, following the suggestion of Lord J. Russell, put some questions as to the appointment of [illegible] and to the [illegible] of the Lord Chancellor, in answer to which he said there was no legal necessity for such an appointment, and from the frequency and rapidity of communication, the Government did not think it expedient to a lopt such a course. Lord Aberdeen, the Foreign Secretary, would accompany her Majesty.—The house adjourned at half past six o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

The Royal assent was given by commission to various bills. The Appropriation Bill and the Beerhouse Bills Bill were read a third time and passed; and the house adjourned

HOUSE OF COMMONS. FRIDAY.

New Writs.—A new writ was moved for the borough of Belfast, in the room of James Emerson Tennent, Esq., who has accepted the stewardship of the Chiltern Hundreds.—A new writ was also moved for the Borough of Cockermouth, in the room of W. Crage, Esq., who has accepted the office of one of the Lords of the Treasury.—New writs were likewise moved for Lambeth, in the room of Charles Hope, Esq., who has accepted the office of Governor of the Isle of Man; and for the borough of Warwick, in the room of Sir C. Douglas, who has accepted the office of Commissioner of Greenwich Hospital. Mr. Pusnell moved a new writ for the borough of Southampton, in the room of Lord Howick, who has been called to the House of Peers.

Railways.—The Report on the Sheffield and Lincolnshire Junction Railway Bill was brought up, and the amendments were read a second time.—Arrangements to the South Eastern Railway (branch to Deal and extension of the South Eastern, Canterbury, Margate, and Ramsgate Bill, were read and agreed to.—Captain Conway brought up the report on the committee appointed to inquire into the railways in Group X. The report stated that those companies declined to [illegible] further in the present [illegible] It was [illegible] on [illegible] and [illegible] to [illegible] matter has not been able to [illegible]

The Silk Weavers' Bill was read a third time and passed.

Mr. Sir Benjamin gave notice that early in the next session he would move for leave to bring in a bill to prevent the nuisance of smoke, unless the subject should be taken up by the Government.

In reply to a question from Colonel Verner, Sir R. Peel said, the report that Mr. Watson was removed from the commission of the peace, and from the Deputy Lieutenancy of the county of Antrim, for attending a meeting of Orangemen, was true.

State of Syria.—Lord Palmerston entered at some length into a consideration of the disputes between the Druses and the Maronites, and the general condition of Syria, observing that the Government had not used sufficient energy to induce the Porte to fulfil its engagements towards the Five Powers. He moved for certain official papers on the subject. Sir R. Peel admitted that the Porte had not fulfilled its engagements, but the desire to preserve the integrity of the Turkish empire rendered it very difficult to interfere. Only to-day, however, Government had received advices from Syria, which led them to hope that the Porte would at length submit some propositions for the preservat on of the tranquility of Lebanon.—Sir C. [illegible] a member of the house be removed, and there [illegible] bers present, an adjournment took place at eight o'clock.

The British Museum.—On Thursday, by order of the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, the whole of the remaining roof of the British Museum, comprising several tons of lead, the entire brickwork, &c., was disposed of by auction, in order to be removed for the erection of the new stone wing, to correspond with that on the western side, which has been for some months finished. Among the mass of building which will be taken down will be the old lantern formed house, shutting in Great Russell street. The foundation for the new wing has been laid for some weeks; but it is expected for two years before it will be complete.

Lord Shrewsbury's Character of Sir Robert Peel.—A few days ago, Lord Shrewsbury and other gentlemen dined with the Lord Mayor at their Hall, when the Freedom of the Company was conferred upon him. In returning thanks, his noble host, Lord Melbourne made a curious compliment between the Whigs and the Conservatives, and finally proposed the health of Sir Robert Peel. The noble viscount said, "The Whig Administration is now defunct. We are gone, as members of it, and as a Government. But Parliamentary parties also, sooner or later, perish. Even the Conservatives, he said to have expired, and to be consigned to the tomb, but the members are, he was sure, as much alive, and not dead, but active and efficient (Loud cheers). Our principles and opinions are, he was sure, safe, and will survive us. (Renewed cheers.) They have been adopted and acted upon by those who replaced us, and they have been productive, during the term of Parliament that is just about to terminate, of more numerous wise and beneficial measure of measures which I believe to be fit and essential to be framed upon sound principle, based upon good example, and which, as near as possible, in our limited and fallible capacity, to follow out the principle to which they especially apply, and upon the community at large. (Loud cheers.) At the same time, we all well know that these very measures have been productive, on the part of many of the British subjects, of opinion that they have been the cause of much bitter feeling, not to say an ignoble invective, being levelled against the right hon. baronet at the head of her Majesty's Government, on account of some measures which [illegible] measures with his former opinions and conduct. Hear.) Placed as I have been in circumstances in the position of an adjutant and organ to that right hon. gentleman, it is natural that I should lose no time and examine his conduct, not with hostile jealousy or any ill-will, but with care and anxiety, hear, hear, I have made such inquiry and examination, and I think myself in full possession of the grounds of his conduct, and I am able to state, as the result of it, that I know of nothing in the entire conduct of the right hon. baronet which should, in point of consistency, preclude him from looking forward rather the measures which he may consider it forward, or any other measures in the same direction, which he may conceive to understand or persuade his house once would be both expedient and conducive to the benefit and advantage of his country (Loud cheers.) Thus much I have thought it my duty to say. I had intended to have said it in Parliament, but I have never been able to find an opportunity of doing so."

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

MRS. LAWRENCE, OF STUDLEY PARK.

Elizabeth Sophia Lawrence, of Studley Royal, in the county of York, the representative of the great Yorkshire family of Aislabie, and one of the wealthiest heiresses in the empire, died on the 30th ult., at Studley Park, in the 55th year of her age. Although her death was an event looked for during the previous week, yet the information came as a general shock throughout the neighbourhood in which she had so long resided, and so long exercised the most benign influence. All the shops in Ripon were closed, and the residents plunged into the deepest sorrow, so universally was the deceased lady respected. The inhabitants of the district, and especially the poor, will experience an irreparable loss in her death. Her acts of kindness and benevolence to all classes were bounded only by the extensive means which she possessed of doing good to her fellow-creatures; and her memory will be revered as long as strict integrity and pure philanthropy continue to be estimated by mankind. The bulk of Mrs. Lawrence's immense fortune, estimated at £50,000 a-year, is inherited by Earl de Grey, whose ancestor, Sir William Robinson, Bart., married Mary, daughter of George Aislabie, Esq., of Studley Royal. Over the elections for the city of Ripon, Mrs Lawrence, from her vast property in the town and neighbourhood, possessed considerable influence, and, as she entrusted the management of her estates to her valued friend Sir Lancelot Shadwell, the Vice-Chancellor, the constituency has, of late years, been generally represented by eminent members of the legal profession.

LAMENTABLE ACCIDENT ON THE NORTHERN AND EASTERN RAILWAY.

A very serious accident took place on Monday on the line of the Northern and Eastern Railway, viz., that portion which General Pasley approved for public traffic only a few days since, and which was opened on Wednesday week to Cambridge and Norwich.

It appears that on Monday last the express, or morning mail train, left the terminus of the junction station at Shoreditch, at half-past 11 o'clock, the usual hour, for Norwich. It was composed of two second-class and three first class carriages, between which and the tender and engine were the luggage van and a horse box, containing two horses, and at the rear of the [illegible] as a truck, together with another horse-box. The train proceeded [illegible] and rate, averaging about 30 miles an hour, making two stoppages, as far as Weston, in Essex, a distance of 43 miles from town. It was then about five minutes to 1 o'clock, and the under track and horse box having been detached, the regular signals were given, and the train renewed its course. The line between this station and the next, Chesterford, is slightly on the incline, and, according to some of the residents, the speed here maintained was greater than during the preceding part of the journey, so much so as to produce a violent oscillation of the carriages. Suddenly, on the train verging into a kind of cutting, situate near a village called Littlebourgh, half way between the Weston and Chesterford stations, the passengers ensconced in the [illegible] which was immediately succeeded by one of a most violent character, accompanied by an explosion. It was some moments ere the passengers recovered from its effects, and on looking out of the carriages it was impossible for a time to discern what had really happened, on account of a complete torrent of fire, intermingled with dust and dirt, while at the same time the steam literally enveloped the train, and even when it had subsided, the roaring of the engine was of so frightful a character as to terrify the passengers. On, however, a few of the passengers, bolder than the remainder, [illegible] thing, a most frightful sight presented itself. The engine had crossed—after breaking away from the tender the up line rails, and [illegible] outside of the cutting, a complete wreck. The tender was some distance in advance of the train, doubled up, whilst the post-office and horse boxes were on fire. The first object was to remove the passengers from the carriages next to the horse box, which were sadly broken, the middle being taken completely off, and flames issuing from the roof of one of them. Many passengers were carried out severely dead, and others were much bruised. In another part of the train, the General Post-office guard, in charge of the mails, was found lying on his back, having seemingly been thrown from his seat on the first alarm, and a mail bag passed over him, for one of his legs was found to be shockingly crushed. The dense body of smoke and steam kept issuing from the disabled engine, and the fire-bricks that were strewn with heated coke, the search for a time could not be proceeded with.

In the meanwhile, the guard of the train very promptly forwarded two or three of the passengers, who were labouring under the effects of wounds, and other assistance, and, on the disastrous occurrence being made known, hundreds flocked to the spot

It is impossible for us to give any adequate descr ption of the [illegible] almost unparalleled in railway accidents. Both lines, to the extent of near 200 yards, were torn up. The engineer was found alive, very little injured, but his stoker was discovered to be quite dead, and the fireman in a dying state. Any attempt to extricate him by the means then at hand was a matter of impossibility; and it was evident to all, from the weight of the engine lying upon the body, that any motion of the latter, and the poor fellow must have been killed instants recently on the engine overturning. The fire still raging with considerable vigour, the bystanders, the Cambridge railway brought up the report, and the concourse of people, the blazing trucks and carriages, and eventually succeeded in subduing the flames, by which time, however, the luggage van was partially consumed, [illegible] damage done to the passengers' baggage.

In an hour or so afterwards a pilot engine from Cambridge reached the scene, and was immediately set to work in dragging away the wrecks, the line being perfectly impassable both up and down. That having been partially accomplished, men were enabled to get at the stricken, and in the course of two or three hours succeeded, by means of jacks, in raising it, when the mutilated remains of the unfortunate stoker, Richard Peake, were dragged forth. Recognition was impossible. The body was burnt and scalded to a frightful extent, and being placed on a litter, it was removed to the Falcon inn, Littleborough, to await the Coroner's inquiry. The guard, after being attended to by the surgeons who were brought to his aid, was afterwards taken on to the Cambridge Hospital, where he now lies in a most deplorable state of suffering. During these operations those passengers who were injured were conveyed into the adjacent meadows and laid down until the necessary assistance had arrived to remove them to the neighbouring towns. They received every attention from a large muster of medical gentlemen from Weedon, Saffron Walden, &c., and late in the day posted to their respective homes.

Mr. Carnchaigh, the superintendent of the locomotive department of the line, was on the engine at the time of the accident, and providentially escaped injury. He states that he was thrown from the engine, and found himself but a few yards from the ponderous mass. His escape, therefore, may be deemed almost miraculous. The escape, also, of the engineer is wonderful. He was standing between the engine and tender, with his face forwards, when the force of the shock drove him violently against the dram of the boiler, and the succeeding shock sent him over the back of the train on to the side of the cutting.

It is stated that had it not been for the luggage van and horse-box, that were placed between the tender and the carriages, the greater portion of the passengers must have been sacrificed.

The calamity has produced the greatest consternation in the county, and in consequence of the immense concourse of persons that had flocked to the scene, it was deemed necessary to call in the aid of the Essex constabulary force. For hours the railway excavators, of whom there were a large number at work, and the labourers in the neighbourhood, were engaged in "wrecked train" and replacing the rails, but it was not until five o'clock that this was accomplished. The line on which the accident happened was then thrown open, and the trains in waiting at each end proceeded to and fro.

The extent of mischief done is very great. Besides the destruction of the engine and tender, the luggage van was destroyed by fire, as well as the horse-box, though the horses were preserved; two second-class and a first-class carriage were shattered, besides other damage, to the extent of about £2000.

On Wednesday morning, Major General Pasley, the Government Inspector of Railways, went to Chesterford, to institute an inquiry into the cause of the accident.

The spot where it occurred is situated half-way between Weedon and Chesterford, about a mile from Littlebury, forty-three from London, and fourteen from Cambridge. The line is here at an inclination of about one in 264, and is straight, in one level bed and five, and, as it were, in a hole where the accident took place. There is also an embankment on each side of the road, to a very slight extent; and most fortunate was it that, had the train been up, or the train must have tumbled off the line into the field beneath—a fall of from ten to twelve feet.

The General, being informed that Mr. Joseph Jackson, the contractor, who had the formation of the line from Bishop's Stortford to Brandon, had been a passenger in the train that met with the accident, he sent a mounted [illegible] who knew of the unfortunate affair.

Mr. Jacks said that he was in one of the second-class carriages with a lady. Shortly after leaving the Weedon station he was considerably surprised in perceiving a quantity of dirt being thrown up, which immediately [illegible] a loud noise accompanied had occurred, and, exciting a severe shock, he jumped up; he seized the lady in the carriage with him, and pressed her close to the side with a view of saving her from injury. Immediately afterwards there was a loud crash, followed by repeated concussions. He then put his head out of the window, and saw that the engine and trains had run off the line on to the up rails, and were scattered about. His first object was to separate the wounded passengers, and to see that they were properly extricated from the carriages. He saw that they were safely removed out of danger, not one being injured, although all were exceedingly frightened. He then proceeded to ascertain the mischief, and found the engine had turned over, and was lying on the up line bank, deeply embedded in the soil and chalk. A second class carriage was lying partly on the fire box of the engine, and the luggage on the roof was in flames. The tender was capsized on the opposite bank, having detached itself from the locomotive, as also the luggage van and the horse box, all of which were much damaged. The guard of the train, Colwell, was found with his leg frightfully fractured, and it appeared that he was sitting on the roof of a carriage, in his usual seat, when the clashing of the carriages must have nearly severed the limb. The poor fellow was promptly removed, and proceeding has the fire was rapidly increasing, he, Mr. Jackson, sought the assistance of a number of excavators near the spot, when the flames were quickly extinguished.

General Pasley asked him what he considered to be the cause of the accident? Mr. Jackson replied that he was of opinion that it arose from a flaw in the metal of one of the rails. During the investigation, General Pasley inspected the engine, its tender, and the carriages. The engine had been dug out of the cuttings, and was found to be not so extensively damaged as had been anticipated. The chimney was knocked off, and some of the pipes and machinery carried away. The wood work that encircled the boiler was also burned. The tender lay in the same spot in the cutting where it was thrown; it had been knocked entirely off the wheels, which lay in another part of the line. A second-class carriage was dreadfully shattered, and the roof partly burned.

General Pasley got into it, and observed, that considering where it was thrown, that the fewer, being filled with passengers, it was truly wonderful that none of them were sacrificed.

Young, the driver of the engine, being asked what speed the train was going at the time, said a steady pace, about 28 miles an hour. One of the engineers, however, said that the "beat" of the engine just prior to the accident was more like 50 miles an hour.

General Pasley: It is very clear, from the great mischief effected, that the engine was travelling at a great rate.

General Pasley inquired of Mr. Phipps (the engineer of the line) and Mr. Hanson what would have been the effect had an engine been propelling the train behind?

Both gentlemen shrugged up their shoulders, but made no answer.

General Pasley: It would have settled them.

One of the officers remarked, "Yes, indeed it would; every one would have been killed."

General Pasley: General then took his departure for town, and we understand that he was of the general opinion, that the disaster had arisen from overspeed down the incline. His inquiry lasted nearly three hours.

The unfortunate driver's guard, Colwell, who was removed to the Cambridge Hospital, continues in the most precarious state. Amputation of the limb, though rendered necessary, has not as yet been performed, owing to the poor fellow's exhausted and almost senseless condition.

The inquest on the body of the stoker, Richard Peake, commenced on Thursday before Mr. C. C. Lewis, Coroner for Essex, at the Falcon Inn, Littleborough.

The Weather.—Some improvement has taken place in the weather, but not to the extent desired. Wednesday morning dawned with the promise of a fine warm day, and the promise was realised up to a late hour in the afternoon, when there were several heavy showers, accompanied by strong gusts of wind from W.N.W. The temperature, however, was favourable and seasonable. At mid-day the thermometer in the shade indicated 69 degrees, and in certain situations it was from one to two degrees higher. On Thursday the weather was still showery, but the temperature warm. The most recent accounts from the country, generally, speak of improvement, and there is every reason for believing that the prognosticators of evil with regard to the harvest will prove false prophets.

Danger to St. Peter's, at Rome.—A letter from Rome contains the following:—One of the most splendid monuments of Catholic art, the Dome of St. Peter's, at Rome, inspires serious alarm in the minds of the architects of this city. For a long time past, the cupola has been cracked in many places, and ten arches of iron, weighing 60,000 kilogrammes, have been placed to prevent its fall. It has just been discovered that the lanternino above which rises the cross which crowns the edifice, is cracked through and through. The numerous lightning conductors which had been erected by the late Pope Leo XII. for the protection of the building, have been the effect of a thunder-storm. The lanternino is being surrounded by heavy iron chains, to prevent the cracks from extending. The grand portal of the ancient Basilic of St. Paul, on the Ostia road, and which was destroyed by fire some years since, is almost completed

Regatta at Havre.—This much talked of affair came off on the 29th of July. The fête held under the patronage of his Royal Highness the Prince de Joinville, who gave a prize of 1500 francs (£60), the largest that was contended for at this regatta, for a rowing match open to all nations. Some English boats were brought a boat over from Portsmouth with the intention of entering her, but she was found too long for the regulations. Determined upon making a profitable voyage, they borrowed an old leaky French boat of 30 tons burden at Fescamp, and caulking her as well as they could upon a few hours' preparation, started against three crack French row boats, manned with the best mariners of Havre, in a strong breeze, and rather a heavy sea. The contest was witnessed by an immense concourse of spectators assembled on the beach, where the authorities of the place, the military with their bands, and the fishermen's wives at Fescamp, added much to the splendour and gaiety of the spectacle. From the first it was evident that the old boat had got a crew of men in her the pull altogether, the feathering of the oars, and the seamanlike method of meeting the swell, and her constantly gaining upon the other boats, told the spectators the plain story that that was the English boat. The best appointed French boat pulled most manfully to keep up with her, but in vain. At length, baffled in the attempt, they permitted their boat to drift too much in shore, and shipped a breaker that put them all hors de combat. The English boat actually stopped awhile to pick up her crew. Old Dover was not likely to get anything out of the Frenchmen that time, they stretched out their oars again, and reached the goal up to their knees in water. The French admit that the English boat won the race in a handsome style, but are not a little annoyed that Jack should have carried off the Prince's best prize with one of their own worst boats.

SMYRNA.

On the 2nd instant, the city of Smyrna was almost laid in ashes by a conflagration, exceeding those (except the recent calamities at Quebec), which it has been our lot to notice. The fire broke out at about six P.M., at a barber's shop, and the flames, aided by the high wind that prevailed, were not stayed until 7000 houses were consumed, and the whole of the Frank quarter, the Armenian quarter, and the Dutch consulate, destroyed. The following extract of a letter from a traveller in Smyrna, dated July 9th, attempts to detail the lamentable devastation:—

"I cannot hope to give you an adequate idea of the scene that is presented at the present by the ruined city of Smyrna. Such is the stupefaction that prevails among all classes, that notwithstanding several days have elapsed since the fire took place, no attempt has been made, either on the part of the authorities or of private individuals, to remove the rubbish that encumbers even the most frequented streets. Levantines, and particularly those of Smyrna, have ever been celebrated for their lightheartedness, and the apathy which they have evinced on the present occasion is impressive of but their present misfortune seems to have extinguished the quality, and in place of their habitual reliance on the hope of better days, you hear from every one a tale of despair. The very indifferent conduct of the British is expressed at the conduct of the Turks on the occasion. Whether from indifference, or a belief that fire is a particular visitation of Providence, and must not be interfered with, they did absolutely nothing to stop the progress of the flames, and had it not been for the assistance afforded by the French and Austrian men-of-war, not a house would have been left standing. The late Turkish governor was encouraged by the Greeks who work the pumps, that they behaved infamously. Formerly, each Consulate had a pump and 50 men attached to it, who enjoyed European protection, on condition of acting as firemen; but the late regulations of the Levantine engaged a number of Turks, so that the pumps were used as a means of deterring them, and, thus, in addition to physical wants, these poor people have to endure pain, and to drag their suffering about with them. It is said that 4000 persons are dying in the ocean. It is pleasing to see even those who have suffered largely by the fire, and can ill afford it, come forward with their mites; but the distress prevailing is so intense, that no one who has anything to spare, can withhold it under any circumstances."

Smyrna is one of the very few ancient cities which have survived to our times. It is the most important city of Asia Minor, and the centre of the Levant trade. It is situate about 210 miles south-west from Constantinople, direct distance. The city rises in the form of an amphitheatre, from its capacious bay. Its margin is lined with quays, on which there are handsome stone houses; so that the city, with its domes and minarets, has a fine appearance approaching it from the sea. But a great part of the interior consists of low wooden houses, and the streets are ill-paved, narrow, crooked and dirty. The inhabitants are stated at about 130 000, of whom about 70,000 are Turks, 30,000 Greeks, 12,000 Jews, 7,000 Armenians, and the remainder natives of various parts of the world; especially English, French, Dutch, and Indians, who reside for the most part in the best quarter of the city, near the bay. Many of the European states have their Consuls at Smyrna, such as England, Sweden, Prussia, France, Vienna, &c.

SMYRNA.—FROM A DAGUERREOTYPE TAKEN ON THE ROOF OF THE GOVERNOR'S HOUSE.

The last great fire at Smyrna was about four years since, at midnight, July 28, 1841, when about 12,000 houses were destroyed, including two thirds of the Turkish quarter, most of the French quarter, and the whole of the Jewish quarter; with many bazaars, synagogues, mosques, and other public buildings.

By the recent fire, the Armenian community have suffered severely; only 37 out of 900 houses belonging to them escaped the flames; their ancient church, and all its precious ornaments, has been consumed. Thousands of the afflicted people have lost their all, and are now forced to live on bread and water, dealt out from day to day by the hand of charity, crowded in the meanwhile under tents and temporary cabins, exposed to the full power of a burning sun. An appeal to British benevolence has been made on behalf of the sufferers; and, we doubt not, will be liberally responded to.

"CAPPING" OF DOCTORS OF MEDICINE, AT EDINBURGH.

On Friday, 1st of August, society at large became indebted to the authorities of the Edinburgh University, for the addition of no fewer than seventy nine physicians to the useful, but by no means under-stocked, faculty. That number of gentlemen were on the above day presented with diplomas, and the style, title, and dignity of "M.D.," amidst all the forms and ceremonies in those cases made and provided.

The Graduates having assembled in the Library Hall, were invested with gowns, and marshalled in alphabetical order, according to the initial letters of their names, into the chemical lecture-room, where they found several members of the senatus academicus ready to receive them. The President, the Very Reverend Principal Lee, was supported by the Lord Provost and several civic functionaries. A large and brilliant auditory was closely packed in the amphitheatre; and, as it chiefly consisted of the personal friends, male and female, of the successful candidates for honours, great interest in the proceedings was manifested.

The ceremonies were commenced by an appropriate and impressive prayer from the Principal. That concluded, the proper officer administered the usual oath, in Latin, to the candidates, en masse, and the formulary of "Capping" was commenced. The gentleman whose name stood first on the list, ascended the platform, and inscribed his name in a book, writing his prenoms in Latin. His name having been audibly announced, he advanced to the President, who, placing a round velvet cap on his head, addressed him, saying, "Ego te Doctorem Medicinæ creo" (I create you a Doctor of Medicine). He then removed the cap; and, from that moment, the Graduate became an M.D.—In testimony of which the President presented him with his diploma, rolled up in a neat tin case. With this certificate of honour he passed along the platform, and retired amidst a degree of applause, in proportion to the number of his own personal friends who happened to be present. Precisely the same ceremony was performed by the remaining seventy eight. After which, the college officer made an official announcement of what had been done, in Latin.

Professor Allen Thomson then proceeded, in the capacity of Promoter for this year, to address the Graduates. After congratulating them on the successful termination of their studies, he directed their attention to the approaching prospect of improvement of the education and regulation of the medical profession by a Parliamentary measure of reform; and urged the propriety of endeavouring to obtain a bill which should secure equal privileges to duly qualified practitioners in all parts of the country, on no other basis than that of an equal and similar education for all.

The remainder of Professor Thomson's address consisted of an exhortation to the Graduates to improve their professional and general knowledge by reading and by the assiduous observation of disease. Opportunities for the latter were not to be expected from the speedy influx of regular patients; for the most proficient Graduates could not expect to obtain extensive practice at first. The Professor, therefore, urged them, as much for their own advantage as from a well-directed and useful benevolence, to exert their skill gratuitously amongst the poor, in the respective districts to which they may be called. Even when profitable practice flowed in, they should not shrink from benefiting the lowly and afflicted, and increasing their stock of experience. Neither must they imagine their studies at an end because they had attained their present honours; and the Professor endeavoured to impress upon the Graduates the importance and necessity of following in their practice general principles derived from the study of the accessory sciences; and also pointing out to them the beneficial influence which scientific and literary studies have upon the moral and intellectual character of the physician.

The learned Professor resumed his seat amidst much applause, or, in academical phrase, "ruffing."

The most proficient of the new M.D's received prizes for the excellence of their theses.

"CAPPING" OF DOCTORS OF MEDICINE, AT EDINBURGH.

THE COTTAGE OF THE BLACK DWARF.

The tourist, who after seeing the great attraction to the banks of the Tweed, Abbotsford, does not ascend that beautiful river through Innerleithen (the "St. Ronan's Well" of the novelist) to Peebles, will do himself great wrong; for he will have missed some of the most picturesque scenery in the Lowlands of Scotland. Peebles, an ancient and picturesque burgh, has its attractions. Looking up stream from the bridge, Neidpath Castle presents itself; while down the river, gentlemen's seats, placed amidst the richest verdure, cast a cheering light upon the scene. Proceeding, however, across the bridge, in a southerly direction, this sort of aspect is changed Steep, stony, and cheerless hills are seen both to the right and left; but, as the traveller proceeds, they open to form a valley, at whose southern edge rises a transverse range of almost equally barren hills.

At the foot of one of the last-mentioned eminences stands the residence of the proprietor of Woodhouse, in the parish of Manor; and near to it is the hut which is figured above. In the neighbourhood was born, in the year 1760, a poor deformed creature called David Ritchie, who, when even arrived at man's estate, was only about three feet five inches in height. He was much deformed, and obtained amongst his neighbours—from the crookedness of his legs—the nick name of "Bowed Davie." His feet were clubbed so much outward that he walked on his inner ankles and the sides of his feet. Shoes, were of course, useless to such an object, and for them he substituted wrappings of cloth carpet, or anything he could get to answer his purpose. To make up for this, however, he had great strength in his arms. His father was a labourer in the slate quarries of the adjoining parish of Stobbo. Davie was in early life put to learn the art of brush making in Edinburgh; and, despite his being so badly formed for pedestrianism, had wandered to several places working at his trade; but from all of them he was chased by the persecutions which his hideous singularities gave rise to. He had a mortal aversion to notice of any kind, yet his form was such as to be constantly attracting it from the multitude.

COTTAGE OF THE BLACK DWARF.

This, as was not unnatural, disgusted him with society, and determined him to live apart from it. Tired of being the object of shouts, laughter, and derision, David Ritchie resolved, like a deer hunted from the herd, to retreat to some wilderness; and, returning home, he selected a patch of wild moorland on the farm of Woodhouse. The proprietor of the estate, Sir James Naesmith, so far from molesting him, ordered his servants to assist in the construction of the lowly abode. Ritchie, however, took a pride in being, as much as he could, the only builder of his hermitage, which he put together with great care and solidity. The materials were on the spot; for stones, held together by layers of turf, were all he required, except thatchin g for the roof, which he laid on with great neatness. After completing his house, he marked out and enclosed a space for a garden. Digging in the ordinary way was out of the question; so, unable to force a spade into the ground with his decrepit feet, he applied his breast. When finished, his garden was a pattern of neatness, and, obtaining seeds from the neighbours he soon stocked it. Some of the flowers he planted still remain; and we were lingered on the spot we plucked a flower from a straggling but luxuriant honeysuckle which he had tilled, as a memorial of our interesting visit.

GRAVE OF THE BLACK DWARF

After a time, Bowed Davie's hermitage, from its romantic appearance and the singular character of its inhabitant, attracted numerous visitors, and it would appear that to these the poor man evinced much pride and gratification in showing off the results of his taste and handiwork—always providing that they addressed him without any marks of either surprise or disgust at his appearance.

The most remarkable visit he ever received—for it helped to make the hermit a widely remarkable character—was from Sir Walter Scott, then a young advocate, and plain "Mr." He was accompanied by Mr. (now Sir Adam) Ferguson, son of Dr. Ferguson, Professor of Moral Philosophy, in the Edinburgh University. The meeting was highly characteristic. At the first sight of Mr. Scott, the misanthrope seemed impressed with a sentiment of extraordinary interest, which was either owing to the lameness of the stranger—a circumstance throwing a narrower gulf between this person and himself than what existed between him and most other men—or to some perception of an extraordinary mental character in this limping youth, which was then hid from other eyes. After grinning upon him for a moment with a smile less bitter than his wont, the Dwarf passed to the door, double-locked it, and then, coming up to the stranger, seized him by the wrist with one of his iron hands, and said, "Man, ha'e ye ony poo'er?" By this he meant magical power, to which he had himself some vague pretensions, or which, at least, he had studied and reflected upon till it had become with him a kind of monomania. Mr. Scott disavowed the possession of any gifts of that kind, evidently to the great disappointment of the inquirer, who then turned round and gave a signal to a huge black cat, hitherto unobserved, which immediately jumped up to a shelf, where it perched itself, and seemed to the excited senses of the visitors as if it had really been the familiar spirit of the mansion. "Its has poo'er," said the Dwarf, in a voice which made the flesh of the hearers thrill within them, and Mr. Scott, in particular, looked as if he conceived himself to have actually got into the den of one of those magicians with whom his studies had rendered him familiar. "Ay, he has poo'er," repeated the recluse; and then, going to his usual seat, he sat for some minutes grinning horribly, as if enjoying the impression he had made; while not a word escaped from any of the party. Mr. Ferguson, at length, plucked up his spirits, and called to David to open the door, as they must now be going. The Dwarf slowly obeyed; and when they had got out, Mr. Ferguson observed that his friend was as pale as ashes, while his person was agitated in every limb. Under such striking circumstances was this extraordinary being first presented to the real magician, who was afterwards to give him such a deathless celebrity, in his tale of the "Black Dwarf."

Though, however, David Ritchie was the original of that character as a man, yet the more mysterious attributes thrown around him by the great novelist were derived from old tradition; a spirit called the Black Dwarf being supposed formerly to have haunted the Borders.

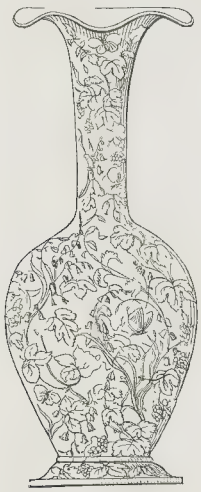
David Ritchie's cottage falling into disrepair, about the year 1802, Sir James Naesmith kindly ordered a new one to be erected for him and his sister, a poor helpless creature of imbecile mind, at a short distance from the site of his former abode. This cottage had two apartments; but, although David consented to live under the same roof with his sister, he would neither permit her to come into his room, nor even to enter the house by the same door, and separate entrances were accordingly made. The only living creatures, indeed, besides his bees, of which he had collected a good stock, were the black cat above mentioned, and a dog, to both of which he was much attached. A large addition was also made to Davie's garden, all of which he trenched, to the depth of two feet and a half, with his own hands

Davie had also his literary tastes. A copy of Tooke's "Pantheon" having been early presented to him, he was deeply read in the lore and adventures of the heathen gods and goddesses Dr. Ferguson, who lived in the neighbourhood, also lent him books. Shenstone and Milton are said to have been his favourite poets. These and his garden appear to have been his only ties to this earth He was an habitual and deep misanthrope. The sense of his deformity haunted him like a phantom, and poisoned the very springs of his existence. His dislike to his own species amounted to hatred, and extended even to his sister; from whom he lived entirely apart, building a party wall and separate doors. The smaller one, seen in the sketch was that he reserved to himself.

With the pittance he and his sister received from the parish—in which for many years they were the only paupers—the produce of his bees and garden, and the gratuities of neighbours and visitors, David had more than enough to satisfy his wants; for his only luxury was snuff, of which he took a great allowance. When, therefore, he died, he was found to have hoarded twenty pounds like a cassay misanthrope as he was. His demise took place, after a few days' illness, in December, 1811, at the age of seventy one. He was buried in Manor churchyard; a rowan tree (mountain ash) was planted at the head of his grave—a part of it now remaining to mark the spot. Now, however, it is more effectually rescued from oblivion by a head-stone, which has been recently erected by the Messrs. W. and R. Chambers, the eminent littérateurs and publishers of Edinburgh. These gentlemen are natives of Peebles, and in their youth knew the "Black Dwarf" Mr. Robert Chambers contributed some of the particulars we have gleaned above to the "Scots' Magazine," some years since; and is very handsomely spoken of by Sir Walter Scott, for his pains, in his Notes and Illustrations to the "Black Dwarf."

THE GOVERNMENT SCHOOL OF DESIGN.

In the Illustrated Report of the Distribution of Prizes, in our Journal of last week, the two annexed specimens were inadvertently omitted.



MISS J. BRAGG'S DESIGN FOR A PORCELAIN VASE.

The first is an exquisite Design for a Porcelain or Painted Glass, Vase, by Miss J. Bragg, to whom was awarded a prize of five guineas. The ground is deep crimson; the leaves, stems, and grapes are in gold; and the hare-bells, of their natural colour. The form of this vase is singularly beautiful: we understand that it has been chased by Mr. Pellatt.

The second specimen is a Modelling from Nature, by Mr. C. O'Reilly, to whom was awarded for the same, a prize of three guineas: the size is 1½ yard in diameter: the execution is very spirited.

In our account, last week, there were two errata, which we are anxious to correct. The emblematic Vase was designed by Miss, not Mr. Farrer; and the Arabesque, in tempera, was executed by Miss Channon, not Chamson.

MR. C. O'REILLY'S MODELLING.

MEDALLION OF LOUIS PHILIPPE.

MEDALLION PORTRAIT OF LOUIS PHILIPPE.

This magnificent Medallion of His Majesty Louis Philippe, King of the French, has been executed by M. F. Lequine, the French sculptor. It is of colossal size, the square measuring 2ft. 4in.; the circle 20 inches in diameter; and 12 inches across the profile. The original is in the possession of Mr. Moon, Her Majesty's Publisher, Threadneedle-street, by whom copies have been executed for Subscribers; the list being honoured by the patronage of Her Majesty, Prince Albert, the Royal Family, &c. The moment chosen for the work is the more auspicious, from the solemn and cordial reception of Louis Philippe in this country, and the City Address to His Majesty, being still fresh in the public recollection. As a commemoration of the Royal Visit, this Medallion Portrait is extremely interesting; whilst its artistical merit entitles it to extensive patronage.

Fires at Quebec.—The High Bailiff of Westminster has received two letters from the Mayor of Quebec, begging him to bring under the notice of the citizens of Westminster, the distressed situation of the inhabitants of Quebec, occasioned by the two fires which have taken place there on the 28th May and 28th June last. By the first fire, 1650 dwellings and two churches were destroyed, and 12,000 inhabitants were left without house, food, clothing, or bedding. By the last fire, 1300 dwellings, two places of worship, three school houses, with stores and outbuildings, were destroyed; and, at the time of his writing to the High Bailiff, he states, there were 13,000 inhabitants scattered over the fields without shelter or food, and he suggests to the High Bailiff, that contributions of clothing, bedding, building materials, bricks, slate, tiles, tin, iron, nails, glass, and articles of hardware, used in building, should be forwarded to Quebec, addressed to Alexander Simpson, Esq., treasurer of the relief committee. Any of the citizens of Westminster who feel disposed to respond to this application, may have further particulars given to them at the High Bailiff's, 40, Jermyn-street, St. James's, and he will thankfully receive any money donations on this account which may be remitted to him.

Will of the late Sir Wm. Follett.—Probate of the will of Sir William Webb Follett, late of the Inner Temple, London, and of Park street, Westminster, Knight, was granted on the 2nd inst., to his brothers, Robert Bayly Follett, Brent Spencer Follett, and John Follett, Esqrs., and to his brother in-law, Edward Gifford, Esq., the executors; they are also appointed guardians to the children. The testator devises his real estates to his executors, in trust for his eldest son, George; and on failure of issue, to his other sons, and their issue male Bequeaths to Lady Follett £2500 a year, and a legacy of £1000 for immediate use. To his sister, Mrs. Synge, £200 a year, and a legacy of £500. To his sister, Mrs. Bright, £3000 for her own use, and to her husband, Dr. Bright, £500. Bequeaths to the four sisters of his wife, £1000 each. And legacies to his nephews, and a year's wages to his servants. Leaves his law books to his brother, Brent Spencer Follett, his brother Robert Bayly Follett first making a selection for his own use, leaves to his brother Robert the watch he usually wore. Devises to his brother John the messuage, &c., at Topsham; and bequeaths to each of his said three brothers a legacy of £1500. Bequeaths to Lady Follett the carriages, horses, and all the household furniture, &c., for her life, but expressing a wish that she should give to his son inheriting the real estate such of the plate as was received by him as presents. The residue of his personal estate (the whole of which was sworn under £150,000) he leaves to be divided among all his children. The will is dated July 11, 1844, and of some length, the last sheet, in his own handwriting, containing several bequests.

THE ROYAL VICTORIA YACHT CLUB REGATTA, RYDE.

The interest of the Second Day (Tuesday, August 5th) of the first Regatta of this newly-formed Club was greatly heightened by her Majesty and the King of Holland witnessing the match between the Gauntlet, iron yacht, and the Noran, wood, under unexpected circumstances.

Her Majesty, with the King of Holland, having arrived off Ryde, in the Fairy, from Portsmouth, the Royal yacht stopped off the pier, when the Queen sent Lieutenant Roberts in one of the boats from the yacht to the starting vessel, to inquire of the Committee what further matches would take place, and if the two cutters, Gauntlet and Noran, were likely to create any interest—which her Majesty concluded might be the case, from their being placed in one match; and if so, it was her Majesty's wish that they might, if possible, be started before the appointed time; assigning, as a reason, the early return of the yacht to Osborne, as soon as possible, with the King of Holland. The Committee immediately gave instructions for the two yachts, wood against iron to prepare to get under way, which was done immediately.

Her Majesty, the King of Holland, and suite, in the Fairy, then took up her station between the two cutters; and at eighteen minutes after one o'clock, at gun-fire, all started together, the Fairy accompanying the yachts about two or three miles, and then returned to Osborne.

The start was grand; numerous vessels flocked round, and the scene was, altogether, extremely gay and animated. The course was from the Starting Vessel off Ryde Pier, round the Nab Light ship, leaving it on the larboard hand, thence to Calshot Light-ship, which was also left on the larboard hand; returning inside the Lazarette to the Starting Vessel, passing between her and the Flag-boat, placed to indicate the passage. The Gauntlet took the lead at starting, and ultimately gained the prize, a piece of plate, value 30 guineas.

YACHT RACE.—"WOOD AGAINST IRON."—FIRST REGATTA OF THE ROYAL VICTORIA CLUB, ISLE OF WIGHT.

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO GERMANY.

SPLENDID ENGRAVINGS

OF THIS MOST INTERESTING EVENT

WILL APPEAR IN THE

ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS,

His Royal Highness PRINCE ALBERT having, with his usual kindness and condescension, granted the ARTISTS of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS access to his Royal Highness' Collection of Drawings of the Domains of Coburg and Gotha, and other localities visited by her Majesty, the following Engravings—

GOTHA, FRIEDRICHSTADT, SCHLOSS RHEINARTS-BRUNN, SCHLOSS KALLENBERG, &c.,

From Drawings by HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS,

Will appear in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS on AUGUST 16, 1845.

The Illustrations will also comprise Views of Schloss Ehrenberg, Schloss osenau, &c.

Arrangements have likewise been made to ILLUSTRATE in this POPULAR JOURNAL,

THE ROYAL PROGRESS IN GERMANY AND ON THE RHINE.

The Drawings of the Principal Scenes and Events will be taken on the Spot by E. LANDELLS, Esq., assisted by other artists of celebrity, English and Foreign. These Illustrations will include a GRAND PANORAMIC PICTURE OF THE RHINE.

Views of all the Principal Cities and Towns, their Palaces and Curiosities, and the Sublime and Picturesque Scenery, visited by Her Majesty and Prince Albert; together with Pictures of Real Life in Germany, to illustrate the Present Condition of the German States. Scenes from the ROYAL VISIT AT GOTHA,

PORTRAITS OF ILLUSTRIOUS PERSONAGES, &c.

THE GRAND MUSICAL FESTIVAL AT BONN, on the RHINE,

In honour of BEETHOVEN, &c.

The ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS will for several weeks, commencing from AUGUST 16th, be almost exclusively devoted to the most SPLENDID ENGRAVINGS of the above Important and Interesting Events

 Persons wishing to obtain Copies of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS most immediately subscribe, as it is confidently expected the demand will be considerably above the supply.

Orders received by all Booksellers and Newsmen throughout the World. Price 6d. per Week.

Office in London, 198, Strand.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, August 10.—Twelfth Sunday after Trinity.—St. Lawrence.
MONDAY, 11.—Half quarter.—Dog days end
TUESDAY, 12 George IV born, 1762.—Grouse shooting begins.
WEDNESDAY, 13.—Dowager Queen Adelaide born, 1792
THURSDAY, 14 King's College, London, incorporated, 1829.
FRIDAY, 15 Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary.—Sir Walter Scott born, 1771.
SATURDAY, 16.—Formerly, a General Harvest Home Day.—Duke of York born, 1763.

HIGH WATER at London bridge, for the Week ending August 16.

Monday		Tuesday.		Wednesday.		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday.
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
4 [illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	0 [illegible]	[illegible]	1 [illegible]	[illegible]	1 [illegible]	[illegible]	2 [illegible]	[illegible]
4 [illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	0 [illegible]	[illegible]	1 [illegible]	[illegible]	1 [illegible]	[illegible]	2 [illegible]	[illegible]
4 [illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	0 [illegible]	[illegible]	1 [illegible]	[illegible]	1 [illegible]	[illegible]	2 [illegible]	[illegible]
4 [illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	0 [illegible]	[illegible]	1 [illegible]	[illegible]	1 [illegible]	[illegible]	2 [illegible]	[illegible]
4 [illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	0 [illegible]	[illegible]	1 [illegible]	[illegible]	1 [illegible]	[illegible]	2 [illegible]	[illegible]
4 [illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	0 [illegible]	[illegible]	1 [illegible]	[illegible]	1 [illegible]	[illegible]	2 [illegible]	[illegible]
4 [illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	0 [illegible]	[illegible]	1 [illegible]	[illegible]	1 [illegible]	[illegible]	2 [illegible]	[illegible]

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"A Constant Reader," Durham.—Mr. Sheffe Adair, the late candidate for Cambridge, is elder son of Sir Robert Shaffe Adair, Bart., and grandson of the late William Adair, Esq., of Ballymena, in the county of Antrim, and Cole House, in Devon, by Lucinda, his wife, daughter and heir of Robert Shaffe, Esq., of Benwell, in Northumberland. He will complete his thirty-fourth year on the 25th of this month. His residence is Flixton Hall, Suffolk.

Ἀτρατηγος.—The Enniskillen Dragoons bear the Castle on their caps as emblematic of the town from which they derive their name, and of which the Castle is the corporate seal. Previously to the time of James the First, Enniskillen was merely a castle, belonging to Maguire, chieftain of Fermanagh, which was taken by the English forces under Sir H. Bingham in 1594 (it shortly after received a garrison of 20 men). A town was built upon it sale by the Order in 1612, which sustained two very severe sieges; the first in 1641, and the second in 1689.

"Stonehouse" and "J. A. B." shall be answered in our next.

"C. M." will find, in No. 63 of THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, a description of the screw of Archimedes, as applied in the Great Britain steam-ship, now on her first passage across the Atlantic.

"G. B. H.," Bristol.—Professor Long is the editor of the "Penny Cyclopædia."

"K. P. S." may find several memoirs of the most distinguished composers and singers of the present century in "A Dictionary of Musicians" published in 1827; also, in the "Harmonicon" and Stafford's "History of Music." We have not published any portrait of Herr Pischek in our Journal.

"A. W. W." is thanked for his courteous offer, but we have not room to await ourselves of his favour.

"Charles Rahusen."—See the "Cambridge University Calendar"

"J. L. J.," Thomastown.—The sketch of the Ballinhassig affray was taken by Mr. Mahoney, of Cork. In the word "illustrated," the accent is on the first syllable.

"A Walsall Subscriber."—Thanks

"A Subscriber," Grantham.—A lodger, whose property has been seized for rent due by his landlord, can recover the same by application to a police magistrate.

"True Time," Athenæum.—The error was corrected in our Journal of last week

"Carrles."—Under consideration.

"D. M.," Tain and "G. B.," Manchester.—Declined, with thanks.

"Eldona."—The portrait has been returned as directed.

"A Farmer."—Gilt picture frames may be cleaned with cotton dipped in sweet oil; see Smeaton's "Painter's and Gilder's Guide."

"Nutshell."—Mr. Babington recommends sulphur, in the proportion of one part to seven of water, as a good preservative of animal substances.

"Antreprior" is thanked; we shall duly report the interesting proceedings, probably with illustrations

"Peregrinus," Edmonton, should send a specimen.

"J. F.," Hammersmith.—"The Great Sea of Wars," referred to last week, has puzzled many persons besides our Correspondent. Shakspeare alludes to it in his "Twelfth Night," act iii., sc. 2, and Farquhar in his "Recruiting Officer." In "A Journey from London to Scarborough," 1734, it is stated to be kept at the Old Crown Inn, and to be shown with a drubbing ceremony. Clutterbuck, in his "History of Hertfordshire," states the beastead to be at the Saracen's Head Inn. It is twelve feet square, of oak, elaborately carved; of the age of Elizabeth; the date, 1463, painted on it being evidently modern. "After diligent inquiry," says Clutterbuck, "I have not been able to meet with any written document or local tradition which throws any light upon the history of this curious bed." It is engraved in the "Literary World," vol. ii., p. 209

"Nauticus."—The coat of Nelson shown at Greenwich Hospital is not that recently purchased by Prince Albert, though it has long been shown to the public as the coat "worn by Nelson at the battle of the Nile." The identity of the coat and waistcoat engraved in our Journal of July 26 has been proved by Sir Harris Nicolas.

"A Subscriber," Hastings.—Acts of Parliament may be obtained, by order, of any bookseller.

"K. L."—Pupils only are allowed to compete for the prizes given by the Government School of Design.

"L. M. D." Oxford.—Occultation, or vibration, is the correct term for the bright red and green stars and comets.

"J. N. G." Arch's "Self Instructor in French Grammar" is a deservedly popular work

"Peregrinator," Glasgow, is thanked for the suggestion, though we cannot entertain it. Neither the Engravings of the Cartoons nor any other Illustrations which have appeared in our Journal can be had elsewhere than in its pages.

"A Constant Subscriber" should apply to a perfumer for Colley's or Delcroix's Depilatory.

"G. E. P.," Nottingham.—Smeaton's "Painter's, Gilder's, and Varnisher's Guide," Taylor, Wellington-street.

"A Subscriber"—The balloon in which Mr. Green ascended from Cremorne House on Monday week was "the Nassau," so that our Engraving is correct

"X Y Z" is advised to consult the "Cyclopædia of the New Buildings Act," published in the "Builder."

"A Lady."—We scarcely think the boy will be eligible, he being six weeks above the age.

"Bumsmiles."—The High Bailiff of Westminster will receive subscriptions for the sufferers at Quebec. See his humane appeal in our present Number.

"Bob," Truro.—We are not aware of any instance of steel bars having been substituted for bells in churches, though the suggestion appeared last year in the "Irish Ecclesiastical Journal."

"Hotwells."—Next week

"A Weekly Reader," Dublin, must excuse our not replying to his historical queries.

"T. E. O."—Pencil drawings may be fixed by a preparation for the purpose, to be purchased of a fancy dealer.

"Alexandra" is, probably, correct in her first conjecture.

"Justice."—We are not in possession of the information sought.

"A Welsh Subscriber."—Richardson's is probably the most complete English Dictionary recently published; the Abridgment, price about 18s. The Patent Lat will give the name and address.

"B. K." Wenham.—Is withheld.

"One who Wishes to Travel" may best choose his route from the advertisements in the daily newspapers. A passport for France may be obtained at the office, 6, Poland street, Oxford street, at one day's notice.

"A Lady Subscriber" and "Alpha" complain that, in the "Libel on the Ladies," quoted in our last, the two following lines are omitted:

Gem. Say what is better, if you can
Lady. The froth that escapes the tongue of man.

"A Well Wisher and Subscriber."—The engraving sent does not represent the Cocos nucifera, nor does it much resemble the Theobroma Cacao, though it may be intended for the latter.

We have not room for "Linos," by "D. H. F.;" "Lines," by "Medieus;" and "Sunset," by "G. A. F."

INELIGIBLE.—"Quebec," by "B.;" "Sunset," by "J. W. N.;" "Petrarca to Laura;" and "Lines on Sculpture," by "P."

ERRATUM.—The eldest son and successor of the late Sir William Saltonstall Wiseman, Bart., bears the same names as his father, and not Edmund, as stated at page 62.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 9, 1845.

TIME has been found in the last week of the session, to spend nearly a whole night in routing the discomfitted and slaying the slain; in other words in debating the case of Capt. Boldero, and Mr. Bonham, who have resigned, of Mr. Hignett who has been dismissed, and of Mr. Wray, who some think ought to have been, but who has had luck enough to escape with a reprimand. Very little has been gained by opening the question again. Two of the principal parties have anticipated the judgment of the public and the Government, by what may be called committing official suicide; another has undergone the punishment awarded to malpractice, and the last of those implicated has received the exact reprimand, or "severe animadversion," recommended by the Report of the Committee of which Mr. Hawes was Chairman. Here is an ample measure of vengeance; what could Mr. Hawes wish for more? He had scattered destruction and dismay among the whole Board of Ordnance; what could produce a better effect? If the Committee wished to mark their sense of Mr. Wray's conduct more strongly than by an official reprimand they should have said so.

THIS affair has brought out a generous trait in the character of Sir R. Peel; Mr Bonham is an old friend, and the loss of his office is to him of serious consequence. Sir Robert, it is reported (we know not with what truth), has presented him with £400 a year from his private purse— a pretty clear indication either that he does not consider Mr. Bonham's character affected by the decision of the Committee, or that, while he is unable to excuse the official error, he can feel for its consequences to the friend, and do all he can to break his fall.

HER Majesty embarks to day for Antwerp, on a visit to Germany. The accounts of the preparations made by the Prussian Court for her reception show that the event has excited great interest on the Continent; strangers from all parts are thronging to the points her Majesty will pass on the route, or at which she will make any stay.

Lord John Russell alluded on Tuesday evening to a question connected with the departure of the Sovereign, which some will think has a certain degree of constitutional importance. Whenever the Sovereign has quitted the English dominions for any time, it has been usual to appoint or nominate some depository of the Royal power during the Sovereign's absence. This was the case when George IV. visited Hanover. No indications of such an intention now have been given on the part of Government, nor do we see that any one during the debate answered Lord John Russell's objection to a departure from the usual practice. But time modifies all things, and it may be doubted whether such a Regency, or whatever other name it might bear, is really as necessary now as it was some quarter of a century ago, ere steam and railroads had brought the centre of Europe nearer than Calais or York once were; from the facility of communication it may now be unnecessary to name such an authority, and there is no utility in doing so merely for the sake of complying with an old precedent.

THE PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT.—It was, of course, impossible for us to publish her Majesty's Speech on Proroguing the Parliament, in our first impression, but we have made arrangements to give it at an early hour this (Saturday) afternoon.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO GERMANY.

We believe it is arranged that her Majesty and Prince Albert will embark this (Saturday) evening at Woolwich, and that the Royal yacht will lay to for a night, and land her Majesty and Prince Albert on the continent on Monday morning. The Porcupine steam-vessel, Captain Bullock, and the Black Eagle steam-vessel, Master Commander S. B. Cook, are to accompany her Majesty to Antwerp.

The Royal squadron will thus be composed of the following steam-vessels:—The Victoria and Albert yacht, Captain Lord A. Fitzclarence; the Black Eagle, Admiralty steam-yacht, Master Commander B. Cook; and the Porcupine

As soon as the Royal party has embarked, the squadron will proceed to the mouth of the Thames, where the Royal yacht will anchor until daylight on Sunday morning, and then the vessels will proceed to Antwerp, the Black Eagle acting as the pilot.

Her Majesty will be accompanied by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and attended by the Earl of Aberdeen, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs; the Earl of Liverpool, Lord Steward of the Household; Lady Canning and Lady Gainsborough, Ladies in Waiting; and Sir James Clarke, her Majesty's Physician in Ordinary, on board the Royal yacht.

Mr. George E. Anson, Private Secretary to Prince Albert, and Colonel Wylde, Equerry to his Royal Highness, will embark at the same time on board the Black Eagle, Admiralty steam-yacht, for conveyance to Antwerp.

A letter from Cologne, published in the Journal des Débats, says —

"Our town is taking measures in order to give a brilliant reception to the Queen of England, who is expected on the 24th or 25th of August. Received at the frontiers by his Royal Highness the Prince of Prussia, and conducted to Aix la Chapelle in the Royal carriages, she will continue her journey by a special train thence to Cologne, where their Majesties the King and Queen will receive her at the terminus. It is not yet known whether the Court will go the same day to Stolzenfels, or pass the night at Brühl. Upon arming at the latter, Queen Victoria will visit the Roman Professor Bethe, at whose house Prince Albert finished his academical studies. During the second day's residence at Stolzenfels the Royal party will visit Wiesbaden and Nehenahr, by invitation of the Duke of Nassau. The day they will return to Cologne and Brühl, after which, the Queen of England will go direct to Coburg.

"The evening that the Royal party go upon the Rhine, the banks, as well as the entire exterior of the cathedral, will be illuminated, and from one of its towers fireworks will be let off. The Royal party may enjoy this magnificent spectacle during the supper which will be served on board the steamer.

"King Leopold is to repair to the castle of Stolzenfels, where the interview of Queen Victoria with the King of Prussia is to take place, but he will leave Brussels a few days after the arrival of his Royal niece in that residence. It was believed that the King of the Belgians would extend his excursion to Coburg."

According to a German paper, her Majesty will have an interview with the King of Prussia at Coblentz.

The Archduke Frederick of Austria left Vienna on the 26th, for Coburg, in order to meet Queen Victoria, and congratulate her Majesty on her arrival in Germany.

The Frankfurt Mercury contains the following correspondence from Saxe Coburg:—

"Queen Victoria and Prince Albert will not arrive here before the 18th or 20th of August. Already, however, there are no more apartments to be had, and even the Ducal Court has been obliged to hire the best private lodgings in the town and adjacent villages of Kaisersdorf and Fallbach, for the accommodation of its guests. The number of foreigners of high rank who are announced, and who are desirous of being presented at Court, is a most incredible. Not less than sixty-one personages belonging to imperial, Royal, and Prince families are expected. The smallest dwellings are let upon terms. One English family are paying £25 per day for three apartments.

"His Majesty has expressed a desire to stay at Rosenau, where Prince Albert was born. A programme of the festivities, &c., during the week the august visitors will remain here will be shortly published. Three operas will be performed during that time; one of which, by order of the Queen, will be the 'Huguenots,' the part of Raoul by Tschatschek. The new opera of 'Adelie de Foix' will be also performed. A good portion of the first tier of boxes and of the pit will be reserved for the Court and its guests. It is already difficult to procure cards of admission. Our august visitors will pass the night at Ramberg previously to arriving here."

We understand that the return of her Majesty to England may be expected in about three weeks from the day of her departure.

[As the public will naturally take great interest in the Royal visit to Germany, such events forming a memorable epoch in the history of the times, we have made arrangements to give a full and complete record of the Royal progress, as well as of every incident connected with the sojourn of her Majesty and Prince Albert in that country. Several gentlemen connected with our establishment have been despatched to Germany, and we therefore shall be enabled to present to our readers an authentic and interesting account of this important event. We have no doubt that with the assistance of our own artists and writers, THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS will portray the incidents of the Royal visit to Germany in such a manner as to justify the patronage bestowed upon it.]

THE KING OF HOLLAND.

On Saturday evening last his Majesty the King of Holland honoured Sir Robert and Lady Peel with his company at a grand banquet given by the Right Hon. Baronet at his mansion in Whitehall-gardens. The party broke up shortly after one o'clock, his Majesty subsequently honouring the performance of the Italian Opera with his presence. On Sunday evening the Duke of Wellington gave a splendid banquet at Apsley House, in honour of his Majesty. The party exceeded forty guests. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, attended by Lady Georgiana Batharst, arrived immediately after the King, and was followed by his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, with Mr. E. Ellis in waiting. His Royal Highness Prince George of Cambridge and his Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar were the next to arrive. The several members of the Royal family were received by the customary honours.

On Monday evening his Majesty dined with the Queen Dowager, at Bushy Park.

On Tuesday his Majesty paid another visit to the Queen, at the Isle of Wight, but returned in the evening, and honoured the Earl Delawarr, Lord Chamberlain to the Queen, with his company at dinner, at his, orchly's residence, in Upper Grosvenor-street. The company consisted of his Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince George, his Excellency Baron Dedel, his Excellency M. Boud Colonel Baron Coehoorn, Count Bylandt, the Earl of Hardwicke, Lord Hardinge, Lord Ashley, Lord Ernest Bruce, Lord and Lady De Ros, Mr. and Lady Elizabeth Hastings Russell, Lady Mary Sackville West, Viscount Canalaye, Captain the Hon. Mortimer Sackville West, and the Earl and Countess Delawarr.

On Wednesday the King visited the new Houses of Parliament, and also inspected the Cartoons in Westminster Hall. In the evening the Earl and Countess of Jersey gave a splendid fête to his Majesty, at their family mansion in Berkeley square. The Duke of Wellington and the Duke of Rutland were among the earliest arrivals at the banquet, and as His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge arrived at a quarter to eight o'clock. His Majesty, attended by Viscount Hawarden, and the members of his suite, arrived shortly before eight, and was welcomed by the Earl of Jersey and the Hon. Captain Francis Villiers, R.N., who with the Hon. Miss Villiers had the honour to be seated on the left of the Countess of Jersey and guests had assembled to receive the King. The banquet was of the most recherché description. The table presented a splendid display of plate, the handsome Goodwood Cup of 1841, won by the noble host's horse, occupying the centre of the festive board. On dessert having been placed on the table, the Earl of Jersey rose and proposed the health of "Her Majesty the Queen," which was drunk with the customary honours. The noble earl subsequently proposed the health of the illustrious guest, "The King of the Netherlands," a toast which was received with every token of respect. The Countess afterwards threw open her salons for the reception of a brilliant circle of the haut ton.

THE ROYAL FAMILY.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert have been at Osborne house during the week, and have made several excursions in the neighbourhood. The Royal children have been out daily for exercise.

HER BIRTH DAY OF FESTIVITY.—The birth day of his Royal Highness Prince Albert was celebrated at Windsor on Wednesday, with the usual rejoicings.

LORD BROUGHAM.—Lord Brougham is enjoying the pure air and exquisite scenery of Brougham Hall. Mr. Leader, member for Westminster, is one of the learned lord's guests.

MARRIAGES AMONG THE ARISTOCRACY. On Tuesday, the marriage of Lord Alfred Hervey, M.P. for Brighton (youngest son of the Marquis of Bristol), and Miss Chester, daughter of Colonel Chester, was solemnised at Ashtead, Surrey. The Rev. Lord Arthur Hervey, brother of the noble bridegroom, officiated at the ceremony. The marriage of Mr. Ernest Bunsen, second son of his Excellency Chevalier Bunsen, the Prussian Minister, and Miss E. Gurney, daughter of Mr. Gurney, the opulent banker of Norfolk, was solemnised on the same day at West Ham church, Essex. The Rev. H. Bunsen officiated on the happy occasion.

THE NEW AMERICAN MINISTER. The Hon. Louis M'Lane, the new American Minister at this Court, has arrived in London. Mr. M'Lane was formerly known here as Minister fifteen years ago, and his being selected at this important juncture will, it is hoped, be found beneficial to the interests of both countries.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

CAMBRIDGE, Aug. 4.

KING'S COLLEGE. Mr. Herbert James has been appointed a fellow of this society, vice Rev. W. A. Carter, resigned, and on Wednesday Mr. John Acland James was admitted a scholar of this college. Mr. William Johnson, scholar of this society, has been elected English medallist, and Craven's University scholar, has been appointed assistant master at Eton.

DEATH OF THE DEAN OF LINCOLN.—We regret to have to announce the decease of the Very Rev. George Gordon, D.D., Dean of Lincoln, who expired at the Deanery on Saturday last, in his eighty fourth year.

ILLNESS OF THE BISHOP OF CALCUTTA.—Dr. Wilson, Bishop of Calcutta, is much regret to learn, extremely unwell so much so that his medical adviser is not allowed to leave him, and the Bishop's son, the Rector of Islington, is always with his father.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

MINISTERIAL WHITE BAIT DINNER. The annual white bait dinner of her Majesty's Ministers took place on Wednesday last, at the Crown and Sceptre Tavern, Greenwich. There were present Sir James Graham (in the chair), Sir Robert Peel on his left, the Duke of Buccleuch on the right; the Right Hon. Richard More O'Ferrall, Lord Stanley, Lord Lincoln, Mr. Fortescue, Mr. Young, the Right Hon. Sir George Clerk, the Right Hon. Sir Thomas Fremantle, Mr. George Hope, Hon. Captain Gordon, Hon. Mr. Fitzroy, Colonel Wemyss, M.P., Lord Castlereagh, Sir Henry Hervey, Colonel Peel, Viscount Mahon, Lord Granville Somerset, the Earl of St. Germain, the Earl of Lincoln, the Right Hon. Dr. Nicol, the Attorney General, the Solicitor General, the Hon. and Gallant Colonel Anson, Lord Delawarr, Lord Ernest Bruce, the Right Hon. Colonel Dawnay, the Earl of Warwick, Captain Meynell, the Right Hon. J. C. Herries, Mr. Twiss, Mr. Charles Ross, the Duke of Grafton, and many other gentlemen. The dining room, which has been so long vacant, is also being fitted out for the foundation of public orders.

CABINET COUNCIL. A Cabinet Council was held at the Foreign Office on Thursday, when the Royal Speech on the prorogation of Parliament was considered. Previous to the assembling of the Cabinet Council several of the Ministry had an interview with Sir R. Peel at his residence in Whitehall Gardens.

MORTALITY IN THE METROPOLIS. The total number of deaths registered in the metropolitan districts during the week ending on Saturday, August the 2nd, was 827, an amount considerably lower than that exhibited in the summer and autumn averages, in which the numbers stand respectively 994, 963. During the same period the number of births registered was 1,143, being an excess over the mortality of 316.

LONDON AND BIRMINGHAM RAILWAY.—The twenty-fourth half-yearly general meeting of the Proprietors and Shareholders of the London and Birmingham Railway, took place on Thursday, at the Euston square terminus, at which a dividend of five per cent. was declared on the Consolidated Stock of the Company, of £4,194,295., and 17s. on each of the £52 New Shares.

LONDON AND BRIGHTON RAILWAY.—On Thursday morning the half yearly general meeting of the proprietors in this Company was held at the London bridge station. Robert Wigram, Esq., Chairman of the Board of Directors, presiding. Mr Buckton, the Secretary, read the report. Comparing the accounts of the last half year with the corresponding period of 1844, there would be found a net increase amounting to £7,000, or £14,611 This, with other items, left a balance at present applicable to a dividend to the amount of £42,898 1s. 4d., out of which the directors recommended a dividend of 20s. per share, deducting therefrom the Property Tax. The line and works were in a state of good repair, and the locomotive stock had also been maintained in working order. After, some discussion, was adopted, and John Meeson Parsons, Esq., was elected a member of the Board of Directors, in the room of Sir John Simpson.

LICENSED VICTUALLERS' FANCY FAIR AT VAUXHALL GARDENS.—We perceive that a grand day and night fête, Carnival à fresco, and Fancy Fair is announced to take place on Monday and Tuesday next, at the "Royal Property," in aid of the funds of that noble charity the Licensed Victuallers' School, Kennington lane. The programme of the amusements is most attractive. The boys of the Duke of York's School, at Chelsea, with their juvenile band, will visit the gardens on Monday; and a group of "really genuine Norwood will be encamped in the wood behind the Ballet Theatre, to tell the fortunes of the old and the young.

THE OYSTER SEASON.—Monday being the commencement of the oyster season, at six o'clock the sale was opened at Billingsgate, under the superintendence of Mr. Goldham. There were forty-five boats, from Feversham, Whitstable, Colchester, Jersey, and Wales. There was a very brisk demand for the various descriptions of oysters, which fetched the following prices:—the commonest, from 18s. to 16s. the bushel; the Welsh and Channel Rocks, from 15s. to 30s.; and the pearls, about £1 10s. the bushel. There were no Scotch, and the natives will not be in the market for a month. By twelve o'clock about half the vessels were sold out, and the market left Billingsgate. The sale went off with the greatest order and regularity. There were about four hundred carts, reaching from London bridge to the Tower.

NIGHT AS DAY.—MR GREEN, IN HIS BALLOON, FROM VAUXHALL GARDENS.—On Monday night Mr Green undertook the perilous feat of a night ascent in his balloon, from Vauxhall Gardens, display ing fireworks of a novel and extraordinary description from the car. The occasion of this bold adventure was celebrated by a grand gala, in which all the resources of this famed establishment were brought into requisition. The efforts of the management proved successful; the Gardens were very much crowded. The balloon selected by Mr Green was the "Albion," formerly the property of Mr. Hampton, an intrepid aeronaut. Mr. Green considerably enlarged it, and it will now contain 65,000 cubic feet of gas, and stands 90 feet in height. Mr Darby, the artist to the Gardens, had the arrangement of the fireworks, which were attached to a frame or wheel, and this was suspended to the car a line of about 70 feet in length, attached to a swivel on the top. It might spin freely in the air, and thus increase the effect of the display. The frame consisted of three concentric wheels, the radius of each being six feet, the circumference of the entire frame 36 feet, and the separation between each wheel 15 inches. Mr Green was provided with a regulating watch in the car, so that he was enabled to wind up or lower the frame with the fireworks at pleasure The fireworks consisted of variegated lights, Italian gerbs, coloured Roman candles, French jets, and Chinese streams of fire, concluding with a bouquet of coloured fires. With respect to the limitation of the gunpowder to be consumed in the ascent, a number of suggestions were made to Mr Green, and, among others, the percussion system was recommended, but the veteran expressed his determination to adopt his own plan of lighting the fireworks from the car, by means of a common lumber match, to ignite a fusee connected with the "pieces" on the frame, and then lower it by the windlass, the slow match burning for about a minute previous to the general explosion of the fireworks. Shortly after, on ascending the car, stated that this was his three hundred and fifth ascent, and that it was twenty one years since he first ascended with fireworks on which occasion he was aided at King George's farm at Kensington. A number of suggestions were made to Mr Green, and, among others, the percussion system was recommended, but the veteran expressed his determination to adopt his own plan of lighting the fireworks from the car, by means of a common lumber match, to ignite a fusee connected with the "pieces" on the frame, and then lower it by the windlass, the slow match burning for about a minute previous to the general explosion of the fireworks. Shortly after, on ascending the car, stated that this was his three hundred and fifth ascent, and that it was twenty one years since he first ascended with fireworks on which occasion he

TAGLIONI'S FAREWELL.

We present to our readers, in the accompanying sketch, a parting memorial of one of the first and greatest dancers who ever graced the stage, and one to whose example we owe that poetical and elevated style of dancing which characterises, more or less, those whom she has left behind as worthy to occupy her place. Saturday night gave the last occasion for the public to display, not only their admiration and regrets, but their gratitude; and we need not say such a call was responded to. While she went through the principal of those dances in which she acquired a fame not easily to be forgotten, and in which she displayed all that grace and dignity of motion peculiar to herself, and which will long remain in the memory and imagination of those who were present, the applause, as may be anticipated, was long and loud; bouquets in profusion fell at the feet of the charming danseuse, and she acknowledged them with a gratitude that she must have really felt towards the British public, who were amongst the first to appreciate her talent and are the last to bid her adieu. Taglioni has other claims to public esteem; the absence of envy she displayed in the success of her younger rivals in the "pas de quatre" of glorious memory, and in her parting gift to Carlotta Grisi of a ribbon embroidered in gold, with the words—"à Carlotta Grisi, Taglioni," have still further raised her in public favour, and we may venture to assert that no real lover of art who witnessed her farewell on Saturday night but experienced a feeling of real regret.

TAGLIONI'S FAREWELL.—BY KENNY MEADOWS.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE

The opera performed within the past week have—with the same casts, with a few exceptions, as they now possess—long since received the stamp of public favour, deserved by merit of the highest order. "Anna Bolena," "Otello," and "La Gazza Ladra," are, especially the two last, gigantic productions of genius: they belong to that class of operas, which, performed as they are, have raised the Italian lyrical stage to its present paramount importance and dignity above those of other nations.

"Anna Bolena," the least remarkable in point of musical merit, is now, perhaps, the most perfect, as regards the manner in which it is performed: Grisi, not so well adapted to produce dramatic illusion in the parts of the gentle Desdemona, or the young and artless Ninetta, as in days gone by, is more than equal to herself, in every respect. In that of Anne Boleyn, which less imperiously demands youthfulness of appearance and manner, in addition to that of voice. Mariani's style of singing and acting is in admirable keeping with the romantic character of Percy. Labbache, in each of the operas we have mentioned, is perfect. As Harry the Eighth, he kindles our indignation and dislike—as Elmuro, he enlists our sympathies, and commands respect; while, as the Selenus, he calls into action all our risible faculties—such is his wondrous versatility. In his hands the part of Desdemona's father, formerly a subordinate one—swells into paramount importance; he is the staff and support of the opera; all the other scenes, effective as they may be, become insignificant in comparison to that of his awful malediction of his daughter. No description can convey an idea of the sublimity of this tremendous burst of passion: and the shudder with which it is apparently heard by all the actors in the scene, is really responded to by every spectator. It is one of the most magnificent pieces of acting that can be witnessed on any stage, and the music is worthy of the performance of this great artist. The deep silence which follows the thundering denunciation pronounced by a father's lips, is broken by smothered, tremulous, and gentle accents, which admirably depict the re-action that takes place after every feeling has been strained to the uttermost. At this moment the trembling movements and exhausted look of the unhappy father, his instinctive attempt to lift his senseless daughter from the ground, followed by a bitter but subdued return of that anger, which a moment before had called forth such startling and awful demonstrations, are true and touching in the extreme. This scene, in our opinion, is in every respect the chef-d'œuvre of the work. The finale of the Opera, though exquisitely performed by Grisi, is yet painful to the feelings, and certainly passes the limits of that rule equally applicable to every imitative art—that reality of imitation should only be kept up so far as it does not harrow up or distress the feelings of the spectator. Throughout the whole of this opera, indeed, it requires all the beauty and real sentiment of the music to cover the unnaturalness of situation, and the outrages offered to Shakspeare. Rossini, a master spirit like himself, was equal to rendering the deep meaning of our immortal bard, but the libretto, alas! was not equally inspired. We have on a previous occasion, commented upon Mario's performance in this opera, and can now only afford space to compliment Corelli on his feeling and painstaking delivery of the music allotted to him here

Formasari took his Benefit on Thursday. His impersonation of Fernando, in the "Gazza Ladra," the opera selected for the occasion, is one of the best efforts of his genius. We have much to admire, and little to find fault, in this eminent artist. Against the advantages of a powerful and flexible organ, a thorough knowledge of music, much real taste, and great dramatic power, can only be adduced the habit of employing too frequently the tremolo, a mistake now very common amongst Italian artists. One great recommendation of Fornasari is the energy and spirit with which he enters into whatever part he undertakes. He is a thorough actor, and his fine effective figure is not one of his least qualifications for such a profession.

We have only time to make one more remark, regarding the past week's performances. It is the singular improvement of Lucile Grahn which excites our astonishment. It is rare, indeed, to see an artist making such rapid and visible strides towards pre-eminence as this dancer, and that this is the opinion of the public, the nightly increasing applause bestowed on her efforts, demonstrates. Cerito was seen on Thursday in her full glory as "Alma." This ballet is hardly inferior to "Esmeralda" in point of brilliancy of effect.

HAYMARKET.

We hope that a series of three failures, attendant upon the production of as many dramatised versions of "Mrs. Caudle's Lectures," will discourage any other playwright from venturing on a fresh adaptation of these papers, which, in their literary aspect, are so deservedly popular. Never was a greater mistake made than in imagining they would prove attractive on the stage. Every atom of their spirit, every trace of their humour, is entirely lost in their theatrical representation; and we have only to repeat the unfavourable opinions we expressed of the versions at the Princess' and Lyceum Theatres in noticing the one brought out at the Haymarket on Saturday evening. We regret being compelled to do this, for we had some hopes it would prove the best, Mrs. W Clifford and Mr. Buckstone coming nearer to our notions of the most effective representatives of Mr. and Mrs. Caudle than any other artistes on the stage. We have always conceived the assumption of female characters by men to be a great mistake. Keeley's Mrs. Gamp was certainly the most admirably acted part we ever saw of its class, but even this was not the Mrs. Gamp of Dickens: to our thinking, Mrs. C. Jones was the only performer who could have realised the character. But this by the way.

The version of "Mrs. Caudle's Lectures" at this house is from the pen of Mr. Sterling Coyne, but even this gentleman's tact and experience in such matters could not make anything of a subject so essentially undramatic. Nor could the acting of Buckstone and Mrs. W. Clifford retrieve it from partial condemnation; for we must, in candour, state that the conclusion was visited with the same shillalahs that attended the preceding versions at the other theatres. We do not think that the interlude will enjoy a very long existence.

Leopold de Meyer continues to astonish the audiences with his marvellous performances on the piano, and furnishes a delightful entr'acte. He will be succeeded on Monday by Mr. John Parry.

SURREY ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS

These gardens were opened at the early part of the week with a variety of old English amusements—such amongst dancing, jumping in sacks, archery, jingling; matches, &c. &c.—which were attended by an immense concourse of visitors sufficient, indeed, with the similar attendance at Vauxhall, to have drained all the theatres for the evening. There was a very excellent concert of instrumental music, and in the evening the view of Edinburgh was illuminated, and the fireworks went off with their usual effect. Not the least commendable arrangement in the management of these gardens is, that the prices of the refreshments are exceedingly moderate, and the amusements are always brought to a conclusion at a very early hour.

THE JULY FETES, AT PARIS.

The third of "the Three Glorious Days" was celebrated with more than usual pomp on the 30th ult., the fifteenth anniversary of the Revolution of July. A Correspondent of the Morning Herald states that "for the river was reserved the grand display for a people smitten just now with marine tastes. Swimmers, wearing drawers, their heads disguised in plumes, so as to look like angry swans, dived about each other. Others fought in tubs, and great was the laughter at the ducked, and merry the reward of the conqueror. Battles were fought between dandy crews, calling themselves 'Paris Marines,' and as some suffered, why all were joyous. But at night the scene was beautiful. The steamers and bathing-houses on the river, were converted into fairy castles, built of variegated lamps. On the Hotel d'Orsay side of the water, was erected a wall of the same. The bridge of the Chamber of Deputies looked like a bridge erected at the Grand Opera for Taglioni, with vases of such fruit on the battlements as may be made out of balls of orange papers, with lights inside; beyond that was raised a Moorish palace—not of bricks, but of lamps. On the lake of light, into which the Seine was changed, boats floated, bearing bands of music, and ladies. Fancy this scene, animated by magnificent fireworks, helped out by cannon, which did not cease a moment to peal, and you have it all, as well as pen, ink, and paper, can give it to you. The King, Queen, and Royal Family appeared for a short time on the balcony looking into the garden of the Tuileries, and were hailed with "La Parisienne" from a numerous orchestra concert, and, what was better, some hearty cheers from those honest throats of the middle class, by whom the good King is received as he deserves to be."

Our artist at Paris has sketched the fairy-like scene, just at the moment when the fireworks appeared above the bridge as a vast forest of palm-trees. It was, indeed, he adds, a most magnificent feu d'artifice.

FIREWORKS AT PARIS.—SKETCHED BY HARRISON.

PORTRAIT IN THE NATIONAL GALLERY,

ATTRIBUTED TO HANS HOLBEIN.

The attendants in the National Gallery are pestered with inquiries about the so-called Holbein portrait. Peers and Members of Parliament—critics and connoisseurs—painters and engravers—down to the merely curious—ascend the steps of the National Gallery for the sole purpose of surveying with their own eyes this much-talked-about Picture. Gentlemen—yes, and ladies, too—at times hurry through the rooms in search of it—stand before it for a minute—give a shrug of surprise—mutter a few sounds of doubt—and ask for their sticks or umbrellas of the porters in the hall. They have seen the Picture: and these things, we are told, are done much better abroad.

The history of the Picture within the last three months is shortly this:—The National Gallery was without an Holbein, and the Trustees of the Gallery were willing to supply the deficiency. They have an offer of one—a three-quarter one—from Mr. Rochard, the artist, for the sum of 600 guineas. The Picture is seen and admired; and a report is made to the Treasury, by the Trustees, that it is a picture well worth the money. The First Lord of the Treasury (Sir Robert Peel) is also a Trustee of the National Gallery—so the picture was bought at Mr. Rochard's own price, and hung for public inspection in the National Gallery.

Well, the money paid, and the Picture the property of the nation, a feeling creeps over the Trustees that the Picture is not a genuine Holbein. It is, therefore, hung considerably out of the way, and little or nothing is said about it. But critics and connoisseurs detect it notwithstanding, and the country is congratulated on possessing a picture very like a Holbein, in the dark. "Very Holbeinesque," says a critic, "is the said production; one of those portraits which move the spectator to think that all the men of Holbein's age were of Holbein's making, and made pretty much after his own image." Still it is not a Holbein, but only Holbeinesque.

Within a week or so the Picture is withdrawn. The attendants know nothing more than the fact of its removal. The whole proceeding was suspicious; and it was soon known to all who take an interest in Art, that the six hundred guinea Holbein had been withdrawn; some, indeed, going so far as to say that it was not a Holbein, but a picture that would have realised, under Christie's hammer, forty or fifty guineas at the most. The picture-dealers triumphed at the mistake; and spoke of Mr. Seguier, Mr. Eastlake's predecessor in office, in terms of high encomium. "This," we have heard them say, "is Mr. Eastlake's purchase; Mr. Seguier would have seen through the imposition in a moment. This comes of having an artist-keeper; when a picture-dealer-keeper was at the head of the Gallery, a mistake like this was never heard of."

As is the case with all suspicious stories, the story of the Holbein Picture gained by telling, and wonderment was at its height when the so-called imposition was brought before Parliament. Sir Robert Peel expressed his sorrow, and assured the house that it was the intention of the Trustees to reform their judgments in future by the judgments of artists and picture-dealers. He could say no more. Nothing further was said in the house, and the Picture was again introduced into the National Gallery, and hung where it could be seen and criticised.

The general feeling is that it is a picture of Holbein's age, but not a Holbein; and this, after a long and attentive examination is our opinion as well. It wants the peculiar excellences of Holbein's pencil. It is too hard in its outline for Hans' hand. But then we are told we have the name upon it, "H Holbein," and the date, "1549." But these will go for nothing, there are surer marks to recognise a Holbein by, than the attestation of a painted signature. With some people, every thing that is very hard and very old-looking is a genuine Holbein. But this belief is wearing out, the Holbeins at Hampton Court and Windsor will attest to the contrary: look at his "Sir Henry Guildford," at Hampton, his "Duke of Norfolk," at Windsor. Hans was indeed a true fellow.

The name of the individual painted is still more unknown than the name of the painter. But this is matter of little moment. The so-called head of "Gevartius," by Vandyke, is—God knows who. Yet the picture is the finest painted head in the world.

"THE NEW HOLBEIN," AT THE NATIONAL GALLERY.

ROYAL AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE, CIRENCESTER.

The progress of Practical and Scientific Agricultural Education in this country has already led to the formation of a College for this important object. The Institution was incorporated by charter in March last; and the Council have actively commenced their labours in Gloucestershire, at Cirencester, a station on the Great Western Railway. They have raised a capital by shares and donations, and have obtained a Farm, on lease, from Earl Bathurst: it is situate about a mile from Cirencester, and contains 410 acres, of a varied character and soil, to combine the breeding and feeding of Stock, with a Dairy; whilst a portion of the land will be set apart for experiments with manures, and varieties of seeds.

The main feature of the Establishment will, however, be the College, at which pupils and out-students will be received and educated; their time being divided between in-door instruction and out-door occupation. For the former purpose, a building is in course of erection from the designs of Messrs. Dakes and Hamilton, architects, of Gloucester and Cheltenham; their design having been selected from a large number of competing architects. The situation is well chosen, it being on Lord Bathurst's ground, known as Port Farm, near the railway station, at the junction of the Stroud and Tetbury roads. Thus, the edifice will present a perspective of two bold fronts, the principal front, 190 feet long, will have a southern aspect, commanding an extensive view over North Wiltshire. The ground slopes in every direction, and a more healthy or beautiful site could scarcely be pointed out; in one direction having the view above described—on the other, the park and woods of Earl Bathurst. The farm itself will be attached to the main building: it will be altered to meet the domestic requirements of the Institution, and decorated sufficiently to be in character with the new structure, which, with this addition, will form an entire frontage of nearly 250 feet.

The design is in the Tudor style, of three stories high; the upper story being lit by picturesque, old-fashioned dormer windows, of the style so prevalent among the collegiate buildings of Oxford. The centre is occupied by a bold tower, 80 feet high; with a turreted newel of 100 feet, intended as an observatory, for meteorological and other scientific purposes. The materials are limestone from the quarries adjacent; the quoins, window-dressings, &c., being of freestone; and half the elevation is already completed.

The Building will include a large Dining Hall, Class-rooms, Laboratory, Museum, besides ranges of Sleeping Apartments on two floors. The Head Master and Pupils will reside in the College.

The Schools will be under the management of the different Professors, who will be constantly on the spot: the instruction will be conveyed not merely by lecture, but also by individual study and practical working. Mr Way has been chosen as the Chemical and Geological Professors will be engaged to instruct in Botany, Natural History, Mathematics, and Physics, Drawing, Mechanics, Geometry, Dynamics, Levelling, Mapping, Surveying, Building, Hydrostatics and Hydraulics, &c., more particularly as they have a reference to Agriculture. The structure and treatment of the Diseases of Cattle will be taught, and a simple but accurate system of Farm Accounts will form part of the instruction.

ROYAL AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE, CIRENCESTER.

In the List of Governors of the Institution are the following distinguished names:—His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge; the Marquis of Lansdowne; Lords Spencer, Fitzhardinge, Ducie, Bathurst, Radnor, and Southampton, &c.

A LAUGHING LEADER.

Hurrah for the breaking up for the holidays! hurrah for the indications of coming rustication, the big hills!—the broad heaths!—bang!—bag, and battue!—glory, gunnery, and grouse!

To day—ay! even to day—does the heart of Parliament leap to the joy of its prorogation: and how eminently, and with what sprightly hims of approaching pleasure, has its huge train progressed through its last few stages towards its terminus of labour. How complacently did the Ministers of Monday receive the "sessional lashing" at the hands of Lord John Russell wearing it on their sleeve like a falconer, or as a new made corporal, proud of his stripe. We need they care for a little cross fring, who themselves were so soon going to the moors? Again a second sign of sessional dissolution how bravely did the Ministers of Wednesday repair to their white-bait dinner—

> All in the Watermen,
> Hired by Quarterman,

as the papers say, "expressly for the occasion." Their water excursion provided by their landlord—odd enough!

Fancy the Feast of the Sages of Downing street, and the conversational piquancy of their mutual congratulations.

PEEL.

'Tis pleasant, this fresh air! all business flies;
It seems the blacks from off one's brains to scatter;
No horrid Parliament here flims the eyes—
Those white-bait have been fried in too much butter!

GRAHAM.

No horrid Duncombe's here!—no Wakleys glum,
Of Post Office or Poor Law here to clutter;
Not near this board Mazzini's ghost can come—
How very nice is this brown bread and butter!

STANLEY.

Somehow I find the House of Lords a bore,
New Zealand sting me from the other end;
Those wasps of Whigs annoy me more and more—
I'll thank you for that lemon and Cayenne!

LYNDHURST.

This window's nicer than the Woolsack Peel!
My Chancery's nothing like this pleasant room—
(Champagne!—with all my heart!)—and by the bye,
And it a luxury to be rid of Brougham!

And so on with pleasant, lively, in artificial Cabinet banter—free, airy, unoppressive, and full of cordiality and grace. These unsophisticated feeds at the end of a Session cannot be the worst of the attractions of power. Their delicious abandon must set upon the worn out frame of a Minister like black reviver upon an old coat. Heavens! how our Ministry quite fresh!

But to recur. Our dear little Queen is even now making another of her Royal orations—bidding her legislators a complimentary farewell previous to taking her departure for Germany.

> My Lords and Gentlemen—To day
> I, with Prince Albert, take my way,
> To pay his friends a visit gay;
> And it's just possible I may
> Among them all prolong my stay,
> My Lords, until I come away.

This, neither Peers nor M.P.s could fail to understand. Or what do you say to—

> My Lords and Gentlemen—I find
> Myself about to close the Session;
> When, having so relieved my mind,
> I leave you to your more possession.
> I deem good shooting all the thing—
> Of birds in Autumn buds in Spring;
> With this one preference not forgot—
> That birds are nicest when they're shot.
>
> My Lords and Gentlemen,—I see,
> Through you, my people's freedom rise;
> I also see, with gratified eye,
> You grant with freedom my supplies.
> 'Tis true, I fain would see relax,
> For them, the heavy Income tax;
> But I, who watch unmov'd its ain come,
> Don't mind the tax, while I've the Income!

Thus sportively may her Majesty, for all we know, be disporting the grace and the gratitude of prorogation; but if it shall be found that more gravity has existed for discourse than this at her Parliament, it shall be given, with due weight of metal, in another place.

Meanwhile, we are not going to allow her, even under frigate escort, and with the protection of amiable Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, to be scudding into the Channel after foreign lands without celebrating her departure in a

LOYAL AND PATRIOTIC STAVE.

> Here's a health to Q een V.,
> As she skims the wi d sea,
> Without fear, without foes;
> Soft breezes caress her.
> Here's health and God bless her
> Wherever she goes!
>
> Here's health to Prince A
> As a clewes through the spray,
> With his beautiful bride;
> Long, long twine his glory,
> With Old England's story,
> Whose wed to her pride.
>
> Adolphus, you're ready!
> So, keep the yacht steady,
> Look sharp to the waves and the wind, sir;
> And nine cheers for you,
> When your jackets of b ue
> Bring home our dear "Lady of Windsor."

Happiness crown her—as joyfully as we crowned her seven years ago—while she is away.

We have had a little enlivenment in the circles of fashion at festival and review. The King of the Netherlands has been quite flashing and flaring up as a star of gallantry, and having been gazetted as a Field Marshal in our army—he fought brilliantly with us at Waterloo—has been reviewing the troops in the Park of Hyde. Mock charges, broken squares, bristling bayonets, roulades of musketry, and thunder boomings of cannon, delighted the holiday crowds of Monday, who gave the King, and his old commander, Wellington, almost as warm a reception as they gave the troops of Napoleon thirty years back.

What is that?

Hollo, jump—hollo, boys—hurrah! By Jove, Parliament is let loose! We must jump up and see the boys bursting out of school. If you want us afterwards, you will find us escorting her Majesty to Woolwich, where she is going to embark.

"

MUMMY FOUND AT POSSESSION ISLAND.—A natural mummy has been discovered at Possession Island, in Mosham Bay, near to Delagoa, on the southern coast of Africa, and has been brought to this country in the ship Tornado, Captain Douglas, of Hull. The mummy is that of a negro, apparently of twenty-five years of age; length, five feet seven inches. The body which was found in a coffin, is entirely perfect, and, unlike the Egyptian mummies, the skin has not suffered the least incision; the teeth are a perfect set, and every one in its respective socket, and as firmly imbedded in their proper position as when in life; the hair on the head is also quite perfect. The subject had received the rites of sepulture, the jaws being bound up, and the arms tied together; the hands are crossed upon the body, just below the breast, and, what is very extraordinary, the shirt is in perfect preservation, without adhering to the mummy. The present specimen is in a far more perfect state than the shrivelled and dried Egyptian mummies. The wood of the coffin, which is of common pine has been perfectly Xylandi.d," to use a perhaps not very proper, but modern term. Every respective pocket, and as firmly imbedded the wood has increased in weight fourfold; the mummy has decreased in equal proportion. The cloth retains its pliability, and is probably of the original weight. The coffin was found imbedded in coarse, about four feet from its surface; and an inscription, which unfortunately has not come into the possession of the owners, is stated by Captain Douglas to have shown the date of interment to have been nearly one hundred years ago. The process of preserval on appears to have been that the solar rays has revolved the gases of the gusano, and particularly its ammonia, which in the form of a vapour have penetrated through the wood, upon the interior of which a quantity has crystallised, and remains in that state. Possession Island is forty miles south of Ichaboe.

THE THEATRES.

ADELPHI.

It has been our task to speak so often and so well of this management, that we were the more astonished at what may almost be termed an insult, offered to the audience in the shape of an interlude, brought out on Monday evening, and called "Dramatic Cookery; or How to Dish up a Farce." Being supported entirely by Messrs. Selby and Wright, it afforded the last-named gentleman an opportunity of indulging in all those vagaries, for which his acting is so remarkable; but which, in the present instance, however humorously conceived, appeared rather to excite the indignation of the house, than its laughter: and, indeed, the concluding portion, which, to say the least of it, was actually offensive, provoked a volley of hisses, putting the fate of the piece beyond all doubt. Any one with ladies must have been anxious to quit the theatre as speedily as possible. A piece is not often damned at the Adelphi the theatre is, generally speaking, conducted with intelligence; its actors are all, more or less, favourites with the public; and its audiences are formed of a very peculiar class of people, always more inclined to be contented, than to quarrel with what is put before them. If a piece, therefore, is visited with the disapprobation which accompanied the representation of "Dramatic Cookery," on Monday, it follows that it must be very bad indeed. The name of the author did not transpire; and he has every reason to be satisfied with the preservation of the secret. Bayle Bernard's interesting drama of "Marie Dorcmare" commenced the performances—the heroine is, in our opinion, the best of Miss Helen Faucit's characters. The unfortunate heroine was followed by the "Powdered Ball-r" and the burlesque, "Norma," concluded the programme. The house was very full.

SURREY.

Albeit last week was announced as the last of the opera season, a succession of benefits has given the inhabitants of the transpontine districts an opportunity of listening to the singers for a few nights more. We have reason to hear that the career of the management, for some time, has been anything but prosperous, although the generality of notices respecting the various productions have been most favourable. These have been, of course, meant in all kindness; but we believe, that whilst a theatrical critic does his duty, both to the public and the journal on which he is engaged, by condemning the Parisian vaudevilles, and equally unattractive entertainments are produced at any of the theatres, he also does a service to the managements, in pointing—distinctestly, to the causes producing the lack of patronage, which, as public duty is thus given to them, may become of more benefit to the cause of the drama, than the praise of the most complaisant. Several circumstances have combined to injure the prospects of the Surrey opera season. The adjoining places of al fresco amusement, the fine weather, the river steam-boats, cheap day tickets on the railways, all drew away portions of the and ience; whilst the operatic company was not in itself the truth must be told—of sufficient excellence to attract the public to the Surrey, which is a second-rate one, and the habitués of the theatre had been used to better things. There was a niggardly appearance, too, in the way in which the operas were produced, different from former seasons. The choruses were scanty, and consequently ineffective; and the general appliances betokened a want of energy and perception. Before this time, however, the business had been anything but lucrative, and to this we wish more particularly to allude. The Surrey Theatre is one of the best constructed in London; its arrangement, both before and behind the curtain, is admirable—and its good seven and sevenpence, spectacularly speaking, are first-rate. The members of the troupe compose certainly the best melodramatic company; and every one of its departments is directed by more than an average amount of intelligence. But the fact, we believe, lies principally in the comparative inferiority of the pieces produced, and the want of sufficient attention to general detail, in bringing them out. The old school of romantic melo-drama, if we may call it by that term, has had its day; the public mind has become wonderfully alive to absurdity and improbable situations; and the sufferings of virtuous servants are already considered capital subjects for burlesque. The fund of cheap transpontine talent, and the ever-ready people to look for things of a higher class; and whilst their own perception has gone on from week to week improving, the entertainments of the minor theatres have made no more advance than has the correspondent improvement in their own taste. Suffering innocence and thriving villany are stale in the market; and old effects and situations are to become popular, must be accompanied with scenery—much nearer than is generally the case—and costume. Money must be liberally expended to draw money; but the most splendid mise en scene will effect but little, except it be based on a good piece, to get which, liberal remuneration must be offered to the author. We believe that, at present, the average terms for a three-act drama, at the minor theatres, are never more than ten shillings per night; and it is almost needless to observe, that for this sum, no author of recognised talent, in any sphere whatever, can be announced to talk with the public. And as regards the manner of putting a piece on the stage, the public eye has been educated to look for propriety of costume, and the general effect of an ensemble that shall ensure good acting. Such pieces as "Richard Coeur de Lion," and other traditional hall-marks, have become too worn-out even for Richardson's; and the effect of an entire scene will be spoiled, however artistically painted, by an inappropriate dress worn by the principal performer. Let there be a little more attainment on the French stage—a dozen different talents combining to form one perfect whole—may be, in a great measure, attributed the long run of many of their pieces. There is nothing to prevent the same degree of perfection at the Surrey, or any other theatre of its class, if produced with the same care and judicious concentration, both of time and money; and these suggestions we trust, before long, to see fully adopted. It is announced in the bills that the Charles Mathews and Madame Vestris will appear there on Monday. We must not forget that it is to the management of this lady we are indebted for the artistic manner in which the Princess's has been conducted, and for the good acting which we looked for; when the suggestions of Messrs Planché, Grieve, and Bradwell, at the head of their various departments of costume and dramatic construct on, scenery, and brilliant mechanism, were carried out to their fullest extent, and a perfection was realised which we have never since seen equalled.

LYCEUM.

An alteration has been made in the interior arrangements of this theatre, which appears conducive to the comfort of its patrons. A row of stalls, similar to those at the Haymarket, has been placed between the orchestra and the pit; and the seats in the balcony have also been rendered more commodious. Connoisseurs in stage matters complain of a want of light in the upper part of the scenery, by which deficiency much good effect is lost, and unseemly shadows cast on the scenes.

THE COLOSSEUM.

It gratifies us exceedingly to find that the attendance at this unequalled exhibition is on the increase every time we visit it, and the company is always of a most superior description. We go out of London to seek for the marvels which with the wonderful assimilation to Nature which characterises every division of it in which the representation of existing objects is attempted. The ruins have not the least appearance of having been artificially constructed. The columns are apparently corroded by time; the fresco paintings bear the same traces of antiquity; and it literally requires not the slightest stretch of the imagination to persuade yourself that you are in the real Temple of Theseus, instead of being within a stepping omnibus ride of the Bank.

The same ingenuity is displayed in the magnificent night view of London, without seeing which no idea can be formed of its singular splendour. Clouds flitting across the moon, and the quivering of its reflected light on the river, are the most illusive optical deceptions we ever witnessed. But, to our thinking, the most impressive part of the exhibition is the Alhambra Palace, in which the impression of reality is almost bewildering. The apparently interminable vistas of natural coloured arches, with the long slender pillars of crystal and sparry pinnacles glittering as with the reflection of the diamonds in the fissures; and the rush of the water, apparently falling into chasms of immense depth, whilst every point of view discovers some fresh object to call forth admiration, assist to complete this most marvellous representation. The foot falls with the deadened sound familiar to those who have explored subterranean passages; and there is the sensation, without, however, being disagreeable, of the still atmosphere of a cavern. The illusion is further carried on by the luminous imitation of bits of candle stuck into the rock.

It is for the purpose of Mr. Bradwell to present a constant change of objects to the visitors; and, to this end, a magnificent building, more than 300 feet long, and running parallel with Albany-street, is kept in reserve, to be thrown open to the public, with some novelty, whilst the other departments of the establishment are undergoing alteration. The attractions of the present exhibition, however, will not require to be changed, so we conclude, for some time to come.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Next Thursday night, although the last night of the season, will be one of the most brilliant. We shall have Lablache, Castellan, Rita Borio, Marlo, Fornasari, Labiache, F. Labiache and Biletti—combined in one opera, and that one of the most magnificent of the repertoire—"Don Giovanni." La Cerito takes her Benefit on that night, and will delight us by dances in each of those dances in which she has won such renown. A few days more and all these artists will be dispersed throughout England in all directions

LONGEVITY.—An aged woman, named Marie Mallet, died a short time since at Thénezay (France), at the advanced age of 115. She was born in 1730 at Pouzanges, and from her youth has followed the business of a dress maker, which she continued till the last year of her long life. During her life she has had forty five apprentices, the greater number of whom have preceded her to the tomb. She had by her industry acquired a small income, which maintained her in comfort when she could no longer work. She was very abstemious in her habits, of a very lively disposition, but died her death was so thin as to be little more than a living skeleton. The coffin was carried to the grave by eight young women, dressed in white, and was followed by 100 others, dressed in the same way. When the body was lowered into the grave, an immense number of chaplets were thrown into it by the bystanders, who had assembled in great numbers. A sister of the deceased died about a year since in her 109th year.

MUSIC.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

We redeem our promise of a notice of this national institution. The eight concerts of the series took place at the Hanover-square Rooms, March 31, April 14 and 28, May 12 and 26, June 9 and 23, July 7. Sir H. R. Bishop conducted the first and second concerts; Mr. J. Ness, the third; and M. Mescheles, the remaining five. This society was established in 1813; it originated at the house of Monsl. the celebrated violin player, and its great principle is the effective performance of orchestral music.

There is a capital in existence, which amounts to about £9000, but the annual subscriptions are the real support to render the Philharmonic one of the best instrumental associations in Europe.

The present members are Messrs Ayrton, Anderson, Bennett (W. S.); Sir H. R. Bishop; Messrs. Blagrove, Burrowes, Cooke, Calkin (J.), Cooke (T.), Cooke (H. G.), Cramer, Cramer (F.), Dizi, Dragonetti, Griesbach (H.), Goss, Griffin, Hawes, Howell, Kearns, Lindley, Loder, Lucas, MacMurdie, Mayer (P.), Meyer (C.), Morait, Musc ales, Nountain, Neate, Novello, Potter, Sale, Sherrington; Sir G. Smart; Messrs. Sargent, Watmuff, Walmisley, Watts, and Weichsell.

Before any professor or amateur can become a Member, he must be an Associate of the Society, and his claims to that honour are decided by the ballot. The talent which is its due. Costa and Lucas, two highly accomplished artists, have been blackballed, to the serious injury of the Society. True, that, last season, retribution was made to the former, by the Conductorship being offered to him; but he was not permitted to accept the honour, by the Opera authorities

The members elect annually seven Directors. The choice for the season 1845 fell on Messrs. Anderson, W. S. Bennett, J. Calkin, J. H. Griesbach, Howell, Lucas and Potter. The last-named gentleman having declined to serve, Mr. MacMurdie has been nominated in Mr. Potter's place. It should be explained that the Directorship has the entire executive power in its hands. It nominates a Conductor it is true, but it must be in conformity an unbiased expression, the Directors making up the schemes and engaging al. the performers, vocal and instrumental. The past season has been stormy. At no period of the Society's history has it been exposed to greater attacks. The mismanagement of Degrand by master hirelings. The great aim was to obtain the appointment of a Conductor who can command the Directors. This plot, however, signally failed. At the beginning every effort was made to secure the services of a Conductor whose European reputation would insure respect from all parties. Mendelssohn and Spohr were applied to in vain. Germany having failed, the Directorship tried France, but the veteran Habaneck, of the Parisian Conservatoire, had too much in his hands. The Italian school was then invoked, and the aid of the able and accomplished Costa was sought. We have already explained the hitch in this case In the emergency, Sir H. R Bishop was requested, as Sir G Smart had positively retired from his Philharmonic career, to take the bâton, until some artist could be prevailed upon to leave his continental duties—Marschner, Lindpaintner, and Guhe being sought for in turn.

The conduct of Bishop was generous and noble. He might have declined the invitation, on the ground that his claims to fame as a British composer entitled him to the position for the season without conditions; but Sir Henry is a gentleman as well as a scholar. He tendered his valuable services in the manner that they might be most available for the prosperity of the Society. Perhaps, no professor was ever subjected to more severity of criticism than Bishop. The German party and the Young England faction kept up an incessant fire, until Sir Henry, dismayed with the exhibition, quitted his post, and Lucas took it at the third concert. This artist is the Conductor at the Royal Academy, and the second violoncello in the opera band. He is also a clever composer and good organist. It would have been as well if the Directors had been able to engage him for the series; but Lucas is an independent man, and he resented "more rubs than nails," and absolutely never, without the interference of leaders. These conditions not being complied with, Lucas resigned the baton after the second concert. A more unfortunate choice could not have been made. Moscheles is a first-rate pianist and teacher. As a theorist he is also distinguished; but, place him in an orchestra, and, despite all his learning, he knows no more of a composer's score, nor can be more disastrous than his wielding of the bâton. This arises from his uncertainty; he is "infirm of purpose;" he is always dubious. He never anticipates his eye is on the player after the sound has been heard. As a Conductor he is never moved by the lustil gent glance of the Conductor Moscheles is dignity, and apt to dwell on petty details; for a semiquaver he would sacrifice an ensemble. His art is dull and precise; he is much too fastidious to be able to accept what he has old of a trombone to order for the peccadillo of the horn A Conductor is a nonentity unless he is the master-spirit of the band. Moscheles was a cipher the performance of which they liked at the rehearsals, but in want of coolness at direction is the rock he has split upon We question not his sympathy with the intellectual of his talent, but he is a shocking bad conductor

EVERYBODY'S COLUMN.

AWKWARD MELODIES. NO. XV.

The Feast of the Flowerets.

'Tis the sound of the harp from yon temple of light!
'Tis the tread of fair forms clad in crimson and white
The whole air rejoices
With the music of voices,
They are keeping their Feast of the Flowerets to night!
And the time has once been—it is fled—it is fled—
Let those hours be forgotten, their bliss be unsaid!
Ah! none know the horrors
Of a long night of sorrow,
Till the spectre walks forth of some joy that is dead!
They are singing our songs in those magical bowers,
Ad radiant with lamps, and all glorious with flowers!
And we weep when we hear them,
But venture not near them,—
Our looks might change theirs, but their's never could ours!
For alas! all the pleasures that round us befall
Are but like our own profiles receiv'd on the wall,—
Though others may view them,
We never can know them,
Or no more they'd be profiles or pleasures at all. R. R. S.

NEW RAILWAY ENGINE.

Mr Brunel, we understand, has devised a new engine, to run fifty miles an hour, and to work on eight driving wheels.

DOUBTFUL ATTRACTION.

The projectors of a new cemetery at the eastern part of the metropolis hold out to shareholders, as a bonus, graves for themselves.

A GIANT STRIDE IN PHOTOGRAPHY.

A M Martenz, of Paris, states that he has discovered the means of carrying on the Daguerréotype process on a gigantic scale. He can, he says, Daguerréotype an entire panorama, embracing 150 degrees!! His process consists in curving the metallic plate, and exposing the lens, which reflects the landscape, to turn by clockwork. The lens, in turning passes over on one side the whole space to be Daguerréotyped, and on the other side moves the reflected luminous cone to the plate, to which the objects are successively conveyed.

THE EYE.

The eye hath five tunics to guard it against danger. The first is like a spider's web; the second is like a net, the third is like a berry; the fourth is like a horn; and the fifth is the cover or lid of the eye. Here is guard upon guard, resembling the various ways Providence hath to secure us from ruin. Hereof the five cardinal virtues.

"AS I LAYE A THYNKYNGE."—THE LAST LINES OF THOMAS INGOLDBY.

As I laye a-thynkynge, a-thynkynge,
a-thynkynge,
Merry sang the Birde as she sat upon the sprays,
The Carpenne a noble Knyghte,
With his umbrelle shynynge bryghte,
And lyv'ynge lyfe at his eaze,
Free and easy,
As I laye a-thynkynge, herde upon his wayes

As I laye a-thynkynge, a-thynkynge,
a-thynkynge,
Sad were the Birde as she sat upon the tree,
[illegible]
Wepynge, wepynge, alle a-
And a-syngynge with broken strin
Ban
As I laye a-thynkynge, most pit-full to see.

As I laye a-thynkynge, a-thynkynge,
a-thynkynge,
Merrie sang the Birde as she sat upon the spraye,
No more Mayde came bye,
And a gentil youth was nyghe,
And he prayde her name a nyghte
Anna Marie,
As I laye a-thynkynge, her hearte was glad-some now.

As I laye a-thynkynge, a-thynkynge,
a-thynkynge,
Sad was the Birde as she sat upon the Cherie,—
No! the Birde as she sat upon the tree.

As I laye a-thynkynge, a-thynkynge,
a-thynkynge,
Sweetly sang the Birde as she sat upon the bough,
There came a lovely childe,
And his face was rosie and milde,
And [illegible] was playing,
On his knee,
As I laye a-thynkynge, a Cherub mote admire.

But I laye a-thynkynge, a-thynkynge,
a-thynkynge,
I [illegible] as she sat upon a
And the face was white as wax,
As he dawne upon the swan
Do a spreye,
As I laye a-thynkynge—oh! better fowd the tear!

As I laye a-thynkynge, a-thynkynge,
a-thynkynge,
As I laye a-thynkynge, a-thynkynge,
a-thynkynge,
Sadde sang the Birde as she sat upon the
[illegible]
With wild wordes of [illegible]
Sadde sang the Birde as she sat upon the
[illegible]
'Twas so she seem'd to saye,
"Here is rest

Bentley's Miscellany.

THE PRESENT POPE.

"The present Pope, Gregory XVI," says the Journal des Débats, "is the 258th successor of St. Peter. He will complete his 80th year on the 18th of next month. He was raised to the Pontifical see on February 2, 1831. The College of Cardinals is composed of 55 members (namely by Pius VII., 7 by Leo XII., and 45 by Gregory XVI. 6 cardinals are named in petto, and there are, besides, 9 vacant places

THE AMERICAN CHARACTER.

"We are born in a hurry," says an American writer; "we are educated with speed; we make a fortune with the wave of a wand, and live it in the twinkling of an eye. Our body is a locomotive, travelling at ten leagues an hour; our spirit is a high pressure engine; our life resembles a shooting star, and death surprises us like an electric stroke."

HOLY ISLAND.

During the past week, some discoveries have been made upon this island which are likely to be interesting to the antiquary. The workmen employed in forming a roadway from the lime kilns to the place of shipment, came to the foundations of some buildings; and as neither tradition nor history as sign any habitation or structure in that part of the island, the workmen's curiosity was very much excited, and along what is called Snook, on the north side of the island, they traced a line of foundations, occupying in extent a mile and a half. In the course of their operations they found two coins of the reign of Ethelred, and, supposing that to be the period when these foundations were formed, they must have existed for upwards of a thousand years. The cathedral was built in the reign of William Rufus, two hundred years after Ethelred. Two coins have been shown to us, and are certainly a great prize to the antiquary. We were informed they are Saxon stones: they are in wonderful preservation, the superscription being unmutilated. The coin is made of composition apparently, being neither silver nor brass. A stica, we understand, was worth about 2d or 2½d.

SHOOTING STARS

Among the papers read at the late meeting of the British Association, was one by M. Coulmer Gravier. He has ascertained that there are between 5000 and 7000 shooting stars to be seen in the course of a year; and that six o'clock in the evening is the hour when the smallest number are observed, and six in the morning is the maximum time.

A PROPOSING LOVER.

"John, I fear you are forgetting me," said a bright eyed coquette to her sweetheart, the other day. "Yes, Sue, I have been for getting you these two years."

BAIT FOR A CROCODILE.

It is not long since, said the katsheff, that a man from Berber settled here, and was well known to all of us. One morning he led his horse to the Nile to water, and fastened the rope by which he held it round his arm, and while the animal was quenching his thirst he knelt down to pray. At the moment when he was lying with his face upon the ground a crocodile attacked the unhappy man, swept him into the water with his tail, and swallowed him. The terrified horse exerted all its strength to run away, and as the rope, which was attached to the arm of his dead master, in the stomach of the crocodile, did not snap, and he could not escape himself from it, the affrighted animal not only got all the crocodile itself out of the river, but dragged it over the sand to the door of its own stable, where it was soon killed by the family, who hurried to the spot, and afterwards found the dead body of the victim entire in the belly of the monster.—Egypt under Mehemet Ali.

A SHIP SAILING EIGHTEEN THOUSAND FEET ABOVE THE SEA.

In 1826 Messrs. Rundel, and Bridge, the London jewellers, purchased the gold mines of Diamantina and the emerald mines of Limocoa, and sent over Mr Page as their agent. These mines are situate on the banks of the Lake Chiquito, 248 English miles long, 18 in breadth, and hitherto unfathomed in many parts. In the neighbourhood of Diamantina, reigned Mr or Mr another native king, belonging to General O'Brien, and an Englishman, of the name of Begg. The only vegetable produce of the district is a species of red potato, called chuno, and a few nutritious roots, brought from Africa, bulls' stocks, a few canoe vans and in the valley of the Bolivia, are cultivated maize, barley, and fruit-bearing trees. The difficulty of feeding, in their own scanty region, the large body of Indians working on the mines, suggested the idea of building a vessel for the navigation of the lake; and General O'Brien and Messrs. Page and Begg determined to make the attempt. Mr. Page purchased an unnewsaary brig of 150 tons, in the port of Arica, shipped her on her mountains, as is, and rigging, and succeeded, with extreme difficulty, in conveying the hull to the mouth of the Apolobamba, whose waters fall into the Chiquito Lake. Timber he brought with him from Africa, bulls' stocks, a few canoe two years of painful and unceasing labour, succeeded in launching his vessel on the lake, and opening a regular communication with the province of the valleys of the Bolivia. The brig is well found in all things—save for her want of a chart, which it has been impossible to carry to such a height. General O'Brien and Mr. Begg have executed other works of a business not less surprising. They have transported a steam engine across the Cordilleras, dug through the metalliferous hills of Lacayocta a canal 2000 feet in length, traversed by nine locks, and had down a railroad at its extremity for the conveyance of their ores. In that Lake Chiquito is the island of Titicaca, [illegible] by tradition as the cradle of the earliest Peruvian civilization, and [illegible] burial place of the ancient kings of the Incas.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The wild unsettled weather of the week has been unpropitious, not only to the sports of flood and field, but, as relates to the latter, in matter of more grave account. With few intervals, it has blown half a gale of wind; and, as the burden of the song goes, "the rain it raineth every day." After the storm at Goodwood—in every sense of the term—came the calm of Brighton, as chief among recent events. The affairs of the turf have long been in a laughable condition at the metropolis of sea-bathing. In point of company, the present season was an improvement on the past; in importance, the meeting was certainly not in keeping with the place. The only item of any magnitude concern was the Pavilion Stakes, for two-year olds, and this ended in a walk over by the Duke of Richmond's Tarcott Stag was in, and his owner meant to have had Cotherstone in for it; his second thoughts, however, were undoubtedly the best. It was but the question of a paltry two hundred pounds, and for this he would, in consequence of his Goodwood winnings, have had to carry 7 lbs. extra: few two-year-olds can go on running with none alone on their backs. Before we take leave of turf affairs, a word about the betting on the Doncaster St. Leger, as its present quotations average. Weatherbit has been cocked at 3 to 1; he has been more than three times this year, and was beaten twice: Minstrel finds friends only at double that price—look at the Calendar for his performances and you cannot understand this; record the performance of the same various ponts from which the vessels of the clubs sail; and this will be found to be a great relief and increased popularity to sailing associations. Places of social reunion are a vital principle of social societies. One passage of recent pleasure an ation, however, is of too national a character to be allowed to pass without especial report. On the occasion of the Regatta at Havre, a party of English blue jackets took a boat over for the purpose of entering her, but, as the account relates, she was found too long for the conditions of the race. In this dilemma, they borrowed an old French bottom, all weather-beaten and leaky, and having cut off a fathom of the mast, they started against three of the crack boats of that port. It soon became manifest that the old barky had got young life in her: the style of rowing attracted the [illegible] of the lookers-on, and the dismay of the boat-racers was great. One of the French boats stuck to her as long as it could, and when all hope was at an end her crew suffered her to get into the breakers, as a race to conceal their [illegible] upon merits. Seeing this, dock "here it," picked up oysters, and, spite of being [illegible] stroke, went in a gallant winner! Now if that was not characteristic of an English sea-first, we know nothing of the spirit that prevailed in the days of "Duncan, Howe, and Jervis."

The great return match, Kent against England, with the most powerful eleven that the season has mated at the noble game of cricket, commenced at Canterbury on Monday. England had the first innings, with Lillywhite and [illegible] at the delivery of the third ball, the former, in starting for a run, started a slow of his right leg, and of course was put hors de combat. The following are the [illegible] for, and the damage of the innings was done by the President of the Kendal Club, to enable him to destroy the extensive consequent upon his accident. The match was concluded on Wednesday. A fine display of splendid bowling and batting has not been witnessed throughout the season than has been exhibited during this contest. The score at the commencement was as follows: All England: first innings, 68; second, 142; total, 210. Kent: first innings, 109; leaving 1 to get at time: second innings 30 min.

Kent.—Second Innings.

W. Mynn, Esq., not out	2	Lilly-r, b Clark	1
Martin, br. w. b Clark	0	C. G. Whittaker, Esq., c Pearson, b	1
[illegible]	4	[illegible]	3
Pilch, c Box, b Dean	8	E. Swann, Esq., c Morse, b Dean	30
Dr. Nicholl, Esq., b Box, b Clark	23	Byes	9
A Mynn, Esq., c and b Clark	0
Dorrington, c Guy, b Clark	0
E. Banks, Esq., c Sewell, b Dean	10
	All England won by 31 runs.

TATTERSALL'S

MONDAY.—Never, perhaps, was speculation carried on to so great an extent as at this betting meeting recently held at Goodwood; and never, we may add, was the satisfaction of a multitude of accounts more amicably arranged. Bets to the amount of £100,000 shifted hands, and scarcely a murmur was heard. Something, however, is to be said about "excessive gambling;" but, excessive or not, it is [illegible] on a sensory state, and that Lord George Bentinck has done the state some service in cleansing it. Little need be said of the betting this afternoon. Weatherbit declined half a point, and the Merry Monarch, although cocked for £100, was not generally fancied. In fact, the only animal really in favour were Annandale and The Baron.

BY ALGAR.

5 to 1 agst Weatherbit	12 to 1 agst Merry Monarch (t)	25 to 1 agst Connaught Ranger
6 to 1 — Mentor (t)	15 to 1 — Pantaloon (t, c 2034)
10 to 1 — Ox England (t)	22 to 1 — Bay Rose	40 to 1 — The Pacha
	Very little doing.

BRIGHTON RACES.—WEDNESDAY.

The Pavilion Stakes of 50 sovs each.

Duke of Richmond's Tarcott [illegible] (Nat) walked over.

The Brighton Stakes of 25 sovs each, h ft 100 added:

Mr. R Gibbon's Pine Apple, 5 yrs, 7st 9lb	..	..	(Nat) 1
Lord Chesterfield's Jenny Wren, 3 yrs, 5st 3lb	..	..	(Scott) 2

The Town Plate of £40, added to a Sweepstakes of 5 sovs each.

Mr. Sheley's b f by Slane, 7st 3lb	..	..	(Whitehouse) 1
Mr. Beresford's Best Bower, 6st 10lb	..	..	(Lily) 2

THURSDAY

Sweepstakes of 25 sovs each.

Mr. Shelley's ch f Tiffait ..	..	..	(Whitehouse) 1
Mr C. Dorrington's Fernley ..	..	..	(Abraham) 2

The Queen's Plate of 100 gunneas. Heats.

Duke of Richmond's Lothario, 3 yrs, 8st 11lb	..	..	(Nat) 1
Lord Strathbrooke's Bentinck School Miss, 4 yrs	..	..	(M. Bell) 2

Match; 100 p.p., 11st each. New Course.

Mr. Bodwell's ch m Chance ..	..	..	(Mr Rolt) 1
Capt. Hamilton's ro g A.P. ..	..	..	(Mr Hawkins) 2

The Railway Plate of 50 sovs, added to a Sweepstakes of 5 sovs each

Lord G. Bentinck's b c Karnac, 4 yrs ..	..	..	(Abdale) 1
Mr. Hammond's ch c Annandale ..	..	..	(Whitehouse) 2
Mr. Shelley's b f Alkali, 3 yrs ..	..	..	(Whitehouse) 3

AQUATICS

POPLAR AND BLACKWALL REGATTA.—This regatta took place on Monday, in order to commemorate the day on which the first meeting was held at Blackwall by certain of the Watermen and Lightermen's Almanack, at Poplar, came off. The race was in five heats, with six scullers, for a very handsome and serviceable skiff and other prizes (the last of course, being for the first man), liberally subscribed by the residents of Blackwall, Poplar, and Brunswick-wharf. The winner drew away with the lead and kept it, winning easily.

KENT v SUSSEX. This match was played at Tunbridge Wells, on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, last week, when it was brought to a conclusion, and terminated in favour of Sussex by seven runs.

COUNTRY NEWS.

BRITISH ARCHÆOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION. The opening meeting of the Second Congress of the Society for the Preservation of Ancient Buildings at Chester on Monday, in the County Hall, high-sheriff; the Chair was taken by Lord Albert F Conyngham, the President of the Association. Mr. Pet. [illegible], the Treasurer of the Institution, read a paper on the objects and pursuits of antiquarian researches. Several papers were afterwards read

CHARGE OF EMBEZZLEMENT AGAINST A POST MISTRESS.—Miss Louisa Maria Mewis, who for some years past has had the superintendence of the receiving office at Edgeaston near Birmingham, has been examined on a charge of embezzling the sum of fourpence which had been entrusted to her upon a letter and was not accounted for. Evidence to prove the act of embezzlement was given, and two other similar charges were also preferred. The magistrates declined proceeding further in the matter at Warwick assizes, but the prisoner was held to bail.

FIRE IN MANCHESTER.—On Tuesday morning a fire broke out on the premises of Mr. W. satley, upholsterer, tipping street, St George's road Manchester As every attempt to save the property was in vain, directions were given to the firemen to save the surrounding premises, which object was accomplished, although the streets were exceedingly narrow, being in a very confined part of the town. The fire was subdued by about half past four o'clock, although the engines continued to play on the smouldering ruins until twelve at noon. The fire was first discovered [illegible] about 20 to 30, and it is [illegible] probably insured.

MURDER OF A PRISONER IN SALFORD HOUSE OF CORRECTION.—A rather strange, but, at the same time, an atrocious murder was committed on Saturday last, by one prisoner upon the person of another, within the walls of the Salford House of Correction. The name of the murdered man is William Tweedale, late of Rochdale, who had been committed to gaol for the non-maintenance of his wife and family, and the term of his imprisonment would have expired on the afternoon of the death. The murderer is William Clapham, a young man aged 23, who was serving a term of four months' imprisonment under a conviction of felony. A short time ago Clapham sent for the late Mr Bagshawe, the chaplain of the gaol, and stated to him that he was much troubled in his mind, and he wished to relieve himself of the burden. The substance of his statement was, that he had committed a murder a year or two ago in Lancashire, when in three or a person in the water, and the man was drowned. His conduct in gaol being somewhat strange, he was placed in the hospital under surveillance. It has since been stated that the confession of the prisoner as to the murder in Lancashire was founded in truth. On Saturday forenoon it was discovered that the prisoner had removed one of the long iron laths from the bottom of the beds of the hospital; and this fact having been discovered, he was required to give it up. He afterwards seized the lath again, and rushed at an old man named John Taylor Veale, who was sitting on his bed eating his dinner, and was about to give him a blow on the head, when the old man called out, and Tweedale rushed to his assistance, warded off the blow, but was instantly turned upon and struck a frightful blow on the left side of the head, the lath inflicting a wound somewhat like a sword cut. He fell, and the murderer inflicted ten or eleven others, fracturing his skull in a frightful manner. Tweedale lingered two hours, and then died. The old man rushed out of the room, calling out "murder," and the prisoner was secured by the officers of the gaol. An inquest was held on Monday; but after receiving some evidence, it was discovered that the principal witnesses being prisoners convicted of felony, and not competent as witnesses until after the period of their sentence was completed, the Coroner adjourned the inquest for a few days, by which time the old man Taylor will have competed the term of his imprisonment, and be competent as a witness

FIRE-DAMP EXPLOSION IN WALES—LOSS OF TWENTY NINE LIVES.—An explosion of fire damp, by which twenty-nine human beings lost their lives, took place on Saturday last, at a colliery belonging to Mr. Thomas Powell, situated at Cromhach, about three miles distant from the village of Aberdare, and six from Merthyr Tydvil. About eleven o'clock a loud report, followed by a violent concussion of the earth was heard, which caused the people of the neighbouring houses to direct their attention towards the pit, and in a very short time the awful fact became known that an explosion of fire damp had occurred. The consternation which ensued may be more easily imagined than described, when it is known that there were in the pit at the time from one hundred and fifty to two hundred human beings, men and boys, and the awful uncertainty that existed, how many, if any, were alive. Language cannot describe the mournful scene. The wailing of women and the crying of children as they ran towards the pit's mouth seeking their relatives, was sufficient to unnerve the stoutest heart, and the cries of these poor working colliers, that they were to be seen going into the pit without the least hesitation to seek their missing fellow workmen. The rise which had occurred may be imagined from many of them having fainted when proceeding towards the workings; yet others were pushing on and working, undauntedly, hoping to find some one alive and in need of assistance. It is [illegible] known how the accident happened. It is said the Davy lamp was constantly used to try the air, but the pit has always been in bad repute on account of its deficient ventilation. No accident in this part of the country has ever been attended with the loss of so much human life, and the effect, consequently, is an unusual gloom over the whole neighbourhood. There were also two or three horses killed, and the damage done to the works is very great. The names of the killed:—Rees Williams, 24, single; Howel Williams, 28, single (his brother); Howell David, 28, single, Joseph Phillips, 1—, single; Evan Lewis, 19, single; David Jones, 22, single; Thomas Rees, 19, single; David Morgan, 40, single; David Jenkins, 27, single; James James, 24, single; George Thomas, 33, single, James Thomas, 44, married, with two children; David Thomas, 18, his son, Richard Morris, 30, single; Thomas Rees, 24, married, with two children; William Rees, 32, single; William Williams, 34, married, with two children; Evan Thomas, 14, single; John Jones, 17, single, Thomas Rees, 23, single; John Edwards, 35, married, with two children; William Howard, his son, 9; William Llewel yn, 18, single, John Evans, 22, single; David Evans, 9; Thomas Davies, 70, widower; David Jones, 27, married, one child; and Nicholas Evans, 15, died dangerously ill. At 12 o'clock, on Monday, a jury was sworn in at the Boo Inn, Aberdare, before Mr W Davis, Coroner, to investigate the cause of this calamitous event. The Coroner and jury were seven hours in the pit before they could get to the bodies; and after re-assembling at the jury-room, the inquest was adjourned in order that additional witnesses might be summoned. The inquest was resumed on Wednesday, when several other witnesses were examined in existence, and the jury gave the following verdict:—"That it is the opinion of this jury that the deceased, Howell David, came to his death from accidental circumstances, and that this jury are of opinion that the present system of ventilation employed in the Dyffryn or Cromhach Colliery, though as perfect as the said system will admit, is inadequate to ensure the safety of the lives of the men employed in the said works, and they recommend that a system which will prevent the gas from oozing out of the old or abandoned workings into the main road air-way, may be adopted in pre ence as soon as possible." Mr. Richard Lewis, the viewer, said there was no doubt as to the identity of the men of the bodies, and, the same evidence being applicable, the same verdict was returned in each of the cases of their deaths.

ST. NICHOLAS (NEW CHURCH, HAMBURG.

Our "friends fast sworn" will remember that in the first Number of this Journal, some three years and a quarter since, we illustrated the Destruction of the City of Hamburg by Fire. In the accompanying details of the conflagration, the burning of "the celebrated Nicolai Church, one of the oldest and most splendid edifices in the City" was minutely chronicled: how the church was first used as the depository of property saved from the fire, on May 5, 1842; how smoke was first seen bursting from the upper dome at half past one o'clock; how the dome and spire took fire at two o'clock; at half past four o'clock, the entire building became a mass of flame; and by six o'clock, it was destroyed, though not until several lives had been lost in vainly attempting to save the venerated structure. These several stages of the catastrophe were chronicled in our opening Number; nor did we omit to record in its successors the full tide of sympathy which flowed in so generously from all quarters of the world, to alleviate the national calamity of the largest commercial city of Germany being thus, in great part, laid in ashes, and its inhabitants left houseless.

A large portion of the City being thus destroyed, its rebuilding, together with the reinstatement of the great public works, has led to an enormous expenditure; notwithstanding which, it was determined to reconstruct the Church of St. Nicolas upon a scale of magnificence even surpassing the splendour of the old church. According-ly, designs were advertised for from foreign as well as native architects; and it reflects the highest credit upon the good feeling, as well as the taste of the citizens of Hamburg, that they had aside all local predilections, from a desire to insure the best design for their new church. The number of competitors—including several eminent Continental architects—was great; and, in the end, the choice fell upon two english architects, Messrs. Scott and Moffatt, who have already designed and executed several important works, especially in the style adopted for the Hamburg design.

In this determination, by the way, the good citizens of Hamburg displayed great acumen; and their choice was the result of a well matured discovery—very simple when once made—that the finest style for a Christian church; many pamphlets appeared on the subject, some of which entered upon its consideration with a zeal and correct ess of feeling rarely equaled, and unexcelled; and the result must be lasting, as it is based upon a fixed law, the whole subject of Christian symbolism, and on these principles, not precisely, but most carefully, carried out. Has the choice of the Architects been fortunate? We have only to take up the individual design, much valuable information has been derived from a very able treatise written for the use of the Hamburg Committee by the well known Mr. Sulpice Boisserée, of Munich, and from the general examination and report of Mr Gruner, the architect of the completion of the Cathedral of Cologne. (see the Supplement to No 56 of our Journal, in which this splendid design is engraved.)

The style adopted by Messrs. Scott and Moffatt, for the new church of Hamburg, is that of the end of the thirteenth century, as being the period at which ecclesiastical architecture had arrived at its fullest development, while it had not attained to greater purity. The German churches of this date are often of extraordinary beauty; and the new edifice at Hamburg will, in questionably, add to the number. The general plan is that which is most common in Northern Italy, the width of the bays, from centre to centre of the piers, forming the radical dimension; the principal Aisle being of the same width, the outer Aisle half of, and the Nave double, the same; so that the Aisles and the Nave are in the proportions of 1, 2, and 4, the height of the Aisles is about double the radical dimension, and that of the Nave four times each dimension, so that the principal Aisles and the Nave are each in height double their width. The Choir is in length about 72 feet, and the Nave about 142 feet; being nearly in the proportions of 1 and 2. The internal length of the Nave and Choir is 210 feet, which is intersected in width of the Nave and Aisles by the feet, thus preserving a similar proportion. Thus, the whole is arranged in a simple arithmetical progression, subject, however, to a few occasional but slight deviations.

The Tower and Spire, which are placed at the west end of the church, rise to the height of 450 Hamburg, or 430 English, feet, being 26 feet higher than the spire of Salisbury cathedral; 44 feet less than that of Strasburg; and 64 feet loftier than the spire of Antwerp cathedral.

The height of the Nave to the ridge of the roof, in the Hamburg edifice, will be about 120 feet, which exceeds that of most of our cathedrals. The entire length of the building, including buttresses, will be 285 Hamburg feet.

The Nave will be partially filled with open seats, on the ancient mode of construction, and the Choir, which is to be enclosed by screen work, will be furnished with stalls. The Altar will be of stone, backed by a very large triptychal reredos, filled with tabernacle work and imagery, probably, illustrative of the Passion of Our Lord. Surrounding the Choir will be twelve pillars, which (as at Cologne) will bear full length figures of the Apostles; and, generally, the Tabernacles around the edifice will contain images of the Saints and Martyrs of the Church in all ages. The Windows will, it is expected, in the course of time, be filled with stained glass; and the interior (particularly the choir) will bear frescoes and other decorations.

At the south-western angle is placed an octagonal Baptistery, such as is seen in many ancient churches: it is so arranged that no person can enter the church, either from the south, or the west, without having a full view of the Font; though, in winter, by drawing curtains over the two entrances, the cold air may be effectively excluded. The Baptistery may be also artificially warmed—an object of great importance in the severe climate of Germany,—as removing all occasion for the departure from ancient discipline, which has too often arisen from the fears entertained by parents of bringing their infants to church during the winter, and which has, in consequence, brought about the very irregular custom of private baptism. This Baptistery will add much to the beauty and interesting character of the building both externally and internally; and will relieve that monotonous uniformity which is so destructive to the effect of a Pointed design.

The cost of the building, exclusive of decorations under consideration, will be about £385,000. It will accommodate 3000 persons. it will be the parochial church of one of the five parishes into which the city is divided; and will be situated in a large open area in the centre of Hamburg, near to the Exchange, the Senate-house, and other important buildings. The Spire will not be the loftiest in Hamburg, that of St. Michael's overtopping it by 26 feet: the spire of St. Peter's, when restored, will very nearly approach that of St. Nicholas.

THE NEW CHURCH OF ST. NICHOLAS AT HAMBURG.

Our Engraving shows this magnificent pile, rom the principal point of view, and will preclude the necessity of enlarging upon the admirable details of the design. The singularly beautiful Baptistery is seen: at the base of the tower, we are struck with the deeply recessed porch and its sculptural enrichments; thence the eye rises to the magnificent western window; the belfry and its profusely embellished angles; the enriched canopies at the spring of the spire; its bristling finials, its crocketed ribs, perforation, and tracery, carry the admiration of the beholder to the extreme point. Returning to the main body of the edifice, what an assemblage of enrichment bursts upon the eye in the gables, buttresses, pierced parapets, pinnacles, crosses, and finials; whilst the elegant lantern surmounting the choir roof adds grace to the effect of the entire design.

At parting, we may refer, with justice, to the spirit with which the citizens of Hamburg met their almost unprecedented calamity of 1842. Not satisfied with re-building the principal part of their city in a style of almost imperial splendour, they have taken advantage of the circumstance to introduce the most costly improvements of every class, in accordance with the scientific spirit of the age. An entirely new system of Sewerage has been introduced, not only in the new portion, but throughout the whole city, superior, probably, to any now existing: there are likewise new water-works, gas-works, locks, &c. upon a most extensive scale. It is also contemplated to construct new Docks, a splendid Senate-House, new Hospitals, Houses of Industry, and other public institutions. But, above all, to the honour of the people of the greatest commercial city in Germany, be it recorded that amidst all their public works, the Houses of God have not been forgotten: of the three large churches which were in part or wholly destroyed by the Fire of 1842, two are to be restored to their original beauty; and the third is being rebuilt by the citizens on a scale of magnificence, in some degree, a worthy monument of gratitude to Him who has enabled them to convert a severe calamity into the means of effecting a great public advantage.

OTELLO.

A TALE OF THE OPERA.

I.

The theatre was crowded—for a new singer was to appear in Don Juan. Gazing down upon the pit, it seemed agitated like a restless sea; the veils and feathers of the ladies glancing like light spray above the darker masses of the gentlemen's costumes. The dress circle was even more brilliant than usual for, at the commencement of the winter season, the Court had gone into half mourning, and on this evening had reappeared, for the first time, the bright turbans, the waving plumes, and the rich shawls, which add so much to the glory if nothing to the grace, of that favoured region. Each circle was, in truth, a garland of beauty. But, as from many flowers the eye will always select one, so here, the crowning rose of the whole wreath was a noble and lovely girl, sitting in the box of the Reigning Prince. She was the only daughter and the last hope of that ancient line, and her bearing was distinguished by that dignity which seems the instinct of high rank, but softened by the gentleness natural to those happy natures which even flattery and indulgence cannot spoil. Many were the hearts tempted to breathe a secret wish that this fair creature had been of less exalted birth; for that open brow, those eyes almost childlike in their mild innocence, and those smiling lips seemed to have been formed rather for love, than to command the distant reverence of a Court. And—as if the Princess Sophia felt she inspired such a thought—her dress was remarkable for its elegant simplicity; she seemed like a gem that can dispense with the aid of art, and yet outshines all the brilliants that are clustered round it.

"How cheerful, how gay she seems to-night!" said a foreign gentleman, in one of the boxes of the first circle, to the Russian Ambassador, who stood beside him; "I almost think, as I watch her, that I can hear her speak—that I can hear the naïve question, or the lively answer!"

"I dare say," replied the Ambassador, avoiding, as if from habit, giving a positive answer.

"And can it be that all that cheerfulness and seeming peace of mind are but a mask?" said the Stranger. "Is it possible she feels all the bitterness of an unhappy passion, and yet can appear so joyous and so calm? O, surely," and he turned to the lady of the Ambassador, "you are jesting with me when you tell me this; because I am interested for one so young, so beautiful—and, if you are serious—so unhappy."

"Still you do not believe me, then," said the Lady; "but, on my honour, it is as I tell you; she loves, and loves beneath her station. I know it from a lady whom no Court secret ever escapes. And do you think that a Princess, trained from her youth to act her part in a pageant, has not art enough to conceal so unfortunate an attachment from the eyes of the world?"

"I cannot comprehend it," said the Stranger; "can scarcely conceive it: that joyous smile—that gladsome countenance—and yet, a secret and unhappy love? Can it be possible?"

"It is; and why should she not be gay and gladsome, Baron? She dreams not that her attachment is as much as suspected, still less that it is known; and even now the loved one is not far from her!"

"Near her? Oh! I implore you, madam, show me the happy man: who is he?"

"Discretion forbid! Baron. I should compromise my friend—a lady of her suite; and you might repeat what you had heard, and tell what you had seen in Warsaw. Names! to give names in such affairs is against all the rules of diplomacy; my husband would never hear of such a thing."

The overture was nearly finished; the crashes of sound rose stronger and stronger from the orchestra, and the eyes of all were directed to the curtain, expecting the new Don Juan; but the Stranger in the box of the Russian Ambassador had no ears for the music of Mozart—no eyes for the scene; he saw only that lovely and noble girl, who seemed to him yet more interesting since he learned that those gentle eyes had brightened beneath the gaze of a secret worshipper—that those fair lips had whispered a response to his words. Her attendants had ceased their conversation, and were listening to the music; the Princess surveyed the audience, as if seeking some one she had expected to see. "If she should allow her glance to rest on him but for an instant," thought the Stranger; "one passing smile, one slight bend of the head, one of the thousand almost imperceptible signs by which love knows so well how to convey its magic message, and I would single him out from all."

As rapid as the Stranger's thought was, the quick light flush that tinged the Princess Sophia's cheek, as she glanced at the door of her box: it opened, and a tall, fair young man, entered; he advanced towards one of the older ladies, and paid his devoirs to the Duchess of F——, the Princess' mother; Sophia, with exceeding composure, played with her lorgnette; but the Stranger was enough of an adept in such matters to read in her eyes that this was he whom her heart expected.

He could not yet perfectly distinguish his features; but something in the figure and bearing of the young man seemed familiar to him. The Duchess engaged her daughter in conversation; her reply appeared to have been something gay or mirthful, for her mother laughed. The young man turned round, and—

"Gracious!" said the Stranger, aloud, "it is Count Zronoveski!"

The name was uttered so suddenly and sharply that the Ambassador started back aghast, and his lady seized her guest by the arm, and by sheer force pulled him down upon the seat beside her.

"In Heaven's name, Baron, what are you thinking of?" said the Ambassadress; "what would are you creating? People are looking at us. Hush! and, luckily the trumpets are unmercifully loud to-night, or the whole house must have heard your Zronoveski! What interest do you take in the Count? You know that we carefully avoid his acquaintance."

"I know nothing of the matter," said the Baron: "how should I, indeed, when I have scarcely been in the city three hours? Why do you avoid his acquaintance?"

"You know his position with our Court," said the Ambassador "he is exiled; and it is in the highest degree annoying that he has fixed his residence here, and will live nowhere else. He has had the effrontery to get presented at Court, and so I meet him at every step and turn, but in etiquette must not recognise him; and he gives me a world of trouble besides. I have been asked questions from a high quarter how he lives in such elegant style since his estates are confiscated, and I cannot answer them. Do you know him, Baron?"

The Stranger had not heard half the Ambassador's description of his perplexities. He never took his eyes from the Princess' box; he saw the Count conversing with the ladies of the suite, but remarked also how earnestly his gaze at intervals would fall on Sophia, and he withdrawn only to be renewed again, with a more impassioned glance than ever. The curtain rose; the Count bowed to the ladies, and retired from the box; and Leporello began his lamentation.

"Do you know him?" whispered the Ambassador. "Are you acquainted with his circumstances?"

"I served with him in the Polish Lancers."

"Then he has been in the French service. Did you see each other often? Do you know what are his means?"

"I only saw him," said the Stranger, carelessly, "when the chances of service and duty threw us together. I know nothing of him, except that he is a brave soldier and a good officer."

The Ambassador was silent, perhaps because he believed what the Baron said, perhaps that he was unwilling to raise any suspicion in him by further questions. Nor did the Baron show any wish to continue the conversation; the opera appeared to absorb all his attention; and yet it was a far other time and place on which his mind was dwelling.

"To this, then, has thy hapless destiny driven thee at last, poor Zronoveski!" he said to himself. "As a boy thou wouldst give thy help to Kosciusko, in his struggle for thy country's freedom. Liberty and Kosciusko fell together, and are now alike forgotten. As a youth thou wert fired with the love of arms, and followed the eagle of Napoleon in its flight of power; but the nations have struck down thy chief. Thou kept love away from thy heart in youth, only that it should find thee now in thy manhood; and thy loved one is so far above thee that thou must forget or renounce her."

The unhappy lot of his friend—for such had Count Zronoviski been—rendered the Stranger pensive and thoughtful. He sank into that abstraction which begets all surrounding circumstances; and the Ambassador, the first act of the opera having concluded, was obliged to rouse him by several questions from his dream, which was not broken even by the loud applause and bravos of the delighted audience

"The Duchess has inquired for you," said the Ambassador; "she thinks she knows your family. Come, we will go to the Princess' box, and I will present you."

(To be continued.)

CHESS.

To Correspondents.—"J. A.," Birmingham.—Your solution of No. 80 is imperfect; Mate cannot be accomplished as you suggest. In No. 81, you are correct. "L. C." is in error; Problem No 79 cannot be solved in less than seven moves: you overlook the fact that White's Knight and one of his Rooks are "pinned," as it is technically called.

"F. C. S.," Penzance, should learn the simple rules of the game; the very first move of his pretended solution is a flagrant violation of them.

"J. T.," Holbeach.—The King is entitled to Castle under the circumstances mentioned.

"G. O.," Lombard-street.—The "Chess Player's Chronicle" contains the cream of all the works "G. E." names, and about 3000 games and problems to boot. Buy also Lee's Second Series of Chess Lessons

"A fan"—The translation of Bilguer and Heydebrant's great work will be published by subscription. It will contain the most perfect catalogue of chess works ever published, with critical and biographical notices of the most distinguished writers on the game, ancient and modern.

"T. Th."—Try once more.

"A. Fairservice," Kelso.—Two Bishops are unquestionably more effective at the end of the game than two Knights. The former, with the aid of their King, can force checkmate, which the Knights cannot.

"G. R. T."—Bilguer-Schmidt's "Lehrbuch des Schachspiels" may be got at Williams and Norgate's, foreign booksellers, Henrietta-street, Covent-Garden. A new edition has just been published.

"M. N. O.," Islington. There is a private chess club at Pentonville, in which the members assemble once a fortnight, we believe, at each other's house.

"Pedone."—The best players, as far as we know, in Russia are Petroff and Jaenisch; in Hungary, Szen and Löwenthal; in Germany, Heydebrant and Bledow; in France, St. Amant and Kieseritzki

"A Lover of Problems"—The following will doubtless be new to you and the majority of our Chess readers. Place the men thus:—White: K at his B 5th—Q at K B 6th—R at K R 6th—R at R sq—Kt at K Kt 8th. Black: K at his B sq—Q at her B 7th—R at K Kt 2nd—B at K B 7th—B at Q 2nd—P at K B 2nd. In this situation, White having to play, engages to compel Black to checkmate him in six moves.

Solutions by "E. B.," "J. B.," "A. H. G.," "W. W.," "S. C.," "N." "H. B.," "M. S. A.," "An Amateur," "H. P." are correct. Those by "F. G. W.," "A." Truro, "F. C. S.," Penzance, "D. S.," "Morgan Rattler," all wrong.

Solution to Problem No. 81.

White.	Black.
1. Q to K Kt sq (ch)	B to K's 6th or *
2. Q to K Kt 7th (ch)	K's P one
3. Q to her R's 7th (ch)	Kt to Q B's 4th
4. Q to her K's sq (ch)	P to Q B's 6th
5. Q takes P—mate

* 1. K to his 4th

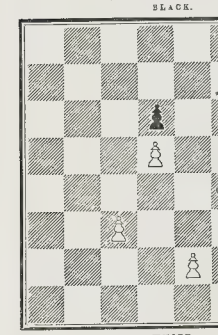
2. Q to K Kt 7th (ch)	K to B's 5th (best)
3. Q to K Kt 8th (ch)	K takes P
4. Kt takes B—mate

Problem No. 82.

By Herr Kuiper.

White playing first, mates in six moves.

BLACK.



WHITE.

Game No. 20.

Just played at the Old London Chess Club, between Le Comte V——, one of the leading members of the Cercle des Echecs in Paris, and Mr. G. P——, the Honorary Secretary of the London Chess Club.

Black (Le Comte V.)	White (Mr. G. P.)	Black (Le Comte V.)	White (Mr. G. P.)
1. K P two	K P two	17. P takes P	Kt to Q Kt 3d
2. K Kt to B 3d	Q Kt to B 3d	18. Q to her Kt 3d	P takes P
3. Q P two	P takes P	19. Q B P one	Q to K Kt 3d
4. K B to Q B 4th	K B to Q Kt 5th (ch.)	20. Q R to K sq.	K to Q Kt sq.
5. Q B P one	P takes P	21. R to K 7th	Q R to Q B sq.
6. Castles	P to Q B 7th	22. R to K sq.	K R to Q sq.
7. Q to her 5th *	Q to K 2d	23. Q to K B 3d	Q P one
8. Q Kt to B 3d	K Kt to B 3d	24. P takes P	Kt takes P
9. Q to her 3d	B takes Kt	25. Q R to K 5th	Q to her Kt 3d (ch)
10. P takes B	Q Kt to K's 4th †	26. K to R sq.	Q takes B
11. Kt takes Kt	Q takes Kt	27. Q R takes B	K B P one
12. B to Q R 3d	Q P one	28. Q R to K R 5th	K R to K sq.
13. K B P two	Q to K R 4th	29. K R to Q B sq.	K Kt P two ‖
14. K P one	B to K B 4th	30. P takes P	R to K 6th
15. B to Q Kt 5th (ch) ‡	Kt to Q 3d	31. R to Q 6th (ch)	K to K sq.
16. Q to her 5th §	Castles on Q's side	32. Q to K B 2d	Q to K sq ¶
		33. K Kt P two	Q to K 6th (ch)
			Black surrendered

* He should have taken the Pawn.

† It would not have been good play to have taken the K's Pawn.

‡ Well played. Intending, if White interposed the B's Pawn, to take the Q's Pawn with his Q recn, and threaten mate.

§ We should have taken the Kt (checking); and, in that case, we believe Black would have had the better position of the two.

‖ A good move.

¶ This is the decisive coup. Play as Black can, the game is irrecoverable

Game Laws.—The select committee have reported that it has been unable to bring its inquiries to a close, and recommends the re-appointment of the committee next session

The Opera House.—Monday last was fixed for the annual audit at the Bankruptcy Court of the accounts in the case of the Messrs. Chambers, the proceedings in which have attracted so much of the public attention for the last twenty years. The solicitor to the assignees stated that there were assets now in the hands of the official assignee applicable to the payment of a dividend, and to the amount of £100,000; but he apprehended that until the question of proofs as upon the joint or separate estates was decided, no dividend could be declared If the judgment of the Court were in favour of the proofs upon the joint estate, the dividend would range from 8s 6d. to 10s. in the pound, but, if otherwise, either amount would be considerably reduced. The assignees were extremely anxious to declare a dividend, and only awaited the judgment of the Court to do so.—The learned Commissioner said that he would decide the point in a few days.

A letter from Trieste, of the 20th ult., in the Augsburgh Gazette, states that on the 3rd a fire broke out in a forest close to the town of Adrimit, and spread with such rapidity that two hundred houses were reduced to ashes in the space of a few hours. A number of cattle were destroyed, as well as a considerable quantity of corn, wine, and other property.

THE SPIRIT OF CHIVALRY.

BY DANIEL MACLISE, R.A.

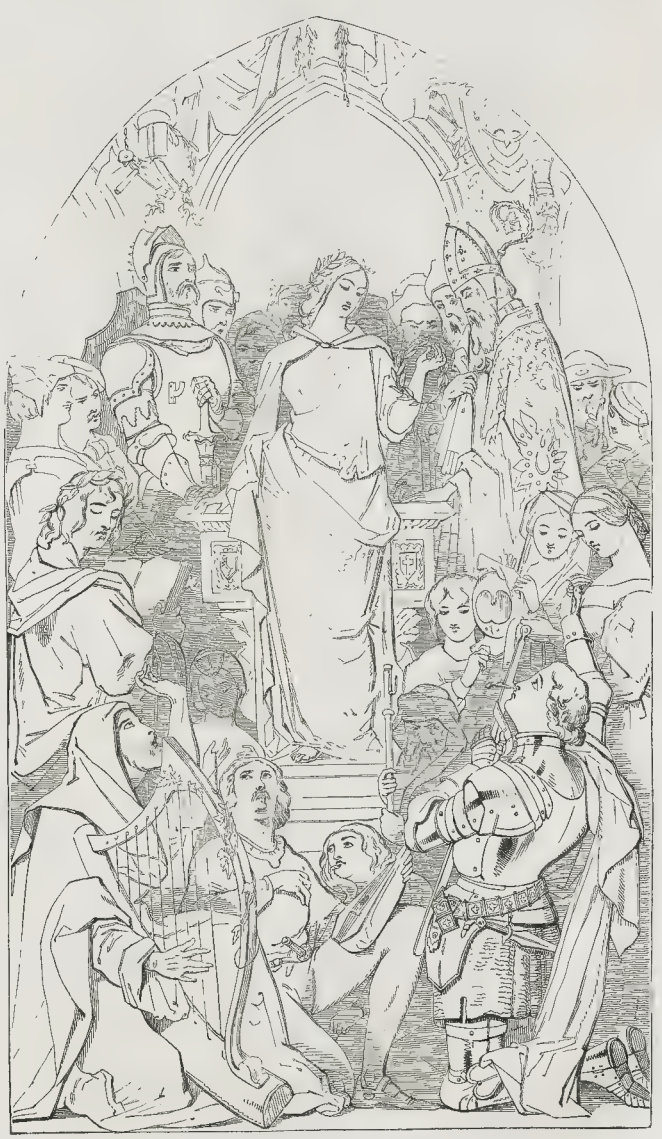
FROM THE PRESENT WESTMINSTER HALL EXHIBITION.

In fertility of invention, Mr. Maclise may be said to stand without a rival among modern painters. He crowds his canvass with figures, incidents, and accessories—distracts attention at one time, and demands it another—"gloriously offends" in one portion of his picture, and atones for every deficiency most nobly in another. We wish he could keep his genius within due bounds, and cease to sweep, with a drag-net, great and small. He has much to learn—and not a little to unlearn. He is too well pleased with his own first thoughts, to heed the common proverb that second thoughts are best. But the rank he holds in his art is eminently due to him; he is yet young; and it is, perhaps, unfair to quarrel with him for putting too much incident and circumstance into his pictures—a rare quality in our present school of art.

Mr. Maclise's Cartoon, in the present Westminster Hall Exhibition, is one of the most attractive works we have seen from his hand for some time past. It is more than usually pleasing, from the great mastery of pencil and crayon that it exhibits; and, as Mr. Maclise is a poor colourist, we are glad to forget his failing, in the contemplation of his present performance. From his own printed account, in the Catalogue he would appear to have attempted a great deal:—

The Spirit, or "Personification,' of Chivalry is surrounded by men of various pursuits—religious, military, and civil—who represent, as by an Upper Court, or House, the final acquisition of her honours and rewards. Beneath, as not having obtained, though within reach of the Crown, a young Knight vows himself to chivalric services, attended by his Page, and invited by his Lady's favour. Beside, or around him, in various grades, other figures are introduced, to connect the abstract representation of Chivalry with its general recognition of intellectual influences. Among them, the Painter, the Sculptor, and Man of Science; the Bard inspiring Youth by his recitals; the Troubadour and his Mistress; the Palmer from the Holy Land; and the Poet-Historian, from whom future ages must derive their knowledge of the spirit and the deeds of Chivalry.

We will not undertake to say that Mr. Maclise has come up to the height of this great argument. He has produced, however, a Cartoon of most unquestionable brilliancy—full of his own peculiar beauties and defects—of fine feeling, and of dashing and dexterous execution.



CARTOON (41) THE SPIRIT OF CHIVALRY.—BY DANIEL MACLISE, R.A.—EXECUTED BY COMMISSION.

The Emperor of Russia.—A letter from St. Petersburgh gives the following details of the Royal Family of Russia:—"The Emperor Nicholas has just entered on the fiftieth year of his age, and the twentieth of his reign His brother, Alexander, did not attain that age, although he governed Russia for twenty-five years. Of five daughters and four sons of Paul, there remain only the present Emperor, his brother, the Grand Duke Michel, forty eight years of age, the Grand Duchess of Saxe Weimar, and the Queen of Holland, the former eight years, and the latter five older than Nicholas The three other Grand Duchesses died in the prime of life. The Grand Duke Constantine died, as is well known, in 1831, at Sicilie, at the commencement of the Polish war. The Emperor Nicholas has had seven children, four sons, Alexander, Constantine, Nicholas, and Michel; and three daughters, one of whom died last year at the time of her father's return from London."

The Maid and the Spider.—The Gazette des Tribunaux relates the following anecdote, which, if true, throws into the shade the story upon which the opera of the "Gazza Ladra" is founded. M. P—— had two enamel shirt studs surmounted by a small fly of burnished steel, so beautifully wrought that he frequently deceived his friends by feigning to be desirous of [illegible] One of these studs was lost. M. P—— had certain suspicions, but for want of proof thought it prudent to suppress them. The following year the fellow stud also disappeared, whereupon the old servant was accused of theft and dismissed Some days afterwards Madame P—— perceived a large spider's web, behind the wainscot of her apartment, and upon brushing it down what was her surprise at seeing the two missing studs fall to the ground! An enormous spider, deceived by the resemblance, and thinking to have caught a fly, had hidden the studs in its web. The innocence of the servant being thus proved, she was instantly recalled.

We are glad to learn that the eleven men left by Captain R. W. Heckelbury, of the Dutch East Indiaman, the John Hendrick, on the 30th of May last, upon a rock near the Line, as was reported in our paper, were rescued from their frightful situation, after having been on the rock fifteen days, and endured many sufferings, by Captain Snell, of the merchant ship Eliza, of Liverpool, and have arrived in London. The rock on which the men were is supposed to be a volcanic eruption. The mate described the composition of the material of it to be iron, stone, and glass.

BENCRAFT'S PATENT HAMES.

Our attention has been drawn to this newly invented Hames, the object of which is to increase the power of the horse, by securing to him the free use of his fore legs (hitherto impeded by the point of draft being placed in front of his shoulder joint) and to protect him from the suffering of gall on the shoulders. The Inventor considers that he has succeeded in transferring the draft to the withers, or front of the spine (the seat of the horse's greatest muscular power), by means of the upper trace, the lower strap being intended to keep the collar in its proper position, or, in case of falling on the upper part of the neck, to relieve the draft from pressing on the wounded parts, until they are healed. We give a sketch, explanatory of the details of the invention, which is patronised by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The pupils of the College of Bebeck, at Constantinople, on the occasion of the birthday of the sultan of the college, on the 18th July gave a representation of the "Merchant of Venice" in English, and "Mirame" "Malade Imaginaire," in French. This afternoon was received with the greatest applause by the audience, and it was remarked that though the performers were Turks, they yet spoke the French and English without the least accent.

Baron Bosio, the eminent French sculptor, was on Tuesday morning week found dead in his bed, to which he had retired the previous night in good health. He was in his 77th year. The deceased was Officer of the Legion of Honour, Knight of St. Michel, and member of the Institute.

The Bourbon journals mention two lamentable disasters which had taken place in that colony. On the night of April 11 a desperate fire broke out at St. Denis, which, in spite of the exertions of the military and the inhabitants, destroyed several houses in the Quartier St. Pierre. The total loss is estimated at 300,000f., but fortunately no lives were lost. The French Government brig Cubbri foundered in a gale during the night of the 26th February and all hands on board, with the exception of seven men, perished. Gerbin Orcel, who commanded the vessel, was amongst the number of the victims.

The accounts from Athens of the 20th ult., mention that the Coletti Ministry had obtained a majority of 55 to 49 upon the question of installing a Synod for the regulation of ecclesiastical affairs. This majority is treated by the ministerial papers as a vote of confidence in Ministers.

General Dessaix, Commandant of the Department of the Yonne, died on the 27th ult. at Auxerre, of an attack of apoplexy. He was a nephew of General Dessaix who was killed at the battle of Marengo

On Monday the Chinese ransom-money, which was brought to England by the Cambrian, was forwarded from Goodge-st, on the South Western Railway. The whole of the ransom, consisting of 2,000,000 dollars, which were deposited in 500 boxes, and weighing about 8t cwt., was sent by the train. On their arrival they were taken to the Mint. This is altogether portion of Syeee silver expected, which will be the last of the ran-om.

Mr. Samuel Dernaux, a gentleman residing in Rathbone-place, Oxford-street, on Monday purchased at a book stall, for 1s. a volume of Homer's Iliad, and on examining the book discovered a bank-note for 100 guineas enclosed. On closer inspection, however, he came to the conclusion that some of the leaves had been pasted together, which was the case, and on separating them he found that they had been prepared for the purpose of concealing 5 notes, three of which were thus discovered.

The West India papers just received, state that the trial of Santa Anna having terminated in his perpetual banishment from the island, he was sojourning at the Havannah, where he arrived in the Medway steamer. It was expected that he would reach Jamaica by the next Havannah steamer, the 4th August. A report of a formidable revolt having occurred at Matanzas is confirmed. The loss is estimated at 2,000,000 do lars.

It appears from a return just issued by order of the House of Commons, that the number of insolvencies, bankruptcies, and sequestrations in Scotland in each year, from 1815 to the present time, has been 5450. The highest number in any one year was in 1841 43, when there were no fewer than 596 sequestrations awarded in the Court of Session (and there are no records of insolvencies and bankruptcies that do not result in sequestration); and the fewest were in 1838 39, when there were only 59

The St. Petersburgh Journal of the 22nd July, publishes a second bulletin from General Wrangell, detailing his further operations in the Caucasus. The general has not yet pushed his operations further than towards the sources of the Soulak, a river which falls into the Caspian Sea, at a short distance from the mouth of the Kerek. Sixteen aouls appear to have hitherto crowned the Russian forces.

The King of Denmark has informed the Scientific Society that he intends sending the corvette Galathea round the world, in order (as her Majesty asserts the right of sovereignty), in order to examine their natural productions, and how far they are adapted for commercial settlements. After attaining the primary object of the voyage, the Galathea will visit Batavia, Singapore, the Chinese ports which are open to European vessels, and Manilla, and thence sail to New Zealand. The corvette is expected back in 1847, after touching at several ports on the western coast of South America.

It appears by a statistical statement in a Hong Kong journal, that since the China trade was thrown open, the British import trade at the port of Canton has increased amazingly, more especially during the last year. The export of certain articles has nevertheless greatly increased the year, the quantity of silk exported in 1843, was bales 2100; and in 1844, 13 689. This, however, is supposed to have happened from part of the crop of 1843 having been kept back.

According to a Vienna letter of the 21st ult., the Austrian Aulic Council of War has ordered a body of troops to march to the frontiers of Bosnia the satisfaction obtained by the expedition of Colonel Jelacw on not being deemed sufficient, as the Turks have since committed other hostile acts On the boundary of Montenegro also, as it is essential having to-day made sacred, the Austrian Government has begun to erect small forts, and to take other measures of defence.

The students of Cologne, in imitation of those of several German Universities, have abolished dueling, and replaced it by a tribunal of honour, whose decisions are to be without appeal. They, moreover, resolved to give a legal existence to that tribunal, and had called on the Government to authorize it.

The Gazette de Cologne announces the arrival of Prince Metternich at his castle of Johannesberg on the 30th ult. The same paper states that the King and Queen of Prussia arrived at Stolzenfels on the 28th ult., and that they make an excursion to Coblentz.

M. Botta, Consul of France at Mossul, writes on the 26th of June from that city to the Minister of Public Instruction, that the researches which he had discovered among the ruins of Nineveh, had safely reached Bagdad.

A Vienna letter of the 29th ult. renews the report of a projected marriage betw een the Duke de Bordeaux and the youngest daughter of the Duke of Modena.

The Morocco war that Abd-el-Kader has still the French territory, and remained only by 100 horsemen, and retired to the south eastern desert As, however, the country will not afford the means of existence for himself and his followers, his stay there cannot be long.

Dr. Hale, one of the most distinguished physicians of Birmingham, died on Saturday morning last, from having taken too large a dose of aconite (monk's hood, a powerful narcotic acrid root), which he took for the purpose of relieving the rheumatic pains of which he was the victim.

The Belgian papers state that the harvest has been generally fine in Belgium, the potato crops have been attacked with a disease which has not many places materially destroyed them. It is supposed that it has proceed ed from the humidity of the season.

The Courrier Français states that a preliminary inquiry is to be opened in Paris in a few days, to take into consideration the feasibility of a re-sume for constructing a railroad across the capital, to connect the termini of the Orleans, Lyons, Strasbourg, Northern, and Rouen Railroads. The extent of this line, which it is proposed to carry along some parts of the inner Boulevards, is estimated at between 6000 and 7000 metres.

A letter from Warsaw, of the 25th ult., states that the Vistula has again overflowed its banks, being the fourth time during the last ten months. The harbour of Praga, and that part of the city which runs along the banks of the river as far as the Royal château, are under water. All communication is stopped, except by means of boats. The country around the city resembles an immense lake.

According to accounts from Frankfort, the approaching increase of duties on Brunes and French manufactures in the States of h Zollverein have led to very extensive imports of the goods threatened with the duty. Variation. The markets are said to be unusually

The town of Halmstadt, in Norway, was, on the 21st ult., visited by a tremendous hurricane, by which twenty buildings were thrown down, a number of trees were torn up by the roots, and several people wounded. The sea retired in an unusual manner from the coast, and returned in a few minutes with great violence. The waters of the Nissa rose all of a sudden four feet above their usual height, and then at once receded. A similar phenomenon was with essed on that coast at the time of the earthquake at Lisbon in 1755, and of that at Messina in 1783

Such is the desperate eagerness for gambling in shares in Leeds, that the magistrates are compelled to employ the police to keep the footpath clear in the street in which the Stock Exchange is situated.

The Official Gazette of Stockholm, announces that the King of Sweden has nominated the Duke de Glucksb rg and M. de Mon, Commanders, and M. Manbissen, Knight of the Order of the Polar Star, and presented each of them with the decoration in diamonds, as a reward for the distinguished assistance rendered by them in his negotiations with the Emperor of Morocco for the suppression of the tribute, which he had previously paid to that power.

It is said that the Pacha of Egypt intends to establish a Academy of the Fine Arts, the first professors of which are to study at Rome. In order to realize his plan, the Viceroy has already, at his own expense, sent to that capital several young men to study painting, sculpture, mosaic, &c.

DEATH OF A VICE ADMIRAL.—Vice-Admiral of the Red George James Shirley, died at Bath on the 2nd inst., aged 77. The dates of his commissions are—Lieutenant, Nov. 20, 1790; Commander, Sept. 11, 1797; Captain, April 26, 1798; Rear-Admiral of the Blue, April 27, 1812; Admiral, Nov. 24, 1840. He was on the half-pay of a Rear Admiral.

DEATH OF MAJOR-GENERAL ELRINGTON, C.B.—This distinguished officer died on Saturday last. His commissions were dated Ensign, Dec. 4, 1790. Lieutenant, April 19, 1794; Captain, June 1, 1795; Major, April 25, 1808; Lieutenant Colonel, June 4, 1812, Colonel, July 22, 1836; Major-General, Nov 23, 1841. For some time he was Deputy Quartermaster-General. Few officers have been harder service. He was shot through the body before Dunkirk in September, 1793, and through the thigh at the island of St. Vincent in July, 1796.

RISE IN THE PRICE OF BREAD.—On Thursday, the bakers at the west end of the metropolis, including the bakers at the west end of the metropolis, including the bakers in the vicinity of Drury-lane and Clare-market, raised the price of the quartern loaf from 9d. to 9½d. per 4lb. loaf, being an advance of a halfpenny per 4lb. loaf. There is yet no advance in the price at the east end, and bread of the same quality can be obtained on the Surrey side of the river at 7d. The best is from 9d. to 9½d. per loaf.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—Fresh up-to-day arrival runs of wheat coastwise to hand from Essex, which, added to the quantities left unsold on Monday and Wednesday from foreign and coastwise supply of this article, have been very extensive, exceeding produce to such a degree as to induce many of the dealers to purchase in the early part of the day's sale to the amount of 1000 quarters, which they expected to meet the demand from the country state that no material damage has as yet been sustained by the growing crops, but a most favourable change in the weather is anxiously wished for, as, if it does not soon arrive, a large portion of the English harvest must inevitably be lost. The prices of wheat were much the same as on Monday, although the show of fine samples was small, that article met a very inactive demand, yet, in the raw sales effected, previous rates were maintained. Scarcely a single transaction was reported in foreign wheat, the operations in which were confined to retail parcels. The supply of barley fairly consisted of fine malting qualities, fallowing sorts were quite a dead, but all other kinds being freely offered. We had a very limited quantity of malt on offer. Scarcely any qualities moved off steadily, at full prices. In other kinds exceeding a little was done. Our returns for free trade were limited, and of poor quality, so that no sales were consequently steady, and prices were a shade lower. In beans very little was doing, but peas and flour were, as before. Several parcels of new barley, tares, and tapeseed were on offer. Most of them sold at full prices.

ARRIVALS: English—wheat, 2934; barley, 40; oats, 20 quarters. Irish: wheat, —; barley, —; oats, 2300 quarters. Foreign: wheat, 170; barley, —; oats, 2410 quarters. Flour, 1670 sacks; 200 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 48s to 52s, ditto, white, 49s to 52s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 48s to 52s, ditto, white, 49s to 52s; rye, 32s to 34s; grinding barley, 24s to 25s; malting, 28s to 29s; malt, ale duty, 40s to 42s, Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 38s to 40s, brown oats, 18s to 19s; potato ditto, 20s to 21s; Lincoln, Essex, and Lincolnshire feed oats, 22s to 24s; ditto, potato ditto, 23s to 24s; Yorkshire and Cork ditto, 20s to 21s; ditto, ditto, 22s to 23s; tick beans, new, 30s to 32s; old ditto to 34s; grey peas, 32s to 33s; maple, 33s to 34s; white, 33s to 34s; boilers, 34s to 42s, per quarter. Town-made flour, 40s to 44s; Suffolk, 38s to 40s; Essex and Kent, 36s to 38s; Yorkshire, 36s to 38s; Stockton and Hartlepool, 34s to 36s; ditto Clover seed, red, 40s to 50s, extra, 52s to 58s, white 50s to 62s; extra 64s to 70s; ditto trefoil, 20s to 24s; ditto rib grass, 30s to 36s.

The prices of wheaten bread in the Metropolis are from 8½d to 9½d of household ditto, 8d to 9d; ditto 7½d to 8½d.

Imperial Weekly Average—Wheat, 45s 3d; barley, 28s 8d; oats, 22s 6d; rye 34s 6d; beans, 32s 8d; peas, 34s 6d.

Six Weeks' Average—Wheat, 46s 11d; barley, 28s 8d; oats, 22s 7d; rye, 32s 8d; beans, 32s 8d; peas, 34s 6d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat 20s: barley 9s; oats, 8s; rye, 10s 6d; beans, 2s 6d, peas, 2s 6d.

Tea.—This market still continues inactive, and prices are well directly supported. The stock in Lond on is now 32,351,000 lbs., against 32,351,000 lbs. on the 1st inst.

Sugar.—The public sale of business has been again doing in West India sugar, at a further advance in the quotations of 6d per cwt. Bengal, Mauritius, and foreign parcels are quite as dear. The transactions in refined goods are to 6s to 6s 6d for lumps, and 46s to 47s for standard, ditto.

Coffee.—Ceylon parcels have moved off heavily, at a decline of from 6d to 1s per cwt. All other kinds of coffee have met a dull sale at barely late rates.

Provisions.—In the Irish provision trade the demand for any article is dull, at a depression of from 1s to 2s per cwt. The imports of late have been somewhat extensive.

Rice.—Large purchases have been made for the trade to keep it steady, at an advance of 3d per cwt. Low sorts are selling at 11s 3d, and none may be had under 11s 6d per cwt.

Spirits.—Although the demand for rum has been on hand since our last, yet they have not very little effort upon prices. A fair business is done at 2s 8d to 3s for Leeward, and 3s 3d to 3s 6d for Jamaica. Brandy is in good request, with a large business doing. In hollands no alteration; market is inactive, at a decline of 1s per cwt. Waterford, old brand, is now at 2s 9d per gallon. The current prices of British spirits are as follow:—Proof, 10d to 10½d; and the other kinds of proofs one to one halfpenny to one penny.

Oils.—Linseed oil is still in request, at full prices: but most other kinds are a slow inquiry.

Seeds and Straw.—Coarse meadow hay, 4l 15s to 5l 15s; useful ditto, 4l 0s to 4l 5s; fine upland ditto, 4l 10s to 5l 5s; clover hay, 5l 5s to 6l 5s; oat straw, 1l 5s to 1l 12s 6d; wheat straw, 1l 4s to 1l 8s, per load. New meadow hay, 4l 0s to 4l 10s; and new clover, 4l 5s to 4l 15s, per load

Coals (Friday): Hetton, 16s 6d; Hartley, 16s 6d; Holywell Main, 16s; Pemrop Windsor, 14s; Townley, 15s 6d; Ridsdale, 17s; Hassel, 15s 9d; Hellor, 17s 9d; Stewart's, 17s 6d per ton.

Provisions.—This market is in a dull state, and but few buyers can be found at present rates, we quote them as they are the currency of the day.

Hops (Friday). The prevailing wet weather has had the effect of preventing any further demand in the various districts in which rather more business is doing. The plantation accounts are favourable. The duty is called £100,000.—Sussex pockets, 4l 5s to 4l 5s 5s; 5l 5s to 5l 5s; Kents, 4l 5s to 4l 10s; Farnhams, 5l 5s to 6l 6s; Essex, 4l 5s to 4l 15s.

Wool.—The imports of wool continue on an extensive scale, yet the demand for nearly every description is steady, at full prices

Potatoes.—New potatoes—the supplies of which are extensive—command a ready sale, at from 4s to 5s per cwt.

Tallow.—We have to report a very steady demand for this article, at somewhat improved rates. On the spot yellow candle is selling at 37s 6d to 38s per cwt.

Smithfield (Friday.—On the wheat, the sal pitals on sale here to-day was tolerably large, and the demand for all breeds was very heavy, at full prices. In sheep only a middling supply of fine qualities was on offer so beasts and 140 on the Scotch, Downs, and Leicesters, were disposed of readily, at full prices. The numbers of sheep were of the primest, coming to which the supplies trade was heavy, at barely late rates. In lambs only a moderate business was transacted, yet their currencies were supported. Calves were dull sale, but not cheaper. Pigs moved off nearly at our quotations. Milch cows sold steadily at from £20 to £25 each, and in-calf heifers at £18.

Per 8lb, to sink the offals. Coarse and inferior beasts, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; second quality ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; prime large oxen, 3s 10d to 4s; ditto small ditto, 4s to 4s 2d; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s 8d to 4s; second quality ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; prime coarse-woolled ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; prime South Down ditto, 4s 10d to 5s; large coarse calves, 3s 6s to 4s; prime small ditto, 4s 4d to 4s 6d; large pigs, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; small porkers, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; lambs, 5s 2d to 6s 8d. Sucking calves, 15s to 20s, and quarter ox store pigs, 16s to 18s each. Beasts, 797; sheep, 7,140; calves, 120; pigs, 270.

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—For each kind of meat, we are only a moderate demand at our quotations.

Per 8lb, by the carcase inferior beef, 2s 6d to 2s 10d; middling ditto, 3s 0d to 3s 2d; prime large ditto, 3s 4s to 3s 6d; small ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; second mutton, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; prime ditto, 3s 8d to 4s; middling ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10s; prime ditto, 4s 0d to 4s 4d; veal, 3s 8d to 4s 8d; small pork, 3s 8d to 4s 4d; lamb, 4s 4d to 6s 0d.

ROBERT HERBERT.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The English Market has, in its fluctuations, been a sort of barometer, the weather during the greater portion of the week. Transactions in all descriptions of securities have been very limited, Consols varying in price only to the extent of half per cent during the week. Exchequer Bills have gradually receded, from the increasing value of money, while they are now to be had at from 2½ per cent. Bank Stock is rather firmer, closing at 211. Reduced is 99¾. New three-and-a-quarter per Cents, 102¾; and Consols, for money, 99⅞ to 99; for account, 99 to ⅛. Exchequer Bills, 49 to 51.

The Foreign Market has been rather animated during the week from the variations in Spanish and Mexican stock, although the amount of transactions have not been extensive. Portuguese are in request at 29½ to ⅝, the Three per Cents. 37¾ to ⅞. A slight improvement on these prices was apparent on Tuesday, and still further on Wednesday. This change was wholly occasioned by the very favourable accounts received from Madrid of the payment of the dividend, which may be said to range from 22¾

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor and Manager, Mr W BATTY. First Appearance of Mr. T THOMPSON, the renowned [illegible] Last Week but one of the engagement of the French Equestrians.—Courtmar[illegible] New Scenery. On MONDAY AUGUST 11, and during the Week, the New [illegible] Pantomime, with Magnificent Tableaux, and by all the efficient Stadium[illegible] Troupe of the SURREY and the Theatre of the [illegible] and the Sisters of the French Equestrians. To conclude with the Popular and highly Historical Equestrian Drama of LIFE GUARDS MAN OF MANCHESTER, or, the Factory Master and the Poacher. Dick Tom, the Dumb Man Mr. T. Thompson. [illegible] Corps [illegible]

LICENSED VICTUALLERS' CONCERT AND FANCY FAIR AT VAUXHALL GARDENS on MONDAY and TUESDAY NEXT, AUGUST 11 and 12. A Grand Day [illegible] Licensed Victuallers' School. Kennington Lane, when all the rare arrangements that have established [illegible] Fancy Fair, will be found in operation. The Royal Duke of Sussex has graciously signified [illegible] to attend on Monday. Rossini's Overture to Semiramide, and Finale to the 2nd Act, will be performed by a numerous Band and Chorus, conducted by Mr. Loder. Vocal Concert. Part 1, as Singers Miss Lodger, Lyons, Mr. Binge, and Mr. J. W. Sears, who will introduce Mrs. Gould's Last new Song, entitled "Fancy"). New Ballet, "Old Vauxhall Gardens, or the Hermit's Cave." Various [illegible] Fireworks. [illegible] Tickets, 5s. each. [illegible]

Acrobats, Monkey Dances, Archery and other Sports, Brilliant Illuminations, and many other Grand Effects. Magnificent Display of Fireworks. Description of Grand Ballet with Diagram on the Ice at the Great Cry of Cats, on the Temple of Hecate, Vauxhall Gardens. Total Eclipse of Queen will be repeated every day, by full Orchestra. Admission, 1s. Children Half-price. Doors open at Two O'Clock. The Free List will be entirely suspended, the Public Press excepted.—Mr. Beazeley's and Fridays the Extra Night Harris and Son.

COLOSSEUM.—Patronised by Her Most Gracious MAJESTY [illegible] PRINCE ALBERT. [illegible] the City of Rhenes containing Works of the Most Eminent Italian and Modern Artists, Superb Conservatories, Gothic Archery, Classic Ruins and Fountains, Panorama of London, re-painted by Mr. Parris, &c. Admission, 2s.; Children Half price. The Stalactite Caverns [illegible] extent.

EVENING EXHIBITION, open from 8 till 11, consists of an entirely New Panorama of London by Night, painted from the Roof of the Colosseum by Mr. Parris, and the newly [illegible] Grand Diorama, recently painted and carried out by Mr. W. Bradwell, and painted by Mr. [illegible] The Caverns, Music, and Fountains play. [illegible] Admission 1s. [illegible] Bradwell's Adventures at the door as every family [illegible] Door is [illegible] to reach, to be had at the New Library, Colosseum, from 11 to 6. of Messrs. Mitchell, Bookseller, Mr. Mayo, Old Bond-street; Mr. Saunders, St. James's-street; Messrs. [illegible] and Hodgson, Oxford-street, and Messrs. Addison and Co., 7, Regent-street.

MONS. BOUTIGNY'S EXPERIMENTS on the [illegible] of WATER in RED-HOT CRUCIBLES will be repeated by [illegible] Lecture on the CAUSES of EXPLOSIONS in STEAM-BOILERS, on the Nature and Extent of the Danger, on MONDAY, WEDNESDAY, and FRIDAY, at 3 and 8, at the ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION. The ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY, carrying from Six to Eight Passengers at intervals, upon the Experimental Line, in the Great Room, adjoining the Western Entrance. The Art of SWIMMING and LIVING if[illegible] by a Youth Eight years old, in the Bason of the Royal Gallery. The celebrated Invisible Girl, every Morning at [illegible] Fridays at Two o'Clock, and on the Evenings of Tuesdays and Thursdays, at Half past Eight. And all the other popular Lectures and Exhibitions as usual.—Admission 1s., Schools, Half-price.

ROYAL ADELAIDE GALLERY, Lowther-arcade, Strand.—[illegible] EXHIBITION of [illegible] MODEL every Day, at Two O'Clock, and in the Evening at Eight, and on the Queen's Fete Days. LECTURE in CHARACTER by Mr. J. H. S. [illegible] with Musical Illustrations, every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday Evenings. LES [illegible] MARIONETTES of the Adelaide Theatre, in Eight Ballets every Morning at Twelve-[illegible] day, and Friday, in which will be introduced the most Comic Performances of the Day. [illegible] GRAND PANORAMA of LOCOMOTIVE and MINING RAILWAY CLASS every Morning. A Beautiful MODEL of REALL'S ROTARY STEAM ENGINE, which makes 8[illegible] Revolutions in a Minute, shown every day. LECTURES on CHEMISTRY, every Day. [illegible] BENJOWSKI'S LECTURE on the Principles of ARTIFICIAL MEMORY every [illegible] Wednesday, and Friday, at Two o'Clock. All LOOKING-GLASSES, under the Invention of those days. The GAS MICROSCOPE, CHROMATROPE, DISSOLVING VIEWS, and [illegible] Open [illegible] Admission 1s.

HIS R. H. the PRINCE of WALES, by gracious permission of her Majesty, from the pasture of Windsor Park to Walmer Castle. The HOUSE of BRUNSWICK at ONE VIEW, George I., George II. George III., George IV., Will. IV., Queen Victoria, Queens Consort, Princesses, Princes, Kings of Hanover, Princesses of Cambridge, Sussex, &c., the Robes of George IV., removed, the Hon. Colonel the Garter, Bath, Thistle, St. Patrick, the National Group, Mr. Dodson, and Mr. Charles Young. [illegible] Open from 11 till 10 at night.—Admission One Shilling.—Madame Bertoni, Saloman.—MADAME TUSSAUD and SONS' Bazaar, Baker-street, Portman-square.

G. H. RODWELL'S LAST NEW BALLAD, "AH! WOULD YOUR EYES HAD NEVER MET" will (with the Music) be embodied in the Seventh Number of the MELODIES OF AN UMBRELLA, with 16 extra charge.

J. MAYCOCK, 135, Fleet-street. [illegible] & Sons, 24, Soho-square.

DISEASES OF THE CHEST.—PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS on a Successful Mode of Treating CONSUMPTION, Asthma, Chronic Cough, Affections of the Heart. By ALFRED B. MADDOCK, M.D., 22, Surrey-street, Strand. [illegible] Sold by LONGMAN and Co., Paternoster-row; and HOLMES, 256, Regent-street.

SECOND EDITION OF TEN THOUSAND.

THE BUDGET OF 1845.—A Complete LIST of Four Hundred and Thirty Articles freed from Taxation by the New Tariff.

Lessons I. Mr. CLARK, 11, Fleet-street. [illegible] & Sons, 24, Soho-square.

THE EDINBURGH TALES.—Part VII., price 7d., contains: The New Town of Edinburgh, and its Inhabitants. Johnny Raw, or the Raw Recruit. Illustrated by William Hewitt. The Story of Parliament of Inverey, or Sir Thomas Hope's Daughter; by Mary Howitt. All written expressly for the Edinburgh Tales.

CHAPMAN and HALL, London; W. TAIT, Edinburgh.

HEMP TO-DAY.—Price 1s. 6d., by Post, 1s. 8d.

WHAT to EAT, DRINK, and AVOID; addressed to the Nervous and Dyspeptic

By R. J. CHEVALLIER, M.D. [illegible] BROS., &c.

SHERWOOD, 23, Paternoster-row, CARPENTER, 147, Fleet street, HANNAY, 63, Oxford-street; MAW, 39, Cornhill, and HARVEY, 24, Strand-street, Strand.

Now Ready, in one vol. 8vo (containing as much matter as two ordinary volumes), with New Engravings of the Arms, &c., price 28s., bound,

BURKE'S PEERAGE AND BARONETAGE; THE FOURTH EDITION FOR 1845,

Materially improved throughout, from the personal communications of the Nobility, &c. AND CONTAINING ALL THE NEW CREATIONS.

HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

THE CORN TRADE. The critical state of the weather involving the probable loss of a deficient and wet harvest, and the consequently serious [illegible] in the Corn Trade, induces many persons to enquire [illegible] Under such circumstances, [illegible] as to the probable [illegible] on the harvest at home and abroad, and as to the stock of grain on hand [illegible] of interest to the whole world [illegible] the Harvest [illegible] Corn Trade, is [illegible] and is [illegible] by the MARK LANE EXPRESS AND AGRICULTURAL JOURNAL, which has been [illegible] for seven years, exclusively to the Corn Trade, [illegible] and is [illegible] by all Booksellers and Newsmen. Office, 26, Norfolk-street, Strand, London.

THE ILLUSTRATED NEW TESTAMENT. [illegible] A NEW EDITION. [illegible] NEW TESTAMENT.

And containing also numerous Views of the Cities and Places mentioned in the New Testament, from Original Sketches recently made in the Holy Land; and Engravings portraying the Manners and Customs of the East, derived from Ancient and Modern Works.

With Notes, Historical and Descriptive, avoiding all doctrinal points.

The whole in a beautiful edition of the New Testament with the handsome Quarto, and the price is not exceed Four Shillings.

[illegible] Prospectus will appear in a subsequent number of this Journal.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON ALMANACK, FOR 1846,

Will be published early in October next, and will surpass in elegance and usefulness any Almanack ever produced. It will contain

Two new and elegant Designs by Kenny Meadows, and Twelve by William Harvey, emblematic of the Months.

The Calendrical portion of the Almanack, and the various Astronomical Phenomena, comprising two pages for each month, with Engravings, have been furnished by an officer of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich.

A page for each month is devoted to Natural History, with numerous engravings, and will [illegible] Tables of Remarkable Days, Anniversaries, Duration of Sunlight, &c., &c., which will be appropriated to valuable [illegible] information requisite to form a complete Almanack for both [illegible] year.

Price One Shilling, stitched in a handsome wrapper, and gilt edges.

Now Ready at all the Libraries, in 3 vols.,

THE STORY of a ROYAL FAVOURITE. By MRS GORE.

A scandal about Queen Elizabeth, I hope!"—The Critics.

Also, just published,

COUNT KONIGSMARK. An Historical Novel. By CAPT FREDERICK CHAMIER, R.N.

"By far the best of Captain Chamier's works"—Court Journal.

LOVE AND MESMERISM. By HORACE SMITH, Esq., Author of "Brambletye House," &c. 3 vols.

HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough street.

FOR AUTHORS IT IS SHINING.

Now Ready (a Specimen Free by Post), price 3d., post free,

THE AUTHOR'S PRINTING and PUBLISHING ASSISTANT.—A Guide to the Printing, Correcting, and Publishing New Works, comprising Explanations and Cautions for Process of Printing; Peculiarities and Calculations of Authors; Punctuation; Choice of paper, Type, Margins, Quotations, Publishing, Advertising, Estimates of Cost for Literary Work, &c., &c. With an Exemplification and Description of the Typographical Marks used in the Correction of the Press.

"Every one who has written or who may write for the press, should possess this work."—Morning [illegible]

Also, Price 2s. 6d., post free,

PLANS FOR GENTLEMEN'S LIBRARIES; with Remarks on their Formation and Arrangement. SAUNDERS and OTLEY, Publishers, Conduit-street.

SCHOOL BOOKS BY WILLIAM BUTLER, EDITED BY THOMAS BOURN.

1 CHRONOLOGICAL BIOGRAPHICAL, HISTORICAL, and MISCELLANEOUS VIEWS SER. 18th Edition, cloth, 2s. 6d. bd.

2 ARITHMETICAL QUESTIONS. 12 th Edition with Additions by GEORGE FROST [illegible]

3 PRINCIPLES on the GLOBES and MAPS. 16th Edition 12mo, 6s. bd.

4 A KEY to the EXERCISES on the GLOBES. 5th Edition, enlarged.

5 MISCELLANEOUS QUESTIONS in ENGLISH HISTORY and BIOGRAPHY. 5th Edition, 12 mo, 4s. bd.

6 GEOGRAPHICAL EXERCISES on the NEW TESTAMENT. 3rd Edition. 12mo. 6s. bd.

7 ARITHMETICAL TABLES, for the 21st Edition, with Additions &c.

Sold by HARVEY and DARTON, 55a, GRACECHURCH, MARSHALL, and Co.

Now Ready, Price Eighteen Shillings, Vol. VI. of

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

Elegantly bound in cloth and gold, gilt edges rich in [illegible] Illustrations of the Passing Events of the last Six Months, form a most complete and valuable [illegible] CHRONOLOGY; together with a mass of useful and highly interesting articles on Art, Literature and Science. May be obtained by order of all Booksellers &c., in the Kingdom, as

SUBSCRIBERS to the BRITISH and FOREIGN PUBLIC LIBRARY, CONDUIT STREET, HANOVER SQUARE, are supplied with all the New and Popular Works for perusal in Town or Country as soon as Published, and have at an immense [illegible] the best Standard Works in English, French, Italian, and German Languages and can direct the purchase of any Work or general supply [illegible] SAUNDERS and OTLEY, Publishers, Conduit street, Hanover square.

EMBLAZONED ARMS for BOOK PLATES, &c.— MESSRS. HARR SON and SONS respectfully Inform the Nobility and Gentry that by an [illegible] New Invention they produce Coats of Arms, Crests, &c., in such Emblazoned Colours and Burnished Gold, at the same rate as the ordinary painters do for Plates, and superior to their specimens of Emblazoned Designs exhibited at the Royal Commission of fine Arts [illegible] Messrs [illegible] Harrison and Sons, 59, Pall-mall.

NUMBER ONE, SAINT PAUL'S CHURCHYARD.—It is necessary, richness of flavour, and excellence of tea by, combined with unparalleled smallness of profit, that recommend to all classes of society the old firm and fine TEA, at No. 216, Sign of the Queen's Head, Corner of Ave Maria Lane, St. Paul's Churchyard. Orders from the country forwarded Carriage [illegible]

THE EAST INDIA TEA COMPANY.—The system of business pursued by this Company during a long series of years, has united the competition of [illegible] of spherical opinion, and, at the same time, given universal satisfaction to the public. TEAS were never known to be so excellent at their prices as at the present moment [illegible] of Gifts, which can now be obtained from the East India Tea Company for 3[illegible] and upwards at Nos 9 to 17a Offices, No 9, Great St. Helen's Churchyard, Bishopsgate street.

PATENT CONCENTRATED TEA COMPANY.—The Directors beg to announce that the Company have now formed, and the subjects of Agencies in the principal towns of [illegible] RESALES OF TEA and COFFEE under the Patent [illegible] all applications from Country Tea Dealers, Grocers, and others desirous of being appointed AGENTS, to [illegible] to enable them to undertake the Sale of the Company's Teas and Coffees. Information as to terms &c may be obtained By order, W. H. BELLAMY, Sec.

Company's Offices, 2, Moorgate-street, London Augustus 9th, 1845.

TOOLING of the SOLDIERS' MESSRS PEARSON and CO. SOLE PROPRIETORS of the much approved PATENT ST JAMES'S [illegible] PANTALOON BRACES, beg to call the attention of the Public to their [illegible] Assortment of the above Articles, which are manufactured on the Premises, and [illegible] Purchasers to the Sole [illegible] Messrs Jackson, 4, Cork-street, Mrs Barnett Dressmaker to the Queen, 27, Old Bond-street; Mrs Stock, 7, Maddox-street; Miss Clarke, 164, Regent-street, and Messrs Nunn and Rodger, 7a, Cavendish.

Proprietors are sent on receipt of postage stamps.

SCHWEPPE'S SODA and other ALKALINE WATERS continue to be manufactured, as usual, upon the largest scale, at their several establishments and to maintain their superiority over all others. Each bottle has its proper proportion of [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] requested to observe on each bottle of [illegible] manufactured by SCHWEPPE and Co. [illegible] first London Physician.—31, Berners street, London.

PATENT FLEXIBLE VELVET HATS.—JOHNSON and Co., 113, Regent street, corner of Vigo-street, Hatters to the Queen and Royal Family, Inventors and sole [illegible] from their [illegible] the PATENT FLEXIBLE HATS, the important pressure on the [illegible] is entirely removed, and, by their extreme [illegible] they are capable of accommodating themselves perfectly to the shape of the head; the crown, necessary when [illegible] and by the perspiration [illegible] from pressure on the outside of the hat, are additional advantages. As ladies' Riding Hats, they are light and elastic, and will retain their position on the head without the least [illegible] Johnson and Co., 113, Regent-street, and Griffins and Johnson, 2, Old Bond-street.

MANCHESTER PUBLIC PARKS, WALKS, &c. — To LANDSCAPE GARDENERS and OTHERS. The Committee on the Establishment of Public Parks, Walks, &c., hereby offer TWO PRIZES one of Fifty Guineas and the other of Twenty Five Guineas, for the best and Second Best SET of PLANS [with Estimates], for the laying out, &c of the large area already purchased by them.

The Plans and Estimates are to be sent to the Town Clerk's Office, on or before the 1st day of December next, when they will receive such information as may be required for their accurate and [illegible]

The successful competitors will have the preference in the superintendence of the execution of their designs

No plans and drawings can be received later than 20th September. The adjudication will take place on the 1st December.

MALCOLM ROSS, } Hon.
EDWARD WATKIN, } Secretaries.

Committee Room, Town Hall, Manchester, August 8th, 1845.

26, Regent-street, Two Doors from the Piccadilly Circus.

JOHN CAPPER and SON, Linendrapers to the Queen, have, for the convenience of an extensive connection with the surrounding neighbourhood, opened an additional FAMILY LINEN WAREHOUSE at 26, Regent-street. The business [illegible] near 3 SEVEN DIALS, and the losses incident to Credit Business being entirely avoided, JOHN CAPPER and SON can offer to the [illegible] Goods of every description, by such a reduction in prices as can only be sustained by a [illegible] IMMEDIATE PAYMENT. Wholesale Department, as [illegible] The Best Barnsley Sheeting, Linen Cambrics, Bold Linens &c. Cottons; French Cambrics and Batistes, Long cloths, Twilled Cambrics, Muslins for Curtains, Counts, &c; Flannels, and Shirts. Sheetings, Table Covers, &c. The business in Gracechurch-street is continued without change.

MERCHANTS, TRADESMANS, and GENERAL MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE and NATIONAL BENEFIT SOCIETY. Offices, No. 6, Chatham place, Blackfriars, London.

Quarles Harris, Esq. | Alderman Sir John Key, Bart. | T. R. Kemp, Esq.

Prospectuses, with Lists of Directors, may be obtained [illegible] free

THE PROVIDENT CLERKS' MUTUAL BENEFIT ASSOCIATION and BENEVOLENT FUND, 42, Moorgate-street, London.

TRUSTEES.

Thomas Barlow, Esq., M.P. | W. G. Prescott, Esq.
Thomson Hankey, Esq. | Thomas Chapman Tinkler, Esq.
Treasurer of the Benevolent Fund, John Abel Smith, Esq., M.P.

Forms of Proposal for [illegible] Life Assurances [illegible] gratuity, Annuities, Endowments, [illegible] Prospectuses, Rules, and [illegible] may be had at the Chief offices, where omissions and subscriptions to the Benevolent Fund are received.

HOLGATE THOMAS, Chairman.

[illegible] at the Office, on the 28th and May last, may be had, [illegible]

LADIES, whether frequenting the crowded saloon, the close assembly, the cure, ride or drive, the summer promenade, or the aquatic excursion, will find at ROWLAND'S HALL a unique [illegible] for their toilette, discovering the [illegible] requisites necessary to render every [illegible] recherche.

Under such circumstances, [illegible] ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, the [illegible] Preparation for the Hair, Price 3s. 6d., Family Bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d.; and double [illegible]

[illegible] KALYDOR, for Improving and Beautifying the Complexion, Eradicating Cutaneous Eruptions, Sun burn, and Freckles, and rendering the Skin, Arms, and Hands, soft, fair, and blooming, Price 4s. 6d., and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

[illegible] ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, for Preserving and Beautifying the Teeth and Gums, Price 2s. 9d. per box.

Sold by the Proprietors, at 20, Hatton Garden, London, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

SELF MEASUREMENT—GREAT ACCOMMODATION. [illegible] SYSTEM of SELF MEASUREMENT, which for simplicity, correctness, and economy, is unrivalled, will enable any person to take his own measure and [illegible] accommodation. The measure may be taken with a piece of tape, and reduced to the [illegible] stating the height of person, and [illegible] any peculiarity in figure, also whether taken over a Coat.

COATS, VESTS, &c.	Inches	TROUSERS	Inches
From Nape of neck, over [illegible] Collar, to Hip bottom		From top of Trousers to bottom
From Hip bottom to Bottom of Centre of Back to Elbow joint		From inside the Legs to bottom of Trousers
Continued to length of Sleeve at Wrist		Size round top of Thigh (tight)
Size round top of Arm		Size round Calf
Size round Chest, under the Coat		Ditto Waist
Size round Waist under the Coat		Ditto Hips
Thread Vaglioni, from	0 7 6	Measure size round the Head
Ditto, superior quality, with a Roll	0 13 6	HATS TO MEASURE.
Corded Cords, and ditto	0 15 6	Tweed Coats, trimmed with silk	0 12 6
Cassimeres and [illegible]	1 5	Cassimere Coats, in any shape, handsomely trimmed	1 15 6
Cashmere Coats, in every style and [illegible]	1 2 0	Quilting Vests, 5s. 6d., or 3 for	0 19 6
Ho land Jean Grand Drill and Duroyal Coats	0 3 6	Cashmere ditto, in chance patterns	0 8 6
Splendid Summer Vests, from	0 2 8	Satin ditto, plain or figured	0 14 6
Cashmere and Jeanette ditto, in endless variety	0 4 6	Spring Trousers in great variety	0 10 6
Fancy Cord Shooting Coats	0 6 6	Tweed ditto, in endless patterns	0 13 6
Cloth Trousers, from	0 9 0	Stout Milled Albert and Plain Doe	0 5 6
Tweed ditto	0 6 6	Best quality Black or Dress ditto	1 5 0
Spring ditto (woollen)	0 5 0	Dress Coats	1 12 6
Drab ditto	1 0 0	Ditto, ditto, best manufactured	1 15 0
Fancy ditto	1 3 0	Frock Coats	1 5 0
		Ditto, ditto, best manufactured	1 3 0
		Morgans to any extent, or Five Minutes' notice.

IMPORTANT.—Any article purchased or ordered, if not approved of, exchanged, or the money returned.

OBSERVE.—E. MOSES and SON, Tailors, Wholesale and Retail Drapers, Outfitters, and General Warehousemen.

CAUTION.—E. MOSES and SON are obliged to guard the public against [illegible] having learned that [illegible] assume a [illegible] connection with them, or it is the same concern, has been removed to [illegible] premises, and therefore [illegible] should the present disappointment, &c. call at or attend to, 54, Minories, or 95, Aldgate, opposite the Church.

N.B. The business transacted at this Establishment, from Friday at sunset until sunset on Saturday, when business is resumed until twelve o'clock.

REPLATING.—PLATED ARTICLES which have been worn through REPLATED by the New Process. T. COX SAVORY, Silversmith, &c, 47, Cornhill. (Seven Doors from Gracechurch street), London

A MARRIED CLERGYMAN of Oxford, and late Scholar of which College, has one [illegible] years of age, to [illegible] Address, Rev. [illegible] Esq., Post office, Bath.

A SCOTCH TWEED DOTHA JACKET FOR 30s.—This Jacket, which is [illegible] to be worn by Gentlemen when Shooting, Angling, or the Library, or Country Residence, is made to measure in the best style, of soft and warm, serviceable Tweed, 30s., of GRAVES, Cheap and Fashionable Tailor, 3, 3, High Holborn

SUPERIOR FRENCH BEDDING.—HEAL and SON'S MATTRESSES, of fine long wool and horse hair, are quite equal to the best that are made [illegible] per cent every description of Bedding sent free on application to their establishment. HEAL and SON, Bedding Manufacturers, 196 Tottenham Court-road.

HEAL and SON'S LIST of BEDDING. Containing a full description of [illegible] sizes, and prices, by which purchasers are enabled to judge the articles that are best suited to [illegible] a good set of Bedding, carriage free by post.—HEAL and Son [illegible] Tottenham Court-road.

EDWARDS' PATENT FIREWOOD WHEELS.—the Cheapest and most Quarter made of Lighting Fires ever offered to the Public. A certain fire in a [illegible] Sold by every Oilman and Grocer in or near London, at Sixpence per Pound; or, for supplies, Mr. EDWARDS, 4, Bridge-street, Blackfriars.

DUTY OFF 3s.—BASS and CO.'S PALE EAST INDIA ALE, in Bottle (so highly in repute with the Family), reduced in price, to Guests 6s. 6d., and Pints 3s. 9d., by A. G. PAVENO and Co., Agents, who have also made a similar [illegible] in Bottle [illegible] Stout—Guineas, 18, Grange Alley (close to Garraway's), and at No. 3, Sherborne [illegible]

JONES' £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House. They comprise every modern improvement, and are warranted to keep correct time within half a minute per week. The great reduction of price at once sets aside all rivalry, either of the Swiss manufacturers or any other house. Second Hand Watches, sent free by post for 2s. extra.

INGHAM'S MANUFACTORY, 26, CITY ROAD, LONDON.

INVALIDS' and CHILDREN'S CARRIAGES.—Children's Chaises, Low Waggons, and other Carriages, from 3l. 3s. to 15l. 15s. every chaises, Invalids' Wheel Chairs of first class manufacture from 4l. to 12l. New and Second-hand. Spinal Carriages Any with Hinds. Co Sons, or Hire.

THE LARGEST STOCK IN EUROPE.—FURNISHING IRONMONGERY. Stoves, Grates, Kitchen Ranges, Fenders, Fire-irons, best Sheffield Plates, cream metal Iron and Tin Ware, Candle Lamps, Gilt Cornices, &c., at Wholesale Prices, at RICHARD JOHNSON and NEPHEW'S, Manufacturing Ironmongers, 8, Maiden-lane, Cornhill, and 69, Fortman square.—N.B. Every article is marked in plain figures, at the lowest cash price.

HOBY'S IMPERIAL BLACKING has no unpleasant smell; it produces a [illegible] polish; it softens upper leather, prevents it [illegible] and alleviates the pain it causes any tender feet.—Bottles, 1s. 6d. and 3s. Paste, 6d.—Sold by HOBY, Saint Anne's street, Berwick and Jones, 31, Cranbourn, Dorrington and Co., 69, Oxford street, Bainbridge, 15, Princes-street, Lisbon Hobson and Son, 18, Whitcomb-street.—N.B. Agents recommended for Cleaning and Preserving Harness.

LESSONS in MILLINERY and DRESS MAKING.—MRS. HOWELL, of 301, Regent-street, two doors from Mayers's-mews, Solo Inventress of the [illegible] and of a correct knowledge of Cutting, Fitting, and Executing in the most Fashionable Style, in Six Lessons, for One Guinea. The correct mean of this mouse can be fully substantiated by reference to [illegible] Apprentices also. Improvers Wanted. Mulberry and Rose Rooms

STOOPING of the SHOULDERS and CONTRACTION OF THE CHEST are [illegible] PREVENTED and gently counteracted by the use of the PATENT and scientifically [illegible] Recurved in Nourish and Lucas and [illegible] by the occasional use of the PATENT ST JAMES'S CLEFT EXPANDER, which is light, [illegible] easily clasped, outwardly or [illegible] and can be [illegible] to any [illegible] taste restraint, or [illegible] Price 21s. Sold by Mr. J. HANSON, 61, Fleetstreet, Strand, London; of full particulars on receipt of a postage stamp.

THE SHOOTING SEASON.—An excellent assortment of Materials for SHOOTING JACKETS, and a peculiar make of goods for TROUSERS, [illegible] Velveta, and Moleskins, are [illegible] constantly on view, at the Extensive Stock of Woollen Drapery, Wesstcoat and Manchester Goods, always on sale, and at prices that can not be [illegible] by any other house in the trade. Gentlemen waited upon at their own residences, or attended to at Patterns forwarded by post. Regent House, 307, Regent-street, [illegible] Hall and Miller, No. 307, Regent-street, and corner of St. Martin's court N.B. No connection whatever with any other house.

LONDON, HOUNSLOW, and WESTERN RAILWAY. Capital 470,000l., in 23,000 Shares of 4.5 each. Deposit 2l. 7s. 6d. per share. Provisionally Registered.

PROVISIONAL COMMITTEE.

John Brightman, Esq., Kew Green.
Charles Buswell, Esq., Lisson, Westbourne
James Burnett, Esq., Oxford-square, Hyde-park
Peter Cazenove, Esq., Queen's-square, Bloomsbury
Henry Cornford, Esq., Cornhill-court, and Old Kew Palace
Henry Cosens, Esq., Clarence, Yorkshire
Henry Cornford, Esq., Copthall-court, and Old Kew Palace
Charles Cox, Esq., Quarry House, Bromley
Kent
Gosh Faith, Esq., Mincing-lane
Henry Plumpire Gapp, Esq., Montague place Bryanston-square
Charles Hodges, Connaught-terrace, Bayswater-park
F. J. Hore, Esq., Torrington-square
Joseph Lavery, Esq., South street, Finsbury
Thomas Jones, Esq., Oldery-street, Upper Clapton
[illegible] Iron Lee, Esq., Esher, Surrey
[illegible] Wesson, Esq., Woburn square
Thomas Cowell, Esq., Brompton
Henry Cropp, Esq., 12, Coventry
[illegible] Richmond, Brompton-row
Thomas Richardson, Esq., Chancery-lane, Middlesex Hospital
Thomas Rogers, Esq., Upper Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor square
George Thomas, Esq., Winchester House Broad-street
Thomas Thompson, Esq., John-street, Bedford-row

With power to add to their number.

ENGINEER—Sandilands F. Griffin, Esq., C.E.

SOLICITORS—Messrs Hicks Beach, Hicks, and Hall, Tokenhouse yard, London.

BANKERS [illegible]

The Directors have the honour to announce that [illegible] Parliament, in the ensuing session, for an act to authorise them to make a RAILWAY from the London and Southampton Railway, at or near Hounslow, to the Great Western Railway, at or near Brentford, with a branch from Hounslow to the Great Western Railway, at or near West Drayton.

The South Western Company contemplate applying to Parliament, in the ensuing session, for an act to authorise them to make a [illegible] from the London and Southampton Railway, at or near Hounslow, to Staines, with a branch from Hounslow to the Great Western Railway, at or near West Drayton.

The population and the metcantile traffic of the London, the west of England of the various localities through which the railway will pass, far exceed that of any railway in the country through which the railway will pass a more [illegible] very little ornamental and house property will be [illegible] and, with a consequence, [illegible] of considerable amount. The [illegible] of the country through which the railway will pass a more [illegible] very little ornamental and house property will be [illegible] and, with a consequence, [illegible] of considerable amount. The [illegible] of the country through which the railway will pass a more [illegible] very little ornamental and house property will be [illegible] and, with a consequence, [illegible] of considerable amount.

The [illegible] will [illegible] the Thames between London and the intermediate places to [illegible] and [illegible] with unusually small [illegible] and [illegible] of heights or railway tunnels.

Exclusive of the passenger traffic through Brentford, there are on an average 1800 waggons and carts to [illegible] every week.

The extensive intermediate traffic on the River Thames, between London and Staines, and the [illegible] to [illegible] is subject to great [illegible] from the [illegible] in such a manner, and by floods and frost in winter, the direct land course of the river, [illegible] at the same power required to draw the barges against the [illegible] current, render the [illegible] very and very expensive. Every description of [illegible] can be carried by [illegible] by the Thames [illegible] quicker than by [illegible] and [illegible] cheaper.

Since the opening of the Great Western Railway, a large portion of the former passenger and [illegible] traffic has been transferred to that Railway from that of the above places [illegible] and it is probable that this [illegible] a great part of such will necessarily be removed to the Southampton, and Weymouth Railways.

[illegible] can be [illegible] to the Provisional Committee; at the [illegible] Secretary's, No. 4, Martin's [illegible] Walbrook; and S. P. Hook, Esq., 14, Tokenhouse-yard; at the Offices, No. 8, Great [illegible] Stock and Shareholders, 19, Warnford-court, from whom Prospectuses may be [illegible]

FORM OF APPLICATION.

TO the PROVISIONAL COMMITTEE of the LONDON, HOUNSLOW, and WESTERN RAILWAY.

Gentlemen,—I request that you will allot to me Shares, of Twenty-five Pounds each, in the undertaking of the Railway described in the notice, and to pay the deposit thereon, or upon any lesser number that may be allotted to me, upon payment to or undertaking on the part of [illegible] and I authorise you to [illegible] the name and address and [illegible] entered, when required.

Name [illegible]
Residence
Profession
Description
Place of Business (if any)
Date
Reference

THE EARL OF ALDBOROUGH and HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—An astounding cure by this marvellous Medicine, after every other means had failed.—See extract of the [illegible] letter, dated Vian Mennan, Anglesea, February 21, 1844:—"I have found Holloway's Pills a great blessing to me, and I am happy to say that I have not had a return of the complaint for which I took them. I have recommended them to many persons, and they have all found the same benefit from them that I have myself. I am, Sir, your most obedient humble servant, (Signed) THOMAS ROBERTS." To Professor Holloway. These Pills are the best remedy in the world for the following diseases of the [illegible] Bowels, which all the [illegible] of the human frame depend. All of them are [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] and I'll be There!

WRITTEN BY E. FITZBALL; COMPOSED BY G. HERBERT RODWELL.

Grazioso.

dolce

While the sum-mer gale si-lent-ly blows, While the waves scarce-ly mur-mur a sound, While the wood-bine and sweet-brier rose Shed their re-do-lent per-fume a-round; When the moon-light peeps o-ver the hill, Oh, do not thy pro-mise for-get! I'll be there, I'll be there, by the old ruined mill Near the beach, where so oft we have met! Near the beach where so oft we have met! I'll be there, I'll be there, I'll be there, I'll be there, by the old ruined mill. I'll be there, I'll be there, I'll be there, By the mill where so oft we have met!

From those mild eyes I'll chase e-very tear, Nor for home, nor for kin, shalt thou sigh; Who could love thee, my Ma-ry dear, Half so tru-ly, so fond-ly, as I? When the night-in-gale sings on the hill, Then, do not thy pro-mise for-get! I'll be there, I'll be there, by the old ruined mill Near the beach, where so oft we have met! Near the beach where so oft we have met! I'll be there, I'll be there, I'll be there, I'll be there, by the old ruined mill. I'll be there, I'll be there, I'll be there, By the mill where so oft we have met!

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, August 9, 1845.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 172.—Vol. VII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, AUGUST 16, 1845. [Sixpence.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO GERMANY.

Antwerp, August 10.

IF THE legal difficulty which, according to Lord Campbell, surrounds the question of the Sovereign's absence from the Realm, has been given by her Majesty, in the most effectual manner. Almost while the great lawyers were debating whether the Queen could go or not — she had gone; and ere the country was fully acquainted with all the arguments against her Majesty leaving England without a Regency, the Royal standard was flying on the Scheldt, and the Royal foot pressing the soil of Germany.

Her Majesty arrived at Antwerp this evening, after a passage less favourable than those it has been her good fortune, generally, to experience. On this occasion, the skies were somewhat unpropitious, and the waves "lifted their heads"—we hope, in exultation, rather than rebellion, beneath their Queen; but, to dispense with metaphor, the sea was as disagreeable a one as a voyager could cross, and not at all improved by the cold sky, and that heavy rain, of which we have of late had so much, and of which we are sorry to see the fertile and well-cultivated fields of Belgium exhibit the disastrous effects, in vast tracts of reaped corn which cannot be gathered—the shocks standing thick and close, but plainly showing that this abundance is even now deteriorated in quality.

We have elsewhere given details of her Majesty's arrival at Antwerp. The Royal yacht passed Ostend about one o'clock, and reached its destination between five and six in the evening. She was anxiously expected by the inhabitants; but their curiosity to see the Majesty of England will not be gratified till to-morrow morning, when she lands, and immediately proceeds to Aix-la-Chapelle and Cologne.

The interest is of course concentrated upon the points her Majesty will visit, and pass through; off the route there are no indications of a Royal progress, and an assembly of crowned heads; the great rush, it is anticipated, will be at Coblenz and Stolzenfals, and alarming rumours are in circulation as to the tariff of food and lodgings; impossible prices are talked of for both, and no doubt, those who take in the stranger on both banks of the Rhine, look forward to a profitable wind-up of the touring season; they will, pluck the flight of birds doubtless, and in some cases, at discretion, as the custom is with innkeepers all the world over; but knowing what occurs at home in an assize town with a calendar containing a good murder or some especial atrocity—aware of what occurs in our watering places, and in the provincial locality favoured with a visit from the British Association—it is not for an Englishman to be too loud in accusation of German acquisitiveness, even if it should verge upon extortion. These things, too, are apt to be exaggerated: Antwerp is full certainly; but, as a well-packed trunk will always hold something more if one tries, a good inn has great internal capabilities if skilfully developed. The Hotel St. Antoine looks even now as if it could lodge and feed a regiment; and though Chambres à deux lits are in requisition, no one is driven to the choice of two chairs or the coffee-room floor, which was obligingly offered us at Dover. By going farther, one does not always fare worse, and so it may prove in the present case; and as for eating, the Germans are a careful race, who dine copiously and with exceeding regularity; there is little fear of famine, unless "one spirit" of the bread-denying Bishop Hatto, should hover round his ruined tower on the Rhine.

Preparations are making all along the line of road her Majesty will pass, for those welcomings which appeal to the eye, and which the Germans arrange with admirable skill and taste: triumphal arches are being erected across the railroad in many places; between Antwerp and Malines, better known by its German name, Mechlin, from the beauty of its lace manufacture, there is a large and handsome one, the first of a series. The reception at Aix-la-Chapelle is to be very grand, with martial music enough to waken all the echoes round the tomb of Charlemagne; the roll of five hundred drums—the number fixed on by report—cannot but be worth hearing, even at the risk of its leaving no sense of hearing to survive.

From Antwerp to Cologne, the railway is two hundred and twenty miles—a long stretch of steam and iron; we believe her Majesty never tested such a journey, in one trip—in England. Every arrangement is made to ensure speed, safety, and comfort; the whole line through Belgium is in the hands of the Government, which is also a large shareholder in that portion of it which passes through the Prussian territory. This immediate control on the part of the Government seems very well applied, and occasions some peculiarities in the management of the details, which cannot fail to strike an Englishman strongly; we might borrow some hints from them with advantage: in the first place, the fares are low compared with ours; in the luxuriously fitted first-class carriages, the cost of conveyance from Ostend to Antwerp, is no more than a penny per mile; they do not attempt such speed as that of our express trains on the Great Western and Birmingham lines; but it is equal to that of many of our companies, while the motion is smoother and more agreeable than that on several we could mention. There are other things an Englishman cannot reconcile himself to so easily; the military regime is everywhere visible; there are soldiers on duty at the stations, and all the officials are in uniform—the State being the proprietary. The guards and engineers wear green, and carry a horn, very jauntily slung over their shoulder, looking something as Robin Hood might have done in regimentals. The horn is blown before starting, by the man at the head of the train, and is answered by the same notes, blown by his fellow in the rear. We have been so used to associate the horn with the spanking team of horses, that its music, when made the signal to put brass and iron in motion, jars oddly on old ideas. But the practice is a good one; the sound is always clearly heard, and is more agreeable than the scream of the whistle, which is here reserved for other occasions, and is better than the "all right," which may not be heard, or not attended to, and, with a long train, requires an intermediate voice to repeat it. The "all right" is used here as in England—a trace of the English origin of the whole system, though the engineers in France and Belgium are not now so exclusively our countrymen as they were when it was in its infancy. The horn is used as an additional signal, and a very clear, useful, and agreeable one it is; preferable to "that dreadful bell," which, with us, so often frights the traveller from the refreshment-room. Some of the carriages present a few novelties of construction that we cannot stop to describe, but which are to be approved; and there is an arrangement by which the tickets are collected while the train is in motion, that is decidedly a good one, as it is done without danger or inconvenience: the tedious stopping, short of the station, while the tickets of half-a-mile of passengers are gathered in, to the loss of time and temper on all sides, is thus avoided.

HOISTING THE STANDARD ON ANTWERP CATHEDRAL.

The journey of the Queen has naturally attracted a little attention to the continental railroads, and this short statement of a few points in which they seem to have the advantage over ours, may be worth noticing. The great defect is the charge for every separate parcel of luggage—slight in amount—but annoying from the forms it necessitates. Every person's luggage must be weighed, the boxes of bags counted, the money paid in a separate department, and a ticket taken for it; and unless that ticket is produced on arrival not an article can be delivered without an immense deal of trouble. If the ticket be lost, the baggage is there—but you can't have it! If the baggage happen to be sent by a wrong train, or left behind (such things will happen), the ticket is of little use, and again there is a world of inconvenience. A slight advance in the fare, and a liberal allowance of luggage to go free, would be better for all parties. As the tickets are the checks of an account with the State, the regulations are rigid—the no small dismay of the careless Englishman, used to the free and easy mode of management in this matter at home. On the other hand, there is more laxity in a point where we are very rigorous: at some of the stations, the passengers cross two or more lines of rail, going to or leaving the carriages, sometimes in great numbers. In the dark, what with the ominous-looking iron lines under foot, the glare of torches among the crowd, (for gas is not yet universal) and the military costumes plentifully mingled with the mass, if one imagines the possibility of a "down train," the other hand, there is favourable to a sense of the picturesque than ideas of safety. But an accident very rarely occurs.

RECEPTION OF HER MAJESTY AT ANTWERP.

All Antwerp will be astir at an early hour to-morrow, when her Majesty disembarks, and leaves the level plains of Flanders for more romantic scenes—for the architectural antiquities of Aix-la-Chapelle, the City of the Three Kings, the natural magnificence of the Seven Mountains, and all the varied beauty of the Rhine.

ANTWERP, August 11.

Her Majesty landed this morning at half-past six o'clock; it was a "raw and gusty day," and the "lazy Scheldt" seemed to have got up an excitement on the occasion—it was "chafing with its shores" with considerable energy. The Royal yacht was moored about the middle of the river, with the standard at the mast-head. Some time before the disembarkation, a guard of honour was marched down to the quay, with a full band, and were drawn up at the landing-place in proper order; some of the municipal authorities were also in attendance, with their scarves of office. The next stage of the proceeding was the arrival of the Royal carriages, which drew up in line behind the guard, ready to receive the illustrious voyagers, on their return to terra firma. The Queen appeared to create much speculation and awe in the worthy Flemings of the lower orders, who could not settle it satisfactorily to themselves, whether the wearers were Field-Marshals or Footmen—till the moment arrived so destructive of dignity; when they were compelled to mount behind, they then sank to a discount; the outriders, however, maintained, to the last, a considerable share of public respect and approbation.

The moment her Majesty left the steamer's side, in the barge, the Royal Standard was hauled down and the Union Jack appeared in its place; during the short row to land, the barge, encumbered by an awning at the stern and a large flag at the head, lurched heavily, the wind blowing almost a gale. The crew pulled "with a will," and she soon touched the landing-place, when the guard presented arms, and the band struck up "God save the Queen." The Royal party quickly entered their carriage, and drove off at a rapid pace—a moment, and they had gone, as the French say, comme un eclair.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

Although Paris is never totally deserted, like London, and always offers some objects of amusement, the present is a period of greater stagnation than any other: now that the members of the Royal family are all absent, and the fashionables are dispersed at their chateaux, at the seaside, or at the German watering-places, the on dit and chit chat of society languish. Louis Philippe and the greater part of his family are at Eu, where Lord Cowley has gone to visit them. The Duke and Duchess of Nemours and the Duke d'Aumale are, meanwhile, exciting the most violent demonstrations of popularity at Bordeaux, which, several years since, gave so indifferent a reception to the amiable and accomplished son of the present King of Louis Philippe, the lamented Duke of Orleans. At Bordeaux, as at every other town through which they have passed, several of the young ladies of the place came to meet the Duchess de Nemours with bouquets and congratulatory verses, and have met with the most condescending, and, in many cases, flattering marks of attention in return. A singular incident somewhat disturbed the order of the Royal cavalcade at Limoges: the young fashionables and fifty butchers of this town set forth on horseback to escort their Royal Highnesses. When they came up with the august party, a serious quarrel took place between the rival processions as to precedence. The butcher's, however, brought forth in their favour an ancient deed of privilege granted to them by Henry the Fourth, which, they say, "on pain of losing his battles for his crown, finding himself, as was frequently the case, in want of money, borrowed from the rich butchers of Limoges a large sum, which had been refused to him by the corporation of the town, and, in gratitude for this service, he granted them, in after years, the prerogative of escorting on all occasions the Princes and Princesses of the Blood Royal. The Limousin dandies were forced to give way before the authority of this ancient parchment signed by a Royal hand; and the butchers, in all the pride of splendid steeds and trappings, accompanied the entry of their Royal Highnesses.

A fraud so ingenious in its contrivance, and so touching in its nature, as to have almost softened the hearts of the inexorable functionaries on whom it was perpetrated, has, as may be imagined, found ready sympathy and excuse in Parisian society. It had been remarked at one of the post offices that a letter, coming from the frontiers of Siberia, and, of course, entailing heavy postage expenses, arrived regularly every three months in Paris, addressed to a Polish Count, poste restante. A few days after this letter had reached its destination, a tall man, with thick, black mustachios, and a military bearing, came to claim the letter thus addressed. But little ifs! ruly was, of course, required to put into his hands, the clerk, at the same time, informing him of the price of the postage. The Pole, drawing out his purse, attentively examined the superscription of the letter, and after the scrutiny of some moments, shaking his head with emotion, returned it to the clerk, saying that the letter bore his name, but was not intended for him. The same circumstance repeated at the interval we have mentioned for several years running, has excited much curiosity.

The opening of the letters after the time appointed by the rules of the Post-office had afforded no elucidation to this mystery, for the contents were in blank paper. Some indiscretion, at length revealed, that a certain Polish Count we have mentioned was one of a family who took an active part in the Revolution of Poland, and, after the years of 1831, was, together with his father, his three brothers, and two uncles, condemned to banishment in Siberia. He alone escaped, and found an asylum in France; but, reduced to the most straitened means, unable to pay postage from so great a distance, and longing to receive tidings of his relations, he's served upon the following plan, which they carried on with success for several years:—On the cover of the letter, each word in the address was written by the different members of the family; thus, the unfortunate Pole could, by mere examination of the outside, obtain certitude of the existence of his papers relations, and of their continuing together on the same spot. It is hardly possible to refuse pity to the misfortunes which rendered such a ma nœuvre necessary; and we are all inclined to overlook the defrauding of the revenue, in the affection which prompted, and the ingenuity which contrived, such a scheme.

FRANCE

The Sémaphore states officially, that from the inquiries made it appears that the loss occasioned by the late fire at the Toulon dock-yard amounts to about 2,400,000 francs. The Ministerial Paris papers deny the reports in circulation that the fire had been caused by the convicts, or by the workmen of the dock-yards, to destroy proofs of their having been plundered of the State by claims for fictitious supplies of timber. The Princess Clementina of Saxe Coburg Gotha was safely delivered of a Prince at the Chateau of Eu on Saturday last.

The Journal des Débats says that it has advices from the frontier of Turkey, dated the 30th ultimo, which state the whole of Upper Albania to be in open insurrection. The Seraskier has had entered the country with a considerable body of troops, had been unexpectedly attacked at Elsren, on his march to Jakouo. In revenge, he burnt twenty five Albanian villages. After this terrible example, the Seraskier assembled the principal Albanian chiefs at Jakouo, and insisted upon their laying down their arms, submitting, like all the other provinces of the empire, to recruitment for the army, and giving hostages for their fidelity. The Chiefs refused compliance, and called out all the warlike population of the mountains. One of those traits of that indomitable courage and resolution which is inspired by the blind fanaticism of the Mussulmans, was exhibited on this occasion. Daoud Foloves, a Chief of Jakouo, came alone into the Turkish camp, and reached the tent of the Seraskier; but the two sentinels at the entrance, suspecting some evil design, repelled him with the points of their bayonets. Foloves took his pistols, and, firing them with unerring aim, killed both the men. On hearing the reports of these arms, the guard at the tent turned out, and made a general discharge of their muskets on Foloves, who, however, was unhurt and, mounting his horse, fled through the camp, reloading and firing pistols at all who attempted to bar his passage. He had got through the barrier of the camp, but closely pressed by a detachment of cavalry sent in pursuit of him, and being no longer able to use his pistols, he drew his yatagan, and struck right and left at both men and horses, killing eight men and wounding twenty. Being at length captured, and brought before the Seraskier, and open avowing that it had been his intent to assassinate him, he was bold Albanian was immediately executed before the Turkish General. The Seraskier intends to make attacks upon the Albanians at several points having brought 3,000 men from Scod a, and being joined by a corps of Cu. lotic Mirdites.

The Duke and Duchess de Nemours, on the 9th, went from Bordeaux to let Teste and its environs, attended by the authorities and numerous other personages. They proceeded by the railroad, at both ends of which the Prefects had made every preparation for their perfect accommodation, and to do them all honour. Their departure, which was at half past nine o'clock and their arrival, were hailed by the cheers of immense crowds. Returning to Teste, they proceeded by the railroad to Bordeaux, which they reached at five o'clock. A grand ball was given the preceding evening to their Royal Highnesses and the Duke d'Aumale. The Duke d'Aumale left Bordeaux on Friday morning for Belfort, which is to be his residence during the camp.

SPAIN

At the date of our last accounts from Madrid that capital was quiet, but the Government was taking precautions against a movement. General Alcala, Brigadier Montero, and two other officers, have been ordered to leave Madrid within twenty-four hours. According to its usual custom no reason is given for this eloigned order.

The Heraldo publishes an account of an incursion made by a party of no less than two hundred Frenchmen into the valley of Zalazar, in Spain, where they set fire to the houses of the foresters, and destroyed a bridge and the sluices used for floating down the timber on the river Urbelecha, besides other damage. The greater portion of the inhabitants were at their labour in the fields when this unexpected attack was made, but the scouts assembled, and having procured some arms they attacked the Frenchmen in return, and set them to flight. Five prisoners were taken, who are sent before the Juge de paix.

A letter from San Sebastian states positively that the marriage of Isabel Segunda with her cousin the Duke of Seville is a settled thing, and is highly approved of by the present French Government, which have promised, in the event of a serious Carlist insurrection, to aid the Spanish Monarch, as they did during the late civil war. This will account for the detention of the Count de Montemolin, at Bourges. Whether the marriage of Isabel Segunda and the Duke of Seville will be followed by those of the Infanta Luisa and the Duke de Montpensier remains to be seen.

SWITZERLAND.

The Journal des Débats appears to suggest that its news from Switzerland indicates that a civil war in that country is all but inevitable. Since the defeat of the Free Corps before Lucerne, the Radical party have been in active preparation for a renewed struggle, and hostilities upon a more extensive scale. With this view a popular confederation has been formed, of which Berne is to be the centre. Any attempt to interfere with the movements of this body will, it is understood, be a signal for a renewal of the struggle. The correspondent of the Débats is of opinion that the Jesuit question is a mere blind, the object of these movements being to form an united undivided republic of all the Swiss cantons. On the other hand, the little mounta in cantons are preparing for resistance; and, so great is their enthusiasm, that the women of Un practice daily, firing at a target, in order to qualify them for defending the mountain passes, while their husbands and brothers, are assisting the inhabitants of the other town of the canton. The month of September is said to have been fixed upon for the struggle. The State Gazette of Lucerne publishes the official report of the circumstances connected with M. Leu's death. It appears from it that the deceased had been several times threatened in anonymous letters with death; that for the last four years he kept no fire-arms in his house, from the apprehension that some of the door of the house had been open, and that close to the house the foot steps of two persons running away had been discovered. In addition to the presumption of murder arising from these circumstances, the medical report proves that suicide was absolutely impossible.

THE UNITED STATES AND MEXICO

The packet Fidelia has brought New York papers to the 16th ult. It was her first voyage across the Atlantic. These papers contain an important proclamation from Don Manuel Rincon, General of Division and Constitutional Governor of the Department of Mexico, declaring war against the United States. The proclamation is as follows:—

The Minister of Foreign Affairs has communicated to me the following decree:—

"Jose Joaquin de Herrera, General of Division and President ad interim of the Mexican Republic, to the citizens thereof.

"Be it known, that the General Congress has decreed, and the Executive sanctioned the following:—

"That the said annexation of Texas to the United States tramples on the conservative principles of society, attacks all the rights that Mexico has to that territory, is an insult to the Mexican nation, and a violation of the most sacred laws of independence and political existence.

"That the law of the United states, in reference to the annexation of Texas to the United States, is unjust, for it does not destroy the rights that Mexico has, and will enforce, upon that department.

"That the United States having trampled on the principles which served as a basis to the treaties of friendship, commerce, and navigation, and more especially to those of boundaries fixed with precision, even previous to 1832, they are considered as violated by that nation.

"And, finally, that the unjust usurpation of which they wish to make the Mexican nation the victim, gives her the clear right to use all her resources and power to resist, to the last moment, said annexation.

"It is decreed,

"1. The Mexican nation calls upon all her children to the defence of her national independence, threatened by the usurpation of Texas, which is intended to be realized by the decree of annexation passed by the Congress, and sanctioned by the President of the United States of the North.

"2. In consequence, the Govern ment will call to arms all the forces of the army, militia, and activity granted it by the existing laws; and, for the preservation of public order, for the support of her institutions, and, in case of necessity, to serve as a reserve to the army, the Government, according to the powers given to it by the 9th of December, 1841, will raise the corps specified by said decree, under the name of 'Defenders of the Independence and of the Laws.'

"MIGUEL ARISTAN, President of the Deputies.
"FRANCISCO CALDERON, President of the Senate.

"Approved, and ordered to be printed and published.

"JOSE JOAQUIN DE HERRERA.

"A. D. LUIS G. CUEVAS.

"Palace of the National Government, city of Mexico, June 4."

Exchange at New Orleans on London, 10@10½ dis., with a moderate demand. The Philadelphia Gazette has a report that the Hon. James Buchanan has resigned the Secretaryship of State, and that the President has selected Abel P. Upshur to succeed him in the place. Differences of opinion as to the Oregon negotiation have induced this step on the part of Mr. Buchanan.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE ARCTIC EXPEDITION

The following interesting extract of a letter from an officer of the Erebus, begun on the 1st of July, lat. 68 N., and finished at Whale Fish Islands, 10th of July, 1845, has just been received in London.

"The fair wind which we had from our friends the steamers did not last long, and we had one continued succession of westerly and north westerly winds relieved now and then by a fair wind, till the 21st of June, when we found ourselves 124 miles to the N.W. of Cape Farewell. Here we had a calm with a most tremendous heavy swell, in which we did roll.

"During our journey thus far we went within 60 or 70 miles of Iceland, but it was too cloudy to see Mount Hecla. We did not go within sight of Cape Farewell, but rounded it with a gale right a t, which fol owed us in our course with a heavy sea. We kept close reefed to sails and reefed foresail, and made the best of our way through it. The only difficulty we had was to get our gallant chief, Sir John Franklin, to shorten sail when it was wanted. He is full of his and energy, and of all men the most fitted for the command of a ship, possessing as he does great sense and great perseverance, and he is full of benevolence and kindness withal.

"On the 22nd we were due north of Farewell. The thermometer had scarcely ever sunk below three degrees for three weeks, but we got short of it.

"On the 25th we saw our first iceberg in-shore, and the beautiful, sharp, craggy, snowy coast of Greenland in sight, an immense distance off. Since then we have had delightful smooth seas; sometimes a rnan, sometimes a foul wind, light and much fair wind. For the last few days we have been nearer the land, and yesterday we were catching cod near the most glorious assemblage of ice, rock, snow, and clouds, being about thirty miles from the coast about Lichtenfels. To-day we have had a splendid breeze right aft, with a strong current in our favour. A most splendid semicircle of bergs appear a head and under the lee of we count sixty-five from the crow's nest; I have just been on deck looking at one above 200 feet high, which came down with a crash and raised a mist like an avalanche. It is now twelve o'clock though the sun is up, so I shall go to bed and finish this to-morrow, though it is a pity to sleep on such a fine, clear, sun shi ing night.

DISKO, JULY 2.—The scenery of Disco is grand in the extreme, and the beautiful icebergs in sold ing the country, and the dark, calm sea, black looking coast, present a curious appearance. We have had the most heavenly weather here, clear, calm, with a hot sun, and icebergs glistening in all directions. I counted 260 icebergs from the top of a hill the other night, big magnificent thing our party all the time.

"JULY 10.—We shall sail for Lancaster Sound on the 12th, with three years' provisions. You have no conception how happy and comfortable we all are; in fact there is incessant mirth from morning to night.

"We hear that this is supposed to be a remarkably clear season, but we have had no authentic information."

THE NEW COMMANDER IN CHIEF FOR THE CAPE.—Rear Admiral of the White Sir George Richard Dundas has been appointed by the Earl of Haddington to succeed Rear Admiral of the Blue the Hon. Josceline Percy, C B., as Commander in Chief of the naval forces on the Cape of Good Hope station.

PROMOTIONS AND APPOINTMENTS.—Rear Admiral of the Blue James Haldane Tait died at Edinburgh, on the 7th inst., aged 74.

THE EXPERIMENTAL FLEET.—The barque Ceylon, off Falmouth, on Monday, reported that she passed the experimental squadron, on the 9th inst., in lat. 45 44 N, long 9 26 W.

MILITARY FLOGGING AT WINCHESTER.—Since the return of the 58th Regiment from India to this country, a number of the corps has been marked by frequent acts of insubordination, which have been followed by serious floggings in the barrack-yard, not less than sixteen men having been subjected to the punishment of the cat since the disembarkation of the army since they have returned from India. Two hundred courts martial have been held during the same term, and up to the present hour they continue, five having been held on Tuesday last.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

THE LATE FATAL COLLISION ON THE LONDON AND BIRMINGHAM RAILROAD

On Monday, an inquiry was resumed before Mr. Wakley, at the Chalk Farm Tavern, touching the death of Mr. Charles Dean, aged 48, civil engineer, Exeter, on Tuesday week, from injuries he sustained in the collision which took place on the above line on the morning of the 29th ult., between the up mail train and the 8 o'clock Liverpool train. On the former occasion the jury were merely impanelled to see the body of the deceased, and examine witnesses as to his identity, as we last to give the friends of the unfortunate gentleman the opportunity of removing the body to Exeter for interment, whether it was removed, per the Great Western Railway, immediately on the adjourning of the Jury. From what then transpired, it appeared that the deceased was in the train when the accident occurred, on his return from Merioneth, North Wales, where he had been to survey a mine, and the investigation which was commenced at the University College Hospita , was appointed to be further proceeded with at the above address, for the convenience of the jury in viewing that portion of the line where the collision took place. The jury having answered to their names, went, accompanied by the Coroner and several of the railway directors, to the spot where the accident happened, which was on the south east side of Chalk Farm bridge. On their return, several witnesses were examined; but the circumstances which they mentioned have already appeared in our account of the accident. In the course of the inquiry, one of the jurors (Mr Gray) was taken ill, and after some delay, one of the medical men in attendance gave it as his opinion that as the gentleman was labouring under a severe attack of palpitation of the heart arising from excitement, it would be very desirable to dispense with his services if the Coroner could do so. Mr. Gray was ultimately the case, and having expressed his inability to take any further part in the proceedings that day, the Coroner at once determined to adjourn the inquiry, remarking that he thought little time would be lost by such an arrangement, as he hoped that he should be able to obtain the evidence of several important witnesses who did not appear to be present on that occasion. The inquiry was then formally adjourned until Thursday.

The inquest on Mr Dean was resumed at the Grange Tavern, New-road, on Thursday. The evidence given did not add much to the information already obtained. The examination of Henry Pringle Smyers, the general superintendent of the line, was the most interesting. He said:—"I attribute the accident to the mail train coming up too early. In consequence of the accident, the driver of the mail train has been suspended. There is I consider, a much greater danger at a time when the days are so much alike, as in the latter case, its arrival is expected, and preparation s are made accordingly. The driver's name was Hunsworth. I consider from the state of the rails that neither the driver nor fireman of the Liverpool train, or the engine, had shut off his steam, was mistaken in his distance. Where the accident occurred was not on an inclined plane. For not keeping his time an engineer is liable to have his name entered in the defaulter's book, and likewise to be subjected to a fine.

By a Juror.—Hunsworth, in May last, was suspended for arriving at Leyton three minutes too late, and he was also liable to collision with the goods train. He has been employed by the Company ever since its formation. The general directions given to drivers, although not printed, were, that in foggy weather they were not to pass the signal-post more than one hundred yards. I am not aware if such instructions were individually given to Hunsworth.

Hunsworth was subsequently called, and in answer to a question, asserted that if the pumping had not obtained a short time before the accident might have been prevented; that was all he had to say.

Mr Wakley, in the course of his summing up, said if there were any criminality to be brought home to Hunsworth, James Frost, who had the conduct of starting the luggage train, and James Hunsworth the driver of the engine, who were the culpable parties. On the morning in question the latter was in great danger at a time before the time he was due, and had not observed, the accident would not have happened; but it appeared, that irregularities were not punished with fine or dismissal of the parties, nor even reported to the managers of the Company.

The jury retired at half past three o'clock to consider their verdict.

After an absence of an hour and a quarter, the jury returned into the inquest room, and the foreman handed in the following written verdict:—

"We find, the deceased, Charles Dean, died from an injury to his left leg, caused by an accidental collision of trains on the London and Birmingham Railway, near to Camden Town; and that the engine, numbered 90, belonging to the Company of that railway, moved to the death of the deceased, and that its value was £1000, and they make a DEODAND of the said engine to the extent of ONE THOUSAND POUNDS."

In delivering this verdict, the jury express their opinion, that the laws and regulations of the London and Birmingham Railway Company, for the guidance of their servants, have been found insufficient during the past some time past; and further, the jury consider that the area or the Camden Town station, and the system of rails there laid down, are too much cramped and limited, consistently with the public safety.

MANSLAUGHTER.—On Tuesday an inquest was held on the body of James Barry, a coachman, who was killed in a scuffle with a party of Irishmen in Bow, on Saturday night last. The jury sat until a late hour, and heard evidence implicating the accused, Mr. Baker, the Coroner, summed up, and the jury returned a verdict of manslaughter against Michael Carroll," who struck the deceased on the head with a poker, and caused his death. Four other men are in custody, supposed to have been concerned in the affray.

SERIOUS FIRE IN FINSBURY.—On Wednesday morning between three and four o'clock, a fire of considerable extent, and which has involved a loss of property to the extent of full £10,000, broke out in the neighbourhood of Sun-street, Finsbury. The subjoined is a list of the damage done: 31, Sun street, Mr. J. V Tucker, plane and tool maker, workshop and contents destroyed, fully insured in the Globe. 32, Mr. Bateman, cabinet maker, damaged. Insured in the Phœnix. No. 32, Mr. P. Phillips, cane merchant, damaged by fire and water. Insured in the Sun. No. 33, Mr. W. Bermingham, considerable injury by fire and water. Insured. No 34, Mr. J. Wallington, cabinet maker, much burnt. Insured in the Globe. Mr. Henry Bateman, mahogany and timber merchant, mahogany rack, veneer stores, and counting-house, and other shedding destroyed. Insured in the Globe and Sovereign Offices. A dwelling house in the timber-yard, occupied by Mr Bateman's foreman, nearly consumed. Contents insured in the Sun. The list also details a host of small tenements in Sun alley, Crown street, and Bowerdean's court, which were damaged, the occupiers being for the most part uninsured.

FIRE IN OXFORD STREET.—On Wednesday night, between the hours of 11 and 12, a fire of alarming extent broke out upon the premises belonging to Mr. James Munn, hosier and silk mercer, No. 217 Oxford street, near Portman street. It originated in the front shop, a spacious compartment filled with valuable articles, owing to the combustible nature of the stock the flames very speedily had obtained a firm hold, they having, in less than five minutes, communicated to each side of the shop and the two windows, with a great number of passengers, where, from some unavoidable cause, she came full on to a heavy barge, and with such force as to instantly carry away her paddle box and side cabin, in which were several persons. It may be readily imagined that consternation and confusion arose immediately, the vessel being thrown on one side, and several persons in the water. Six persons were rescued from a watery grave, and, happily, no one was drowned. From the disabled state of the vessel the passengers had to be landed at Wapping from small boats. The Father Thames was so much crippled by the collision that she was brought up off Wapping for the night. On Wednesday morning the steamer was towed down to Blackwall for repairs.

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO GERMANY.

THE VOYAGE TO ANTWERP.

Her Majesty and Prince Albert embarked at Woolwich on Saturday evening last, on board the Royal yacht. The yacht anchored at the Nore during the night, and proceeded on the voyage to Antwerp at an early hour on Sunday morning, where it arrived safely in the evening.

In the town itself, however, there was scarcely any outward and visible sign of rejoicing at the approach of the Queen. One exception must be made to this apparent apathy. Those strangers who, for want of some more engaging employment during the rain, stood gazing in small groups at the magnificent tower of the Cathedral, were suddenly conscious that on the top most pinnacle of the tower, where its tapering spire and gilded vane seem blended with the sky, there was something that had human form and motion. A little further study, and a ladder, diminished in the intense height to the size of a cockweh, might be perceived resting on the highest of the graceful Gothic arches. Another moment, and the outline might be seen of a man busily engaged in fixing what, from its size in the airy distance, might have been a reed, but which on inquiry turned out to be a flag staff; the gossamer like web attached being the pulleys by which the flag was to be hoisted on the arrival of the Queen. This operation, which seemed an object of the most intense interest, not merely to the strangers, but to the good people of Antwerp also, was at least the most prominent if it was not the only preparation made to welcome her Majesty. And yet the municipal authorities could hardly have chosen a better or a more appropriate mode of showing their respect than by thus adorning a building which, for its grandeur of proportions, exquisite lightness of design, and masterly delicacy of execution, is at once the ornament and the pride of Antwerp. This standard, flying aloft on the tower of the Cathedral, was visible from a considerable distance as the Royal party came up the Scheldt; and for that reason, there fore, if for no other, it was an appropriate mode of expressing welcome. Our artist has sketched the interesting incident of hoisting the standard (See the front page.)

It was between five and six o'clock in the evening when the report of cannon announced to the citizens of Antwerp the near approach of the Queen of England. The day had been raw and gusty, with occasional heavy rain, but notwithstanding the unruly weather, no sooner had the roar of cannon rung over the city, than, as if by magic, the previously almost deserted streets became alive with men, women, and children, rushing pell mell through every lane and alley which debouched upon the quay. It was a curiously sudden rush through the dripping streets, and in the course of a very few minutes the long line of quay was crowded by anxious spectators Nothing could be more lively or varied than the scene There were half the women of Antwerp—all, of course, endimanchées—their picturesque lace caps, with thin high lappets fluttering in the wind, and their gaily coloured costume contrasting well with the eternal blouses and casquettes of the men. There were the dark blue uniforms, yellow epaulettes, and glancing muskets of the Belgian soldiers, glittering in long lines among the crowd The urbanites (the Antwerp cabs), which had poured down towards the quay as soon as the coming of the Royal party was descried, were soon clustered over with spectators. The gamins climbed into the branches of the trees which diversify the line of pier. The windows of the cafés and estaminets which line it appeared speedily converted into square masses of human heads.

The vessels lying in the river were soon fluttering with gay bunting, the perpendicular and horizontally striped flags of Belgium and Holland waving amicably together. The couple of Belgian revenue cutters, whose guns had given the first warning, continued to blaze away from starboard and port, boats, sail and row, shot off from every landing-place, with freights of spectators. On the principal landing-place, the standards of England and Belgium were hoisted side by side; and the eager crowds upon the quays—their dark coloured masses contrasting well with the bright green of the allées of trees which rose above them and white glancing line of houses behind—surged backwards and forwards, in all the agonies of anticipation. Nor had they to wait long The Scheldt below Antwerp much resembles the flattest and dullest portions of the course of the Thames below London bridge. The river winds in long reaches like our English stream, and far away over the vast expanses of swampy meadow land which form its banks, were soon to be seen the masts of the Royal yacht, urging its way rapidly, against a heavy breeze, towards the town.

Just at this moment, a heavy pelting rain came down. The effect was curious Instantly, the whole line of quay seemed to be paved with umbrellas Men and women—soldiers and gamins—the coquettes and the lace caps—the epaulettes and the blouses—all disappeared under the expanse of cotton and silk immediately spread out for protection. The shower passed away as suddenly as it came, and in a few moments the Victoria and Albert wheeled round the last point which she had to double, and shot by the row of quays,

The Belgian craft immediately manned yards, and the captain of the port, accompanied by Baron d'Arnim, the Prussian Minister at Brussels, and Sir Hamilton Seymour, the English Ambassador there, pushed off in an official barge, to welcome her Majesty and the Prince to Antwerp.

Nearly opposite the principal landing place the yacht slackened her speed, then stopped her paddles. A buzz ran amid the crowd—a hurried rumour from mouth to mouth that the Queen would land instanter; but it was speedily checked, as the yacht slowly turned her head from the Antwerp shore, and her anchor fell heavily from her bows into the middle of the Scheldt

There was no particular manifestation of popular feeling ashore—no cheering, no noise. The crowd were good-humouredly curious—nothing more. The hum of their presence hardly drowned a note of the band, which improvised in hot haste, and, mustering any species of out-of door and in door instrument, struck up, "God save the Queen."

In a moment thereafter, the Royal yacht was lying quietly in the river.

Neither her Majesty nor the Prince appeared on deck. Lord Aberdeen was seen upon the platform between the paddle boxes.

Shortly after the Victoria and Albert had swung round to her moorings, the Black Eagle was descried urging her way up stream; in a quarter of an hour afterwards another Government boat followed her, and both of them took up their position a little lower down than the Royal yacht.

Half an hour passed away—the yacht lay tranquilly at her moorings, gradually blowing off her steam. No movement was perceptible on board her, and the crowd on shore, who had watched with eager curiosity for some indication of the Royal movement, slowly began to disperse; as night fell, the quay became deserted, and the fleet of steamers were left in quiet possession of their berths in the river.

Shortly after her arrival off Antwerp, her Majesty wrote two autograph letters—one to the King of Prussia, the other to the King of the Belgians—announcing her safe arrival. These were despatched by special train.

Before the people dispersed, the harbour master's boat put off towards the Victoria and Albert, with the Commandant du Port, the Baron d'Arnim, the Prussian Minister in Belgium, and Sir Hamilton Seymour. They went on board the vessel, and with their return ended the ceremonial part of the reception of her Majesty in the Scheldt. It was much more picturesque, on the whole, than could have been expected.

THE LANDING AT ANTWERP.

At half past six o'clock, on Monday morning, the Royal disembarkation took place at Antwerp

It was her Majesty's wish that every arrangement should be conducted in the most private manner possible. She travels incognito, as far as Queens can do so, dispensing with all civic eloquence, and, as much as possible, with mere honorary escorts.

Her landing was, therefore, not so brilliant an affair as, under other circumstances, it might have been; but it was, nevertheless, a scene of much animated beauty, as any such progress through a town like Antwerp must necessarily be.

A boating crowd early thronged the quay, the picturesque costumes of Flanders flaunting gaily along the long range of wharfs, and according well with the fine old streets through which the cortège passed.

Her Majesty, at her landing, was received by the Burgomaster of Antwerp, M. Henry Legrelle; by the governor of the province, and the general commanding the forces, the Count D'Hane; and by Baron Arnim. None of these gentlemen, by her Majesty's express wish, wore any official costume.

The brief passage from the river to the railway is full of interest, leading, as it does, through some of the most picturesque streets and by some of the most ancient buildings of Antwerp.

The city looks well as seen from the Scheldt Its multitude of elaborately sculptured towers rising in every varied form of Gothic architecture—the lighter needle-like spires springing upwards from the roofs of the smaller churches; the endless succession of high peaked gables and roofs, broken by long ranges of windows and crowned with every freak and fantasy which the fine imagination and laborious hands of the people of the old Flemish town could conjure out of stone to deck their dwellings; all these architectural beauties, mingling here and there with clumps of trees rising from some old burgomaster's garden, and enlivened and varied by the lofty tangle of the rigging of the vessels lying in the dock, the clumsy spars of the country river craft, contrasting with the more tapering array of masts and rigging which the long, goodly forests of ship yonder display, all these, when viewed from the river, and seen rising abruptly from its low sedgy banks, make up a very beautiful and interesting panorama We have engraved this interesting scene (page 100) and the reader is our fellow-traveller.

Her Majesty landed at the Quay Rubens, a part of the large ranges of wharf which form so pleasant a promenade along the Scheldt. It is the river boundary of Antwerp, and the eye runs for perhaps a mile along a succession of white painted, multitudinous windowed houses. The glare of this long rampart of whitened estaminets and cafés, broken and sub ued to a double row of trees, which form, as it were, an alley along all streets, when viewed from the river, and seen rising abruptly from its low sedgy banks, make up a very beautiful and interesting panorama We have engraved this interesting scene (page 100) and the reader is our fellow-traveller.

Her Majesty landed at the Quay Rubens, a part of the large ranges of wharf which form so pleasant a promenade along the Scheldt. It is the river boundary of Antwerp, and the eye runs for perhaps a mile along a gay succession of white painted, multitudinous windowed houses. The glare of this long rampart of whitened estaminets and cafés, broken and sub ued to a double row of trees, which form, as it were, an alley along all streets, when viewed from the river, and seen rising abruptly from its low sedgy banks, make up a very beautiful and interesting panorama.

PANORAMA OF THE CITY OF ANTWERP, AND ITS ENVIRONS—ARRIVAL OF HER MAJESTY.

the railway and crowded the purlieus of the station, the Royal train arrived at Cologne.

The Royal party left the railway for the private carriages, which were drawn up outside the station, and drove off at once to the station of the Bonn Railway. To do this they had to pass through the principal part of the city of Cologne. It was a gay and brilliant spectacle. The old houses, almost as picturesque as those of Ghent or Antwerp, were garlanded and festooned, and, what was better than all, studded with the smiling faces of the happy German girls, who, however sedate and phlegmatic they may seem, will beat all the world for enthusiasm. Flags spanned the streets till they seemed all one triumphal arch, and the bells rang a merry peal from the many churches around. Dense masses of people lined the way, and belied the national character by the loud and lusty cheers with which they greeted the new guests of their Sovereign. There is something grand in German enthusiasm. It is not prone to display, but when it comes it is so deep-seated, so strong, and vehement.

Escorted by these best armies of Kings, the Sovereigns of Prussia and England passed through Cologne to the banks of the Rhine, whence the railway runs to Bonn. In and around the station, another scene of military pomp and popular ardour displayed itself, not inferior to what had taken place elsewhere. Cheers and shouts of welcome, mingled with the rattling of drums, the roar of cannon, and the martial music of the bands, brought to its flood that rolling tide of enthusiastic welcome which had greeted the Queen of England and her Consort from the first hour of their arrival in the territory of the King of Prussia.

A very short time brought the Royal travellers to the Brühl station of the railway, close to the Palace of the King of Prussia, where her Majesty arrived on Monday evening, about seven o'clock, in safety, in the presence of multitudes, who gave her a right hearty welcome.

The Palace of Brühl stands about five or six miles on the road to Bonn, and her Majesty was received with all the honours of torch-light and military music

Cologne is full to overflowing; beds, luxuries confined to the favoured few—at least of the new comers The long-extending banks of the Rhine have concentrated all their visitors upon it and Bonn, where, as it is said, her Majesty was, on Tuesday, to grace the inauguration of the statue to Beethoven with her presence.

It will be an interesting addition to this account of her Majesty's progress in Germany, to state that the sea voyage was a favourable one. The Royal yacht, with her Majesty on board, anchored in the Lower Hope on Saturday night, and at an early hour on Sunday morning raised anchor and proceeded to sea, making an excellent passage, being only four hours in crossing from the Foreland to Ostend, or fourteen hours until the Royal yacht anchored at Antwerp. The weather at sea on Sunday was favourable, and her Majesty and Prince Albert walked on the deck of the Royal Victoria and Albert steam yacht during a great part of the passage. The Royal yacht was past Flushing, on her way to Antwerp, before there was any appearance of rain. Her Majesty and Prince Albert did not either of them experience any sea sickness, but evidently enjoyed the voyage. The vessel anchored at Antwerp at twenty minutes before six o'clock on Sunday evening; but, as was anticipated, her Majesty remained on board all that night, and landed on Monday morning at half past six o'clock, a.m. Previous to the return of the pilots, it was arranged that Mr. Stuart and Mr. Rumerson should hold themselves in readiness to proceed to Antwerp to pilot the Royal yacht from that port direct to the Isle of Wight, it being her Majesty's intention to land at the island and sojourn at Osborne-house for some time on returning from Germany. It is also intended that the excellent arrangement of sailing only by daylight should be adopted on the return of her Majesty in the Royal yacht, and the Queen will leave Antwerp in the afternoon, and anchor off Flushing for the night, and proceed next morning to the Isle of Wight

THE BEETHOVEN FESTIVAL.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Bonn, Saturday, August 9.

Honour to Beethoven is now the universal cry! Honour to Beethoven, indeed! He asked for bread, and they gave him a stone! Honour to Beethoven! By whom, and in what manner? Here, in the square where the Münster is seen, with its fine towers, stands the monument to Beethoven. It is yet unveiled; but on Tuesday is the show to be exhibited. Who claims the honour of its erection? Is it the natal town of the immortal composer? Is it Vienna, where his magical powers were developed? No. The Fatherland left the man of genius to starve, and the countries which revel in the exertion of his sublime works do not raise metal enough to pay for the casting. One man only achieves the task. It is the artist Liszt alone that has accomplished a holy mission. Let us, however, be historical. It is now some twelve years since a few admirers of Beethoven in Bonn essayed to raise a subscription in order that the seat of the University should not be without a record that a musical giant had been born within its precincts. Not enough money was collected to purchase a granite pedestal.

FANTASIA.

No! Bonn was to be without its testimonial until an appeal was made to continental sympathy. In 1836 there was a faint cry heard in London that something ought to be done. English professors and amateurs had not been insensible to the Beethovenite creations.

In 1814, the "Mount of Olives" was introduced in this country, by Sir George Smart. The Philharmonic Society bought the No. 9 Choral Symphony, and forwarded a sum of money to Beethoven, when he was under the alarm that his infirmities he should be left without bread. In July, 1837, a Concert was given at Drury Lane Theatre, for the Monument. Lord Burghersh, now the Earl of Westmoreland, exerted himself nobly on the occasion. Costa, Lucas, Cipriani, Potter, and the late Mori, were on the committee. The conductors were Sir G. Smart, Messrs. Knyvett and Moscheles; the leaders were F. Cramer, Loder, and T. Cooke; the singers, Schroeder Devrient, Mrs. Bishop, Mrs. Knyvett, Misses Birch and Wyndham, Braham, Bennett, Balfe, Seguin, and H. Phillips. The scheme consisted of the No. 9 Choral Symphony, the "Mount of Olives," the "Egmont" Overture, the Canon from "Fidelio," and the Finale; and Moscheles played the E flat Concerto. Here is a magnificent array of talent. Alas! the generous undertaking proved a failure! Ultimately, £50 were forwarded as a British offering. Still the deficiency was great. One day the want of funds was mentioned in the presence of the Emperor of Pianists: "Money required," exclaimed the artist; "I give ten thousand francs; if more be requisite, I am responsible." It was Liszt who displayed this princely generosity. The statue was resolved upon, and a solemn inauguration was promised. Then followed the Committee of Bonn. Next ensued the miserable intrigues of trading professors to turn to account the homage to genius. The "deep music of the rolling world" kindled within the strings of the waved air, was to be a monetary speculation. Fie on it.

The generous disinterestedness of Liszt found no imitators. Where was the SACRED MUSIC.

Royal or noble hand extended for Music's high revelation? And when men, who ought to have been the enthusiastic worshippers of the Composer, who had poured forth the rolling masses of heaven's artillery of harmony, were "invited" to aid and abet, they imposed their "terms." Where is Mendelssohn? What does he in the North, when he should be in the South. Where is Meyerbeer? What does Spontini, the adopted of Germany? Where is Lindpaintner? Where is Guhr? What! to second the generous-minded and intellectual Liszt, has Spohr alone come forward! It is a fact, and it will be so recorded in musical annals.

Let me now record events, since my arrival here.

STATUE OF BEETHOVEN, AT BONN.

I found a Committee in existence, of which Dr. Breidenstein, the Musical Professor of the University, is President. The only other name of note is Herr Walter, the Professor of Ecclesiastical Law. The remainder are men of no weight.

The arrangements of this Committee have been absurd enough. At a wretched riding-school in the suburbs was it intended to have given the Concerts, until Liszt came again to the rescue. In nine days, a building, 200 feet long, 75 feet wide, and 40 feet high, was erected—a patriotic inhabitant having, for a mere trifle, sold his garden as the site of the Beethoven Hall. The skill of the architect cannot be praised. The roof is too low, and the platform for the performers not sufficiently steep. It was only after much agitation that an enormous pulpit for the Conductor was removed.

Dr. Breidenstein, the chairman, is not a man of business. The only capable person, indeed, next to Liszt, is Professor Walter. The hall, decorated with laurels and flowers, is pretty in the day. The night effect is yet to be ascertained. Of the persons invited by the Committee, Sir G Smart alone has arrived, but Moscheles and Neate are expected. Dr. C. L B Wolff, Professor of Literature at Jena, is here. He has written the words to Liszt's Cantata. Herr Schmitz, a canon of the Aix la Chapelle Cathedral, has written the words to the chorus in honour of Beethoven, composed by Dr Breidenstein. The Vienna conservatoire, has sent Staatsrath Von Puttlingen from Vienna. Chelard, the composer, has come from Weimar; Jules Janin, as fat and lively as ever, is on a mission from the Débats. Chapelmaster Taglichsbeck represents Hohenzollern. The Beethoven Quartet Society, of London, has its Secretary, Mr Robinson, of the Theatre Royal Covent Garden. Schindler, who wrote the life of Beethoven, and who wrote on his visiting cards in Paris, "Dame de Beethoven," is on the spot, finding fault with Spohr and Liszt. Fellicul, the Berlin critic, and Florimbo, the editor of the Corsaire of Paris, and translator of Dante, are amongst the comers. Fétis, the great musical historian, and the chief of the Brussels Conservatoire, has also arrived. Professor Fischoff, of the Vienna Academy, is present. The musical critics of the London press are in great force. Handel Gear, the tenor singer, and M. Oury, the violinist, and Madame Oury, the pianiste, are amongst the English professionals. French Flowers, the contrapuntist, has also come. The influx of Germans, Poles, and Russians, is strong; but, on the whole, I am disappointed and dissatisfied with the lists. The great majority here are merely sight seekers, and care nothing for the exalted feelings of musical amateurs. The hotels are all full. Napoleons are paid for beds. The first rush of visitors is to Beethoven's house, but here a great difficulty presents itself. There are two persons who claim the locality, and exhibit their respective houses; whilst one bookseller publishes histories of both, as being positively authentic. The father of the late Ferdinand Ries, who is still alive, could elucidate the matter, but he allows the rival speculators to put forward their pretensions without interference.

BIRTHPLACE OF BEETHOVEN, AT BONN.

SYMPHONY.

Sunday Afternoon.

It is necessary to state that every account written of the programmes of the Fêtes before this date, has been erroneous. The official scheme has only appeared this morning. This delay and consequent change in the arrangements have arisen from the anticipations that the Queen of England and Prince Albert, with the Prussian Royal Family, would honour the Inauguration with their presence. The Earl of Westmoreland, the British Minister at Berlin, passed through this place yesterday afternoon, and his Lordship expressed his hope to be present with their Majesties on Tuesday. No certainty, however, exists on the subject. The order of the festival stands thus:—

"From nine to one, the Institute was open to strangers. At ten o'clock, the general rehearsal of the music took place at the Beethoven Hall. To-night, at six, the First Concert, directed by Dr. Spohr, when the Mass in D, and the No. 9 Grand Symphony, will be performed. At half-past nine fireworks on the Rhine, and music in the Gardens, on the banks. To-morrow, at eight in the morning, an open air concert at the Royal Hotel. At half-past eleven the Cologne Company christen a new steam-boat, to be called Beethoven, in which an excursion will be made on the Rhine, to the island of Nonningwerth. A luncheon will be given there, and the boat returns in the evening. At eight at night there is a ball for the working classes.

TRAGIC MUSIC.

"On Tuesday, the 12th, at seven o'clock in the morning, serenades in the Public Gardens. Between eight and nine Grand Mass, in C, of Beethoven, at the Cathedral, conducted by Dr. Breidenstein. At eleven, or as soon as the Royal personages expected arrive, the inauguration at the square of the cathedral takes place. An overture opens the ceremony, and then Dr. Breidenstein's Chorus will

...ed with Dr. Schmitz's words. At four P.M., Concert conducted by Liszt, ... this Cantata will be given. At night, general Illumination and music in the ... Wednesday, at nine A.M., last concert of all the artists, in presence of the Royal visitors. At one, grand Banquet at the Hotel of the Golden Star; and at ... one quite animated. From ever house flags ... were seen, the Prussian colours being always seen with the Prussian ... colours at the Cathedral-square are newly ready, and the eagle with three ... is raised on it the national emblems. The cathedral is decorated in the interior ... with wreaths and festoons, and the altar covered with the choicest flowers and ... fruits. The cupola is in the same stream in the grand nave. The student ... with a long cane and cap, his coloured cap to distinguish the club he belongs to; ... the students and their lace caps and white mantles over their heads; the fine ... and well-dressed Saxons; the pretty women of Cologne and Bonn, are seen in ... every conversation. At the Golden Star we sit down 150 to dinner ... while a band of music to perform during the two hours the ceremonial lasts. Liszt, Spohr, and other celebrities are at this splendid feast. A beautiful serenade was given the other night to Liszt, and another will be performed to-morrow, M. Ortz having an unpublished MS. of Beethoven for the occasion, for which Dr. Wolff has written words. Dr. Wolff's talents are universally admired here. He wrote a little poem the other evening to Liszt, who had gone to Cologne to have an interview with the King of Prussia. The poem was penned in five minutes, and signed by a host of musical and literary celebrities. Spohr heading the list. The enthusiasm for Liszt is unbounded. He is idolized here. His frequent acts of princely generosity, his frank and animated character, his high intellectual as well as musical attainments, secure for him universal esteem and admiration.

I have attended all the rehearsals since my arrival. I have heard the two Masses—No. 1 in C, and the one in B flat—123 in No. 9 Choral Symphony; the various "Te Egmont" and "Coriolanus;" and gleanings from "Fidelio" and the "Mount of Olives." It would be premature to criticise the performances at this moment, but they seem capable of being, when complete, what will include upwards of 600 performers, chiefly from Cologne and Bonn. The Chorus singers are all amateurs, and everybody seems to agree that a prettier assemblage of ingenus was never witnessed. The principal singers are Mdlle Tuscheck, from the Berlin Opera; Mdlle. Sach, from the Leipsic Concerts; Mdlle Schloss, from Cologne, who is known to fame in England; Herr Beyer, a weak tenor; Staudigl, the bass; and Herr Marpurg, from Berlin. Mdlle Tuscheck is a very fine singer, with intense dramatic passion. Her execution of a scena from the "Mount of Olives," in which she ascended to D in alt, created a great sensation. Mdlle Sach's voice is capable of some fine effects, and will leave for Altona to-morrow, to meet our Most Gracious Sovereign, and ere it be her to the Palace of Brühl.

It is most curious that directly opposite the Palace is the railroad station—a proof how little Prussian Royalty and Aristocracy care for being overlooked. the horror of England's Nobility.

The arrivals continue This moment I have seen Pischek, Jules de Glimes, Vivier, Mr. Gardiner, M Vivier Charles Hallé, Batta, and the celebrated Berlioz. Breslau editor, M. de Grecht, from St Petersburgh, is just arrived to the table d'hote, 3 O'clock down to dinner, at the Golden Star. The scene now in the streets of Bonn is most animated. One long line of flags, and a collection of people of all nations, are assembled. The Concert is about to begin, and I must break off.

BONN, Monday Aug. 11

The scene at the Beethoven Hall last night, on the occasion of the Opening Concert, will not easily be forgotten by the immense assemblage collected to render honour to the master-mind of his age. At five o'clock a large concourse had assembled around the building, which was decorated at the exterior with flags. By six o'clock the interior was filled, and the sight was as grand as it was almost sur-ting. The Hall has an arc ed roof, and from the large beams of timber, wreaths, laurels, and some fifty chandeliers, were suspended. The Hall receives light and ventilation from three semi-circular windows. The galleries were covered with the vine, twisting its graceful foliage around each column, and surmounted by the plantain. At the extremity of this edifice appeared two angels, having a wreath, with rays of glory encircling the name of Ludwig Van Beethoven, under which was an oil painting of the composer, to sang his "Missa Solemnis." In the opposite recesses were also tablets—one bearing the date of his birth at Bonn, in December, 1770, and the other recording his death at Vienna, in March, 1827. At equal distances on the walls were inscriptions indicating his master-pieces, surrounded by evergreens, &c. The orchestra was not sufficiently large, but the Conductor's head was not dimmished in its unwieldy shape. The arrangements for the places were simple; each bench was numbered, and no more tickets issued than could be conveniently seated. Ladies were full dressed—the gentlemen were no so particular. All the fa r chorus singers had white dresses, and, as they were for the most part young and pretty, the effect was charming. Some minutes after six Spohr mounted his rostrum, and was saluted by a flourish of trumpets and drums, by the band, and cries of vivat from the amateurs. He wore his cravat, and a belt encircling his age, looked well, his ey eseal form and dignified bearing giving him the air of command over his orchestra or unruly Concert room.

On an elevated stage, next to the Conductor's post, were placed the chief singers—namely, Mdlle Tu. bek, Mdlle Schloss, Mdlle Kraetzky, Mdlle Sach, Herr Beyr, and Herr Staudigl. Beneath the orchestra were some reserved se s the Prussian offi ers occupying them in front, and ensuring the audience by their repeated moments to and fro. Four pieces of "Coriol" (leads) and "Fidelio" (duets only), a s ena and aria reamed, and every one was indicated to listen to the holy and sublime strains of the "Missa solemnis," in D. This wonderful composition has for soli: the quartett alone breaks upon the onward choral development. The deep devotional feeling of the "Kyrie Eleison," in D major, at once fixed attention. The subdued tones of the singers were admirable. The "Christe," in its supplicatory cadencing, was fine y pathetic, the only drawback being the instrusion of the tenor in the quatuors. Herr Beyer throughout, indeed, was quite incapable. Staudigl, Mlle. Tuchek, and Mdlle. Schloss sustained, with great success, their parts. Nothing can be more difficult than the choric work for the soprani the music is at vays on the high notes. There appeared to be but one opinion, that the "Credo" and the "Benedictus" are the finest portions of the ... strong and touching sources of the "Kyrie" finds a noble contrast with the bold and vigorous writing of the "Credo." The impression of Beethoven in the words "Credo in unum Deum" was that of profound conviction and piety. Out of the chorus here, indeed, there arose the "Belief" Sudden changes of time and key are remarked throughout. In the whole range of musical science there is not such an awful passage to be found as in the words "Judicare vivos et mortuos." The past, the present, the future, the terror, horror and the dead, are in the mind's eye: the spirit of the devout is bowed down, and he feels that he is face to face with the Omnipotent. Those who might have come to ... indulged to pray. The "Benedictus" has a noble obligato returning grace sustaining power. It was exquisitely executed by Herr ... mann. Che ... violin solo comes from Cologne. The "Dona nobis pacem" affords a proof of how little Beethoven cared for conventionalities. Here ... ences on the word pacem trumpets and kettle-drums. He was once reproached for his innovations, and replied, "A brilliant victory are not a shed and do not comprehend me, because what I have written is not to be found in a book on thorough bass." Beethoven had explained that his intention was to render apparent the blessings of peace, creating the impression of the din of scenes of war. The "Missa Solemnis" was in advance of the age in which it was written, but ... sible" was applied once to the C minor. No labyrinth seemed to ... the difficulties were surmounted, it is true, but there were no mists. The auditory felt the audacity of his harmony, and of his rich and gorgeous instrumentation; but, in our own hearing, we heard recantations from critics who had formerly enrolled themselves against the "recognised models." Honour to the German artists who studied so conscientiously Beethoven's "fantastic effusions!" Honour to the listeners, who dwelt in every theme with breathless attention! Glory to Spohr for his grand-daring! After hearing with awe and silence to the pleasures there was one burst of prolonged cheering at the conclusion, and the pure, holy, and sublime spirit of the marvellous work was recognised fully and universally. We saw Berlioz applaud, as well as Meyerbeer, Lindpainter, Fetis den David, Pauline Garcia, Viardot, Paris, &c

After the Mass came the "sinfone Caractéristique." The bold and "barbaresque" animator here combined his genius with the German muse to pronounce it the work of a madman For a madman, never have we found a lucid intervals. We, who take pride in having agitated successfully for its performance by the Philharmonic Society, had cause to rejoice at the unbounded rapture of the audience on this occasion. We do not pretend to assert that all the effects intended by the author were realised; still, it was a masterly execution—superb, on the whole. The Battle Symphony, as it is familiar to that of the Conservatoire, in Paris. The brass and wood players here were not of the best order—the horns and trumpets, particularly, were execrable; and there was a lack of those delicious passages that Habeneck infuses into the German interpretation; but the sparks of the composer's fire were caught by the Teutonics. Grand, impressive, and overwhelming was the result. Spohr was master of the herald and martial spirit with loud feeling and growth. The colouring and ... of the drum in octaves and the magnificent march were distinctly marked. The andante on all hands is admitted to be the liveliest of Beethoven's slow movements, containing, as it has been written, "all the grace, beauty, and delicacy of a lady art united with genius can attain, without ceasing to be simply true."

"Every smooth turn every delicious stroke.
... bids to a new grace Turns doth he invoke
... es by all our names!"

The finale is the rage of war. Here is introduced Schiller's "Song of Joy:"
... and, to the way, to "Liberty." but Germ n despot was not to ... the introductory recitative leads to a reiteration of the leading theme ... other movements The well-known crescendo, preceding the vocal ... ng, was splendidly given by the band; a most pleas ng effect being realised ... very limited players rarely attain We will say little of the brave maiden in the ... couple of Strauss's magnificent example in the beginning. The tenor solo was fearful The allegro was, on the whole, admirably executed The tone of the old church's ple, the fugued cantilena, and the final outbreak of passion, as if by mad reached its climax, were surpassing beauties; it was a superb winding up.—

"Yet was no discord there,
But tempered harmony, all tones combining
In the rich confluence of ten thousand tongues,
To tell of joy, and to inspire it. Who Could hear such concert, and not join in chorus?

After the termination of the Concert, the visitors went to the Gardens of the Royal Hotel, on the banks of the Rhine. The night was calm; the noble river was like a looking-glass. The peasants were heard in their wild harmonies; a fine band played at intervals; and, as the Prussian "Hymn of the Sentinel" was sung, the Minster were distinguished; and in the distance, the dark outline of the Seven Mountains, with the trembling vineyards, were recognised. The first day of the Beethoven Inauguration was over, and soon stillness reigned over the Rhine. It was all the day had not been without its display of the worst passions of mankind; the envy, the jealousy, the meanness, of ignoble mortals had been evinced; but with the grandeur of the master's display will we now not dwell. Let the magnificence of mind be in the ascendant, and a truce for a moment as to the intrigues and absurdities that have found their way even amongst the pilgrims to the shrine of Beethoven

MONDAY NIGHT.

I am about to leave by the train to the Palace of Brühl, on the road to Cologne, in order to witness the reception given to our Queen, whose arrival has been announced. Her Majesty, with the Royal Family of Prussia, come here to-morrow, and will be present at the Inauguration. The King and Queen of the Belgians sleep here on Tuesday night, in their way to Antwerp. The rooms are prepared for them at the Golden Star. The excursion on the Rhine has attracted an immense deal of attention, as the company are flocking to Cologne, to witness the reception of the Queen. The Rhenish steamboats will accommodate 1,000 passengers. Lasthe magnificence of mind be in the ascendant, and a truce for a moment as to the intrigues and absurdities that have found their way even amongst the pilgrims to the shrine of Beethoven

MONDAY NIGHT.

I am about to leave by the train to the Palace of Brühl, on the road to Cologne, in order to witness the reception given to our Queen, whose arrival has been announced. Her Majesty, with the Royal Family of Prussia, come here to-morrow, and will be present at the Inauguration. The King and Queen of the Belgians sleep here on Tuesday night, in their way to Antwerp. The rooms are prepared for them at the Golden Star. The excursion on the Rhine has attracted an immense deal of attention, as the company are flocking to Cologne, to witness the reception of the Queen. The Rhenish steamboats will accommodate 1,000 passengers. Lasthe magnificence of mind be in the ascendant, and a truce for a moment as to the intrigues and absurdities that have found their way even amongst the pilgrims to the shrine of Beethoven

BONN, Tuesday, 6 P.M

The State of Beethoven has been unveiled. At one o'clock this day, amidst the firing of cannon and the cheers of an enormous influx of visitors from all the quarters of the globe, the ceremonial took place. Baldus, the sculptor of Dresden, has the glory of having given to the world a splendid work of art. I have the authority of Schindler and Wegeler, the associates of the immortal composer, to say that the likeness is perfect, and that the attitude is like that of the great original. The Statue is in bronze, and the sculptor was four years engaged in his labour of love. Beethoven is supposed to have the "Missa Solemnis" in hand with a pencil. He has a manly frown with determinable grace over his ordinary dress. The neck is thrown open, and the expression of the face has all the fine attributes of genius. The Statue fronts the Cathedral in the centre of the Square. The bas reliefs are exquisite. They are designated "The Fantasie, Die Symphonie, Die Gesellsche Musik, Die Dramatische Musik" (Fantasia, Symphony, Sacred Music, and Dramatic Music. The group of children ... Symphony is delightful The four female figures are fine y conceived. The devout air of the organist, and the wildness of the Fantasia, are in noble keeping. I have announced this notice with the Statue, but I must affirm you a notion, if possible, of to-day's scene. At seven o'clock this morning the town was ready in commotion. Military bands played in the streets, and every house was decorated with wreaths. In many windows busts of Beethoven, crowned with wreaths, were placed. At eight o'clock, the Authorities and the Committee, with the invited guests Sir G. Smart, Moscheles, Professor Wolff, Jules Janin, Mendelssohn, Lindpainter, Wegeler, Grunelson, Chelard, Fetis, and and jan, Belsial, Tuscheck, Fiorentino, Curry, Dr. Bridgeman, Alexander Ves ris, and other artistical, literary, and diplomatic persons—assembled at the Town Hall. The band of the Line led the procession. Then came the ecclesiastical, university, civil, and military authorities. At ten o'clock, the invited guests ... succeeded; and all the students kept the line. The appearance of the ... company of students in the ancient style, with cap, wh to feathers, ... the long rapier, &c.—was highly interesting. The procession moved to the Cathedral, where High Mass was performed; Beethoven's No. in C, conducted by Dr. Breidenstein, was performed by a large band and chorus. The Cathedral was crowded to excess, and several ladies were overcome by the heat. The Statue was decked with flowers, and, ranged on each side, were six Yagers, in green dresses, with muskets, and white feather. After the Mass, the procession broke ... but was again formed at six o'clock, and marched, in the same order, to the square of the Cathedral. A platform has been erected, to accommodate the visitors, and the Statue was seen covered with flowing veils, which, when the silver strings were attached, ready to tear away the veil which kept from amaze the view of the people. The guns were assembled Sounds of all nations flowed in every direction; even the tam-tam of the Turk was heard. ... y summit of the five towers, were covered with streamers. Every window ... hes, and the whole being put in by willing votaries. And now came the moment of intense anticipation. On the arrival of the King of Prussia, the Prussian Royal Family was to be the signal of commencement. The people assumed themselves up on the ground, and it was wonderful to witness the go od order preserved almost without police or military. At half-past twelve ... the Royal visitors reached the house of the Count of Furstenberg, just behind the Statue, where the Queen, the King of Prussia, the playing of the bands, and the cheering of the people, g ... of the Rhine, were all gratefully conducted the Queen to the balcony, which was fitted with ar mor velvet, and on the ... chair of Beethoven. Bre denstein, the President of the Committee ... ement, having the other members on his side—namely, Dr. Cherubini, Count Von Furstenberg, Stamuheim, Gernards, Kneisel, Liszt, Mertens, Nogeath, Von Breuning, and Professor Walter—stood on a platform from a book, ... sitive of the career of Beethoven. As the learned Mr. Dr. Breidenstein ... ded, and announced this never-to-be-forgotten name, the white canopy was removed, and the Statue—one of the World's most renowned The effect was electrical; the cannon boomed, the Yagers fired their muskets, the drums rolled, the trumpets were blown in triumph, but what were these sounds compared with the wild thunders that rose from the masses? Wegeler, the man of eighty (but twelve days wanting), wept aloud. What a moment it was for Beethoven! The good old man stood by the side of Beethoven! The Queen and Prince Albert took a deep interest in the ceremony. The Royal Consort was the pupil of Dr. Breidenstein in music during his stay at the University. The Doctor's chorus of male voices was then sung, beginning thus:—

"In Lob durch's All ein mächt'ger Klang
Das ist der Weisen Wet gesang.

The poem by Schmitz, of Aix-la-Chapelle, might certainly have suggested finer music than that of Breidenstein, which, to speak plainly, was in the last stage of commonplace, being a kind of imitation of a Madrigal in construction, but breathing not a phrase of melodious inspiration.

The record of the eventful day was then prepared, and was signed by the Queen of England, Prince Albert, the King and Queen of Prussia, Prince of Anhalt, the Prince of Holstein, the Earl of Westmoreland, and other personages. The paper, encased in lead, was then deposited in the base, and hermetically sealed. A poem by Kinkel, and a medley by Von Wolff, sung at the conclusion by the chorus singers; it is entitled "Beethoven lebe hoch." The Royal party, immediately after the ceremonial, departed for Cologne, being immensely cheered. It was remarked that the Queen looked remarkably well in her pink bonnet and white dress Prince Albert had the British uniform His R. and Highness pointed out to her Majesty several of his old gay cities The dinner at he Golden Star was attended to-day by 400 persons. Beethoven's music was performed. Almost the finest thing we have yet heard, however, was the programme last night, played by the military bands, amounting to 700 performers, comprising the trumpets of the eight Jäger corps, and four dragoon regiments of the 6th and 7th Uulanen, of the 8 h Artillery Brigade, and of the bands of the 16 th, 25th, 28th, 29th, 30th, 36th, and 40th Infantry Regiments; and all the drums of the brigades. I am unable to supply, and, as I believe, exclusively, a copy of the scheme as follows: -No. 1, God Save the Queen; No. 2, March by Wieprecht; No. 3, March, by Count Von Redern: No. 4, March, from Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream;" No. 5 and 6, Overture and March, on themes from Meyerbeer's "Camp of Silesia." No. 7, a March by Wieprecht; No. 8, Rule Britannia; and the whole wound up with the Tattoo and Retreat. Prince Albert was applauded as he Majesty arrived at the Palace of Brühl, at half-past eight last night, this magnificent serenade was given in the Quadrangle. About 20,000 persons had assembled, brought by the excursion trains from Cologne, Bonn, &c. The distance from Bonn to Brühl is generally done in twenty minutes by the railroad; but such was the congregation that two hours and a half were taken for the trip. The flight at the railroad stations was no joke. Several robberies took place: indeed, the pickpockets from Paris have reaped a rich harvest here since the Festival. I know of at least a dozen gentlemen who have lost watches, pocket-books, &c. ... Saturday's concert. The delight of her Majesty was unbounded at the mass of sound Our Anthem was nobly played; but the "Rule Britannia" was taken too legato instead of marcato. Mendelssohn's March was dragged too much, but it was still most effective. The crescendo of the drums in some of the movements was one of the most extraordinary effects I have heard. The brass bands of course, predominated. The sounds were heard a mile from the spot. There was one conductor, but the instruments were not classed. He gave the time to all. The lights used on this occasion, in parish-coloured fires, have a picturesque appearance. The whole view was enchanting. The Palace was lighted up in the interior, and not illuminated at the exterior. The night was lively, with the moon and stars shining brilliantly.

The ceremony yesterday of the christening of the steam-boat Beethoven was animated. The god-father, dipping a vine branch in the Rhine, threw the water on the bull, and the god-mother then broke a bottle of Hochheimer over it, the priests giving the boat a blessing at the same time. As I must attend the concert at the Beethoven Hall, I cannot describe the excursion to the Island of Nonnenwerth, the luncheon thereon, the chairs of students, and the jovi dity of the company. The steamer remained at six, after a dull lifeful day. Spohr's health was given with great enthusiasm at the gołden, or luncheon. The town will be illuminated to-night, and bands of music play at the Market Place after the concert. To-morrow concert, conducted alternately by Liszt and Spohr. To-morrow morning is the concluding Concert, and the whole terminates with a Ball at the Hall. There will be a Concert at the Palace of Brühl to-morrow, at which Viardot, Pischek, Staudigl, and Mdlle. Tuscheck, will sing. On Thursday the Royal party will be at Stolzenfels, and will be joined by their Belgian Majesties. The banquet to-morrow at the Golden Star excites great interest.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK

SUNDAY, August 17 —13th Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY, 18 —Seattle died, 1833
TUESDAY, 19 —Royal George sunk at Spithead, 1782.
WEDNESDAY, 20.—Robert Bloomfield died, 1823.
THURSDAY, 21 -St. Bernard—Battle of Bosworth Field.
FRIDAY, 22.—Warren Hastings died, 1818.
SATURDAY, 23 —American War commenced, 1775.

HIGH WATER at London-bridge, for the Week ending August 23.

Monday		Tuesday		Wednesday		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday.
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
2 51	3 15	3 39	4 3	4 25	4 51	5 11	5 39	5 57	6 25	6 43	7 9

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

" An Admirer."—The author of " The Evening Melodies," to our journal, is known to us only by these contribu tions.
" T. L." Bath. See the " Illustrated London Almanack" for 1845.
" W. B." Reepham – Try " Spanish without a Master."
" H. B." Kirkstall, should apply personally, or by letter, to the Heralds' College, to enquire for a common search for a coat of arms is 5s, or a general search £1. 1s
" F. W. R."—Merinde's" Treatise on Painting."
" H. L."—" The Illustrated London Almanack" cannot be stamped so as to go post free. Our journal may be forwarded to the British colonies, by her Majesty's packets, postage free, provided the same be made up open at the ends, and sealed within seven days after the publication.
" Adelaide Widow" should address a letter to the publisher of the lady's poems.
" H. S." Pimlico.—The noise made by the male house-cricket is caused by the friction of the elytra, or wing cases (not wings), against each other.
" F. S."—The address of the last named gentleman is Clarence terrace, Regent's-park
" John W. Birdidge, the African Roscius, according to a letter from Llandeilo was recently killed there by being thrown, with his carriage, horses, and postilion, over a precipice of 12 feet
" A Subscriber and Beginner," Carlisle.—" Balmain's Lessons in Chemistry" is a good first book
" Jenks," Nunsmuch.—Mrs. Sandford's work on Female Improvement is an important one
" A Subscriber," Hemel Hempstead.—The establishment in question is highly respectable
" Civil Law Correspondent."—The presentations to Christ's Hospital are made annually, the age of the boys from seven to ten years.
" H. F. E."—" Otaio, a Tale of the Pacific," commenced in our last, is a reprint.
" Quelq'un"—is altogether mistaken; her note must be wrongly addressed.
" Bantam."—Green
" Lover."—1. Maxwell's Life of the Duke of Wellington" is an accredited work. 2. " London Without a Master" No 137 of our Journal contains an Engraving of Captain Taylor's Breakwater
" Mr. Ellesworthy Rectory.—The Illustration is unavoidably deferred.
" Dapnnis" Kent.—Turner's" Treatise on Colour" Vol. 2.
" Ba. ester."—Dr Bernays's "German Educational Works" are used in King's College, London. It is hard to say which is the best of the many works on Geography.
" A Subscriber,"—The sketch is droll, but we have no use for it.
" J. P." Hackney.—No 130 of our Journal contains a fine Engraving of Tortoise and Sea Turtle.
" A. M. A."—We have not room for the lines; they would, probably, suit one of the magazines.
" C. A. B."—The Rev J Heslop is now Rector of Skelton, near York. and has held the living for some years.
" Tolentine"—The late Countess of Berkeley died on the 30th of October, 1844.
Her son, William Fitzhardinge, was created Earl Fitzhardinge in 1841; consequently, the elevation of the latter preceded the decease of the former by some years
" A. W."—The Duke of Douglas married the Princess Maria of Baden on the 23rd of February, 1843, and has had issue a son, still born, 8th of February, 1844
" Pilgrim."—Sir Fitzroy Kelly, the new Solicitor-General, is, by birth, an Englishman
" K. P. M.," Bodedale.—Mr. Seguier, of Russell court, Cleveland square, 24 James's, and Sir Francis Chantrey, are the two best owners and repairers of old pictures
" J. S.," Warwick—The widow of the poet Burns died on the 26th of March, 1834.
" P. S."—We do not remember.
" G. H."—shall be answered next week.
" An Old Subscriber"—Parchment for Acts of Parliament are to be purchased at the Queen's printer's at a cheap rate. Parliamentary papers are sold either at Bridge street, Westminster, or Great Turnstile, at the rate of three halfpence per sheet. The Communal Enclosure Act was passed.
" A Constant Reader"—We have not room to insert the sketch of the Fire.
" Tenuis"—Next week.
" Musicus"—should apply to any music-publisher.
" G. A. H." York, is thanked; he may obtain our Journal of any news agent at Leeds
" R. H. B."—We do not understand the inquiry about the kitchens.
" Peregrinus" is thanked but we have not space to insert.
" R." Selborne.—The Railway Suggestions are ingenious, but we cannot promise insertion.
We have not room for "Lines, by D. J.;" "In Spa Vino;" "Sonnet;" "The Banner of Brivin;" "Lines, by E. K—g;" "Contrast, by B. J." or "Lines, by A. T. B."
A few replies are unavoidably deferred. We are also obliged, through press of matter, to postpone our Chess Department till next week.

The continuation of "Othello," a Tale of the Opera, is unavoidably deferred till next week.

 HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO GERMANY. — Next week, we shall resume our Illustrations of the Royal Progress, with Engravings of the most Picturesque Scenes and Incidents on the Route from Antwerp to Stolzenfels; the Romantic Scenery of the Rhine; Views in Coburg and Gotha; and Portraits from His Royal Highness Prince Albert's Drawings, &c. &c. We shall, likewise, then complete our Illustrations of the Beethoven Festival at Bonn.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 16, 1845.

THE last days of the unusually laborious Session of Parliament which has been recently brought to a close, found Lord Palmerston as energetic, and as frequently on his legs in the House, as though the legislative labours of the Commons for the year had been but just commenced. The subjects which furnished occasion for the clever and brilliant display of the Noble Ex-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, related, as might be expected, to our foreign policy; and, however some, prejudiced by party feeling, may be disposed to consider the Noble Lord as inclined to be somewhat of an intermeddler in the affairs of Foreign States, we cannot help thinking that an impartial view of the past would show that his interference has generally been attended with results advantageous to the true interests of humanity, and of the country with respect to which his mediating influence has been exercised; but, be that as it may, no one who has either heard or read the Noble Lords' two last speeches on the present condition of Greece and of Syria respectively, can, we apprehend, deny that the Great Powers of Europe are imperatively called upon to put an end to a state of affairs in both these unfortunate countries which is a disgrace to the civilization of the present age. With respect to Greece, it is, no doubt, a matter of exceeding difficulty and delicacy to devise a course, which, under all the circumstances of the case, would be the best to adopt; but for the disorders of Syria, the remedy is evident, and at hand; and those who can—but, from supineness, indifference, or some more guilty motive, will not—apply that remedy, are culpable in the highest degree.

In 1840, the Allied Powers thought fit to curb the insolence of Mehemet Ali, by rescuing the province of Syria from his usurped authority and restoring it to the dominion of the Sultan. That object was effected chiefly by British arms, the Syrians themselves assisting, having been induced thereto by promises made by British officers on the part of the Porte, to the effect that they should be relieved from the oppressions under which they had been for years suffering, and that their privileges and liberties should be secured to them. During the first year after the restoration of Syria to the Porte, the province, or, at least, that portion of it most fertile in political difficulties, the highland country of the Lebanon, was governed by a Maronite feudal chief of the Princely family of Shehab; but, owing to sanguinary broils that were continually breaking forth between the two races that inhabit the country—the Druses, who profess a sort of mixed Mohammedan and Pagan faith, and the Maronites, who are a sect of Christians—the Allied Powers, in 1842, in conjunction with the Porte, arranged, in order to secure the future peace of the Lebanon, that, instead of one Governor, there should be two—a Druse and a Maronite—each ruling over his own race; and that from each locality where the two races were intermingled, that which constituted the minority should emigrate to a district in which the people of their own faith and name dwelt in greater numbers. This arrangement, it is, on all hands, agreed, was well calculated to secure peace to distracted Syria. But it has not been acted upon by the Porte, nor have the Syrians had the promises made to them, on the faith of British officers in 1840, fulfilled. In this state of matters, Lord Palmerston contends—and, we think, with great propriety and justice—that the British Government has not displayed the energy which it ought, and which is entitled, to have displayed, in pressing upon the Porte the fulfilment of its engagements in this matter with the Allied Powers; and he attributes to this neglect on the part of Great Britain many of the unfortunate events which have recently occurred in Syria, and recommends that the Government should take some more active measures to have the arrangement of 1842 carried into execution, in order that the internecine wars of the Maronites and Druses may be put an end to; and the tranquility, integrity, and independence of the Turkish Empire being thus secured, all danger, from that source, to the maintenance of the balance of power in Europe, may be removed.

Sir Robert, on the other hand, thinks that it is inconsistent with the independence of Turkey, for the allies to dictate to the Sultan the immediate and complete fulfilment of his engagements respecting the management of the internal affairs of his Empire—and so it would, under other circumstances; but, when he is indebted to the Allies, and chiefly to Great Britain, for recovering his lost province of Syria, and when on its restoration he entered into a solemn engagement to govern it after a certain manner which would be conducive to the interests of humanity and civilisation, as well as to those of his own Empire, we hold that the case constitutes an exception to international usage, and that the British Government having been the most active of the Allies in 1840, in reinstating the Porte in the dominion of Syria, is especially entitled, and, in truth, bound to see to its being properly governed, and that its Christian population is not persecuted and oppressed.

The Anglophobia with which a portion of the Opposition press of France is smitten, leads, at times, some of our lively contemporaries on the other side of the Channel into the greatest absurdities

In anything with which England has either in reality, or only in their imagination, to do, those irritable journalists lay aside all common-sense, and take up the most distorted views. They seem to think that the sole end and aim of England's existence is to crush the power of France, by fair means or foul; and, accordingly, when any occurrence, trifling or otherwise, takes place, which brings to their minds the idea of "perfidious, intriguing Albion," they work themselves up to a pitch of rage and hatred against this country, which affords a fund of amusement to John Bull. While Monsieur grimaces, gesticulates, and rages, honest John looks on, and shakes his portly sides with laughter.

This morbid hatred of England has lately exhibited itself in one of the most extravagant and ludicrous of its Protean shapes. It has induced some of the journals referred to, to circulate a report that the late destructive fire in the Arsenal of Toulon was caused by the convicts, at the instigation of the British Government. Could malignant absurdity further go?——the British Foreign Secretary has already partially commenced in the neighbourhood of Dorchester. The crops of all kinds are most abundant, and, should the weather be favourable, reaping will be general in a few days." On Wednesday and Thursday, in the metropolis, there was but little sunshine, yet the weather was dry.

Another Rise in the Price of Bread.—On Thursday, the bakers of the east end of the metropolis raised the price of bread of the second quality to 8d. the four pound loaf, and that of the best, to 9½d. the quarten, being an rise of one halfpenny in the 4lb Dungarvon Election. Lord Arthur Lennox was, on Tuesday, re elected M. P. for this city without opposition.

Election for the Borough of Warwick.—Sir Charles Douglas has been re elected for Warwick without opposition.

The Duke of Wellington.—The Duke of Wellington has arrived at Walmer Castle, from town. He purposes to reside at that marine residence until the month of November

South Western Railway.—On Saturday, the half yearly meeting of the shareholders to the company, was held at the terminus of the line, Nine [illegible] W. Chaplin, Esq., in the chair. The report states that the accounts show a progressive improvement in the traffic, the available balance being £46 793 18s. 11d., out of which the directors recommend a dividend of 2½ 6d. per share, subject to the income-tax, being 5s. per share, or 14 per cent., more than the dividend declared for the corresponding half of last year. The report was agreed to. A resolution was then proposed by Mr. Tarnin, recommending the directors to reduce the fares. This was met by Mr. Close with an amendment, that the subject be left to the directors. A long discussion ensued, in which, though the general feeling appeared for the reduction, it was objected to being made the subject of a substantive vote, and the motion was accordingly withdrawn.

POSTSCRIPT.

Robbery of a Case of Watches by Custom House Officers. William Bank and Edward Lewis, Custom-house weighers, and William Stokeland, proprietor of the Wheatsheaf public house, St. George's in the East, who was at the time of the robbery also a Custom house officer, and Henry Osborn, landlord of the Crooked Billet, No. 1, King street, Limehouse, had been several times examined at the Thames Police office, the first three charged with stealing one gold and four silver watches, the property of Messrs. Savory and Co., of Cornhill, which was seized with property, knowing it to be stolen. Yesterday further evidence was produced against them, and all the prisoners were committed for trial

A Man Charged with the Murder of his Wife.—At the Mansion house, yesterday, William Bean, a waterman, aged 60, was brought before the Lord Mayor, charged with having caused the death of his wife, Mary Bean. The evidence of Police-sergeant King showed that on the previous evening, about 6 or 7 o'clock, he received information that a man had killed his wife in Priest's alley, Tower street, where the prisoner lived. On going to his room, he (prisoner) was pointed out to him, and he immediately took him into custody; the prisoner was about to make a statement, but he cautioned him that any thing he stated would be used against him, when he said, "If I am hung for it, I will tell the truth. I had been quarrelling with my wife, and had struck her in the court; we continued quarrelling, after which I entered the house; my wife was about to follow me, and had got her foot on the raised step of the doorway, when I again aimed a blow at her, which caused her to step back but in so doing her boot caught in the woodwork and she fell back violently on the stones in the yard, by which she met her death."—Jane Lightfoot, living in the same court, proved seeing them quarrelling, and the prisoner struck her when deceased fell she went to her assistance, but on lifting her head up she appeared to be either dead or dying. Witness called QUEEN VICTORIA'S VISIT TO GERMANY.

GOTHA AND COBURG.

We have, this week, the gratification of submitting to our readers the first of the Series of Views of the localities to be visited by her Majesty—the Duchy of Gotha, and the Principality of Coburg. A peculiar interest is associated with the authenticity of these Illustrations of the Royal Visit; his Royal Highness Prince Albert having, with his characteristic kindness and condescension, granted our artists access to the originals in his Royal Highness' collection of beautiful Drawings, for the special Illustration of this Journal.

Hereafter we shall be enabled to speak more in detail of these localities, in connexion with our chronicle of the Royal sojourn there. We shall, therefore, for the present, subjoin only a brief descriptive sketch of their attractions.

The Principality of Coburg is the southernmost of the Saxon independent States, and is surrounded by Schwartzburg, Meiningen, Hildeburghausen, and Bavaria. The Valley of the Itz forms the greatest part of its territory. The province is intersected by five rivers, besides a few smaller streams; and along its northern boundary stretch the Thuringian mountains. The Principality is about one-fourth larger than Rutlandshire, having an area of not quite 200 square miles in extent. Joined, however, to Gotha, the territory of the Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha equals in size the county of Dorset, having a surface of 1000 square miles. Much of this is mountainous and forest land: in the latter is comprised that portion of the Thuringian Forest which is called "the Black Forest," whose shades have been for ages peopled by the legendary lore of Germany. The whole district lies in the Landgravine of Thuringia, of which it is the best cultivated, most fertile, and prosperous portion; and it is one of the most thickly populated duchies in the empire.

Gotha, the chief town of the duchy, and, alternately with Coburg, the residence of the Duke of Saxe-Coburg, has a population of 13,000 souls. It is situated beside the river Leine, on one side of a hill. Few towns in Germany, of the size and rank of Gotha, possess more public buildings, or more valuable collections, calculated to promote literature, science, and the fine arts: it is, certainly, one of the most classical towns in Germany. Duke Frederic VII. of Saxe-Gotha, left it a splendid museum; and the public library is the gift of the same Prince: it has, also, one of the finest Numismatic Cabinets in Europe; a fine collection of shells, observatory, gymnasium, &c. The Almanach de Gotha is, probably, the oldest publication of the kind in Europe. The palace called Friedenstein, is an extensive pile of building, surrounded by terraces, commanding fine views: it contains a picture-gallery, an excellent cabinet of engravings, &c. The gardens belonging to the Palace, and the Boulevards round the town, are very agreeable promenades.

The locality of Gotha has many points of interest. On the right of the road to Erfurt may be discovered the three castles called the Dreiglichen. They are of great antiquity, and belonged to different owners; but were all struck with lightning in 1250. Mühlberg is a total ruin, except its donjon tower. Gleichen is in a better state of preservation, the roof remaining in part: the Wachsburg is still entire, and inhabited. They are situated in the most beautiful part of Thuringia. About half way between Gotha and Erfurt is the boundary of Prussia. At a little distance from the walls of Erfurt is the strong citadel of Eyriakaberg, on the right.

Dr. Basset Hawkins observes: "It may with truth be said, that Gotha offers greater opportunities to the lovers of science and the fine arts than many of the larger and important capitals in Europe; and it adds much to the credit of those who are at the head of the numerous establishments in this delightful retreat of the Muses, that they are open to the public at large, with a liberality worthy of imitation. The astronomical observations by which Baron de Zach has rendered his name so conspicuous among the scientific men of Europe were made at the observatory of Gotha, situated on a hill called Seebergen, at a short distance out of the town, and a little to the right of the road that leads to Erfurt. It forms a very prominent object in the surrounding landscape, being at an elevation of 1189 feet above the level of the sea. Since the departure of the Baron, the observations have been continued by his successor, Professor Lindenau, a name well known to astronomers. Literature has always flourished at Gotha; some of the most celebrated German writers in our days are either natives or residents in this town."

GOTHA.—FROM HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT'S DRAWING

COBURG.—FROM HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT'S DRAWING.

Coburg, the other residence-town of the Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, contains about 9500 inhabitants: it is built in the middle of a beautiful valley, on the banks of the Itz, and affords many attractions to visitors. As Gotha is devoted to learning and literature, so Coburg seems to be made the scene of pleasure: it has a theatre, several concert-rooms, and a number of casinos. The Palace, called Ehrenburgh, built in 1549, contains some handsome apartments, and some fine specimens of marqueterie in the doors; indeed, Coburg is, to this day, celebrated for that manufacture. The theatre belongs to the Duke, and is extremely well conducted. In the Arsenal, there are some fine armour, and arms of all ages; and some trophies won by the Prince of Coburg, Austrian Field Marshal. The ancient castle of the Dukes of Coburg is situated on a commanding eminence overhanging the town. Some of the chambers are in their original condition: the rooms occupied by Luther, the bedstead he slept upon during his concealment here, and the pulpit in which he preached in the curious old Chapel, are shown. The Castle was besieged by Wallenstein in the Thirty Years' War; and he made the town of Coburg his head-quarters for some time.

Kalenberg, the subject of the third Illustration, is one of the many ducal country-houses: it is beautifully situated in a park and forest abounding with game of every description: its turreted angles, its bell-tower, and indented gables, render it a very picturesque pile. The interior is most elegantly fitted up.

SCHLOSS KALENBERG.—FROM HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT'S DRAWING.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S

The "Gluramente" was repeated on Tuesday night, and produced on us a more favourable impress ion than on first hearing. Flat, however, it will be held, entirely owing to the perfection wit . which this opera is performed. It can never take its place as a work of intrinsic merit: but the music is, in general, highly advantageous to the voice, while the libretto offers one or two situations in which the dramatic genius of Grisi and Mariani had full scope. Such is the duet between Elcsa and Bianca, "Di Visardo io son straniu," in which the acting of Grisi is magnificent, while the vocalisation of both ladies was remarkable with admirable certainty and vigour; such, above all, is the last duet between Grisi and Mariani, "L'Adorava qual s'adora." The music of this morceau is simple, plaintive, and fully adapted to the words and situation, and certainly in it could not be in better hands than those of these two great artists But though the pieces we have mentioned, and one or two others, are highly pleasing, our opinion remains unchanged as to the general merits of the music, which is poor and deficient in melody; nor does the interest of the libretto, except in the cases we have mentioned, redeem its defects.

Of another revival, "Alina," we must speak with far less qualified praise This ballet is brilliant in the extreme. It offers a singular contrast to the poetical and dreamy "Zolino," parts of which have been performed on the same occasions. "Alina" is characterised by variety, splendour, and the very ambitious attraction, while the original idea and the manner in which it is worked out are far inferior to the ballet we have mentioned. The "bal. scene" offers one of the most brilliant spectacles we have witnessed at this or any other theatre. The dazzling light emitted by the gas, not only produces its effect on the stage, but throws radiance over the whole house; and, certainly, Her Majesty's Theatre, with its graceful contour, its accession of private boxes, and above the number of lovely faces they enshrine, its galleries crowded to the roof, is at all times a most attractive sight, and thus lighted up is truly magnificent.

The performance of "Don Giovanni" on Thursday afforded means of rejoicing to all true dilettanti amongst the Opera votaries. It celebrated fittingly the approaching close of the Opera season, and will leave most brilliant reminiscences behind. In addition to the magnificent music of Mozart, this opera affords great attraction by its ading so many of the artists of he troupe, each so well adapted to his part, the most insignificant of which are so ably filled. The part of Leporello, which, as now performed, presents the greatest incongruity between the character to be represented and the personnel of the artist who enacts it, is rendered, by the genius of Lablache, to most perfect, as well as the most amusing, to the whole cast. No question whatever in our mind, but that the part of Leporello does not stand pre-eminent, although has very first aria, "Notte giorno faticar mal mangiare, mal dormire," carries with it the very flattest contradiction in the portly person and giant proportions of the Leporello who sings it.

SURREY

On Monday evening Madame Vestris and Mr Charles Mathews commenced their engagement at this theatre. The performances were Mr. Mathews's "comedy" of "Used Up," and the vaudeville entertainments of "A Loan of a Lover," and "Patter versus Clatter." Here was, indeed, high comedy acting for Mr. Mathews, but he played with unflagging spirit in each piece. The theatre was densely crowded in every part, and the heat was excessive, though relieved by the radiance of orange peel, by way of refrigerante. In "Used Up," by the boys, a well-constructed piece, with a capital plot, from first to last). Mr. Mathews performed with somewhat more breadth than he was went to do at the Haymarket Theatre, a judicious alteration suggested by the change of locality: the absurdities of the biasé in the first act, and the excellent points of the reclaimed roué in the second, were equally appreciated by the audience; and, of course, the "hammer and tongs" of Ironbrace, but not a whit of its significance by its translation to the Surrey audience. The other parts were moderately well filled; though the gentleman who played the part of the Lawyer did not follow his brief, but travelled strangely out of the author's record, by the unnecessary overmuch to make the part a clear-cut. In the "Loan of a Lover," Madame Vestris was well received, though scarcely with the proportion of applause to have been expected from so full a house, neither was the repetition of "I've no money" called for by the audience Nevertheless, Madame Vestris performed Gertrude with her accustomed talent, as did her accomplished husband the part of Peter Spyk; so that the moderate share of approbation bestowed upon the entire performance must be referred to the piece having become somewhat too fade, even for a "Surrey" audience. At its close, the two artistes were called for, and appeared, according to the rule of homage established in more courtly theatres. In the "Patter versus Clatter" piece patter song was duly rel shed, and loudly applauded; and, forsooth, it is a clever accomplishment of its class. The evening's entertainments terminated with the "Lady of the Lake" and a genie no "Surrey stock-fish, pickle-eel, if we mistake not, during the Dibdin dynasty, when George the Third was King.

ADELPHI.

In consequence of the absence of Madame Celeste from the theatre, a change has taken place in the first piece; and "Sweethearts and Wives" has been represented with much effect, having been revived upon the occasion of Miss Woolgar's benefit last week, that lady playing Laura, the character originally performed by Madame Vestris. This operatic comedy, by Mr. Keeney, son, was first produced at the playwrights in 1843, and then met with considerable success, including Terry, Liston, Vining, Madame Vestris, Miss Chester, Miss Love, and Mrs C. Jones The present revival is sustained by Messrs. Wright, Selby, and Lambert, and Mrs. Yates, whom we think we do see again, any-goes off with a good share of approbation from very fair audiences Mr. Selby's humorous interlude of "Powder and Ball" still creates roars of laughter; but we regret to find "Dramatic Cookery," respecting the merits of which we have expressed a pretty plain opinion last week, still keeping its place in the bill. "Mrs Caudle" is underlined as about to appear Surely the playgoing public have had enough of this subject, so amusing in "Punch," but very dreary in its dramatic adaptation.

HAYMARKET.

Considering the crowd of musical celebrities collected at Bonn for the Beethoven Festival, it is somewhat remarkable to find the services of Leopold de Meyer and John Parry still available They have both appeared during the week at the house, on the same evenings, and have both been loudly encored every night—the former in one of his extraordinary fantasias, and the latter in "Young England." The honours, we are happy to say, have also been very good, in spite of "Mrs Caudle," which goes very badly Mr. Hudson, who is now playing here, from the Adelphi, is decidedly an acquisition to the Haymarket company, he is an intelligent and agreeable performer

On Monday next, the profits from the performance at this theatre will be given in aid of the funds of the Charitable Society of Dancers and Teachers of Music Part of the companies of four of the principal Parisian theatres will appear in a popular Comedy, Interlude, and Burlesque; some musical performances, a Divertissement; and the Polka, by Mr. Webster and Madame Cassio. With such a bill, in aid of so excellent an object, we anticipate an overflow.

LYCEUM.

An agreeable two-act farce—albeit somewhat of the old school—from the pen of Mr M'Intosh, was produced here towards the close of last week, under the name of "The Governor's Wife," and was perfectly successful, being well adapted to the corps of the theatre, and carefully played by all the parties concerned in its representation The plot is of the most pleasing description. The Governor of Sarmaon (Mr. Diddear, is expecting a wife from England, Miss Sara rawson (Miss Dawson), who is, however, beloved by Lieutenant Trevor (Mr. F. Young). The Governor makes over his dignity for one to Herbert Hart (Mr Keeley) for certain reasons. In the ship that brings over Miss somerdown, is also Letty Bragg (Mrs Keeley), a belle of Cheltenham, who, when the vessel lands, is mistaken from her gaudier costume for the intended bride. She is introduced to Hickory Short as such; and this double mistake gives rise to a very amusing series of blunders, until a proper discovery is consequently made everybody is right, and brings them to their proper and desired positions. We have said the piece was very well acted Keeley, as the false Governor, in a cocked hat, feather, and jack boots, was himself, and was encored after his best merit; and his clever little wife was quite equal to herself in anything she has ever done, which is no mean praise. Mr Collier, too, played a black, Nib, with great humour; and in a "jig and dance," (as it was called in Mrs. Keeley," was loudly encored—the air being the popular one of "The Bowman Dance". Nor must we omit to make direct mention of Mr. Frank Matthews, whose bon-hommie, humourously conceived, and quietly done, was one of the most clever impersonations we have seen for some time. His indignation at the deception, and surprise in the duel-scene, produced roars of laughter The "Object of interest" followed, and the entertainments concluded with "Cinderella," which, is hasten-ing to its nineteith representation.

We wish, in all candour, to allude to the general style and class of pieces produced at this theatre. With the exception of the subject, which is deserving of no better than the subject, the majority of plays brought forward are flimsy and unsatisfactory to an extreme degree. There has ever been a want of a good farce here, since this Management commenced its successful career—for which, undoubted y, it has hitherto been. And we believe that the public now look for something more. The quest on is, whether they have not a right to expect it, after the patronage they have bestowed upon the establishment. At the beginning of the speculation, whilst it yet remained a mere ven. re, the feeling was, of course, different; but now we need not disguise the fact that the Company is a weak one. We do not mean, individually, but collectively; and remember it is deserving no mendation, but generally that is to say, it is inefficient as regards the performance of a standard comedy, or a drama of the modern school; and, since the first season, it has been found wanting in the necessary requisites for such, and Mrs Woolgar. We admit, there is a dearth of dramatic talent at present; but still, we think, there are several performers, of good reputation, both ready and willing to join the Lyceum corps, were proper overtures made to that effect.

Next Thursday, although an "extra night," and the last of the season, will be a most brilliant one at her Majesty's theatre. All our favourites will appear first, the delightful Castellan, Mofiani, and Fornasari, in "Lucia di Lammermoor;" afterwards "La Prova d'un Opera Seria," in which we shall have an opportunity of taking a laughing leave of our old favourite, Lablache. Numerous other entertainments in the ballet department will follow, including "Ondine," to which both Lucile Grahn and Carlo will contribute their share

The Paroscas' Theatre arrived at the close of its season on Monday evening, but announced to re-open again on Thursday. This pro ceding, we believe, was merely to bring the engage ents of several members of the Company to a close, as nothing in the way of novelty was announced, beyond a revival of "The Brigand," or Mr. Wallack.

A three-act comic drama is underlined at the LYCEUM, as well as a new farce we believe the latter is from the pen of Mr Oxenford.

At SADLER'S WELLS, representations of the d fferent plays have taken place during the past week, of which we have had, from time to time, to speak in terms of high commendation. The next novelty will be the reprise of Massinger's "Fatal Dowry."

The good city of Canterbury was enlivened during last week by the amateur performances of the members of the Cricket Clubs, who played four nights at the theatre; their répertoire comprising the pieces of "Why Did You Die?" "The Wreck Ashore," "The Beautiful Spy," "The Pilgrim," "The Captain of the Watch," &c. The audiences were composed of all the principal families of Canterbury and the neighbourhood, and the theatre was each night crowded to excess. The principal female characters were supported by Miss Mordaunt, Mrs A. Wigan, and Miss Pearson. The playbills contained the names of Lord H. Brooke, Sir George Conway, the Hon. Spencer Ponsonby, the Hon. J. Percival, and H. de Vaumort, T. de Bargh, G. F. Bentinck, — Taylor, Albert Smith, T. K. Holmes, E. Dewing, and E. Hartopp, Esqs; together with many others who have done good service to the wickets at "Lord's." There was an excellent amateur band in the orchestra, led by — Felix, Esq., whose work on "The Bat" some of our cricketing friends may be acquainted with. The whole meeting passed off with the greatest éclat.

A RAMBLE IN THE REALMS OF CHAT.

And so all the Fun has gone out of the Country? No! No! There will always be a spice of hilarity in Old England, some what wild; and there is too much natural cheerfulness in this healthy land of ours even to envy those who leave it the mirth and enjoyment they may carry away.

So, though we know that Monsieur Louis Philippe is holding chief court in the Netherlands among the Ancient Cities; in thoughtful Germany, and on the breezy banks of the Rhine; in high Palaces of the Continent, and places of Foreign Festival and Foreign Pomp; that Queen Victoria has gone to the land of merriment our dear-loved Queen is gone first and most honoured guest at the feasts of the heart's lightness; and thus it is, in the jolly and loyal land of John Bull we can but native notice of this absent Joy! Still we hold up our heads and shout from our shores, and noisily our shores respond to the loud voices of the happiness that Foreign Grace, Goodwill, and Hospitality are around our Queen. We are not like the sad Swiss—we can afford to laugh and with our Absentee—and even to sing with the lungs of Festival a Chorus of Encouragement to them to depart.

Fly away, Baron! and	Sculptor—musician—
Fly away, Lord!	Up, up to your task;
Take your great purses	Beethoven's statue
For bed and for board!	Proud remains unmask!
Pay fifty guineas	Beethoven's grand s nins
For shelter per day!	Are wild on the air—
We do not grudge you—	Festal boys, festal boys,
Away! Lords! Away!	You must be there!
Fly away, Fashion,	Aldermen pot up
Air in Middle Life;	Your turtle—twill keep—
Trade in, leave counter—	Out of your easy chair
Its profits to-day!	In Parish Bed Sleep!
Merchant, lock desk up,	In to the Packet
Your City dame, fine,	And with your soul smell
Has trimmed al. ce flounces	Drain wine Johannsberg,
To flaunt on the Rhine!	Starry Mosselle!
Artist, get up, Sir,	Newspapers! newspapers!
Your easel put by;	Out with your eyes,
Carry your sketch book	Let your Reporters
And sketch you By!	For once make a noise:
Poet—you lazy dog—	At Antwerp, Liege,
Now is your time	Aix-la-Chapelle, and Bonn,
For a new Royal handbook,	Perseverance will rob you
And written in rhyme.	Steam to Cologne.

Yes: this is about the song, and some way has already advertised a premium for it so two men and one woman that are to be left in London. England is in fact, going to Germany, and a glorious stream of the heart's best pleasure upon the path of the Sovereign, whom they have cheered along. Look at our page to-day. See how much the free, the beautiful, the sparkling, the peaceful, and the picturesque Art—from the sketch-book of the painter, and even from the portfolio of the Prince has brought with her from the sincere and faithful Netherlands, and delight and brilliancy and loyalty around her.

At home while we are looking abroad for festivity we are planning and hoping that the harvest may bring us food if not a feast. London has for the few days of August been a deserted city, and silent with smiles and colours poured a grand and glorious stream of the heart's best pleasure upon the path of the Sovereign, whom they have cheered along. Look at our page to-day. See how much the free, the beautiful, the sparkling, the peaceful, and the picturesque Art—from the sketch-book of the painter, and even from the portfolio of the Prince has brought with her from the sincere and faithful Netherlands, and delight and brilliancy and loyalty around her.

At home while we are looking abroad for festivity we are planning and hoping that the harvest may bring us food if not a feast. London has for the few days of August been a deserted city, and silent with smiles and tears, while we were beginning to warble the old ditty of days—

"For the rain it raineth every day!"

But we are told that the weather in the fields hath been finer, and that in many fertile regions of agriculture,

"The crops have won their gold."

For the sake of the poor, and, next, for the sake of the public policy of the country, we fervently desire to be able to record "the smile upon the soil," and not the "rotting wheat ear," or the "brocken hope."

What a desertion we have just experienced in the world of Music—and not we only, but Paris and other great cities of Europe; all—di—gone to Bonn, which is equivalent to going to good—and mad, music mad, for the Beethoven Celebration.

Last, with his excited eyes
Looking genius as they gleam,
In his Nature's Paradise,
Shining while he smells the stream—
Stream of harmony, and strain
Loud and soft, and sweet and soul
Never mind shu l hear again
Such a glory round it roll!
We must vary the catalogue of these a little—

JULES JANY
Upon the Rhine,
As whom few are
Such reviewer

Staedter—near him noble Spohr,
With his look of calm command,
Son of Genius!
Wielding her immortal wand;
While, around these lents move
Sons of Genius—
Come to honour and to love
Their sublimer majesty!

TAGLICHECK, PISCHOFF, and RELLSTAB,
MOSCHELES, DULCKEN -and a dab
At rhyming he must surely be,
Who rhymes, O STAUDIGL, with thee;
And goes on making further stirs
With ASHLEY, SCHLESINGER, SCHLOSS, and SCHMITZ,
Bringing in Vivian Playbeck Boys,
And if Miss SACHS were called "CARLOTTA,"
We should not then lose sight of her
In closing—Sir George SMART—with you!

There now is a regular Court Circular list of company with names of fame—and yet it is surely a sprinkling of mind, intellect, and power, that has gathered around the Statue of the sculptured Beethoven.

Acres lost oils, shall we touch upon the railway accidents and the Coroner's inquests. No. we went have the festivities interfered with.

COUNTRY NEWS.

THE LATE ACCIDENT ON THE NORTHERN AND EASTERN RAILROAD

The Inquest on the body of John Cauldwell, a guard in the service of the Eastern Counties Railway, who died in Addenbrooke's Hospital, Cambridge, on Friday week, from the effects of injuries received during the Monday previous, when the accident occurred on this line in the neighbourhood of Littlebury, was resumed on Monday at the Town hall.—After evidence had been given as to facts already known, Mr. Hodgson, engineer of the line, deposed that he had examined the scene of the accident He thought the immediate cause was the damage to the rail by a blow or jump of the wheel, and witness described the mode in which the same might occur, as in his former evidence He thought that a slight curve was safer than a straight line, as it kept the engine to its work and prevented oscillation – Mr. H. Mitchell, house surgeon to Addenbrooke's Hospital, deposed that John Cauldwell was brought to the hospital on the Monday previous He was suffering from a severe compound fracture of the left leg The right leg was slightly bruised, but not otherwise injured. He was sensible when he first was brought to the hospital The next day he became insensible. There were occasional signs of sensibility, but not of intelligence; and he remained in that way till he died on Friday night. The leg was set, but was not going on favourably. It must have been amputated. The deceased made a statement to witness, but not with the prospect of death before him. It would not tell him that he was likely to die. Witness thought that the contrary would be the case when deceased made his statement— The Coroner ruled that, under the circumstances described, the statement could not be received.—Cox, the labourer, who was employed on the line at Littlebury inquest, repeated most of the evidence he then gave. He repeated that the train was down the incline at the rate of fifty miles an hour.—The Coroner said that there was great discrepancy between the statements as to the rate of speed. The witness now under examination stated it to be about fifty miles an hour. Whether he could be deemed as good and accurate a judge as Mr. Archbaugh and others, who stated it was at the rate of only thirty-five miles an hour at the most, was for the jury to decide —The opinion of the Jury was, that the evidence of Cox, although given honestly, was erroneous with regard to time and speed. Another witness, John Young, was here called, and was examined at length After the reception of some other unimportant evidence, the Coroner summed up — The Jury then retired, and after about half an hour's deliberation returned a verdict of "Accidental death, with a deodand of 1s on the engine, and 1s on the carriage" They also added a recommendation to the Company to have directions given to all enginers on the line—Mr Hudson, the head director of the traffic department on the line) said he was happy to be enabled to inform the jury that those posts had been already ordered.

The adjourned inquest on the remains of Richard Peak, the fireman, who met his death by the crushing of the engine in the late fatal accident on this line, was held at the Falcon, Littlebury, on Wednesday

Major General Pasley, the Government Inspector of Railways, was examined

The following is the most material part of his evidence He said—"The spot where the accident took place was about two miles and a half from the summit of the incline. I asked a number of questions of the persons present. From all I heard and observed, I have formed my opinion decidedly as to the cause of the accident."

The Coroner What is that opinion?—Major General Pasley: That it must have arisen from excessive speed on a new railroad not yet thoroughly consolidated, which descending a gradient of 1 in 100 feet, and along a curve of two miles radius. I think, also, that it is possible that the outer rail of the curve might not have been raised quite so high as is usual and proper on curves in proportion to the radius. The engine was not started as usual at the persons present on the day of the investigation with the wedge might not have been removed, so as to leave a bad joint, and that thus the end of the rail was blown up. I did not think so, and I do not, because the splinter on the rail was from a downward blow I think the jumping of the engine was of such an excessive nature as to cause the injury; and this would account for such an injury as might have been caused by contact In lines newly opened, the railroad may subside a little, the level of the sleepers giving way. Had the train been going at moderate speed, the accident, I am of opinion, would not have happened.

The witness was closely questioned In continuation, he proceeded to say I have always found a solution for whatever accident I have been appointed to investigate, however complex it was, have appeared at first. I am quite of opinion that the curve and the incline toget er ought to be taken into account, and the speed, cons quently, much slackened.

Several gentlemen were then examined as to the rate at the speed was contradictory, some saying the train was moving very quickly, and others that it was going at an ordinary railway speed

The Coroner having summed up, the jury, after two hours' deliberation, returned the following verdict:—" Accidental death, and a deodand of £100 on the engine"! The Jury, with their verdict, expressed a hope that no party should be allowed to run an engine on the line below Stortford, that it has become much more consolidated. They also hoped that no train would be allowed to run without at least two trucks between the tender and the passenger carriages, and that posts may be put up to mark where the incline begins and ends.

SUNDERLAND ELECTION.—The nomination took place on Wednesday amid much uproar. Joshua Wilson, Esq., proposed Colonel Thompson, and John Hills Esq., seconded the nomination J Wright, Esq., proposed Mr. Hudson, and Richard Spry, Esq., seconded the nomination. The show of hands was in favour of Colonel Thompson A poll was demanded, which was appointed for Thursday. The result was the re elect in of Mr Hudson. The poll closed as follows: Mr. Hudson, 637; Colonel Thompson, 497—Majority, 140.

CIRENCESTER ELECTION.—Mr. Cripps, the newly-a pointed Lord of the Treasury, was re elected for Cirencester on Thursday, without opposition.

MONUMENT TO THE LATE SIR W. FOLLETT AT EXETER.—A preliminary meeting was held at the Guildhall, Exeter on Monday, at which the Mayor presided, at which was attended by the Earl of Devon, S. T Kekewich, Esq, Montague B Here, Esq., Dr. Shapter, J Sparkw. Esq., H. Hooper, Esq., J Gidley, Esq., and other influential gentlemen of the city and neighborhood Resolutions in favour of the erection of a monument to the memory of Sir W. Follett were unanimously adopted, a Committee was appointed, and a subscription amounting to £100 was entered into on the spot.

SERIOUS COLLIERY ACCIDENT.—An accident of a very serious nature occurred on Saturday morning last, at Moira colliery, near Ashby de la Zouch, in the county of Leicester, from an explosion of hydrogen gas in the Bath pit, from the effects of which three persons are severely injured, and fifteen others were seriously injured, several of whom, it is expected, are so dangerously hurt as almost to preclude the hope of their recovery. An inquest was held on the bodies on Monday, when it appeared that the gas by which the explosion was caused had exuded from the roof of the pit, and that no blame was attributable to the managers of the colliery

MURDER AT LEICESTER.—A murder of an aggravated character took place at Leicester last Monday morning. A young man, about four or five and twenty, named William Hubbard, a framework knitter, had lived with his wife for some time past in a small tenement in Gravel street, part of what is called the Newarkes (occupying it jointly with his brother, who is also married). They had a two-roomed tenement, but of about three years' duration, has been, it is said, most unhappy from the circumstance The wife is reported to have been a still, steady, hardworking woman, and he, on the contrary, to be a most dissipated and idle. They had been, it was well known, but poorly off for some time, and on Monday night last the wife was reported upon no trifling occasion, to her mother's overnight, knocked at the door, desiring his wife to let him in. She came down with her night clothes on and had no sooner opened the door than a scream was heard, and the brother and his wife coming down on the instant, the unfortunate woman, the wife of William Hubbard, was found weltering in her blood, with a frightful gash in her throat from which the life blood was still flowing in torrents; indeed, she was only noticed to give one deep sigh ere she expired. The murderer fled immediately, and could not be found, but himself in a dike nearly covered with nettles and briers, where he was found, in less than an hour afterwards, by some lads, who, with a great number of police men and others, instantly set off in search of him. He made little or no resistance, but expressed his sorrow for what he had done No knife, razor, or other instrument with which the deed appears to have been committed was found either upon him or upon the premises where the murder was perpetrated. The most probable supposition is that the instrument was a knife used for the purpose of scraping the hatchers' snails in the market. The murderer fled immediately, and could not be found for many hours, and this may have been thrown in the river by the unhappy man himself as he passed. Hubbard underwent a brief examination on Monday morning at the Borough Gaol, and was committed for trial. The wife is reported to have been a still, steady, hardworking woman, and he, on the contrary, to be a most dissipated and idle. They had been, it was well known, but poorly off for some time, and on Monday night last the wife was reported upon no trifling occasion, to her mother's overnight, knocked at the door, desiring his wife to let him in. She came down with her night clothes on and had no sooner opened the door than a scream was heard, and the brother and his wife coming down on the instant, the unfortunate woman, the wife of William Hubbard, was found weltering in her blood, with a frightful gash in her throat from which the life blood was still flowing in torrents; indeed, she was only noticed to give one deep sigh ere she expired. The murderer fled immediately, and could not be found, but himself in a dike nearly covered with nettles and briers, where he was found, in less than an hour afterwards, by some lads, who, with a great number of police men and others, instantly set off in search of him. He made little or no resistance, but expressed his sorrow for what he had done No knife, razor, or other instrument with which the deed appears to have been committed was found either upon him or upon the premises where the murder was perpetrated. The most probable supposition is that the instrument was a knife used for the purpose of scraping the hatchers' snails in the market. The murderer fled immediately, and could not be found for many hours, and this may have been thrown in the river by the unhappy man himself as he passed. Hubbard underwent a brief examination on Monday morning at the Borough Gaol, and was committed for trial. The wife is reported to be still

NATIONAL SPORTS.

TATTERSALL'S

MONDAY.—The "sell" made against Weatherbit for the last eight or ten days by parties who may be supposed to get good "tips," is far from encouraging to those who, following "money" rather than public running, have placed their faith upon him. The betting this afternoon deprived him of the lead in the market, and served to strengthen the impression that he has had some "bad nights" since the news at Goodwood: nor is his companion, Old England, by any means so steady as he was. On the other hand, Mentor, the Merry Monarch (said by some folks to be a roarer), Annandale, and The Baron, are powerfully supported. Business generally, owing to coming to a termination for the moors, slack.

WOLVERHAMPTON STAKES.

2 to 1 agst Intrepid	2 to 1 agst Yardley
GREAT YORKSHIRE STAKES.
4 to 1 agst Miss Ellis	5 to 1 agst Annandale

AT ITCHE.

11 to 2 agst Worth's lot (t)	18 to 1 agst Annandale		30 to 1 agst Connaught Ranger
5 to 1 — Mentor	18 to 1 — Pantaca (t)		33 to 1 — Red Robin
11 to 2 — Weatherbit	20 to 1 — The Baron		33 to 1 — Fitz-Allen
10 to 1 — The Merry Monarch	25 to 1 — Pachaca (t)		33 to 1 — Prince Paroma (t)
	25 to 1 — Guild Ireland		50 to 1 — Idas (t)
15 to 1 — Old England (t)

DERBY.

10 to 1 agst Sting	50 to 1 agst Holloway (t)
25 to 1 — Weatherbit (t)	50 to 1 — Tragical (t)

THURSDAY.—The Danesbury crack, Weatherbit, after some oscillations that mightily puzzled the natives, was finally backed at 9 to 1 by "good men and true;" and Mentor being rather at a discount, was reinstated in the premiership. The Merry Monarch was in general estimation at an improved figure, and a host of auxiliaries (Annandale "got on" The Baron, and Guild Ireland, at 25 and 25 to 1, the "market" having a decided upward tendency at the close. Old England gave way, and there were more laying against Annandale and Pantaca than backers. The Pachaca advance is a consequence of the running of Mr. Painter's Jerseed filly at Wolverhampton; he is not in much request. Prince Paroma at the close were as follow

FOR THE HANDICAP.

6 to 1 agst Castaway filly (t)	8 to 1 agst Lady Fanny (t)	20 to 1 agst Everton

AT ITCHE.

3 to 1 agst J. Day's lot	15 to 1 agst Annandale (t)	30 to 1 agst Fitz-Allen (t)
4 to 1 — Worth's lot (t)	17 to 1 — Pachaca	30 to 1 — Wood Pecker
4 to 1 — Weatherbit (t)	20 to 1 — The Baron	30 to 1 — Connaught Ranger
4 to 1 — Mentor	27 to 1 — Old Ireland	33 to 1 — Idas
9 to 1 — The Merry Monarch	25 to 1 — The Pacha	33 to 1 — Idas
12 to 1 — Old England (t)	30 to 1 — Worthies	50 to 1 — Prince Paroma (t)

DERBY.

10 to 1 agst Sting	25 to 1 agst Tragical (t)	40 to 1 agst Spithead
25 to 1 — Arkwright (t)	25 to 1 — Bucardo (t)

WOLVERHAMPTON RACES.—MONDAY.

Match of 100 sovs.—Mr. E. Emery's Gildeaway, 4 yrs, 8st, received from Mr. Batson's Scrambler, 3 yrs, 7st

Produce Stakes of 10 sovs each, with 25 added

Mr. Bristow's Carissima	.. .. ..	(G. Whitehouse) 1
Lord Warwick's Gwalior	.. .. ..	.. 2

The Wolverhampton Stakes of 20 sovs each, with the Tradesmen's Purse of 100 sovs added.

Sir C. Monck's Glossy, 5 yrs, 8st 12lb	..	(Cartwright) 1
Lord Warwick's Yardley, 3 yrs, 8st 12lb	..	.. 2

The Ladies' Purse of 50 sovs.

Mr. Dawson's Surety, 4 yrs	..	(Lye) 1
Mr. Jones's Roila, 3 yrs	..	.. 2

TUESDAY

The Petshull Handicap of 15 sovs each, with 30 added

Mr. Painter's b f by Jerseed, 3 yrs, 5st 3lb	..	(C. Edwards) 1
Mr. R. Peel's General Noir, 3 yrs, 8st	..	.. 2

The Chulington Stakes of 10 sovs each, with 50 added

Mr E. Peel's Twig	.. .. ..	(Marlow) 1
Lord G. Bentinck's Cherokee	.. .. ..	.. 2

The Cleveland Cup of 100 sovs, with 50 added.

Mr Ramsay's The Shadow, aged	.. ..	(Lye) 1
Mr. Collett's Corrasuna, 5 yrs	.. ..	.. 2

The Borough Members' Plate of £60, for all ages.

Mr. Dawson's Surety, 4 yrs	.. .. ..	(Lye) 1
Mr. Wormald's Milepeede, aged	.. .. ..	.. 2

CRICKET.

The return match between Marylebone (with Pitch given) and Sussex came to a conclusion on Thursday morning, at Brighton, Sussex winning by six wickets. The Duke is the scene of the conclusion of the match.—Sussex, 1st innings, 265; second innings, 86: Total, 351. Marylebone, first innings, 138; second innings, 212: Total, 350.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND HOME.

Advices from Constantinople of July 23 state that on the 12th a dreadful conflagration took place, which reduced nearly the whole of the flourishing town of Ternova, in Bulgaria, to a heap of ruins.

A return of vessels built or purchased into her Majesty's service under the acts and treaties relating to the slave trade since the 24th of August, 1839, shows that six vessels have been so taken, chiefly Portuguese and Brazilian slavers, the first amount paid for which by the Board of Admiralty was £1332, that is to say for five of the vessels, as the purchase money paid for the sixth is not given.

Accounts from Spain state that tranquility had been perfectly restored on the 30th ult. The authorities having placarded in the streets copies of the Ordonnances of Dec. 30, 1706, and May 17, 1835 in kind of martial law, concerning persons committing the crime of high treason, the rebellious people, who had come into Posen in great numbers, returned to their homes in great haste, and order was no more disturbed. The troops, however, remained under arms in their quarters, ready to march at a moment's notice. An examination of the persons arrested had commenced

It is not an uncommon thing for 100,000 railway shares to be sold in one day in the snare markets at Leeds; like the state lotteries of other times, and the gambling houses of the metropolis, are and were mere bagatelles for "the spirit of adventure," compared with the rail way share exchanges.

A Spanish journal states that a short time back, as a dealer in leeches was travelling on a by road in Estren adura, he was stopped by a band of thieves, who demanded his money. He assured them that he had none about him. Having ascertained that he had told the truth, they in revenge for their disappointment thrust his head into the sack in which he carried his leeches, and bound it tightly round his neck. Some country people passing by not long afterwards found him dead, he having been bled to death by his own stock.

Her Majesty has signified her intention of presenting Lord Glenlyon's body of Highlanders with a set of colours, as a mark of her regard for their enthusiastic loyalty, and in token of her gracious remembrance of the reception which she received on her visit to the Highlands. Lord Glenlyon and his Highlanders attended the Atholl gathering at the Bridge of Tilt, last week.

A young sailor of Boulogne, named Fournier, left that place as cabin-boy some four years back. He was found recently on the quay of Liverpool with his tongue cut out, and his arms twisted out of their sockets, and in this condition he was forwarded home to his family. It is said that he witnessed a murder on board, and was thus served in consequence. Neither being able to write nor speak, it is difficult to extract the truth from him.

A letter from Berlin dated July 30, says, "The Austrian Government has lately ordered that travellers arriving from foreign countries are to produce, not only their passports, but their domiciliary certificate. This is a most important measure, for many who are probably to be locked for in the Cathoic infection, and the introduction of ideas of reform connected with it."

According to accounts from St. Petersburgh, the merchants of Archangel and Holegda have received, on their application by the Minister of Finance, permission to seek within the boundaries of Russia for guano, which is found not only in some islands of the Frozen Ocean, but on the islands of the White Sea and the Northern Ocean; to collect it and to export it, duty free, from the sea ports of the White Sea.

Captain Drummond, Lieutenant Pitcairne, and Mr. J. Wheatley, of her Majesty's 42nd Regiment, and Lieutenant Norton, of her Majesty's 89th Reg ment, safely resolved on visiting Catania, with a view to ascending Mount Etna. They actually accomplished the distance from Palermo to Catania, over a heavy mountainous country, in 29 hours. On ascending the mountain they found the cold almost insupportable, the thermometer being two degrees below zero. On placing a handkerchief before their mouths, it was congealed round to their lips.

M de Brunow, the Russian Ambassador, has recently made some efforts to obtain a reduction of the duty on Russian tallow, but Sir Robert Peel has intimated that it is not his intention to make any change.

A Berlin letter of the 6th inst. says:—"The King and Queen of Prussia have had an escape from a great catastrophe. The ceiling of the Queen's bed chamber, at Stolzenfels, has fallen in. Happily this accident took place in the day time, when no person was in the apartment."

The King of Denmark has just created a new order, consisting of a medal with the King's effigy on one side, with the inscription "Christian VIII." and the reverse the words "Ar Merit," surrounded with an oaken wreath. The name of the recipient is to be engraven on the edge.

According to a Vienna letter of the 5th inst., the Emperor of Austria has issued a Cabinet order in which a new grant for the formation of railroads within the empire, shall be made to private companies until the year 1850. By this period all the railroads now in construction must be finished. In June last, the aggregate sum of of passengers by the Austrian railroads was 1,463 000, being 87 000 more than in the corresponding month last year.

A letter from Madrid, of the 2nd inst. states, that as 200 convicts were being conducted from Car tagena to the Castle of Cavite, they rose upon the troops escorting them, massacred them all, hanged the commanding officer on a tree, and escaped in different directions.

Letters from Frankfort of the 7th, state that the German Diet has voted 100,000 florins for arming the fortresses of Ulm and Rastatt. Prince Metternich had passed through Frankfort on the previous day, on his way to Hamburgh

A letter from Pesth of the 28th ult., gives an account of a frightful inundation which had taken place on the night of the 26th, several persons were drowned town of Miscnez, which has a population of 20 000, was submerged, the current being sufficiently strong to carry away several houses and other buildings. The torrent came on in the night, several persons were taken by surprise, and lost their lives. All communication between Pesth and Schau was prevented for several days. This calamity happened on the [illegible] anniversary of the conflagration from which Miskolz suffered so severely in 1843

We have to announce the demise of General Field-Marshal Baron V. Radetzky, President of the Military Commission of the Germanic Confederation, who expired at Frankfort last week.

Mr. John Hickey, of Athlone, died on the 1st inst., at the advanced age of 105 years and six months, having been born in Jan. 1740. This veneranble man continued to walk to his last illness.

Letters from Damascus to the 9th ult., announce that the Porte recently exiled the two sons of the old Emir, Beschir, and his grandson also; during the disturbances in Mount Lebanon they were driven to make some show of resistance to the commands of the escort, and from showing any disposition of disobedience to the Royal mandate, the three unoffending men were forcibly and deliberately shot. Rumour has it, and we believe with some show of truth, that this was pre arranged and ordered by the Porte. The old man is safe for the present, but there is no knowing how soon he may share the same fate.

Lord William Hervey has been appointed Minister Plenipotentiary from the Queen of England to the Court of France during the absence on leave of Lord Cowley.

ASSIZI. INTELLIGENCE.

SURRPTITIOUS ENJOYMENT BY A POST MISTRESS.—At the Assizes at Warwick, Maria Mewis (whose case we mentioned last week), pleaded guilty to having, as post mistress of Edgbaston, embezzled various sums, the moneys of the Postmaster General; and was, in consequence of being convicted, left to the mercy by the Crown, sentenced to the comparatively light punishment of three months' imprisonment with hard labour

VALLANCE V. THE DUKE OF BRUNSWICK.—At the assizes, at Croydon, on Saturday last, a Special Jury cause was tried, Vallance v. the Duke of Brunswick. The action was brought by Mr. Henry Wellington Vallance, formerly a tailor, against his Highness the Duke, against the defendant having, in the course of a speech made by him at the Sheriffs' Court, while conducting a writ of inquiry to assess damages for a libel against him, published in the Lancaster Guardian charged him with treachery, unfaithfulness, and breach of duty, while he was employed as his attorney. The Duke of Brunswick conducted his own case, and sat at the table occupied by the bar. The defendant's counsel in the action, first not guilty, and secondly, that the statement he had made was true. Sergeant Shee addressed the Jury, and said that his client was a young man; he was admitted an attorney in 1840, and since that period he had carried on his profession with very considerable ability and success. Very soon after that time he had the honour to be introduced to the defendant, and conducted some legal business for him, and the defendant had charged him with having acted, while employed in that capacity, with the grossest treachery and misconduct. Of the defendant, he should wish to say nothing more than was necessary in the conduct of the plaintiff's case, and he was anxious to treat him with a respect and courtesy. He had many claims upon the sympathy of this country. He was nearly allied to the Royal Family, and the services of his Royal father, who lost his life at Waterloo, formed additional claims to their sympathy. The learned counsel referred to the attacks that had been made upon the duke in the Age and Satirist; the subsequent proceedings taken against him by Barnard Gregory, for having, as was alleged, conspired to prevent him from performing the part of Hamlet, and having hissed him off the stage; and the other matters connected with these proceedings, which will be fresh in the recollection of the public; and he went on to say, that during all these proceedings, which were of such vital importance to the honour and character of the duke, Mr Vallance acted as his solicitor, and evinced a zeal and attachment to his interest, that, on several occasions, called forth commendation from his Royal master, who, during the whole of the important proceedings, placed the utmost confidence in his honour and integrity. About the month of September, 1842, an article appeared in the Lancaster Guardian, which represented that the defendant had been taken into custody on suspicion of being one of the swell mob, and with having committed a robbery at the Preston Guild; and the moment the duke saw this article, he instructed Mr. Vallance immediately to bring an action against the Lancaster Guardian, and every other paper that had published the libellous article, and proceedings were accordingly instituted in October, 1842, Mr. Val ance was anxious to have an advance of money from the duke, on account of his costs, and he sent in a bill. At first the duke made no objection to the amount of the bill, but he at one time refused to pay it, and another interview was appointed, when he was very much surprised to hear that the duke insisted that the charges should be made upon the footing of agency costs, which, in point of fact, the moment the duke saw this article, he instructed Mr. Vallance immediately to bring an action against the Lancaster Guardian, and every other paper that had published the libellous article, and proceedings were accordingly instituted in October, 1842, Mr. Val ance was anxious to have an advance of money from the duke, on account of his costs, and he sent in a bill. At first the duke made no objection to the amount of the bill, but he at one time refused to pay it, and another interview was appointed, when he was very much surprised to hear that the duke insisted that the charges should be made upon the footing of agency costs, which, in point of fact, would be nothing short of a gift of down one-half the amount of the bill. Mr. Vallance refused this proposal, and a few days afterwards he received a note from the defendant, of his intent n to charge his attorney. We remonstrated respectfully, but it was of no avail, the only answer he received being a letter from De Wilts, referring him to Mr Grafe, the present attorney of the duke. The bill of Mr Vallance amounted to £1 600, and, after the most rigid taxation, that sum was only reduced by £214, and the duke allowed Mr Vallance to be all his costs out of pocket for defending himself against the indictment preferred against him by Barnard Gregory, and in which the duke was included also his costs incurred in prosecuting the Satirist and other papers for publishing the most atrocious libels respecting him and his family, for no other reason as it appeared than his attachment and zeal in the interest of the duke. The learned sergeant then went on to say that had merit been allowed to go by default, his Highness thought fit to appear before the Sheriff's jury that were assembled to assess the amount of damages, and to conduct his own case, and upon that occasion he made the attack upon Mr Vallance which was the ground of the present action. He then read from the speech the portion of it to which he referred. He first accused Mr Vallance of being a friend to the Lancaster Guardian, and with having done all in his power, while acting as his attorney, to prevent him from going on with the proceedings against the publisher, and to prevent him from getting out of patience, he had discharged him. The speech went on to say—"I protest against any one of the accusations made by Vallance on his first appearance. I could have answered him when I found out that he intended to sacrifice me." The learned counsel then referred to other parts of the speech, wherein he charged the plaintiff, Mr. Vallance, with having—with the assistance of the defendant's counsel—acting for the defendant, and also with shuffling with him to occasion delay, and which he said had had the effect of inducing some persons to believe that there was really some truth in the accusations made against the defendant. Several witnesses were called in support of this statement, and the case was then adjourned till Monday. On that day it was proceeded with, when the plaintiff's case was concluded.—The Duke of Brunswick addressed the Jury, and in a somewhat ingenious speech, contended, in the first instance, that the matter charged as libellous was not so in reality. He then said that upon the inquiry before the Sheriff, he was compelled to give evidence against his own interest, and he now sought to obtain more money from him by means of this action.—Chief Justice Tindal having summed up, the jury retired. They were absent about half an hour, when they returned into Court, finding a verdict for the plaintiff—Damages £400

CONVICTION FOR BURGLARY.—John Bratt, Thomas Perry, and Frederick Gray, were charged, at Worship-street, with breaking into the house of Mrs. Mary Chambers, at Radway, on 16th December. On the night in question the prosecutrix retired to bed at about half past nine o'clock, and at two the following morning was awoke by the prisoners, two of whom were armed with pistols. They told her they had come for money, and money they would have, or they would blow her brains out. They afterwards went down stairs, and regaled themselves, and carried off every article of value they were able to remove. They jury, having retired for a short time, found the prisoners "Guilty." Mr. Justice Maule said, he might have sentenced them to transportation for life, but, as they did not commit any violence upon Miss Chambers, he should remit the punishment to 15 years' transportation. The prisoners left the dock, protesting their innocence.

PANORAMA OF THE RHINE.

As the most comprehensive illustration of her Majesty's progress up the Rhine, we have engraved the annexed Panoramic representation of the main beauties of this majestic river, the artistical coup d'œil extending from the ancient city of COLOGNE to the STOLZENFELS, a palace of the King of Prussia. We subjoin a few descriptive notes:—

Cologne ranks as the chief among the cities on the borders of the Rhine, both for its size and as regards the opulence and variety of its architectural monuments. Its celebrated cathedral is one of the most magnificent specimens of Gothic architecture in the world. Besides the Cathedral, which contains the tomb of the Three Kings, Cologne can boast of eleven other religious edifices, each more or less distinguished for its architectural beauty, or the magnificence of its internal decorations, the most remarkable among them, however, being that of St. Ursula, from its connexion with the well known legend of the eleven thousand virgins. Cologne is a manufacturing city of some importance, but the one among its productions that has obtained the widest celebrity, is the famed Eau de Cologne of Jean Maria Farina. Opposite to Cologne, and connected with it by its bridge of boats, is Deutz, a pleasant little town, distinguished for its hotels and public gardens.

Leaving Cologne on a passage up the Rhine, the first place reached is the village of Rodenkirchen, situated on the same bank of the stream. On the opposite shore is Niederkassel, which is followed by the hamlet of Lungel, a large village that formerly lay close to the water's edge, but through the union of an adjoining island with the main land, is now situated some distance from the shore. Opposite to it is Sürt, where many of the merchants of Cologne have their country houses, the distance between the two places being comparatively short, and the scenery along the road lively and pleasing. Further on is Godorf, fifteen miles from whence, inland, is the famous Castle of Benaberg, formerly the country residence of the Electors Palatine. Beyond it Ober and Niederwessling, the latter famous for its leather manufactory, and higher up on the other bank is Lulsdorf, with its ancient church, and the ruins of a castle where in former times a toll was collected from all passing mariners journeying up or down the stream. Niedercassel is next reached, which is followed by Grün; then comes Wesling, and higher up on the opposite shore is the village of Rheidt. Uedorf succeeds, and some few miles further on is Hersel. Not one among the above string of Rhine villages is more distinguished than its fellow.

The next point reached of any importance is Graurheindorf, a large village, whose inhabitants have the right of citizenship of the town of Bonn; there was formerly a convent of nuns, which has now become converted into a farm. Some short distance from the village is an ancient castle, called the Burg, and close by the Marbach, a tributary stream flows into the Rhine. Beuel is next arrived at, and is soon followed by Bonn, a large town containing between twelve and fourteen thousand inhabitants, celebrated for its University, the seat of learning at which Prince Albert received his education, and distinguished as being the birth place of Beethoven. It is here that the Beethoven festival was held, in a hall built for the occasion.

Kessenich succeeds Bonn; Obercassel is next reached an on the opposite bank is Dottendorf, Friesdorf, and Godesberg, with the ruins of its magnificent castle crowning an adjoining height. Nieder Dollendorf and Ober Dollendorf are soon passed, and following these is Rondenwinter. The "Casted Crag of Drachenfels" is now distinctly seen, rising up a short distance from this village. The Drachenfels, the steepest of the seven mountains, which are passed one after the other in rapid succession, takes its name from a cavern on the river side, which, according to the legend of the place, was the abode of a fiery dragon, who was slain by the Knight Siegfried Hommel, celebrated for its copper and iron mines, is succeeded by the ruins of the Castle of Rolandseck, said to have been built by Roland, nephew of Charlemagne. This is the brave Roland whose romantic story has furnished the theme for more than one ballet in most European languages. Close by, on the opposite island, is the Convent of Nonnenwerth 'now, alas! a fashionable hotel), where his lady love, the beauteous Hildegurd, on the receipt of the false tidings of her lover's death at Roncevelles, took the veil and made salem to the world for ever.

Rheinbreitbach is a large and wealthy village, surrounded by ruined castles and towers, and formerly deriving great importance from its contiguity to the famous copper mines of Bernberg and Marienberg, the largest of which has become inundated by the river, and is no longer worked

Unkel is next approached, and then comes Remagen, afterwards Erpel, with its basaltic mountains, called Spitzer Ley. This is succeeded by Lunz, a trading town of some extent, which also boasts its feudal castle. Opposite is Sinzig, lying inland, a mile and a half distant from the Rhine, chiefly remarkable for its ancient nunnery. Close at hand is the valley of the Ahr, celebrated for the wine of that name. Leubsdorf is followed by Hommegen, near to which is the Castle of Argenfels, one of the few on the banks of the Rhine now habitable. Nieder Breisig, noted for its remains of an establishment of the Knights Templars, is next approached; and is succeeded by Burg Rheineck, with its castle crested lately, by a learned professor, on the site of a more imposing structure; crowning a lofty height opposite to the Neuteufel

Higher up the stream is the village of Brohl on the one bank, that of Rubenheim on the opposite shore. Beyond is Hammerstein, whose castle was taken and retaken at various times by the contending armies that ravaged Germany during the thirty years' war. Leudesdorf, an unimportant village, is succeeded by the ancient town of Andernach, which was once a free city of the empire, and a place of considerable commerce. It is still enclosed within its ancient walls, and contains a number of remarkable edifices, among which are well preserved Village upon village are now seen following one another in quick succession, between which the ruins of the Castle of Friedrichstein, abutting close upon the water's edge, may be observed. The important town of Neuwied, which next presents itself to notice, is chiefly remarkable for its handsome palace, usually occupied by one of the Royal Princes of Prussia; this is followed by the village of Weissenthurm, that takes its name from the old German watch tower still existing, in good state of preservation, at the extreem ty of the village

On an eminence to the left stands an unfinished monument raised in memory of General Hoche, who effected the passage of the Rhine at this spot with his troops, the veterans of the Sambre and Meuse, on the 18th of April, 1797, in sight of the assembled Austrian army, who were unable to oppose his progress.

Engers boasts a modern castle, erected on the foundations of the famous structure reared by the Archbishop of Treves many centuries since. Sayn, near to its castles—one in ruins, the other a commodious mansion, with a splendid park and a gallery of choice paintings. Hendorf has its iron mines and smelting furnaces, and Kesselheim its castle and convent. Niederworth boasts of the remains of the ancient hunting-seat of the Electors of Treves, and is celebrated as having been the place of meeting between Henry III. of England and Lewis the Bavarian, in the fourteenth century. Valendar, an industrious town, full of manufactories of one kind or another, is followed pretty thickly by villages of more or less importance, the chief among which is Neuendorf, the halting place for those immense timber rafts which are transmitted down the Rhine to Holland

On the opposite bank is the town of Ehrenbreitstein, joined to Coblenz by a bridge of boats 435 paces in length; and, covering the face and summit of an immense rock, which overhangs the broad and rapid-flowing river, is the famous fortress of the same name. Opposite wil, be noticed the stone bridge that crosses the Moselle, whose waters here mingle with the Rhine. Coblenz is next arrived at—a fortified town of some extent, with 16,000 inhabitants, divided into what is called the old and new towns; the one, as may be expected, irregularly built, with few pretensions to architectural neatness. The new or Germanic town is of a different character. Its chief square is adorned with alleys of trees, and ornamented with a handsome fountain in the centre. In this square stands the Electoral Palace, now converted to military purposes. The fortifications around Coblenz are most extensive, and no stranger is permitted to view the interior of them he must content himself with the sight from without. Coblenz contains many handsome churches and public buildings, such as the Town House, the Court of Justice (which is the birth place of Prince Metternich), the Old Mart, &c. A few paces from the Andernach-road stands a monument to the French General Marceau

Nearly opposite Coblenz, is the agreeable village of Pfaffendorf, much frequented by holiday folks from the surrounding neighbourhood, who resort to the gardens, to view the country seat and grounds, and fine collection of paintings of the late Canon Umbscheiden, and drink their Moselle and Seltzer water

The Island of Oberwerth is next reached, and following this is Horchheim. On the opposite bank is the ancient Castle of Stolzenfels, the restoration of which, commenced in the year 1836 by the present King of Prussia, has nearly been completed. Here it is that the Queen of England takes up her residence for several days. Of all the feudal castles on the Rhine, this enjoys the finest situation; the prospect on all sides is most beautiful, extending up the river as far as the valley of the Bunkelnder spring. Opposite, the eye takes in the beautiful valley of the Lahn; and, down the stream, the city of Coblentz, its bridge of boats, and the renowned fortress of Ehrenbreitstein, with the mountains of Andernach stretching far away in the distance.

THE LATE SESSION.—From the official records issued by order of both Houses of Parliament, it appears that no fewer than 1,000 different documents, either in the form of reports and blue books (some extending to upwards of 1,000 folio pages each), or returns, statistical or otherwise, were directed to be printed by the House of Commons alone during the last Session. No fewer than 22 reports, returns, &c., were moved for or presented in the House of Commons only on the last day of the Session. The House of Lords sat during the late Session 95 days, and the House of Commons 123. The official records of the proceedings of the former occupy 1,048 pages, those of the lower House of Parliament 2,079 pages, the last two of which contain 16 notices of motions, which now stand in the order book of that House "for the next Session." There were altogether 175 divisions during the past Session in the House of Commons.

PANORAMA OF THE RHINE.

Cologne 2 St. Peter 3 Westhofen 4 Rodenkirchen 5 Schaldingerbole 6 Weas 7 Sürt 8 God.
9 Unt. Wesaling 10 Ober Wesaling 11 Lolsdorf 12 Urfeld 13 Niedercassel 14 Wiesdg
15 Bürdt 16 Uedorf 17 Hersel 18 Mondorf 19 Berghelm 20 Graurheindorf

21 Schwarzheindorf 22 Bonn 23 Beuel 24 Endenich 25 Kesserich 26 Plittersdorf 27 Obercassel 28 Gonnersdo 29 Godesberg Castle
30 Rüngsdorf 31 Ober-Dollendorf 32 Kowigswinter 33 Drachenfels Castle 34 Mehlem 35 The Seven Mountains 36 Rolandseck
37 Convent of Nonnenwerth 38 Oberwinter 39 Rheinbreitbach 40 Sinzern 41 Unkelbach 42 Unke

PANORAMA OF THE RHINE.

THE MARKETS

CORN-EXCHANGE (Friday).—During the present week the arrivals of wheat, of home produce (for estimate), have been on a most extensive scale, very having exceed of those of any similar previous date for the whole of the present year by a considerable quantity. The total supply has exceeded 14,000 quarters, chiefly from Essex, Kent, and Cambridgeshire. In addition to this, the large quantity upwards of 500 quarters have come in direct by land carriage. As much as expected, the show of samples on the above description of grain on sale here to-day was large, and, however, there was an evident disposition to purchase, the value of the immense investment of the market were at speculators made their appearance, and who purchased pretty freely with us of Monday's market, at that day's quotations, since the last week's was pretty perceived, of the bulk of the arrivals; yet the sellers as for the last fortnight, were by no means in their appearance, and to advance on their terms, as stated as by the farmers. The advance which have reached us to-day, from nearly the whole of our large grain stores, are of a unanimous character. The prevailing one and relieved's assessment for weather is in a complete mid of, consequently through the cutting of wheat has been partially commenced in Essex, Kent, &c., as yet only a little sugar is to be seen made in the fields. The in points of for-ign wheat are on the increase, by steamers accounted, since our last, to 1,340 quarters, no a portion of which home to augment only has been paid. Holders of free parcels would not sell to-day, except at an advance of 1s per quarter, and at which the market closed very firm. Yesterday the duty on foreign wheat was raised to 5s per quarter, and it is very evident it will shortly recede to 10s per quarter in corn market to-day a few speculative purchases were again effected, at extreme quotations. We had a fair share of foreign here, but that of English was small. Grinding parcels move off steadily, at full prices, while the value of malting and distilling sorts was as last reported. The supplies of malt also have increased to only 2500 quarters. The best superfine white qualities sell freely at her kinds slowly, at late rates. Of English oats the supply did not exceed 1,000 quarters, but of foreign the arrivals were of 10,000 quarters. The net trade may be considered steady, at full prices. Fine gu beans being in great demand since the demand was in a steady state, and prices were fully supported. Of peas the sale is rather was dull, at full currencies. The same remark may be applied to flour. The seed has not was somewhat inactive, and, in some instances, rates were lower.

ARRIVALS.—English—wheat, 13,950 quarters; barley, 1350; oats, 150 quarters; wheat, —; barley, —; oats, 6440 quarters. Foreign—wheat, 11,340 quarters; barley, 2160; oats, —; flour, 1000 sacks.

Wheat, 400 sacks; malt, 2500 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 56s to 67s; ditto, white, 60s to 65s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 45s to 58s; ditto, white, 50s to 60s; rye, 35s to 37s; grinding barley, 22s to 27s; distilling 28s to 29s; malting ditto, 30s to 36s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 36s to 38s; brown ditto, 48s to 53s; Kingston and Ware, 52s to 56s; Chevalier, 62s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 15s to 24s; potato ditto, 23s to 26s; Scotch and Cork, black, 20s to 23s; ditto, white, 24s to 25s; Kingston and Ware, new, 30s to 40s; ditto, old, 31s to 39s; grey peas, 32s to 38s; maple, 36s to 40s; white, 36s to 40s; boilers, 40s to 42s; per quarter; Winchester bushel, 36s to 40s; flour, 42s to —; Stockton, and Yorkshire, 40s to 42s, per 28 lbs. Foreign.—Fine wheat, 54s to 61s; barley, red, 34s to 35s; white, 36s to 38s. In bond—Fine wheat, 34s to 36s; barley, 22s to 24s; beans, 36s to 37s; peas, 36s to 37s per quarter. Flour, American, 21s to 23s.; Baltic 21s to 22s, per barrel.

The Seed Market.—Canary seed, as well as new Canary, has sold heavily, at barely late rates. In the value of other seeds, no variation can be noticed.

Linseed, English, new, 42s to 46s. Baltic, crushed, 40s to 42s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 40s to 44s Hempseed, 30s to 32s, per quarter. Coriander, 15s to 16s, per cwt. Brown Mustard seed, 8s to 12s., white ditto, 5s to 10s. Tares, 6s to 8s. per bushel. English Rapeseed, £26 to £27, per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £11 to £11 10s; foreign, £7 to £7 £2 10s per 1000. Rapeseed cakes £5 to £5 5s per ton. Canary, 50s to 60s; Hempseed, 30s to 32s per quarter. English Clover seed, red, 45s to 56s; extra, 57s to 64s; white 60s to 65s extra up to 68s. Foreign, red, 45s to 50s; white, 54s to 60s. Trefoil, 18s to 22s per cwt. Rye grass, 24s to 30s per quarter.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the Metropolis are from 9d to 9½d; of household ditto, 6½d to 7d, per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 55s 3d; barley, 30s 7d; oats, 22s 8d; rye 3s 10d, beans, 36s 5d; peas, 36s 6d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat 19s; barley 9s; oats 4s, rye, 10s 6d, beans, 4s 6d, peas, 4s 6d.

Tea.—The demand for inferior congou is heavy, at 9d to 9½d per lb—being rather lower. The best kinds congou late rates Fine and strong congou, 1s 1d to 1s 2d. Other kinds of tea have all a downward tendency.

Sugar.—A very large business has been again transacted in West India sugar, at an advance of from 6d to 1s per cwt. Bengal has sold at a rather improved; while Mauritius and foreign parts are quite as dear. Refined good, steady, at 42s to 43s for brown; and 45s to 46s 6d for standard lumps.

Coffee.—The scarcity all kinds of East India coffee there is an improved demand, at higher prices. Other qualities can support late rates, without difficulty.

Cocoa.—West India is selling freely, at 42s to 50s for Trinidad.

Rice.—For all descriptions of Bengal the demand is steady, at higher rates. Patna has risen from 18s to 21s per cwt., low white Bengal has produced as much as 19s 6d per cwt.

Oils.—Linseed oil steady, value from the spring in new quarters.

Provisions.—Owing to the large arrivals, Irish butter is heavy, at a decline of 2s per cwt. Per English butter we have a very limited inquiry, at late rates. Foreign is rather very little doing, at somewhat depressed rates; the best parcels do not realise more than from 84s to 86s per cwt. Bacon moves slowly, at previous quotations. Hams are rather more stores is now upwards of 9000 bales more than at the corresponding period last year. Hams are unchanged. Lard is rather cheaper. Pork and beef are dull at late rates. Tallow and all kinds of provisions comparatively little doing.

Hay and Straw.—Coarse meadow hay, £5 10s to £6 5s; useful ditto, £4 15s to £5 5s; fine upland ditto, £5 15s to £6 15s, clover hay, £6 10s to £6 6s, oat straw, £1 15s to £2 5s; wheat straw, £2 0s to £2 2s, per load. New meadow hay, £3 10s to £4 10s; ditto, upland and clover, £4 5s to £5 5s, per load.

Leeds (Friday).—Tuesday's Mkor, 16s; Killingworth, 16s; Wharncliffe, 16s 3d; Lambton, 17s 3d to 17s 6d; Stewart's, 17s 9d, Adelaide, 17s 6d; Hartley, 15s, Eden Main Belmont, 18s 3d per ton.

Hops (Friday).—The accounts which have come to hand from the plantations this week are not of so favourable a character as those we noticed in our last. In most kinds of hops the business is doing, yet prices are not supported. The duty is called £210,000.—Sussex pockets, £3 5s to £5 15s; Wealds, £3 5s to £5 15s; Mid Kents, £5 5s to £7 7s; East Kents, £5 5s to £8 8s, per load.

Wool.—In the private customer market no extensive business is still doing in all kinds of wool, and prices are well supported. The imports continue somewhat large, particularly from our colonies

Potatoes.—Very large supplies of new potatoes have sold, since our last, at prices varying from 2s 6d to 6s per cwt.

Smithfield (Friday).—For the time of year, the supply of beasts on offer here this morning was tolerably good, yet the beef trade was somewhat active at fully Monday's quotations From Holland, we received 200 beasts and 1000 sheep; from Germany, 200 sheep; and from Belgium, 300 lambs, 200 Scots. The numbers of sheep were small, while the sale for them was steady at unaltered prices. In calves, the supply was limited, and the demand was in a healthy state per 8lb. The veal trade was steady and the rates had an upward tendency. Pigs move, off slowly at previous prices. Of bacon a fair trade is doing each quarter.

Per 8lb., to sink the offals:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; secondquality ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime large oxen, 3s 10d to 4s; prime Scots, 4s; and Quarter ox store pigs, 16s each; anotherquality ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; second quality ditto, 4s 0d to 4s 2d, prime coarse woolled sheep, 4s 4d to 4s 6d; prime South Down ditto 4s 8d to 4s 10d; large coarse calves, 3s 10d to 4s 4d; prime small ditto, 4s 10 to 5s 0d; large hogs, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; neat small porkers, 3s 10d to 4s; ditto, at 10d to 5s 0d. Suckling calves, 21s to 27s each; and Quarter ox store pigs, 16s to 18s each. Beasts, 780; cows, 130; sheep and lambs, 5080; calves, 248; pigs, 60.

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—There was an extensive supply of meat here to-day, and prices were firmly supported.

Per 8lb., by the carcase:—Inferior beef, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; middling ditto, 3s 0d to 3s 2d, prime large ditto, 3s 2d to 4s 4d; prime small ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d, large pork, 2s 8d to 3s 0d, inferior mutton, 3s 10d to 3s 4d; middling ditto, 3s 6d to 4s 1d; prime ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 8d; veal, 3s 10d to 4s 10d; small ditto, 3s 8d to 4s 2d; lamb, 4s 10d to 5s 8d.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

From our City Correspondent.

The belief that a large stock of corn is in bond, or in the possession of the agriculturists, coupled with the fact that the harvest has fairly set in, in the Mark Lane, has combined to influence the English securities very favourably Consols have gradually risen since Monday and continue tolerably firm, although a trifle lower; the rate for money and discount per bill of 100 is quoted 1025 to 7/8 This price yielded a fraction on Thursday to some sales. At the end of the week 99 to 1/4 was the current quotation; Exchequer Bills continue about 49 to 51; New Three and a Quarters per cents have been sold to 102 3/8; and Bank Stock to 211; Reduced is 99 2; and Consols for Account, 99 3/8.

The Foreign Market continues to be nearly deserted by the speculators, and the little business transacted on account of the public is confined to Dutch, Belgian, Portuguese, and Brazilian. On Monday not a bargain was concluded in Mexican; there was a slight revival in the early part of the week on Tuesday, that Mexico had declared war against the United States, caused an immediate fall of 2 per cent. in the Stock. Towards the close of business, however, the price improved nearly 1 per cent, and the previous quicker had brought news of a later date, which was tolerably pacific in its character. Little business has since been done in these securities, and the closing price is [unreadable] to 1/4 Columbian remains 17 1/2 Buenos Ayres is up upon the strength of some purchases. In Spanish there has been scarcely any alteration, the price having seen, and continuing, for the Actives, 27 1/4; Three per Cents, 36; Deferred, 19 1/2. Belgian and Portuguese Dutch Four per Cents. have improved to 102. Colombian remains 17 1/2

The Railway Market has seen well supported during the week, although business has slightly decreased from the extensive inquiry experienced on Monday. The North Wales Railway Company held their first general meeting on Thursday. The report was unanimously adopted, and a £1,000 per annum voted for the Directors. An amicable inquiry between the Northern and Eastern Company, who held their half-yearly meeting on the same day. The Eastern Counties Company having capitalized their debentures, a question arose whether, under their present contract of the two companies, one could legally do so without consent of the other, or whether both were empowered. The legal opinions of Sir Fitzroy Kelly and Mr. Palmer Round were taken on the point, and the result was that each was empowered to exercise the power. Acting upon this, a resolution was proposed, that the amount of debt, viz., £394,800, should be capitalized, by the issue of one new share at par for each present share, and five per cent. per annum guaranteed thereon, in any divisible fund that may arise. The usual dividend of five per cent. was then declared, payable on the first of September next. The London and Greenwich Railway have declared a dividend of 4s 6d per share on the non preferential shares. London and York shares improved towards the close of the week, closing at 4; London and Manchester Direct (Remington's line) have been in request for the market, but are quoted at 1 pm. North Staffordshires are at 3 pm.; and Nottingham and Boston, at 5 pm. The French lines are in better request as the period for adjudication approaches. At closing prices stood—Aberdeen, 3; Birmingham and Gloucester Half Shares, 34; Birmingham and Oxford Junction, 4; Brigh on, Lewes, and Hastings, 20; Bristol and Exeter New, 13; Caledonian, 10; Cambridge and Ely, 7; Cambridge and Lincoln, 3; Canterbury and Dover, 1; Cheltenham and Oxford, 3; Coventry, Nuneaton, Birmingham, and Leicester, 3; Direct Northern, 2; Dublin and Belfast Junction, 3; Eastern Counties New, 1; Eastern Union Shares, 2; Eastern Union Extension, 5; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 87; Ditto Quarter Shares, 21; Ely and Bedford, 4; Great Western, 23; Ditto Half Shares, 12; Ditto, Fifths, 2; Ditto, Quarters, 1 pm; Hull and Selby, 29; Lancaster and Carlisle, 54; Leicester and Bedford, 2; London and Birmingham, 245; Ditto New Thirds, 52; Ditto Quarters, 26; London and Brighton, 84; Ditto New, 4; London and Brighton, 77; Ditto Consolidated Eighths, 38, London and Croydon, 24; London and South Western 42 ex 6s, 78, Ditto New, 15; London and York, 4; Londonderry and Coleraine, 3; Lynn and Ely, 7; Lynn and Dereham, 4; Manchester and Leeds, 196; Ditto Half Shares, 64; Ditto Quarter Shares, 30; Midland, 175; Ditto New, 85; Midland, Birmingham, and Derby, 18; Newcastle and Darlington Junction, 88; Newcastle and Berwick, 84; Newry and Enniskillen, 8; Newark and Sheffield, 48; North Britis h, 8; Ditto New, 8; Northern and Eastern, 70; Ditto Scrip, 50; North Wales, 38; Portsmouth Direct, 8; Richmond, 4; Rugby, Worcester, and Tring, 3; Scottish Central, 7; Scottish Midland, 24; Shrewsbury, Wolverhampton, Dudley and Birmingham, 4; Shrewsbury and Trent Valley Union 2 pm; Shrewbury, Hereford, and North Wales, 3; South Midland, 5; South Eastern and Dover, 40; South Wales, 34; Trent Valley, 198; Trent Valley and Holyhead Junction, 2; Warrington and Kilkenny, 2; Welch Midland, 3; Worcester, Shrewsbury, and Crewe Union, 5; York and North Midland Extension, 2; Boulogne and Amiens, 11; Dutch Rhenish, 1; East Indian 2; Great Northern of France Lafitte's), 6; Ditto d to (Rosmnel's, 3 Louvain and Jen appe, 4; Luxemburg, 23; Namur and Liege, 42 Orleans and Vierzon, 16; Orleans and Bourbonnais, 11; Over Yssel, 4 pm; Paris and Lyons Lafitte's, 3; Paris and Lyon's Ganneron's), 2; Paris and Lyons (Calon's), 2; Paris and Strasbourg (Gannero rs), 2; Ditto Compte de l'Est, 2; Sambre and Meuse, 8

Saturday last the Consols receded a turn yesterday closing at 99. The Share settling passed off tolerably well, but little was done in general business. Prices fluctuated in accordance with the several accounts.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY AUG 12

BANKRUPTS.—C ALLEY, Tadley, Hampshire maltster, E KNYVETT, Buckingham Coitage, Gree' Stanmore, teacher of music. J WARE Wivenhoe, Northamptonshire corn factor. Sir Stephen St. Leger Glynne, Hawarden Castle, Flintshire, and Grosvenor Bond street, dentist. G. C. CROFTS, Liverpool, corn merchant. M. MURPHY, Shrewsbury, haberdasher.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—W. EIN, Glasgow, coach proprietor. W. BAIN, Leith-park, farmer.

FRIDAY AUG. 15.

BANKRUPTS.—J. LAZARUS, Marylebone lane, and Wigmore-street, Cavendish square, dealer in second-hand clothes. W PARSONS, Wood-street, Lambeth, corn-dealer. D. AVIS, Penzance, and St James's, dealer in realised and l court dresses J T TAYLOR and T. WATKINSON, York-street, Regent's-park, and Cheapside, warehousemen. J. HOUGHTON, Liverpool, merchant. J MARTIN, Bromsgrove, tailor. J. CALDICOTT, jun., Brecon, brewmaster, hat-wear haberdasher. M. EVANS, Manchester, stone-dresser.

FOURTH SEQUESTRATION (ANDERSON and J. ANDERSON, Elgin, shoemakers.

BIRTHS.

At Shepton Mallet, Somerset, the wife of Captain Constantine Phipps, Esq., of twin sons.—The lady of Richard D Hodges, of Sloane-place, Regent's-park, Esq., of a son.—At Sidney-lodge, Camberwell, the wife of the Rev Dr. Hodgson, Chancellor of the Diocese of Cambridge, of a daughter.—At Denmark hill, Camberwell, the lady of Frederick Thwaites, Esq., of a son.—At Wansford, Northamptonshire, the wife of the Rev Archibald Fea, of a daughter.—At Sparsh-house, Denbighshire, the lady of Captain Lacon, R.N., of a daughter.—At Maida-hill West, the lady of A. M. Mitchell, Esq., of a son.

MARRIAGES

On the 8th inst., at St. George's Church, Hanover-square, by the Rev. Henry Hoyland B.D., rector, Lawrence de Pledge Newman, Esq., second son of the late John Henry de Newman, Esq., of Nantes, to Harriet Jane youngest daughter of the late Charles Dunsdale Collas, Esq., of Rue Royale, Paris.—At Kensington, Sir Thomas Mostyn Mostyn, Bart. to Miss Dancer, Bart., to Ellen Jane, only child of Jonn Johnston, Esq.—At Lyndhurst Church, William Barney, Esq., second son of the late Sir Edward Doyle, Bart., to Miss Margaret Anne, eldest daughter of the late Charles James Wilbraham, Esq., of Delamere-house, Cheshire.—At St. Margaret's, Westminster, William Wallace, eldest son of William Scott, Esq., to Caroline second daughter of the late Rev. Charles Mark, of that city.—At Holmwood, Surrey, the Rev. Henry Courts, Stanislaus, Comte de Sarpoulous, to Juliana, eldest sister of William Scott, Esq.—At Hillingdon, Middlesex, Thomas Fellowes, Esq., to Mary Ann, only daughter of Robert Taylor, Esq.—At Wells, Somerset, the Rev Charles James Wilbraham, B.A. to Charlotte Payne, eldest daughter of Rev J John Hyde Seymour, Esq.—On the 5th inst., at Hartford, by the Rev G. Gilmore, Mr James Nease, jr. of Leicester, to Elizabeth Goldsmith, second daughter of Mr Wm. Goldsmith, of Hartford.—At Bath, Lancelot Colonel Sir Gordon M. Wade, C. B. to Jane Seaton, eldest daughter of the late Captain T. Nicholl.—At Rothwell, Patrick Fraser Tytler, Esq., to Caroline Mary, youngest daughter of the late Thomas Horsar Esq.—At Cuckfield, Richard Dav s Crisp, Esq., to Eliza Louisa Maria Jane, eldest daughter of the late Lieutenant-Colonel Fawkener.—Charles Ray, Esq., to Emma, second daughter of Andrew Lamb, Esq., of Bromley.

DEATHS

At the Cape of Good Hope, on June 2nd, James Tyrell Cust, aged 26, second son of the late Hon. William Cust At Margate, Miss C. B. Byrne, of No. 7, Pall-mall.—At Gore-ry, Cheltenham, Mr. Goodsall, Esq., late Solicitor of that city.—Mr. Holmes, printer, of Bridgemill.—At Newbury, Berks, Richard Bird, Esq.—At Katherin 's lodge, Regent's-park, Charlotte Mary Louisa Taylor, aged 21, daughter of the late lieutenant-general Sir Herbert Taylor, G.C.B.—At Hampton-court-palace, Charlotte, widow of the late Lieutenant-General Sir George A Lowry Cole, G.C.B. and Architect of the Navy.—At Montreal, Lower Canada, Colonel Dobson, late 1st (Royal) Regiment Dragoons.—At Leyton, Essex, William Masterman, Esq.

ADVERTISEMENTS

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—SIGNOR MORIANI has the honour to inform the Nobility, Subscribers to the Opera, and the Public, that his BENEFIT will take place on THURSDAY EVENING AUGUST 21st, it being the LAST and PARTICULAR NIGHT of the season when he proposes to appear in the Lucia di Lammermoor, Lucia, Miss Maddox Castellan, Alice, Madame Bellini; Enrico, Signor Ronconi; Raimondo, Signor Tamburini; Arturo, Signor Labocetta; Normanno, Signor Del Fiori; And Edgardo Signor Moriani! With Grisco's Opera Buffa, LA PRIOVA DIPUTA OPERA BUFFA. Lucilla, Miss Poole; Eugenia, and Gennaro, Signor Labocetta With a variety of ENTERTAINMENTS, in which Mdlle. Cerito and Mdlle. Lucile Grahn will appear. To conclude with the admired Ballet of LONDINE Lorenzo, Signor Lorenzo; Mdlle. Ferdinand, M. Perrot, and M. St. Leon.—Applications for Boxes, Pit Stalls, and Tickets, to be made at the Box-office, Opera Colonnade. Doors open at Half-past Seven, to commence at Eight precisely.

THEATRE ROYAL, HAYMARKET.—Unprecedented concentration of Talent. Part of the Companies of Four Theatres on One Night! MONDAY, AUGUST 18th, 1845, and Every Evening during the Week, a variety of Entertainment, in which Madame Vestris Melanie Duvai, Mr. Arthur Webster, and Mr. Leigh Murray, Mr. Compton, Mr. Wright, Mr. Buckstone, Mr. Keeley, and Mr. Tompkins, will appear in Mr. Planche's Burlesque, entitled THE CONQUEST OF NAPLES; or, The Heroine of the Iron Age. Mdlle. Rosati, Mdlle. Fanny Cerito, Mdlle. Lucile Grahn, and Mdlle. Carlotta Grisi, will appear in a new and popular display of Equestrianism by the whole of the French Artistes.—Box office open from 11 till 5.

MR. GREEN'S SECOND NIGHT ASCENT at VAUXHALL GARDENS, in his MAGNIFICENT BALLOON, on WEDNESDAY NEXT, the 20th, on which occasion the Waterloo Bridge, from which he ascends will be illuminated by Mr. Nevel and Extensive Display of Fireworks Last night. The Fireworks attached to the car will be discharged on his giving the signal for his ascent. Reserved Seats in the Pavement Gallery, 1s. each person. On MONDAY and TUESDAY NEXT, the USUAL ENTERTAINMENTS as usual.—Admission to Children, Half-price. Doors open at 3 o'clock. The Fourth BAL MASQUE, on TUESDAY, the 26th.

COLOSSEUM.—Patronised by Her Most Gracious MAJESTY and H.R.H. PRINCE ALBERT. Open daily from 10 till 6. Equal to Six Exhibitions, viz. Splendid Panorama of London by Night, the first, second, and third Floors, Diorama Views, Stereoscopic Pictures, Coloured Models, Classic Ruins and Fountains, Panorama of London, realised by Mr. Parris, &c. Admission 1s.; Children Half-price. The Subterranean Caverns, in extra

EVENING EXHIBITION, open from 8 till 11, consists of an entirely New Panorama of London by Night, erected in front of the day picture, the largest in the world, comprising 40,000 square feet. Admission at the same Prices. Family Tickets to admit four persons, at 10s. each, to be used at the North lodge, Colosseum, from 10 to 6 o'clock. Models, Coloured Stereoscopic Pictures, Classic Ruins, Fountains, Grottos, Lecture Room, Gallery of Sculpture, and Hoogson, Oxford-street, and Messrs. Addison and Co., 7, Regent street.—Children under 12 years of age, Half-price.

COLOSSEUM.—Patronised by Her Most Gracious MAJESTY and H.R.H. PRINCE ALBERT. Open daily from 10 till 6. Equal to Six Exhibitions, viz. Splendid Panorama of London by Night, the first, second, and third Floors, Diorama Views, Stereoscopic Pictures, Coloured Models, Classic Ruins and Fountains, Panorama of London, realised by Mr. Parris, &c. Admission 1s.; Children Half-price. The Subterranean Caverns, in extra

EVENING EXHIBITION, open from 8 till 11, consists of an entirely New Panorama of London by Night, erected in front of the day picture, the largest in the world, comprising 40,000 square feet. Admission at the same Prices. Family Tickets to admit four persons, at 10s. each, to be used at the North lodge, Colosseum, from 10 to 6 o'clock. Models, Coloured Stereoscopic Pictures, Classic Ruins, Fountains, Grottos, Lecture Room, Gallery of Sculpture, and Hoogson, Oxford-street, and Messrs. Addison and Co., 7, Regent street.—Children under 12 years of age, Half-price.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor and Manager Mr. W. BATTY.—LAST WEEK BUT ONE of the ENGAGEMENT of the FRENCH EQUESTRIANS. The NEW GRAND SPECTACLE in nightly rotation with about a fortnight more to run. On MONDAY the 18, and During the Week, the Grand Military Spectacle of THE CONQUEST OF SCINDE; or, The Heroine of the Indus, in which the Siege of Hyderabad, the Battle of Meanee, and the Storming of Fort Emaum, and popular displays of Equestrianism by the whole of the French Artistes.—Box office open from 11 till 5.

MR. GREEN'S SECOND NIGHT ASCENT at VAUXHALL GARDENS, in his MAGNIFICENT BALLOON, on WEDNESDAY NEXT, the 20th, on which occasion, the Waterloo Bridge, from which he ascends will be illuminated by Mr. Nevel and Extensive Display of Fireworks Last night. The Fireworks attached to the car will be discharged on his giving the signal for his ascent. Reserved Seats in the Pavement Gallery, 1s. each person. On MONDAY and TUESDAY NEXT, the USUAL ENTERTAINMENTS as usual.—Admission to Children, Half-price. Doors open at 3 o'clock. The Fourth BAL MASQUE, on TUESDAY, the 26th.

GOLOSSEUM.—Patronised by Her Most Gracious MAJESTY and H.R.H. PRINCE ALBERT. Open daily from 10 till 6. Equal to Six Exhibitions, viz. Splendid Panorama of London by Night, the first, second, and third Floors, Diorama Views, Stereoscopic Pictures, Coloured Models, Classic Ruins and Fountains, Panorama of London, realised by Mr. Parris, &c. Admission 1s.; Children Half-price. The Subterranean Caverns, in extra

EVENING EXHIBITION, open from 8 till 11, consists of an entirely New Panorama of London by Night, erected in front of the day picture, the largest in the world, comprising 40,000 square feet. Admission at the same Prices. Family Tickets to admit four persons, at 10s. each, to be used at the North lodge, Colosseum, from 10 to 6 o'clock. Models, Coloured Stereoscopic Pictures, Classic Ruins, Fountains, Grottos, Lecture Room, Gallery of Sculpture, and Hoogson, Oxford-street, and Messrs. Addison and Co., 7, Regent street.—Children under 12 years of age, Half-price.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor and Manager Mr. W. BATTY.—LAST WEEK BUT ONE of the ENGAGEMENT of the FRENCH EQUESTRIANS. The NEW GRAND SPECTACLE in nightly rotation with about a fortnight more to run. On MONDAY the 18, and During the Week, the Grand Military Spectacle of THE CONQUEST OF SCINDE; or, The Heroine of the Indus, in which the Siege of Hyderabad, the Battle of Meanee, and the Storming of Fort Emaum, and popular displays of Equestrianism by the whole of the French Artistes.—Box office open from 11 till 5.

ROYAL ADELAIDE GALLERY, Lowther-arcade, Strand.—ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY Daily, with a LECTURE at Two and at Half-past 8 in a series of LECTURES, with Illustrative Models and Diagrams, on GALVANISM and CHEMICAL EGYPTIANS, by E. CLARKSON, Esq. every Monday Evening. Mr. RUSSELL'S LECTURE on LIGHT, Monday next, and on every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday Evenings. LES REUNIONS MAUQUES, on Wednesday next, Fridays LECTURES on SCIENCE, Daily. Instruction in the ART OF SWIMMING. MECHANICAL SEANCE, Every Evening, a GRAND PROMENADE CONCERT, supported by first-rate talent, both the numerical and vocal.

DISEASES OF THE CHEST.—PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS on a Successful Mode of Treating CONSUMPTION, Asthma, Chronic Coughs and Hoarseness of the Throat, by ALFRED ALLEN, M.R.C.S. Author of "Diseases of the Throat," &c. &c. London: SIMPKIN and MARSHALL, Paternoster-row, Baillière, 219, Regent street.

CURTIS ON HEALTH, HEARING, AND SIGHT.—Just Published, price 1s.—ADVICE on the CARE of the HEALTH, and on Air, Exercise, Diet, Training, Gymnastics, Bathing, Swimming, &c., with Notes of the Athenian Wrestle, the Gymnastics of the Regent's-park, and the Ring in Kensington-gardens. By E. ALVIGE on the CARE of the EYES, Vision, and AVOID; and ADVICE to the DEAF. Price 1s. London: WHITTAKER and Co. Paris: GALIGNANI and Co.

HOW TO LIVE.—Price 1s. 6d. by post, 1s. 6d.,

WHAT to EAT, DRINK, and AVOID; addressed to the Nervous and Dyspeptic.

By R. CLEARKIN, M.D., M.R.I., &c.

SHERWOOD, 23, Paternoster-row; CLARKE, 13, Fleet-street; RANDAL, 25, Oxford-street; M. CURRALL, 32, Charing-cross; and TEGG, 85, Cheapside.

Just published, in 8d.

PRINCIPLES OF HISTORY. By S. RAYMOND DE VERDUGUR Author of "Educational Reform," "Milton and Eve Poetry" "Modern French Literature," &c.; and Pic ciné ai au Fdic ational Institution Classical Academy, 7, Devonshire.

H. SALLERAN, 7, 9 Regent-street.

THE PIANO, AUGUST, price 1s., or 1s. 4d. post-free, contains Lucile Fra Diavolo (by effective more than usually popular Duets, a fav ite Galope Waltzer by Auber the Osborne Waltz by Labitzky Introduction and Operatic Fantasia by Benedict, by Balfe), Favorite Airs, Arranged with Accompaniments for the Piano Forte; and Love's Call, the popular Serenade from the Opera Fra Diavolo, 2d., or sent free by post Music for 13 Published by DUNCOMBE, 9, Middle row Holborn, and all Booksellers.

NOW READY. Gratis and Post Free, BULL'S LIBRARY CIRCULAR FOR AUGUST, Containing all the New and Popular Works, with full particulars of Bull's New Library System which is affording such universal satisfaction in every part of the kingdom. Families furnished on terms suited to their size and income upon of a previous correspondence. Under the Bull's Library Circular, sent gratis on post free to be addressed to Mr Bull, Library, 19, Holles street, Cavendish-square, London.

Now ready, Fifty-Eighth Edition, Vol. VI. of

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, Elegantly bound in cloth and gilt, gilt edges rich in Illustrations of the Passing Events in the Year 1844 Containing a complete and authentic Record of INDUSTRIAL CHRONOLOGY together with a mass of useful and highly interesting articles on Art, Science, and Literature. May be had in all parts of the World, in the Kingdom, as also all the previous Volumes. Vol. I., 21s.; Vols. II., III., IV., V., and VI., 25s. each

JOE MILLER THE YOUNGER, New Series, No. 7. will contain Lucy Long Illustrated by Cruikshank, and the New and Popular Works, with full particulars of Bull's New Library System which is affording such universal satisfaction in every part of the kingdom. Families furnished on terms suited to their size and income upon of a previous correspondence. Under the Bull's Library Circular, sent gratis on post free to be addressed to Mr Bull, Library, 19, Holles street, Cavendish-square, London.

Now ready, Price Eighteen Shillings, Vol. VI. of

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, Elegantly bound in cloth and gilt, gilt edges rich in Illustrations of the Passing Events in the Year 1844 Containing a complete and authentic Record of INDUSTRIAL CHRONOLOGY together with a mass of useful and highly interesting articles on Art, Science, and Literature. May be had in all parts of the World, in the Kingdom, as also all the previous Volumes. Vol. I., 21s.; Vols. II., III., IV., V., and VI., 25s. each

JOE MILLER THE YOUNGER, New Series, No. 7. will contain Lucy Long Illustrated by Cruikshank, and the New and Popular Works, with full particulars of Bull's New Library System which is affording such universal satisfaction in every part of the kingdom. Families furnished on terms suited to their size and income upon of a previous correspondence. Under the Bull's Library Circular, sent gratis on post free to be addressed to Mr Bull, Library, 19, Holles street, Cavendish-square, London.

THE DAGUERREOTYPE PATENT.—The injustice and validity of the Patent considered in THE PRACTICAL MANUAL of PHOTOGRAPHY, just Published, price 6s. 6d., containing full and plain instructions for their guidance in the Economical Production of Portraits, Views, &c.; with Sir D Brewster's late improvements in Apparatus, &c. Mr. Hunt's Process, &c. By a PRACTICAL CHEMIST and PHOTOGRAPHER. Sent by post, free, to R. MACKENZIE, 131, Fleet-street, and all Booksellers

TO THE SUBSCRIBERS OF THE LONDON ART-UNION. The Subscribers of the Present Year (1845) are informed that the Number of MEDALLIONS to the Subscribers that the LARGE PLATE PROOF COPIES, of which only a limited number is printed, are ready for delivery. This Volume contains 850 highly-finished Portraits, from that Orlando Furioso to the Duke of Wellington, by Sir Thomas Lawrence. Tastefully bound in morocco, with cover 42s. net.

Published by H. G. BOHN, 4, York-street, Covent-street, Bedford-square, London

PERSONS VISITING PARIS, to save time and expense, should provide themselves with a copy of the HANDBOOK to PARIS, or TRAVELLER'S GUIDE, containing a Plan of the City, Maps of the Environs, and Routes from Boulogne to the principal towns, with Map and Engravings, price 2s. 6d.; post free, 3d extra. Among the contents will be found an accurate account of all the routes to Paris, with the modes of travelling with comfort and economy. Advice to visitors, public buildings, hotels, theatres, exhibitions, and everything necessary to be known to render the journey and attraction, &c. W. STRANGE, 21, Paternoster-row, and all Booksellers.

In Weekly Numbers, 1d., by post, 2d., and Monthly Parts, 7d., by post, 8d., Vol. I. of THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, Cheap Edition. No. 2, with 200 Wood-cuts. Each Part will contain, besides, an Engraving illustrative of Shakespeare's Life and Times. Part 1, All the known Portraits of Shakespeare. Part 2, PICTURES of PLACES and SCENES connected with Shakespeare. Part 3, Ditto Ditto: No. 2, Nat. Hogarth. Mermaid.

FAMILIAR PENNY ARABIAN NIGHTS.

J. C. MOORE, 12, Wellington-street North

NOTICE.—Daily Circulation 130,000.—THE JOURNAL DES DEBATS, EDITED BY GOUDCHAUX FRERES, and SIECLE, the united circulation of which exceeds 130,000 daily, having reduced their rate of charges, afford an opportunity for advertisers to give publicity to their Establishments and Manufactures throughout France, Belgium, and every part of Europe. Advertisements must be forwarded to William Thomas, British and Foreign Advertising Agent, 3, Catherine street, Strand, who has for the convenience of the public opened an office in Paris for the reception of advertisements, Newspaper and Periodical published in Paris, the Scale of Charges for which can be seen at Mr. Thomas's office.

Now ready, price 1s. 6d.,

THE STORY OF A ROYAL FAVOURITE.

By MRS. GORE.

"No scandal about Queen Elizabeth, I hope!"—The Critic.

Also, just ready,

LOVE AND MESMERISM By JOSEPH SMITH, Esq., Author of "Ironsbeyre House," &c., three vol

HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

THE CORN TRADE.—The critical state of the weather involving the probability of a deficient and wet harvest, and the consequently serious effects upon the commerce and money affairs are beginning to excite great apprehension. In order each Subscriber may be enabled to form a correct opinion for himself, the Times and Herald are sent, and as to the stock of grain on hand on the continent and in the western ports, by the Mail Packets, important information is received by every steamer. Also the MARK LANE EXPRESS AND AGRICULTURAL JOURNAL, which has been for many years the acknowledged organ of the Agricultural Interest, is published every Monday, and may be had by order of all Booksellers and Newsmen. Office, 24, Norfolk-street, Strand, London

Publishing in Monthly Numbers, One Shilling each,

THE O'DONOGHUE; or, Ireland Fifty Years ago. By HARRY LORREQUER. With Illustrations by PHIZ. Nos. 1 to 5 are now ready.

The interest of the beautiful story steadily increases. We believe it will be pronounced by Author's best."—The Leeds Times. "This is the Waverley of Harry Lorrequer Nothing could exceed the spirit and humour which pervade the first part of this story, except the care and ability with which it is written." Renfrewshire Advertiser "This delightful tale is the best of Harry Lorrequer's."—Dublin Evening Mail.

DUBLIN: WM. CURRY, JUN., and

THE LARGEST STOCK IN EUROPE.—FURNISHING IRONMONGERY Stoves Grates, Kitchen Ranges, Fenders Fire irons, best Sheffield Plates, ornamental Iron and Wire Work, Garden Engines, Rollers, &c., Japan Tea Trays Urns, &c.—PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS, adjoining Melon Tunnell's, 56 Baker street Portman square. N.B Every article is marked in plain figures, at the lowest cash prices.

PARIS.—To prevent inconvenience and disappointment, per sons visiting PARIS are respectfully informed that the HOTEL VICTOIRE is in the Rue Chaveau la Garde near the church of the Madeleine, No. 3, and not in the Rue Neuve as stated by error in Mr Murray's Hand Book. The Proprietor of the Hotel Victoire having taken much improvements, may be now again of W. STANDEN 21 Paternoster row (who will, as if present free on receipt of 2 postage stamps); G Rouse, Strand; or Mr Mous, Regent street.

THE GLOSTER HOTEL, PICCADILLY and BURKLEY-STREET.—T and P DALE respectfully inform their friends and Gentlemen that they have been enabled (by taking the adjoining premises) to build several New Rooms and STONE STAIRCASE &c. &c., in the Hotel, which are now complete. They will add to the former which is in every and airy situation, and on strictly moderate charges, they trust will add to the comfort and convenience of their patrons.—Coaches and Omnibuses to and from the Railway Terminal at the Sta. 6d., including the postboy.

SCHWEPPE'S SODA and other ALKALINE WATERS continue to be manufactured, as usual upon the largest scale, at their several establishments, and to maintain their supremacy over all others Each bottle has its stopper pro perty of Schweppe, but, to prevent imposition, one tone is are earnestly requested to observe that a shell, with their name, is over the cork of each bottle of Soda Water, and a label on each bottle of Lemonade and Potass Water. Schweppe's Soda Water is allowed to be of the purest quality, and it strongly recommended as a cure for gout, acidity of the stomach, &c., by the first Physicians of the present time. Manufactory, Bonners street, London.

PATENT FLEXIBLE VELVET HATS.—JOHNSON and Co., 118, Regent street, corner of Vigo-street, Hatters to the Queen and Royal Family, Inventors and patentees. From the construction of the PATENT FLEXIBLE HATS, the unpleasant pressure on the forehead is entirely removed, and, by the use of the Patent Elastic Bands, are capable of accommodating themselves perfectly to the shape of the head, the crown, moreover, being ventilated, and the perspiration prevented from appearing on the surface of the hat, are additional advantages. As ladies' Riding Hats, they are light and elastic, and will retain their position on the head without the most disagreeable. —Johnson and Co., 118 Regent-street, and Griffiths and Johnson, 2, Old Bond-street.

TEAS AT THE WHOLESALE PRICE.—Families, Hotel Keepers, and large Consumers supplied with Tea at the Wholesale Price, for Cash, as under:

	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.
Black	2 8	3 0	3 4	3 8	4 0	4 4 & and 5 0
Green	3 4	3 8	4 0	4 4	5 0	6 0
Gunpowder	4 0	4 4	5 0	6 0	7 0	8 0

Chests and Half-chests sent to any part of town. MANSELL and Co. J. Bucklersbury, Cash remitted for orders for six pounds of Tea and upwards delivered free and carriage to any part of the Kingdom.

LONDON, HOUNSLOW, AND WESTERN RAILWAY. CAPITAL £1,000,000, in 50,000 Shares of £20 each. Deposit £2 6s. per Share Provisionally Registered.

Detailed Prospectuses, with statements of Traffic and Maps of the Line, with Forms of Application for Shares, may be obtained at the Company's Offices 7, Walbrook and at the Solicitors, Messrs. Reed, 10 Hanover, 5, Walbrook; and B B Reed, Esq., Tokenhouse yard; or the Stockbrokers, J H Gosling Esq., 10, Warnford court, Messrs Trent n and Co., 8, St. Swithinlane, and Messrs. Shewell, Tokenhouse yard, where applications for Shares may be made.

T. S BROWN, Secretary, pro tem 7, Walbrook

THE PROVIDENT CLERKS' MUTUAL BENEFIT ASSOCIATION and BENEVOLENT FUND, 42, Moorgate-street, London.

TRUSTEES.

Thomas Baring, Esq., M.P. Baron L. de Rothschild.
Thomson Hankey, Esq., Esq. Samuel Jones Loyd, Esq., M.P.

Treasurer of the Benevolent Fund, John Abel Smith, Esq., M.P.

Forms of Proposal for Mutual Life Assurance, to meet every contingency, Annuities, Endowments, Loans, &c. for Fund and Fees, and every information, may be had at the Offices, where donations and subscriptions to the Benevolent Fund are received.

GEORGE THOMAS, Chairman

An Abstract of the Proceedings at the Meeting of Annuitants, and at the Annual, on the 29th of May last, may be had, on applica tion

A VISIT TO THE CONTINENT.—Before taking a trip to the Continent, the Traveller generally considers how he may best carry a n him a well ing materials and his dressing tensils The Tourist up the Rhine, Switzerland, &c., knows the importance of economising the space of his Portmanteau With this in view BELLAMY SAVORY has invented THE TOURISTS COMPANION, which consists of one box, both Writing Desk and Dressing Case, and is, you smaller size, no more than either of these articles as usually made In fact THE TOURIST'S COMPANION is so portable, that although comprehending both Travelling Writing Desk, Dressing Case, Portfolio, Razor Patent Inkstand, and Dressing Case, and is, you smaller size, no more than either of these articles as usually made In fact THE TOURIST'S COMPANION is so portable, that although comprehending both Travelling Writing Desk, Dressing Case, Portfolio, Razor Patent Inkstand, and Dressing Case, and is completely fitted up Dressing case, with brasses, cutlery, &c., 1 is only 19 inches long and 8 deep It is carried on shore the smallest of hand, and may be had of the Inventor and Patentee, 43 Strand, and of Morocco Price, £5 ; or second quality, £3 10s BELLAMY SAVORY, Stationer and Dressing Case Maker By the Paper Warehouse, 43, Cornhill, London.

SUPERIOR SHIRTS AT MODERATE PRICES.

Strong Cotton and Long Cloth Shirts	1s 6d and 2s 0d
Long Cloth Shirts, with fine Linen Full Fronts, Collars, and Wristbands (well made)	2s 6d and 3s 6d
Superior long Cloth Shirts, extra super Linen Fronts, Collars, and Wristbands beautifully made	4s 6d and 5s 6d
Fine Linen Cambric 4s 6d, or 5s. 6d. per dozen. Extra Superfine, 6d., or 7s. 6d. per Dozen

A large assortment of Shirts of every description have been received of the most approved Patterns in all Linen Shirts, and the finest qualities in India Long Cloth, kept washed and ready for immediate use. Quilted Linen Dressing Gowns.

Boys' Shirts in all sizes. Shorts and Nonesty made to order.

Gentlemen's own Patterns exactly copied. Observe the only address, 76, CORNHILL.

ROGERS'S Co. Shirt Makers, Hosiers, and Manufacturers of Linen Goods for the Navy, 76 St. Martin's-lane, and 39, New street, Covent-garden, the premises being at the corner only. Two doors.

WATCHES by WEBSTER and SON, Chronometer Makers to the Lords of the Admiralty and the East India Company.—Webster and Son's manufactory has continued in Cornhill 134 years, where may be selected, from one of the most extensive stocks in London, a first-rate assortment in Chronometers, Duplex, Horizontal, and other Watches, and at the lowest prices consistent with security for the maintenance of that reputation for fineness and quality which has distinguished their house for many years. Compensated duplex and lever watches, to counteract the variations of temperature, upon the most approved principles, adapted for climates of unusual heat the prime three years in succession ; small elegant lever and horizontal watches in gold cases, engraved or engine-turned for ladies' wear ; small flat three-quarter plate lever and horizontal watches, for youths, at very moderate prices. Superior workmen are employed upon the premises, and offer a guarantee for the correct performance of every watch. The utmost value allowed for old watches in exchange. WEBSTER and SON'S Publications, Time and Time-keepers, &c., will be sent free on application. 34, Cornhill, two doors from the Royal Exchange.

A large assortment of Second hand Watches at very low prices.

THE LIVING REVELATION, or Eternity Revealed to Time, by the Rev. J. Kelly, and now first issued by Dr Robertson at the late meeting of the British Association By this instrument true time may be obtained at any moment of the day or night, by means of the stars, without any calculation whatever. The instrument is of so simple a construction, that any person can make one for himself, at the cost of a few shillings, and it will enable persons to keep their clocks and watches to the true. Price 4s 6d. each.

W and SON beg leave to introduce the PATENT PEDOMETER, which is adjusted with great accuracy to the step of the wearer, and will in even him what no one may have walked during any given time. Price 21s.—Webster and Son, 34, Cornhill

FORTY FIRST-RATE PIANO-FORTES.—To the Musical World.—To be SOLD by AUCTION, by Mr MCALLA, on TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 2nd, and following days, without reserve, at 12 precisely, 22, BUCKLERSBURY, the STOCK of GEORGE DI PREE, MUSIC SELLER, and Piano forte Maker, and Stationer, relinquishing business The remaining 40 Pianos to be sold on the premises consist of an elegant and powerful Grand Piano, in rosewood case, with metallic plate and check action, compass from CC to A in alt, 6½ octaves ; a beautiful semi-cottage, in mahogany noble entertainer's good cheer with most unflinching pertinacity of purpose and unwearied good humour.

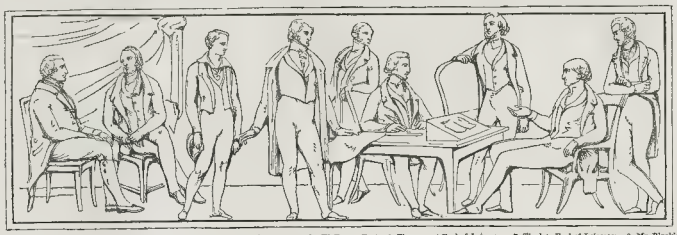
Great credit is due to Mr. Salmon, Lord Leicester's house steward, to whose excellent arrangements the whole of this vast assembly was indebted for all these good things, and the manner in which they were prepared and served. Everybody was satisfied: though hundreds after hundreds had to be attended to, nobody was forgotten or overlooked. There was no confusion and no dissatisfaction, indeed, so profuse was the entertainment, that enough remained, after all had partaken, to supply a very large banquet, if such a thing had been required.

MONUMENT TO THE LATE EARL OF LEICESTER, AT HOLKHAM.

The company amused themselves with listening to the music of the bands, promenading the grounds, and admiring the beauty of the scenery in the park till dusk, when they retired. The noble Earl entertained Lords Colborne and Hastings and a small select party of friends to dinner in the house. The scene, on leaving the park, was curious and characteristic of

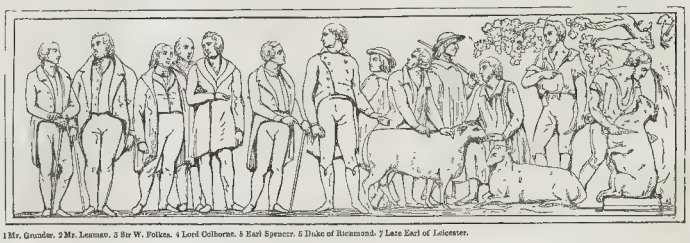
1. William Buck, Esq. 2. The late Earl of Leicester. 3. The late Duke of Bedford.

LORD LEICESTER SUPERINTENDING THE IMPROVEMENT OF MARSHY OR BOGGY LAND.



1. Mr. Bloomfield. 2. Mr. Ottoson. 3. Mr. Hudson, jun. 4. Mr. Hudson, sen. 5. Sir W. Foster, Bart. 6. The present Earl of Leicester. 7. The late Earl of Leicester. 8. Mr. Blackie.

LORD LEICESTER PRESENTING A FREE LEASE TO THE GRANDSON OF HIS TENANT, MR. HUDSON.



1 Mr. Grundy. 2 Mr. Leaman. 3 Sir W. Folkes. 4 Lord Colborne. 5 Earl Spencer. 6 Duke of Richmond. 7 Late Earl of Leicester.

LORD LEICESTER SHOWING HIS IMPROVED BREED OF SHEEP TO THE PRINCIPAL MEMBERS OF THE COMMITTEE

English manners, and more particularly of the manners of remote rural districts. There were everywhere groups of merry-makers, there were rustic vocalists tuning their somewhat harsh voices to country ditties; some were playing horns (and if they produced little that was melodious there was enough that was noisy), there was the usual portion of what the poet has called—and many a country belle was chased about the outskirts of the park by many a sylvan swain. Yet there was no drunkenness, or little to be complained of. Good humour was the order of the day and of the night, as the carts, waggons, and wains carried their joyous loads of merry-makers to Norwich, Cromer, Holt, Burnham Market and Burnham Thorpe, Snettisham, Walsingham, Swaffham, Fakenham, Castleacre, Beerham, North and South Creek, Raynham, Brandon, and scores of other places. In the little sea-port town of Wells, which is about a mile from the park gate of Holkham, all was bustle and animation. Here were the head-quarters of those who had come too far a-field to return home the same night; and as there were many such, mine host of the Crown and his assistants had no sinecure to attend to the wants of his guests. Never, perhaps, did this little sea port look so lively and so gay; the inn yards were filled with carriages, and the stables with horses; ostlers and helpers running about in all directions, and as much or more to do than even relays of extra men and beasts could well perform. The game in the park were certainly amongst the animals who were not a little astonished at the proceedings of the day; hares were running about in all directions, "frighted from their propriety;" and one of these poor creatures became so entangled in the groups of the cavalcade, that he was actually caught by hand, and conveyed, alive and "kicking," to the mansion.

"Gallantry robust,"

LAUNCH OF "THE AVENGER," STEAM-FRIGATE, AT DEVONPORT.—SEE PRECEDING PAGE.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, of 196, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, August 16, 1845.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 173.—Vol. VII. FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, AUGUST 23, 1845. [Sixpence.

THE QUEEN IN GERMANY.

Mayence, August 16.

WHATEVER degree of doubt may exist in the mind of the voyager who stops at Coblentz, whether the Rhine may not have been a little — a very little over-rated — that doubt vanishes when he has completed the course to Mayence. For that distance the river deserves all that has ever been said of it in poetry and prose; and there has been a good deal of both. Never was there stream so written upon. In verse we have laudations of all qualities, from the sublimity of Byron to the bathos of the rhymer of yesterday: in prose, there are the descriptions and mis-descriptions of the thousands of tourists who have steamed up it to make a book. To re-describe, then, what has been so often done before, is no part of our purpose, which is the Illustration of the visit of her Majesty to the noble flood which traverses the great seat of our Saxon ancestors.

We have already traced the route of her Majesty to Stolzenfels, where the second pause of the journey was made. We have now to notice the transit from that point to the fine old city of Mayence; one of those places which the antiquary enters with awakened interest, and the artist quits with regret. It is full of objects most calculated to excite the attention of both. It is old, like Cologne, but has not that air of decay and decrepitude which meets you everywhere in the city of Agrippa; and, with all respect to Cologne, be it said, it has the advantage in cleanliness. The change from Cologne to Coblentz is, in many respects, a change for the better.

Her Majesty left the Castle of Stolzenfels in the Fairy; and right well the gallant little steamer has played her part. She steamed up against the ever-rolling current of the Rhine, as if being launched for the ocean, she could sport with the strength of a river great as it might be; she bore along the standard of England as if proud of it, and of her over whose head it floated. She ploughed along against the stream without any visible application of force in most gallant style, and excited immense sensation, as all the Rhine steamers—and they are very good ones—are of the old construction.

The Royal yacht left Stolzenfels between eleven and twelve, and arrived at Mayence at six, overtaking one of the best of the Rhine boats that left two hours before her; though, the Fairy's speed was slackened before the principal towns and villages that the people who poured down to the shore and landing-places on almost every point might have the opportunity of seeing her Majesty. This is good work when the strength of the current against an ascending vessel is considered; and it was done quietly and smoothly, as if a fairy could dispense with physical aids and could glide along like that "gay creature of the element" whose name she bears.

The morning of the embarkation was anything but fair; heavy rain, wind, an excessive cold for the season, and a sky as grey and dull as November on the Thames, instead of the bright blue of August on the Rhine, gave little prospect of pleasure, but the day proved better than it promised; at noon it cleared up, and a bright sun gave the only charm required to complete the scene.

The principal places passed were those with whose names the guide-books, and the tours before-mentioned, have made everybody familiar; Braubach, with the well-preserved fragment of feudality, the Castle of Marksburg, towering above it; Boppart, with an antiquity that goes back to the days of Drusus and his legions, and its river-wall, which was strong before gunpowder came to revolutionise the art of war by the terrible facility it gives to "lay cities flat;" the Castles of the Cat and the Mouse, quiet now and crumbling to dust together, amicable at least in their day of decay, though fierce were once the feuds of their several owners; the twin towers of Sternberg and Liebenstein, the seat of a legend of the fierce hatred of two brothers, not unlike that which Schiller has made the groundwork of his "Bride of Messina;" and so past a host of places all rife with interest derived from history, or song, or both.

THE QUEEN PASSING COBLENTZ.

The Castles of the Rhine are now only picturesque features of the scene; ruined and desolate, they stand the relics of another system, long since passed away. But they were once of terrible importance; they were the seats of robber chiefs—for they can be called little else—who had no limits to their lawless will but the want of power to enforce it, and who were only kept in check by their mutual feuds and enmities. One of the great sources of their revenue was the trade of the Rhine; and, destructive as the fact may be to all romance, most of these castles were nothing but toll-houses—feudal "pikes"—at which black mail was levied on all shipping going up and down the stream, and the merchant made to "stand and deliver," which, as long as the "commercial" interest was weak and undeveloped, it did do. But the end of this injustice came at last, and not before a change was required; for at one period there were no less than thirty-two Nobles who exercised this system of pillage. But the Barons spent the revenues, and borrowed of the men of commerce, and became dependent; the merchants stoutly refused to pay when asked; the Nobles clung to their old rights when they no longer had power to enforce them; the traders formed the Hanseatic League, raised an army and paid it; and thus the tide was turned: the Barons were driven from their holds, and the torch, the axe, and the hammer carried havoc among them—a few remained as military posts, but artillery deprived most of them of any value as positions; the tide of war has swept over them, and a few broken walls alone exist to tell that they have been; of some, the remains are more perfect—accident has spared them, and, from them, it may be judged what they were in their days of power.

Stolzenfels has been restored, but the elegance of the mansion has been attained—probably, it was more studied than a reproduction of the grim old fortress. Marksburg remains much as it might have been of yore, rough and weather-beaten, coloured like the rock on which it stands, still entire, but showing no signs of life or occupation. The grandest of the whole of these structures—both from its extent and position—is Rheinfels, which is too perfect to be called quite a ruin, and yet too shattered to be considered as much else. It stands close to St. Goar, on a height which slopes down to the river's edge, completely commanding the passage of it, which was the great object of its founder; for, like the others, this too was a toll-house. It was built by a Count Diether, of Katzenellenbogen, who, in 1245, asked his friend, the Emperor Friederich, to grant him a new toll; with the usual generosity of the feudal times, when kings gave away anything, provided it was not their own, the Emperor complied; and, to collect the new impost, this castle was built. But, ten years afterwards, there having been much discontent in the interval, no less than twenty-six of the Rhine towns took heart of grace, "plucked up a spirit," and not only sand they would pay no more toll to the Count, but that they would pull him out of his new Castle by the ears, and that down to the ground afterwards. The Count stood a siege of fifteen months, and the assailants departed successless: the time had not come, but it was not long delayed. It was the failure of this very siege that produced the union of the German and Rhenish cities, which at last overthrew the whole system, of which Rheinfels is so striking a relic.

The Castle, after this, plays no important part in history, till the wars of Louis XIV. It was occupied by the Hessians, in 1794; but the garrison surrendered to the French, and the Republican Army blew it up, leaving it what it now is—a wreck, but a magnificent one. It is reported that it has lately been purchased by the Prince of Prussia, who intends to restore it on a far grander scale than the residence of Stolzenfels. The old walls exhibited some signs of life, as her Majesty passed beneath them: a flag waved over them—a few figures were visible moving along the terraces—some cannon were fired as a salute—and then the place was as still and silent as of yore.

The rest of the course was rapidly passed. Above Bingen, the river opens, the mountains recede from the banks, and its bed is almost a plain; and thus it continues up to Mayence, where the character of the scenery becomes again almost as flat and uninteresting as it is among the flats of Holland.

The reception of her Majesty at Mayence was made in all due form; a large body of the Austrian and Prussian garrison (for it is occupied by the troops of both countries) were under arms; the quays along the river were crowded; even the men at work in the line of water-mills moored in the stream, quitted their labour, and stood on the barges to see the "Queen of England." There were no great fort and batteries to send forth their thunder, as at Ehrenbreitstein; but a few cannon were discharged from different points, a hundred flags and banners waved gaily in the breeze, the sun was bright on the broad river, the red towers of the Cathedral, and the high roofs of the city, looked quaint and picturesque; and, altogether, the scene was one of the best of its kind, during the Royal Progress.

The Fairy ran alongside a temporary landing-place, covered with an awning, and decorated with flags, and in a few minutes her Majesty was a guest of the Prince of Prussia, in the official residence of the Military Commandant of the City. The crowd of spectators was very great.

In the evening there were other celebrations. It appeared that the residence had not been prepared for her Majesty's reception, and the Hotel de l'Europe was fixed on as the head-quarters of the Royal visitor. The Queen and suite proceeded there in their carriages. The Hotel was illuminated; and soon afterwards a guard of honour, with two splendid bands, the outside lines of soldiers bearing torches, marched through the streets, and took up their station beneath the windows. The moon was beautifully clear: the arms and helmets of the Prussian soldiers gleamed in the flashing torchlight—the crowd stood closely pressed together behind the ranks, and the bands played a serenade in admirable style. Those who have not heard them can have no idea of the effect of the military music of the Austrian and Prussian army; each band is at least three times as numerous as any in our service—contain first-rate instrumentalists, who play with the precision and perfection of the orchestra of the Opera. At the close of the Serenade, the soldiers returned in the same order; and the city was restored to its usual quiet—the Rhine flowing smoothly, in the light of a splendid moon.

MAYENCE, August 17.

Military as it is, Mayence has objects of interest connected with other arts than that of war; among them, the first place should be given to the Statue of Gutemberg, the Inventor of Printing.

Mayence is clean and bright beyond most German cities, and is a credit to the Principality of Hesse Darmstadt. New buildings are rising in several quarters, and the old ones are in good repair, or undergoing the process; this is, unfortunately, the case with the tower of the Cathedral, the exterior of which is concealed by scaffolding. The buildings, old and new, are of a red tinge, the material being a sandstone of that colour. The masonry of the new ones is admirably executed, and shows the Germans have not lost the skill which made them the best church builders of Europe. The hotels are like palaces; they front the Rhine. Each of them could lodge an army; and, both for prospect and accommodation, it may be doubted if our Queen does not find the Hotel de l'Europe, as compared with Buckingham Palace, a change for the better.

Her Majesty leaves to-morrow for Gotha.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.

The news from France this week is unimportant. The Paris papers devote their attention almost exclusively to the Religious Disturbances in Germany, an account of which is given under the proper head.

The Journal des Débats publishes the following from Tangier, dated the 6th of August:—

"The ratifications of the treaty of Lalla Maghrina had been exchanged two or three days before.

"General Delarue quitted Tangier to return to France."

The weather had improved in Paris, but it was believed that the continual rains of this year would be very prejudicial to the harvests. Journals of almost every department of France complain of the unfavourable state of the weather. The eastern side of the kingdom, in particular, appears to have suffered. Serious fears were likewise entertained for the vintage, and it was not thought likely, even if the weather were to change, that the wine would be of a good quality. The price of wheat had increased, day by day, in the principal markets of France, and was increasing steadily in five.

A letter from Bordeaux, dated the 13th instant, gives the following account of the camp formed in that city:—

"Yesterday took place the first review of the troops at the Camp of St. Medard. Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess de Nemours left the Palace at nine o'clock, and reached St. Medard about ten. The review commenced about eleven o'clock, under the command of the Duke d'Aumale, and lasted two hours. It was a mere inspection. About ten thousand men were passed in review. The spectacle was repeatedly interrupted by heavy showers of rain, which added to the disagreeableness and annoyance of the spectators. It is calculated that thirty thousand persons were present to see this fine sight."

The Duke and Duchess de Nemours and the Duke D'Aumale were present at the distribution of prizes at the College of Bordeaux, on the 13th. The Princes crowned some of the pupils, and amongst the rest a young Arab, named Ben Youdas, son of an African chief. The liveliest manifestation of delight burst forth amongst the pupils when the Censor announced that the Duke of Nemours had obtained from the Minister of Public Instruction the favour of prolonging the vacation from the 6th to the 20th of October. The Archbishop and the Parliamentaries of the University dined with the Royal party afterwards; and a grand réunion was to have taken place, but was put off in consequence of a slight indisposition of the Duke de Nemours, which for some days previously had caused him to observe a certain regimen as the medical men have prescribed repose, the departure of the Princes for Bayonne was postponed. From that city they propose visiting Pau and Tarbes, and on their return to Bayonne from the Pyrenees will proceed to Pampeluna by Irun, Oyarzun, Ast garraga, and Tolosa.

The Paris papers confirm the report that Marshal Bugeaud, covered with the ashes of the victories of Isly, arrives at the Dahra, will return forthwith to France. He was expected to arrive at Toulon on a three months' leave No doubt was entertained that whatever be the occasion of it, his return, if not a recall, will lead to the nomination of Marshal Soult's retirement from the position they now occupy.

M. Touy Conte, eldest son of M. Conte, Postmaster General of France, died in Paris, much lamented, on the 14th inst., in the 38th year of his age.

The Court of Cassation has annulled the decision of the Cour Royale of Paris which declared that, there being no law against duelling, there was no ground for proceeding against M. Beauvallon for killing M. Dujarrier, gérant of the Presse, in a duel.

Some of the Paris papers are absurd enough to attribute a political motive to the visit of her Majesty to Germany. One of them has sagaciously discovered, that in the mention of the word "Victoria" by the King of Prussia, when he proposed the Queen's health at dinner, there was some political signification, with something like result to the French nation. The simple explanation of the expression that the word Victoria resounded once over a field of battle is, that it was ancientiy the custom of Germans soldiers after a victory, to fire a grand salute, which they called victoria schiessen—the salute of triumph. The usage has become obsolete, but the name of the custom is still remembered—consecrating the word Victoria in German language and literature, as the poetical term for military triumph.

GERMANY.

Our private accounts from Germany for some time past have led us to expect the outbreak of a religious insurrection, because we were aware of the differences which existed between the Catholics and Protestants. We are sorry to say that such has been received of insurrection having occurred in Saxony and other parts of Germany from this cause. A letter from Hulber stadt, dated Aug. 10, says—

"On Wednesday afternoon Abbé Ronge, who has numerous partisans in this place, delivered his first sermon at Halberstadt, in the open air, and in the yard of the cathedral, before several thousand persons of every age and sex.

"As soon as he had pronounced the last words of his sermon, which were these—Yes, brethren, Rome ought to fall; and she will fall!" a rustling noise was heard among the crowd, and a man, who was standing near the pulpit, when a salesman, well known for the fervour of his religious belief, rushed forward after Abbé Ronge, who had just left the pulpit, and endeavoured to throw a stone at him; another person was more quick than the latter held him back, and prevented him realising his culpable intention; but at the same instant a young man struck, with a heavy stick, a violent blow upon the back of Abbé Ronge, who immediately fell on the ground. The Abbé got up and ran away, but soon afterwards was further ill-treated by several other men; and it was only with great difficulty, and through the protection afforded him by a great number of his friends, that he succeeded in gaining the hotel he lodged at.

"Some moments after a crowd of his partisans walked through the streets of the town, and three or four of the houses of the persons by whom he was said to be inhabited by Roman Catholics. The police put all their agents on foot to appease the tumult, but their efforts were useless; the rioters breathed only fire and vengeance. The military were called out; some detachments of infantry and cavalry appeared, and after having ordered the rebels to retire, which was not obeyed, the troops charged them, and blood flowed in abundance. The German Catholics went in crowds to the Rue de la Digue, where dwelt the salesman who had endeavoured to throw a stone at Abbé Ronge; they barricaded themselves in this narrow street, and demolished from top to bottom the house of this individual. It was only then they separated, and that tranquility was re established in Halberstadt.

"The number of the killed and wounded is not at present known; that of the persons arrested is upwards of 150. The Royal Court of Magdeburg has instituted an inquiry into the affair, and will judge it when the inquiry has terminated."

On the 12th instant a very serious riot broke out at Leipsic, and according to the latest accounts, that city was still in a state of the greatest excitement. The following interesting particulars are given by the Journal des Débats:—The population of Leipsic, that had shown all the great sympathies for the new German Catholic Church, of which, as is well known, the Abbé Ronge is the founder and chief, took advantage of a review of the Rural Guards to attack violently and to deplorable tumults. His Royal Highness Duke John, only brother of the King of Saxony, Commandant General of the Rural Guards of the Kingdom, arrived at Leipsic on the 12th instant to inspect this corps. The Prince, it is said, is a zealous Catholic, and passes for having contributed, in the Council of Ministers, to the measures taken against the proselytes of the Abbé Ronge in Saxony, who has been prohibited to open his churches, or celebrate publicly divine service. When the Prince presented himself before the Rural Guard, the co mmanding officer, according to usage, cried the first, "Prince John for ever!" (Vive le Prince Jean!) The cry was received by a general murmur; nevertheless, all other manifestation troubled the review. It was when the troops filed off that symptoms of violent animosity broke out against the person of the Prince in the ranks of the militia, and among the spectators assembled on the spot. The Commandant having repeated the cry, "Vive le Prince Jean!" there arose from all parts confused cries of "Rouge for ever!" "Down with the Jesuits!" "Down with the hypocrites!" The Prince, after the review, went to the Hotel de Prussia, and was followed by the whole population, who did not cease to repeat the cries of "Down with the Jesuits!" "Rouge for ever!" The guard of honour of the Prince used their efforts to maintain order, and to clear the square, but they were forced back by the mass of the population that invaded all the adjacent streets. The Prince then gave order to a battalion of infantry of the line to take up their position before his hotel. During this time the population continued their turbulent manifestations, and sang first the celebrated chorus of Luther, "Ein feste burg ist unser Gott" ("Our God is a fortress"), and afterwards a strophe of a song from the "Brigands" of Schiller, "Ein freies leben führen wir" (We lead a free and charming life). The population, growing more and more excited, began to throw stones at the windows of the apartments inhabited by the Prince, and broke several of them. The Commander of the troops (then about half past 10 in the evening), not having been able to disperse the population, gave orders to fire upon the people. It is asserted that this discharge took place without any previous notice having been given to the people, or that it was given in such a manner as not to be heard by the crowd, which was singing "Ein feste burg." Several were struck, in particular, inoffensive persons, who stood at some distance from the scene of disorder, on the parade in front of the hotel. The number of the wounded is reported at seventeen, seven of whom have already died. Among the latter was a Government officer, a police agent, and the father of a family, standing at the time before his door, inquiring what was the cause of the tumult. This event has exasperated the population; and, to prevent more serious consequences, the authorities assembled together the Rural Guards, who succeeded, at about two o'clock in the morning, in dispersing the crowds. The Prince quitted Leipsic in the morning, but was again hissed by the populace in the streets he passed through, and stones were also thrown at his coach. The troop is ordered to the barracks, and the authorities have sent for a battalion of infantry to reinforce the garrison. This battalion was received by the hisses of the populace, who manifested the greatest animosity against the troop. The Municipal Council has ordered the severest measures for the maintenance of order. It was occupied, at the departure of the courier, in drawing up an energetica. proclamation addressed to the inhabitants.

The University was also to invite the students, who are very numerous in the city, to abstain from any turbulent manifestations. The Rural Guard is alone charged with the interior service of the town, and shows itself zealous to maintain order and preserve the town from the fatal consequences that might result to its commerce, &c., by prolonging these lamentable disturbances.

THE UNITED STATES.

In great part of our impression last week, we announced the arrival of the Britannia with New York papers to the 31st July. They do not confirm the reported declaration of war against the United States by Mexico. They contain the afflicting intelligence of a great fire at New York on the 19th ult., which we have detailed elsewhere.

The papers from Halifax bring news of an awfully destructive fire at St. John, New Brunswick, by which property to the amount of nearly £60,000 has been destroyed. The Great Western reached New York on the 21st ult., and sailed for Liverpool at noon of the 23rd. The Cambria, which sailed from Liverpool with the American mails on the 19th ult., arrived out at Boston on the 31st, after a passage of eleven days!—the quickest upon record.

THE WEST INDIES

The Tay has arrived from the West Indies. The date from Jamaica is the 24th of July, but there is no news of particular moment from the island. The mail by Spanish Town has arrived very favourably, and it is probable it may be opened before the time originally contemplated, viz., the 1st of October. The weather had been very fine, and the crops were looking exceedingly well. The negroes had turned their attention to the cultivation of ginger on their own account.

INDIA.

ARRIVAL OF THE CALCUTTA MAIL.

The Overland Mail from Calcutta has arrived, with dates from Calcutta and Bombay, both of the 3rd ult., and Madras, of the 10th ditto.

The political news is not of importance, and the chief announcement is of an unsatisfactory character. The cholera appeared at almost every station in Western India, and had committed frightful ravages on the native inhabitants, although the number of its European victims had been comparatively small. In the Punjaub it had made sad havoc, carrying off at Lahore from 300 to 600 daily. At Lahore from 20,000 to 30,000 had fallen victims to it. The Rajah Gooberwallah Singh, the father in-law of the late Rajah Heera Singh, who had been in confinement at Lahore for some time, setting his accounts with the Sircar, was suddenly attacked with cholera, and died shortly after. The rebellion of Peshora Singh was becoming every day more and more of a serious character. The rebels had re

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS. — "Miles," Sandhurst.—The entertaining collection of original positions by Mr. R. A. Brooms, of Leeds, may be had in Leeds, of Slocombe and Simms, or in London, of Hastings, Carey-street, Lincoln's Inn-fields. Both the positions referred to by "Miles" first appeared in Mr. Brown's work, as and the following:—Place the White King at his K 7th—R at K 8th—R at K 8 7th—R at K 4th, and Pawns at K 2d and—Black King at K 5th— Pawns at K 4th and 5th. In this situation White is to move first and give mate with his Pawn in five moves. In the next let the pieces stand thus—White King at his own sq—Q at her sq—Kts at Q 3rd and Q 5th—Black King at Q 6 7th. White now engages to mate with the Queen in four moves without moving her The last specimen we shall give is by the late Mr. C. Forth, of Waterford—White King at Q 6th— R at K 8 7th—Black King at Q sq—Kt at K Kt 6th. Black moves first and White wins in eight moves.

"Gambit".—The advance of the Queen's Pawn two squares on the 5th move of the Muzio Gambit was brought into vogue by Charles Kenny. We have been favoured with an ingenious variation on one of his games, by Herr Staudigl, for which we may, perhaps, find room next week

"G. D.," Louth.—See the solution in our present No.

"Alpha."—The solution aliud is to never reached us. No. 83 is correct.

"S. H. G," Bridport.—We are overwhelmed with applications of the same kind. The Problems were sent shall, however, be looked to immediately.

"94" is thanked, but we must decline all problems which come unaccompanied by their solutions

"Trinity Verk."—The positions by Ercole dal Rio are "beautiful exceedingly," they are however too well known to require reprinting.

"Agnes."—Mr. Lewis and Mr. La Bourdonnais and M'Donnell did comparatively young, but it should be remembered that Greco Legalle, Philidor, and Mr. Cunningham, the editor of Horace, and one of the first players in Europe, all lived to an advanced age.

"T. W. R."—In the "Philosophical Magazine" for April, 1840, you will find a capital article, by Dr. Rogel, on the Knight's grand tour over the chess-board—a problem which has excited the attention of Euler, Bernoulli, Moivan, Demoivre, Montmort, Wilha, and Rogel For Sir Frederick Madden's beautiful essay on the chess-men discovered in the Isle of Lewis see the first volume of the "Chess-Player's Chronicle."

"Book-Worm."—A copy of Selenus might be obtained at the great fair at Leipsic for about a fourth the amount you would have to pay for one here. The collection of chess-books, ancient and modern, in Germany, is De' Riedos of Berlin

"C.," Great Crosby.—The address has been forwarded, and the postage stamps, which were quite unnecessary, returned.

"C. B. L."—Received with thanks.

"A Curious Impertinent" must be patient. We have already been at the pains of examining, within the last month, above one hundred "original problems" sent to this paper for insertion, and, of these, there are not half-a-dozen deserving publication

Solutions by "Perpetua," "H. P." "X." "W. W. T." "P. B." "E. S." "G. P." "D." "A Member of the S. Club," "C. C." "R. A.," "P. G." "Rosie," "A. S. M." "R. T." "Kae Clifford," are correct. Those by "W." "S. S. M.," "Nonce of Fosey," "Zether," "On Principmale," are wrong.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM, No. 82.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. K to B's 3rd	K to Kt 4th
2. P to Q B's 4th	K to R's 5th or *
3. P to K 3rd	K to Kt 4th
4. K to Kt 3rd	K to B's 4th
5. K to R's 4th	K to his 5th
6. B to Kt 6th (mate)

* 2. K to B's 4th
K to Kt 4th

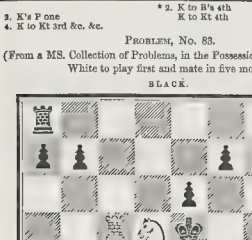
4. K to Kt 3rd &c. &c.

PROBLEM, No. 83.

(From a MS. Collection of Problems, in the Possession of MR. LEWIS.)

White to play first and mate in five moves.

BLACK.



WHITE

CHESS IN AMERICA.

GAME No. 21,

Played at New Orleans between M. Rousseau and M. Schulten of New York.

BLACK (MR. S.)	WHITE (MR. R.)	BLACK (MR. S.)	WHITE (MR. R.)
1. K P two	K P two	18. K to his B sq	K R to B sq (ch)
2. K B P two	P takes P	19. K to his Sd	K R to R 3d (ch)
3. K B to Q B 4th	Q checks	20. K to Q 4th	K R to Q sq (ch)
4. K to B sq	K Kt P two	21. K to Q B 3d	K R to Kt 2d (ch)
5. Q Kt to B 3d	K B to Kt 2d	22. K to Q Kt 3d	R to Q 6
6. Q P two	Q P one	23. Q B to his 3d	Q B to Q R 5th (ch)
7. K P one	P takes P
8. P takes P	K Kt to K 2d	24. K to Q R 3d	R takes Kt
9. Q Kt to K 4th	Q R to K Kt 5th	25. B takes B	Q B takes Q B P †
10. Kt to B 3d	Q Kt to Q 2d	26. Q B P one †	K to K B 4th
11. K P one*	P takes P	27. K Kt P one	Kt to Q 6th
12. K B takes P	Castles on Q side	28. K R to K B sq	R to K 8d
13. K B to Kt (ch)	K takes B	29. K R to B 6th	R to K 4th
14. Q takes R (ch)	B takes Q	30. R to B 8th (ch)	Q to Q 2d
15. Kt takes Q	P takes Kt	31. Q R to K B sq	Q Kt P two
16. Q B takes P †	Kt to K Kt 2d	32. K R to B 8th	R to Q R 8th (ch) ‡
17. Q B to Q 2d	Q B to Q Kt 4th (ch)	33. P takes R	Q Kt P one Mates

* Well played
† Threat. ring mate next time.
‡ The only move on the board to prevent immediate checkmate.
‖ The opening of this game is smartly played by BLACK; but his opponent contrives to turn the tables on him latterly, and to terminate the contest by a very neat and scientific coup de grace.

SUICIDE BY A YOUNG GIRL.—On Saturday Mr. Baker held an inquest at the King William IV., Vaughan terrace, City-road, on the body of Miss Sarah Bestow, aged twenty, a straw bonnet-maker. Master Frederick Restow, of Wandsor street, said deceased was his sister, and had formed an attachment, with the approbation of the family, with a young man of respectability, son of a tradesman in Coram street, named Punnicliffe, with whom she dined on Wednesday. Her father and mother, and Miss Tunnicliffe, went that evening to Dalston, and deceased declined going with them. Her lover left for the Borough at the same time, saying he would meet her on his return at a friend's house in the City-road. In the meantime witness returning home from his employment, and going into his mother's bedroom to wash his hands, saw deceased, as he thought, standing with her back against the wall, and expressed that she did not answer him. He looked more closely, and saw that she was partially suspended from the cornice of the bed by means of a rope, fastened round her neck. Her feet touched the ground, but her knees were bent forward. He cut her down, but she was quite dead, though warm.—By the Coroner: My sister's temper was variable, sometimes depressed, and sometimes quite the contrary. My mother has a brother now in the Bethlem Hospital, and she had two others who died in a lane. Mr Bestow father of deceased, said he had approved of her marriage with Mr. Tunnicliffe, and knew of no obstacle to its accomplishment. He was a little surprised that she had refused to accompany him on the fatal evening to Dalston, and it was evident, from her change of dress, that she had contemplated going out to meet her lover as appointed. Verdict—"Temporary Insanity."

A RAMBLE IN THE REALMS OF CHAT.

Although we could have wished a little better weather to our friends in Germany, yet upon the whole, they have had the hon's share of the sun, and the rest has been made up in illuminations.

From hill to hill the fires flew,
Along the kindling Rhine,
From north to south, from east to west,
You could not wonder-shine:
And bits of light, like little stars,
The windows all were stuffing;
So very, very far,
They never wanted snuffing.
There might have been some jets of gas
Among those little gleamers,
But everywhere you saw them pass
Among the boats and steamers;
These fiery sprits warm'd the air,
You couldn't feel a shiver,
Altho' they threaten'd, then and there,
To set light to the river.
The river? Yes! and more than that,—
Ha! not the river only,—
For overhead they blazed about
Together—no one lonely!
But all in groups of mimic stars,
A-shaking and a-shinin',
And looking down to see themselves
A playing a-l the Rhine in.
Well, on and on they frisk'd about,
Higher they soar'd and higher,
Ten million million lights, until
'Twas clearly raining fire;
But had it then rain'd cats and dogs,
Those lights nor dog nor cat must fear—
Oh, what a wonder they did not
Set fire to the atmosphere!

True for ye! true for your reader's honour! as Pat would say. There really was just such a blaze of fireworks and illuminations. Crags and jutting rocks—castles and hamlets—cities and streams—the river and the craft on it—the sky and the stars in it—the old valleys and the everlasting hills—alive, all alive—nothing less—with the very spirit of lustre How the little myriads were ever lit is a marvel; they must have exhausted the lucifer-matches of Germany; but they did their work bravely, and poured a stream of dazzling beauty over land and sky.

God bless her Majesty! her enjoyment has been delightful, and all who have gone with her have wonderful things.

Our very hearts are tingling with the idea of the musical celebrations.

Dear BONN on the Rhine,
It's all very fine,
But we wish we were at you,
To gaze on your Statue;
And listen to Liszt in
His music, and glisten;
While, Spohr's spirit o'er us,
Made both our eyes porous,
With tears of delight, yes
We long for the night—yes!

But we can't have it. Yes we can! have it reflected—reflected handsomely and brilliantly in the pages of the ILLUSTRATED NEWS. As for our musical department—we mean that part of it which narrates the triumphs of the festival—we have been unable to find room for a corner of our printing, for ever since it arrived our office has been full of fuges and symphonies—our compositors are singing masses, our desks are playing like church organs, and all the round "Oh's!" in our cases are turned into notes of admiration!

Our domestic news is not much, but we jog on, and the railway spirit keeps alive. Theatres also are pretty active, as the Pennsylvanians can't say of their deeds in the Queen's closet, and with a little patronage from the intellectual source of delight and enchantment in London. The season, how ever, has been a glorious one for all parties, manager and public; and if some tributes of approval were presented to Mr. Lumley, it would not be an ungraceful reward for his splendid festivals of Opera, and that dazzling "Pas de Quatre," which lanced its way out of our own pages into the world of politics and fun. Fashion and Paris are rearing their order of music as well as Waterloo; and the elevating influences are much better than "those which kill."

A circumstance has attracted some attention in the week's intelligence which it as well not to overlook. A barrister has sent about canvassing for the votes of a constituency for the office of Judge in a Court of Requests. This is a pretty little episode of visible degradation both of the office and the canvasser, which will tend to diminish any regret the Press may be thought to have felt at the non-intimacy of its association with the Bar.

Meanwhile other canvassing goes on beautifully here and Southwark is shaking its soot to its centre over an earthquake of politics. The question is—

Molesworth? or Miall? or Pilcher?
Who'll of the Borough be richer?
One party turn to and deny all
That Pilcher is better than Miall
One says there is no suck-of-coal's-worth
To choose between Miall and Molesworth.
So Molesworth, Miall, and Pilcher,
Are all daggers drawn, to the hilt, sure!

We say, may the best man win.

Nothing, however, but the cholera is raging in the Punjaub, and we hope the Overland Mail has brought none of it over with the letters. America has consummated her appropriation of Texas; and all our present concern for that darling state is that she sends us over lots of Wenham Ice and pine apples for West-end purchase by the thirsty lungers—the ice at a halfpenny a lump, and the pine-apples at a penny a slice. She generally manages to mix up her delicacies with her wrongs. When the Boundary Question was going wrong with us, she in formed us of "mint julep;" for the Pennsylvanian Bonds, we had "sherry cobbler;" now ice and pineapples for Texas; and if she should seize upon Oregon, we suppose we shall have brandy syllabubs, or buffalo soup!

THE BEETHOVEN FESTIVAL.

(From our own Correspondent.)

BONN, THURSDAY.

I forwarded to you full reports* of the festivities up to Tuesday night, and, for your later editions, you will also have received by express brief accounts up to this evening. I will now endeavour to complete the history of this interesting meeting. The second Concert, on Tuesday night, was announced to commence at four o'clock, and actually began at a little after five. Although many persons had departed for Cologne to view the illuminations on the banks the Beethoven Hall was attended by at least 2000 amateurs. The programme stood thus:

No. 1: Overture to "Coriolanus." No. 2: The Canon from "Fidelio." No. 3: Pianoforte Concerto in E Flat; played by Dr. Liszt. No. 4: Introduction Nos. 1 and 2 from the "Mount of Olives." No. 5: Symphony in C Minor. No. 6: Quartet No. 10, executed by Herr Hermann, Derkum, Weber, and Breuer. No. 7: The Second Finale from "Fidelio."

All the above compositions were by Beethoven, and the programme formed as it were a miniature epitome of every style in his musical career. Spohr conducted everything except the C Minor Symphony, which was under the bâton of Liszt. This marvellous work was admirably executed under his mastery direction. This opinion we have already given at length in these columns, which ordinarily not easily moved, but he declared to me with much energy that he was delighted with the spirit, free from extravagance, and accuracy of Liszt's conducting. I am anxious to make known the judgment of Spohr, because I remarked that the Moscheles and Young England party were indulging in sneers at the Hungarian pianist. At the same time we must admit that the German execution of the C Minor, though marked with a better observance of the piano than at our Philharmonic, and in reading displayed more colouring, was on the whole inferior to the Conservatoire in Paris, and to Costa's band at the opera. The principal defect was in the Scherzo; but the Andante in E Flat, and the magnificent March in C Major, were nobly rendered. The impetuosity of the players towards the end was replete with fine enthusiasm, which communicated itself irresistibly to the delighted audience. The E Flat was exquisitely played by Liszt, who reverentially adhered to Beethoven's text. The wonderful mechanism of Liszt, that has never yet been approached, was associated with a poetical delicacy beyond all praise. At every movement the hall rang with cheering, and the band saluted him with a grand flourish of drums and trumpets. Spohr, who conducted, warmly congratulated him at the conclusion of his unrivalled achievement.

The splendid vocalisation of Mdlle. Tuczek and Herr Staudigl in the famous "Fidelio Canon," was ruined by the inefficiency of the others. The celebrated Manteuffel, from Berlin, was to have sung in it, and also in the selection from the "Mount of Olives," but he absented himself, as it was reported, because he could not secure adequate terms. "Coriolanus" is No. 2 of Beethoven's clever overtures, Op 62. In breadth of design and solemnity, it is scarcely inferior to the "Egmont." The Quartet, No. 10, Op 74, in E Flat, is called the harp one, from the frequent use of the pizzicato. It was superbly played, and enthusiastically applauded. The finale from "Fidelio" was well sustained by the chorus, especially the soprani; but the alti were very indifferent.

THE ILLUMINATIONS

The town was brilliantly illuminated on Wednesday night, but the majority of the visitors had gone to Cologne. The Town Hall, in the Market-place, the Beethoven Hall, the house of Count Von Fürstenberg-Stammheim on the Cathedral-square, the reputed domiciles of Beethoven, were the most remarkable. Count Von Fürstenberg's house was one mass of light, with a transparency of the Statue. The two houses in the Bonn Gasse and the Rhein Strasse, the proprietors of which equally claim the honour of being Beethoven's birth-place, also displayed various devices. On the point of autenticity I think I can throw some light, from conversations I had with Dr. Ries (father of the late Ferdinand Ries), Wegeler, and Schindler. It appears that the proprietor of the Bonn Gasse House is thoroughly disliked in the town, being a great usurer, and this dislike is so strong that the people will not admit his claims, although there is the balance of evidence to establish that Beethoven was born in the house, but a few months after his birth his father removed to the Rhein Strasse. Wegeler speaks quite confidently on the subject, and as Ries will give no decided opinion, I think the Bonn Gasse must be the locality. Bands of music paraded the streets, and played in the Market-place

I went to a soirée to Simrock's, the great music publisher of Bonn, to listen to a rehearsal of the MS. "Cantata Comparetti," composed by Beethoven, now in the possession of Madame Oury. There is a lovely slow movement, and the whole is effective. It was intended to have been performed at Wednesday's Banquet, but, owing to the riot which took place, was not done. It will, however, be published at Bonn, arranged by Fetis, of the Brussels Conservatoire, with words by Professor Wolff.

THE LAST CONCERT.

The Künstler Concert, or artists' concert, the last of the musical performances, was announced for nine o'clock yesterday morning. On entering the Beethoven Hall I found it crowded to excess. To the left of the orchestra a stage had been erected, elegantly fitted up with glasses, carpets, state chairs, &c., for the expected visit of Royalty. Ten o'clock, however, having arrived, and the audience becoming impatient, Liszt began his "Festkantate," composed in honour of Beethoven. It was, perhaps, fortunate that it was played once before the Royal visitors had arrived, as it was most imperfectly executed. At half-past ten o'clock the doors of the audience, and the Guards from the band, announced the expected guests, who took their seats in the following order:—In the centre the Queen of England, with the Queen of Prussia on her right and the King of Prussia on her left. Next to the King Prince Albert, the Duchess of Anhalt-Dessau, and the Princes of Wirtemberg. Next to the Queen of Prussia, the Archduke Frederick of Austria, Prince William of Prussia, uncle to the King, the Prince Royal, Prince Frederick of Prussia, Prince William of Saln, and Prince Maximilian. Behind the Royal personages were the Earl and Countess of Westmoreland, the Countess of Gainsborough (who was mistaken for the Marchioness of Donegal), the Earl of Liverpool, the Earl of Aberdeen, Baron Humboldt, Colonel Wylde, the Honourable Mr. Anson, the Honourable Mr. Fane, General Kaunitz, &c. Count Fürstenberg and Dr. Breidenstein supplied the party with programmes. A cry was then heard for the repetition of Liszt's Cantata, and the King of Prussia gave the signal to the composer to re-commence. His Prussian Majesty, by the way, shook hands familiarly with many of the lady chorus singers, who have already stated, were amateurs of Cologne and Bonn

The scheme stood thus originally: No. 1. Liszt's Cantata. No 2. Violoncello Solo, played by Gana. No. 3. "Die Theriung der Erde," by Haydn, to be sung by Staudigl. No. 4 Air by Mendelssohn, Mdlle. Schloss. No. 5. Pianoforte Concerto of Weber, by Madame Pleyel. No. 6. Mozart's Air, out of "Così fan tutti," by Fräulein Tuczek. No. 7. Chorus for Male Voices, by Beethoven. No 10. Air from "Fidelio," by Miss Sabilla Novello. No. 9. Air of Liszt, sung by H. Götze. No. 10, Violin Concerto, by Herr Mieser. No. 11. "Adelaide," by Fräulein Kratky. No. 12. Violoncello Solo, played by Franco Mendes. No 13. Air, from Spohr's "Faust," sung by Fräulein Sachs. And No. 14. Overture to "Egmont."

The above selection, save the Cantata by Liszt, and the works by Beethoven, cannot be too severely censured. Out of the wide range of inspiration of that immortal composer surely it would have been more creditable to the artists to have gleaned, than to have chosen pieces by authors whose compositions were foreign to the object of the Festival. Liszt's Cantata was, of course, a graceful compliment from a generous artist, without whose munificence Bonn would have been without its Statue of Beethoven.

But to the scheme of "artists" came the intrigues, jealousies, and petty passions. Madame Pleyel wanted, at one time, to perform three times. Moscheles—who, in point of fact, had no more in common with Beethoven than the most obscure amateur who came here to do him honour—was indignant that he was not called upon to play. The friends of Madame Oury thought that, as she was a German born, and had been an eloquent interpreter of the master mind, her claims had been slighted. Madame Dulcken argued that, since she had given soirées, where Beethoven's music was chiefly executed, that she was overlooked. Charles Halle is also a Beethovenite. However, Madame Pleyel alone gained the day, and of course the excluded were excited. As for the violinists, violoncellists, the harmplayers, flute soloists, &c., &c., they were innumerable. Could [illegible] numerous than two violoncello finesse in one programme [illegible] was once asked what could be worse than a flute solo, and replied a flute duo. He might have answered the same as regards Gans and Franco Mendes. Of the above programme, however, Nos. 3, 6, 7, 9, and 13, were omitted. The Royal party stayed only to listen to Nos. 1, 14, 11, 2, 5, and 8—given in the order we have mentioned. After the Royal departure, which took place in decorous silence, Nos. 4, 10, and 12, concluded the Concert, the dinner hour having arrived; and a few dissentients alone of the immense assemblage expressing their discontents at the non-completion of this unsatisfactory programme.

The Cantata of Liszt is unquestionably a great work, and indicative of power not before evinced by this great artist. The theme which predominates reminds one of that in Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," although, when compared, a marked dissimilarity will be found. The Chorus opens plain, with the question for the reason of such an assemblage from mountain and vale? and the query is answered by the cry, that it is to celebrate the Festival of Genius. The poet, Professor O. L. B. Wolff, of the Jena University, has treated this subject very gracefully. "Genius," he says, "in the Cantata, is the diamond of the ring that links man to God; and, whilst all things perish, Genius, in its works, is always true and great." Liszt, after various choral passages, with introductory soli for the tenor and bass, has introduced, with admirable tact, a delicious adagio taken from one of Beethoven's trios for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello The instrumentation of this slow movement is enchanting, and was much applauded by the musicians and amateurs. The finale is brilliantly wound up with an outbreak of startling energy, in glory of Beethoven, and the room rang with acclamations. The Cantata is difficult, and required more rehearsals than it received for its due effect. Madame Pleyel's performance of Weber's "Concert Stuck" created a prodigious sensation, despite of the feeling that she ought to have intrusted Professor O. L. B. Wolff, of the Jena University, has treated this subject very gracefully. "Genius," he says, "in the Cantata, is the diamond of the ring that links man to God; and, whilst all things perish, Genius, in its works, is always true and great." Liszt, after various choral passages, with introductory soli for the tenor and bass, has introduced, with admirable tact, a delicious adagio taken from one of Beethoven's trios for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello The instrumentation of this slow movement is enchanting, and was much applauded by the musicians and amateurs. The finale is brilliantly wound up with an outbreak of startling energy, in glory of Beethoven, and the room rang with acclamations. The Cantata is difficult, and required more rehearsals than it received for its due effect. Madame Pleyel's performance of Weber's "Concert Stuck" created a prodigious sensation, despite of the feeling that she ought to have intrusted her pianoforte to Dr. Liszt, who Liszt, who has conducted himself as a high-minded and gentleman-like artist throughout the meeting. The scene, altogether, was one of great confusion, and the worst episode of the Inauguration.

The Ball at the Beethoven Hall in the evening was brilliantly attended, but, with the exception of the dancing of Lola Montes, and the pertinacity of an Englishman, who insisted on his right to dance in spurs, the affair was rather flat. The rain came down in torrents during the evening.

THE UNMASKING OF THE STATUE.

A POEM OF THE BEETHOVEN FESTIVAL.

Silent the sculpture stood,
Which millions long'd to hail,
Masked in a dark'ning mantle there—
The Spirit with its veil!
And there—round Genius' shrine—
The world's proud rulers trod;
To gaze upon the Crown divine,
And see the un-robed God!

The Majesty of Mind was throned
Before the human race
As in a cloud!—they could but see
Its solemn resting place!
But far above them rose
The image of the King
Who built his palace in the Soul,
And heard its angels sing!

Whose Eagle braved the storm,
And when the sky was riven,
Gave ear unto the Mighty Choir
And winged the strains from Heaven!
'Till earth, with echoing heart
Caught up those wondrous airs,
And sang the holy music back
In glory and in prayers!

Yes! he who took—as all must take—
Their glory from above,
Gave back some of his mighty gifts—
Mind-missions of his love!

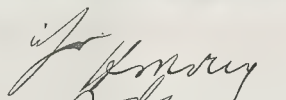
He knows how Inspiration's strength
Was born in that abode—
From God the glowing genius came,
And up to God it strode!*

An imaged Immortality
This hidden Sculpture stood.
The million worshippers throng round,
And long to raise the hood,
The mantle, and the veil,
With many a winding fold;—
Hark! hark! the music—voices swell—
The sun shines out! Behold!—

Behold the Statue reared!
Full on its lofty shrine!—
A Godhead speaking in the face
That Genius made divine.
Thought, Mind, and Passion—stately flow'rs
Upon a lordly stem—

And all the earth around seems struck,
As with a flash of Heaven!
So genius wins its meed!—
The love of all its kind,
The homage of a nation's heart,
The poetry of mind!
The pride of monarchs' thrones,
Who see its trophy won,
And bow while all their people crown
Its glory in the sun!

* Some of Beethoven's sacred compositions were among his most magnificent.



And ruled and Rulers of the Earth
Are bowing now to them.

And wild strains swell the air,
Such as HE struck from soul,
And Music's lavish'd spirit there
Disdains its clay-control.
Up to the thrilling joy
The crowd of hearts is given;

LUDWIG VAN BEETHOVEN.

There, reader, is the master-mind of his age! You gaze upon the features of Beethoven. You see him in the very act of writing the "Missa Solemnis" in D, that sublime work, which some of the most distinguished composers, instrumentalists, vocalists, amateurs, and critics, on the 10th of this month, at Bonn, pronounced to be the finest composition ever given to the world. Creative genius, imaginative vein, striking originality, and endless invention, were the great attributes of Beethoven. His great mind is now universally recognised. The inferiority of knowledge which at first pronounced his later works as incomprehensible, has given way to a community of sentiment, and faith is now firm in the estimate of his grand works. The Choral Hymn of Joy found sympathetic auditors, as well as his last Mass. His subtle and complex combinations, puzzling to the superficial, are now thoroughly comprehended, and his daring innovations in inventive compositions no longer declared to be the mysteries of a madman. Beethoven was born in Bonn, on the 17th of December, 1770.

His father, John van Beethoven, is supposed to have been of Dutch origin, from the Van instead of Von being affixed to the surname. John was a tenor singer, and lived at No. 515 in the Baungasse, and No. 934 in the Rheingasse; but we believe that the former was the place of the birth of Ludwig, whose first instructor was Van der Eden, the Court organist, and, after his death, Neefe. Little is known of Beethoven's youth, as Ries declares that his father was in bad repute. Ludwig at twelve years of age played Bach's fugues. In 1790 he paid a visit at Vienna to Mozart, who predicted his future fame, being astounded at the facility with which Beethoven worked out a double fugue. In 1793 he was appointed Honorary Organist by the Elector, who gave him a pension to study under Haydn; but, as the latter went to London, Albrechtsberger became the master of Ludwig, who soon distinguished himself at Vienna by his talents for improvisation, and obtained the reputation of a first-rate pianist. The death of the Elector of Cologne, in 1801, deprived Beethoven of his pension, and his difficulties and early deafness caused his disgust for society.

His first opera of "Leonora" was not successful; but, with subsequent changes in the Overture and other pieces by the composer, it was destined, under the new name of "Fidelio," to be the most popular production. With the exception of Overtures to "Prometheus," "Egmont," "Coriolanus," "Ruins of Athens," &c., Beethoven wrote no more dramatic music. His only Oratorio was the "Mount of Olives." His

THE INAUGURATION OF THE STATUE OF BEETHOVEN, AT BONN.

Masses in C and D are the only two in existence. His Symphonies were nine in number. About 140 of his productions are in print, the instrumental forming the greater portion. With all these grand inspirations, his existence was precarious, and he lived in a constant state of fear that he should die in poverty and want. For some time he resided at the pretty village of Baden, a short distance from Vienna. Beethoven was never married. He adopted a nephew, whose conduct was a source of perpetual sorrow to him. He was drawn from his seclusion in 1824 by a Concert given on his behalf by the Viennese aristocracy, and the Philharmonic Society forwarded to him a remittance of £100. In December, 1826, he caught cold, which was succeeded by inflammation in the lungs, and on the 26th of March, 1827, he expired, in the midst of a great hurricane.

PRINCE ALBERT'S RESIDENCE, AT BONN.

He left but £1000 in fortune, a sum which might well justify his apprehensions of poverty. He was reconciled to Hummel on his deathbed. Beethoven never had but two pupils—the Archduke Rodolph, and Ferdinand Ries. His funeral was attended by 20,000 persons, and Mozart's "Requiem" was executed. He was buried in the Cemetery of Wharing, near Vienna, and shortly afterwards a monument was erected to his memory.

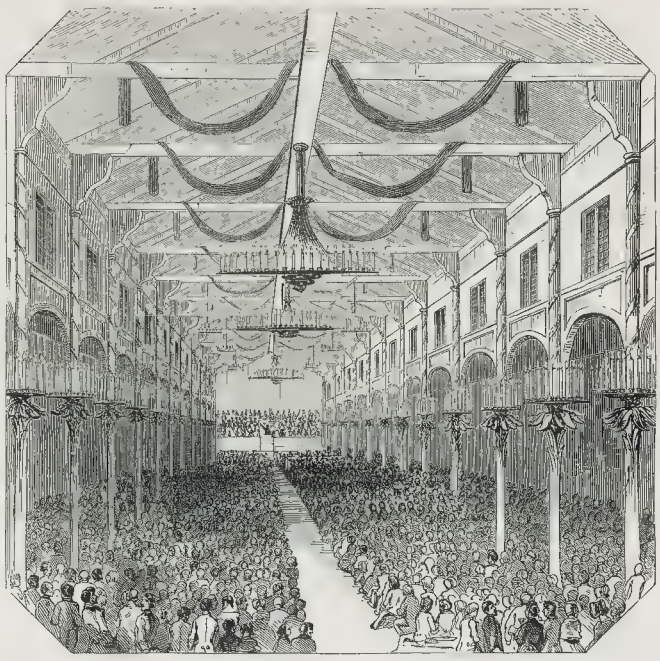
RESIDENCE OF PRINCE ALBERT AT BONN.

At the extremity of the University-street, just at the angle of the Cathedral, opening on the noble avenue of chesnuts, stands a house isolated from the surrounding buildings. Our artist describes the edifice accurately. It was this modest mansion which was inhabited by Prince Albert during his studies at Bonn. On the day of the Inauguration, after the ceremonial of the unveiling was over, her Majesty, accompanied by the Prince Consort, the King of Prussia, &c., visited the residence. Her Majesty went over all the rooms, archly inquiring at the same time as to the mode of life observed by her cara sposo. The Royal visitors walked for some time in the garden, where two ladies from Cologne, who were known to the King of Prussia, were promenading. The Queen spoke with great affability, and asked several questions as to the customs of the students.

INAUGURATION OF THE STATUE OF BEETHOVEN.

Our Sketch was taken at the moment when the white cloth was removed from the Statue in the Cathedral Square, at a signal given by Dr. Breidenstein, the President of the Committee. A discharge of cannon, and musketry, and the shouts of the enormous assemblage were heard at the unveiling. The Queen, Prince Albert, and the King and Queen of Prussia, were in the balcony of Count Fürstenburg's house.

 The scene of the annexed Illustration, the Inauguration of the Statue of Beethoven, was detailed last week.



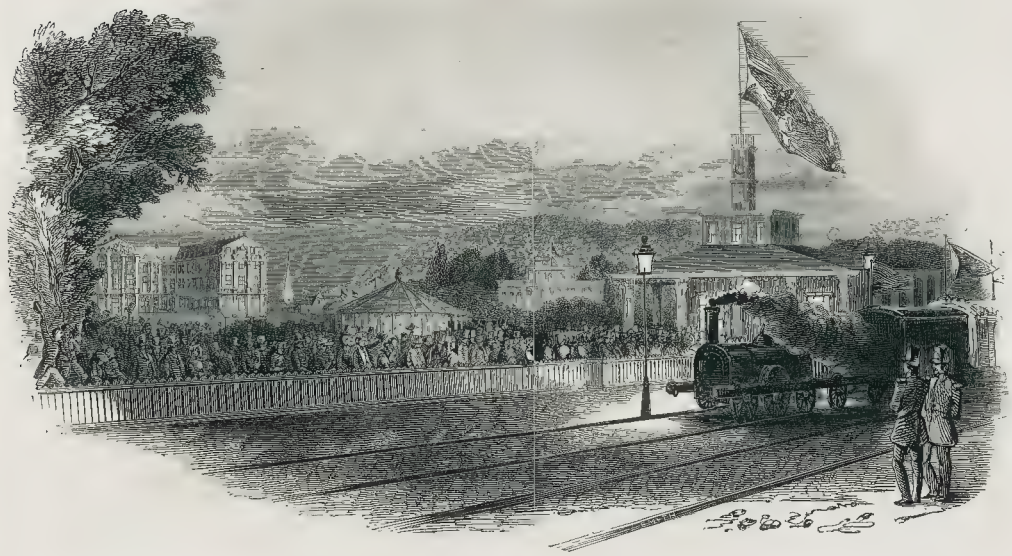
CONCERT AT THE BEETHOVEN HALL.

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO GERMANY.

We resume our Illustrations with the scene of her Majesty's Arrival at the Railway Station at Brühl, fully detailed in our Journal of last week. In the left-hand distance are shown the Royal palace, the church, and town, of Brühl; and to the left is a handsome pavilion; and in the foreground is the railway station, upon which waves the national flag of Prussia.

Our next Illustration represents the Grand Military Concert, given in front of the Palace of Brühl, on the arrival of her Majesty. Not less than 600 musicians, composed of thirty of the bands of different regiments in the Prussian service, joined their efforts to produce a concert, or musical salute of welcome. The effect of such an enormous mass of sound, regulated, as it was, by the finest musical taste, and accomplished with the most perfect precision of execution, was more grand than any to which we are ordinarily accustomed. The accessories and associations connected with the occasion added still more to the interest of the scene. This monster band performed the English National Anthem and "Rule, Britannia," besides some of the marches of Beethoven and Meyerbeer, and some of the National Prussian airs. They also beat the tattoo in the Prussian fashion. Among the vast body of musicians there was an enormous number of drummers, whose skilful playing produced an effect that we do not often associate with the idea of that instrument. The execution was so perfect, that a complete gradation of musical sounds was kept up, from the softest of the piano up to the most deafening forte that was ever inflicted on mortal ears. Great crowds of people were assembled around the Palace, by whom the Queen and her Royal host were enthusiastically cheered. Her Majesty, after listening for some time to this new kind of military concert-

(Continued on page 120.)



ARRIVAL OF HER MAJESTY AT BRUHL.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

Sunday, August 24.—14th Sunday after Trinity. St. Bartholomew.
Monday, 25 Battle of Cressy, 1346—Revolution at Brussels, 1830.
Tuesday, 26.—Prince Albert born, 1819—Battle of Dresden, 1813.
Wednesday, 27.—Admiral Blake died, 1657—Siege of Algiers, 1816
Thursday, 28.—St Augustine—Municipal Corporations Bill passed, 1835
Friday, 29 St. John Baptist beheaded—Royal George foundered, 1782.
Saturday, 30.—Great Fire at Constantinople, 1833—Whig Ministry re signed, 1841.

High Waters at London-bridge, for the Week ending August 30.

Monday.	Tuesday.	Wednesday.	Thursday.	Friday.	Saturday
M. h. m. 7 8	A. h. m. 7 29	M. h. m. 7 49	A. h. m. 8 35	M. h. m. 9 16	A. h. m. 9 57	M. h. m. 10 37	A. h. m. 11 15	M. h. m. 11 51	A. h. m. 0 3	M. h. m. 0 21	A. h. m. 0 3.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"A Subscriber," Manchester —Prince Alfred Ernest Edward, the youngest of the Royal Family, was born August 6, 1844.

"A Constant Reader" will find the tenets of the Swedenborgians explained in No. 122 of our journal, page 144. The study of shells is termed conchology. We cannot spare room to reply to our correspondent's other four (!) questions.

"A Typo."—Colonel Hawker's "Instructions to Young Sportsmen" is an excellent practical work, in its eighth edition. Captain Lacy's "Modern Shooter" is likewise a work of merit, but the former has our preference.

"A Subscriber from the commencement."—See the accounts of Jersey and Sark in No 143 of our journal: the income named will suffice.

"Elia."—To obtain an order to view the Royal Palaces our correspondent may address an application to the Secretary to the Lord Chamberlain, accompanied by proper reference or introduction.

"T. W. R."—Queen-square.—Declined, with thanks.

"H. S." Regent's-park.—The engravings of Gotha and Coburg, from his Royal Highness Prince Albert's beautiful drawings, will not be obtainable detached from our journal.

"A Poor Scholar," Sheffield.—Cicero's oration, "Pro Plancio," by Wunder, may be purchased separately from his other works.

"J. R." Leeds.—The address of Mr. Benecafe, patentee of the new hames, is Brighton.

"Astrop," near Banbury, will not be liable to extra duty, or to penalty, provided the horse be not lent upon hire.

"A. A. C." Taunton.—is thanked for the sketch.

"A Crewkerne Correspondent," Birkenhead, and "A Kirkdale Correspondent."—From 130 to 150 boys are admitted annually into Christ's Hospital, and lists of governors who have presentations for the year may be obtained at the hospital in the early part of each year.

"One of your Oldest Subscribers."—We do not perceive the applicability of his remarks.

"R. S."—In playing quoits the nearest of the quoits to the hob, (or iron pin driven into the ground), are reckoned towards the game.

"F. W. B." There is no specific punishment provided by law for the breach of confidence in question.

"Yorkshire Bite." Sheffield.—A'vd's Self Instructing French Grammar."

"Cobbett's French Grammar" is a sound work of its class. In reply to our correspondent's second question, "Why hollow pillars bear a greater weight then solid ones?" because the substance, standing further from the centre, resists with a larger lever. (See also "Penny Cyclopædia," art. Materials, Strength of,

"J. G. B." Baldock, may venture to address a letter of inquiry to the Under Secretary of State for the Home Department.

"A G."—Householders only are liable to serve on a coroner's jury.

"Beatrice," Kelvanston, is recommended to order our Journal of Mr. Bunyck. news agent, Edenburgh.

"T. H B." St. Paul's. It will be requisite to obtain the interest of one or more of the directors of the London Dock Company.

"J. K." New York.—The sketch is useless; its transmission cost us 8d. postage.

"Miranda," Curzon.—Our Chess Department was unavoidably omitted last week

"G. R. W.," Edmonton, is thanked; but we have not room.

"G. G. H." who is about to proceed to the Island of Mauritius, may take out, with advantage, cotton goods, woollen cloth, hats, iron and steel manufactures, &c. (See art. "Mauritius," in the "Penny Cyclopædia," an excellent geographical authority.)

"C. K." Brandon.—We have not at hand the parliamentary return of the relative number of persons killed by railway and coach travelling in question by our correspondent.

"Anonymous," Ireland.—The railway fares from Liverpool to London are 42*s* 2*d*., and 17*s* 11*d.*

"R. P. B."—Are not in possession of the relative dimensions of the kitchens at Trinity (?) and at Windsor.

"A Constant Subscriber." Lithography is, perhaps, the best method for multiplying designs to so small a number as 100 or 150 copies.

"Peregrinus's" paper on Ostend will not suit.

"Kate."—The letter had much consideration, but not marry, though first cousins may, is a popular error. (See "Barrington on the More Ancient Statutes.")

"John Curious."—The arms, as borne on the seal of the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, are "Gu., three lions passant guardant or." There does not appear to be any motto to either the Duchy of Lancaster or the Bishopric of Lichfield and Coventry.

"G H."—The South Wales Railway Bill received the Royal assent during the late session.

"J. C." a subscriber, should refer to our last volume for the details of the Hungerford Suspension Bridge.

"T. P." Southampton.—Rococo as a term introduced after the Paris Revolution of 1830, condemnatory of old regime: thus, a Regnier would be called Rococo; or, in plain English, old fashioned. In Fleming and Tibbins's "French Dictionary," quarto, we find Rococo to be characteristic of a bad style ornament of the time of Louis XV.; also, burlesque satire.

"D. U. P."—We do not undertake to decide disputes at cards.

"A Subscriber,"—Count d'Orsay is the son of General d'Orsay, a distinguished officer, and representative of one of the oldest families of the French nobilesse. His sister is the present Duchess de Grammont, and his nephew the Duc de Guiche

"Temple" (a subscriber from the first Number).—A person, A, having no armorial bearings of his own, is unable to bear his wife's arms at all, for, having no shield, he has no means of carrying his wife's escutcheon of pretence; nor can his son, for the same reason, though also married to an heiress, use either his mother's arms as a quartering, or his wife's, on an escutcheon. If A were entitled to arms he would carry the ensigns of his wife, the heiress, on an escutcheon of pretence, and the lady's arms would descend as a quartering to their son, who would add, on his marriage to an heiress, an escutcheon of pretence for her, which their descendants would inherit as an additional quartering. To set the matter right, A should apply to the Earl Marshal for a grant of arms

"E. E. P."—Our correspondent's two questions may be answered in the affirmative.

"A Subscriber," Cornhill, should inquire of any bookseller in his neighbourhood

"A Sherbornian."—The Small Debts Act came into operation a few days since.

"F. H."—Address, Railway Times Office, Fleet street.

"Dunwright," Dunstable.—See the "Portrait Illustrations of the Waverley Novels."

"C. D.," Barnstaple.—The refusal would be illegal.

"A Subscriber."—The story of "England and France," originally published in our journal, may be had in a volume, at No. 194, Strand.

"An Old Subscriber" had better consult a respectable solicitor on the will case, date 1715.

"A Lady," Worcester.—We regret that we cannot spare room for the dates requested, which may be found in any almanack for the year.

"Un Etranger à Londres."—See the Census of 1841, published in our journal two Nos.

"W. R." The population of the parish of Croydon, in 1841, was 16,712: the population of the town is not specified.

"An Old Sub." is thanked for his facete criticism, which has been referred to the designer.

"An Irish Subscriber."—Splash-board is the usual term.

"To a 149 Weeks Subscriber."—None of the Government annuities are payable quarterly.

"H. C. Harris," Philadelphia.—The question put by our correspondent can only be properly solved by an actuary, who would charge a fee for his calculation.

"J. B." Wootton-under-Edge.—The Bill in question was withdrawn, and the Commons Inclosure Bill, which was passed, was substituted for it.

"R. H., jun."—A knot is a mile by sea.

"A Constant Subscriber," Nottingham.—Address, Weale, Architectural Library, Holborn.

"J."—The best source we know of is the University Calendars.

"S. C.," Manchester.—The address of the Guarantee Society is No. 28, Poultry.

Ineligible.—"Sonnet by H. C.," Kennington.

Her Majesty's Visit to Germany.—We are compelled, by the number of Illustrations of the Royal Progress to Stolzenfels, in the present Number, to defer the continuation of the Series of Views in Coburg and Gotha from His Royal Highness Prince Albert's Drawings. Next week, however, we shall be enabled to continue those highly interesting Illustrations, with our Report of the Royal Visits to the several picturesque localities. At the same time, we shall resume our Illustration of the Royal Route from Mayence to the romantic territory of the Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 23, 1845.

A few days previous to the close of the late Session of Parliament, Mr. Hume brought under the consideration of the House a subject, which, though not of the vital importance that generally appertains to the public questions usually discussed in the Legislature, is, however, vested with sufficient interest for the industrial classes of the community to warrant our directing attention to it. We refer to the free admission of the public to Cathedrals. The cultivation of taste—in other words, the development of that innate power of perception and admiration of the beautiful, as shown in the creations of genius, which is implanted in the human mind—even if it be effected but in a slight degree, gives greater elevation of thought, and a higher tone generally to the mental faculties, and is thus calculated to produce great advantage even of a physical kind; for the gin-shop or the gambling-table offer but little attraction for the dissipation of health and wealth to the man who can derive a purer gratification from the study of works of art, or the contemplation of the monuments of the Mighty Dead. The throwing open the magnificent Cathedrals of Great Britain to the public free from any pecuniary charge, would furnish to the humbler classes opportunities of that mental culture to which we allude; and we most earnestly hope that the laudable perseverance with which Mr. Hume has exerted himself to have that object accomplished, shall be attended with success.

Sir Robert Peel, in the observations which he made in reply to the honourable gentleman on the occasion alluded to, showed that he heartily approved of the free admission of the public to those sacred edifices; and he stated that, in consequence of a communication which he had had from the Dean of Westminster, he understood that the Abbey, with some special exceptions, was to be thenceforth thrown open to the public, without fee or payment being required. Since that a letter has appeared in the daily papers from Mr. Hume, which is accompanied by a note addressed to that honourable gentleman by the Dean of Durham, in which the Very Rev. Dignitary informs him that "the Cathedral of Durham has been open to the public for several hours a day for the last four years, without any payment being required from any one;" and that "not one instance of misconduct on the part of any one of the numerous visitors has come to his knowledge;" thus bearing out the opinion expressed both by Sir Robert Peel and Mr. Hume—that there is no ground whatever for the reason assigned to justify the exclusion of the public, viz., the apprehension that injury to the monuments of art which are deposited in the Cathedrals would result from the unrestricted admittance to them of the many. If, then, there remain any of the great temples of religion of which England may be so justly proud, still closed, as we fear the greater portion of them are, against the poor, we would impress on the respective Deans and Chapters that while they have no proofs that the people would misconduct themselves if freely admitted, there is abundant evidence to show that their demeanour would be marked by decorum and respect. It is, to say the least, very uncharitable to presume that because a man is poor, he must, therefore, necessarily be an ill-behaved, mischievous fellow; and lessons of uncharitableness should not come from the dignitaries of the Church.

By the late arrivals from America we learn that the consummation of one of the most extraordinary political steps ever taken by a free people has been lately effected in Texas.

The people of that country, on the 4th of July, it is stated, in Convention assembled, gave, at last, their unqualified assent to the incorporation of their State in the Union of the great American Republic—that voluntarily giving up that independence which communities have in all ages so earnestly sought to obtain and preserve.

To declare that this voluntary surrender of the gem, generally purchased by nations at so much cost, is incompatible with wisdom, would be presumptuous in the extreme. The peculiar circumstances of Texas may render it consistent with the true interests of its people, to seek that strength and support in the bosom of the United States, which it, no doubt, so much needs, in common with all young States, and which they may see no prospect of its acquiring. It would be strange, indeed, if the Texans did not understand their own interests as well as other nations; and when we find that the Annexation is the will of the people generally (provided our informant, the Washington Union, speak the truth), we, who are remote from the scene, and can only acquire our information on the subject at second-hand, are bound to believe that it is done all for the best.

Whether the Mexicans, who still lay claim to Texas as a portion of their territory, will declare war against the contracting parties in this extraordinary union or not, is said to depend on the results of the Presidential election in Mexico. If the Mexicans are wise they will not embroil themselves with Jonathan. They may gratify their pride by engaging in hostilities with the people of the United States; but at the end of a few months they will find their pride shall have cost them dear—that they shall "have paid too dear for their whistle."

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

Birthday of the Duchess of Kent.—The anniversary of the birthday of her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, which this year fell on Sunday, was, on Monday evening, celebrated by her Royal Highness's tradespeople, &c., illuminating their houses in honour of the auspicious occasion.

The Queen Dowager at Bristol.—Her Majesty the Queen Dowager arrived at Bristol by a special train, at three o'clock, on Wednesday, from Devonshire, and proceeded to visit Clifton. Notwithstanding the shortness of the notice, the station was handsome.y carpeted and decorated, and the platform was crowded by elegantly-dressed ladies and gentlemen, by whom her Majesty was loudly cheered. Her Majesty was accompanied by the Duchess of Leiningen and the two Princesses of Saxe Weimar, and was attended by Earl Howe, Earl Denbigh, and Dr. Davis, her physician in ordinary. The Queen Dowager returned to Bushy Park from Bristol on Thursday afternoon.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

OXFORD. August 16.

The following gentlemen were yesterday elected to scholarships at Corpus Christi College.—Mr. William Ogle, from Rugby, on the Oxfordshire foundation; Mr. Charles Frederick Blackstone and Mr. Philip Lutley Sclater, both from Winchester, on the Hants foundation.

CAMBRIDGE. Aug. 14.

The Bishop of St. Asaph.—Dr. Carey, the Bishop of St. Asaph, has been much indisposed. The right reverend prelate, we regret to hear, is labouring under an attack of erysipelas, but no immediate danger is apprehended.

The Rev. George Dowry, curate of Toddington, Lancashire, has been presented to the New District or Perpetual Curacy of Walsden, Diocese of Chester; patroness, the Queen.

The Lash at Woolwich.—On Wednesday morning another of these disgusting exhibitions took place in the Riding-house of the Royal Horse Artillery, Woolwich Common, when gunner and driver Michael Stokes, 9th Battalion Royal Artillery, who was tried by garrison court-martial, found guilty of the crime of purloining from his comrades regimental necessaries, and sentenced to receive 150 lashes. At a quarter to seven o'clock in the morning the victim was tied up to the triangles. A few lashes rendered a healthy man's back one mass of wounds and blood, which caused the stoutest hearts to shudder. Several "young recruits" could not stand, and actually fell out of the ranks, and fainted on the spot. Old veterans, who have faced the cannon's mouth, without fear of death, could scarcely maintain their position in the ranks. The poor mutilated soldier received the whole of the number awarded.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

TATTERSALL'S.

Monday.—Passing the Ebor and Great Yorkshire Stakes, in which scarcely anything was done, we confine the notice to the St. Leger, selecting Weatherbit, the Merry Monarch, and The Baron, as the three prominent favourites of the day; all were backed freely, nevertheless so considerable a portion of the money laid against Weatherbit came from quarters supposed to have an indirect communication with those who ought to know something about the stable, that we feel disposed to recommend the intimated to keep their eyes open. The Baron, Sultan, and Wood Pigeon were in favour: on the other hand, Dawson's two, Old England and Pantaloon, were at a discount.

HIGH HANDICAP.

4 to 1 agst Castaway filly (t)	10 to 1 agst any other
2 to 1 agst Miss Ellis (t)	6 to 1 agst Annandale

GREAT YORKSHIRE STAKES.

ST LEGER.

4 to 1 agst Forth's lot (t)	15 to 1 agst Annandale	30 to 1 agst Wood Pigeon (t)
2 to 1 —— Barnes (t)	25 to 1 —— the Baron	40 to 1 —— Kedger (t)
10 to 1 —— Weatherbit (t)	25 to 1 —— Guld Ireland (t)	40 to 1 —— Ions
8 to 1 —— Mentor	30 to 1 —— The Parish (t)	40 to 1 —— Mac-an-Durras
8 to 1 —— Merry Monarch, (t)	40 to 1 —— Connaught Ranger

No change in the Derby betting

Tattersall.—The absence of nearly all the leading speculators at York caused the business to be so flat, that, in appending a list of prices, we must forewarn our readers that they are purely nominal:—

HIGH HANDICAP.

7 to 4 agst Miss Ellis	8 to 1 agst Hope (t)
4 to 1 —— Annandale	12 to 1 —— Jingleput (t)
25 to 1 agst Annandale winning the mile and the St. Leger (t)

GREAT YORKSHIRE.

ST LEGER.

8 to 2 agst Forth's lot (t)	10 to 1 agst Merry Monarch	35 to 1 agst Kedger (t)
11 to 2 —— Weatherbit (t)	15 to 1 —— Annandale	40 to 1 —— Connaught Ranger (t)
8 to 1 —— Merry Monarch (t)	15 to 1 —— the Baron	40 to 1 —— Mac-an-Durras
	25 to 1 —— Guld Ireland (t)

YORK RACES Wednesday.

The Dundas Stakes of 15 sovs each, 10 ft, with 30 added.

Mr. A. W. Hill's Sweetmeat	.. .. ..	walked over

Sweepstakes of 30 sovs each, 10 ft.

Mr. R. W. Ramsay's br g Mid Lothian	.. .. .. (Lye)	1
Mr. Fox's ch c June	.. ..	2

The Free Handicap Stakes of 10 sovs each, with 50 added.

Mr. Mostyn's b c Dean Swift, 3 years	.. .. .. (Prince)	1
Mr. Meldam's br m Inheritress, 5 yrs	.. .. ..	2

The Zoar Coal Sapling Stakes of 50 sovs each.

Mr Jacques' ch c Spur	.. .. ..	walked over

The Great Ebor Handicap Stakes of 200 sovs, added to a sweepstakes of 20 sovs each.

Lord Zetland's b f Cobelress, by Irritor, four yrs, 6st	..(Abdale)	1
Mr. T. Speed's gr h Everton, five yrs, 7st 2lb	.. .. ..	2

The Filly Stakes of 15 sovs each, 10 ft, with 20 added.

Lord Chesterfield's ro Lollia, by Ambrose	.. .. .. (Nat)	1
Mr. Salvin's bay, Marian Ramsay, by Physician	.. .. ..	2

Her Majesty's Plate of 100 gs, for three-yr-olds and upwards,

Mr. Cooke's b m The Shadow, aged	.. .. .. (Lye)	1
Captain Peyton's b c Magnet, three yrs	.. .. ..	2

Thursday.

The Convivial Stakes of 30 sovs each.

Mr. S. Rees's Alliance	.. .. .. (Templeman)	1
Mr. Heseltine's Snon-a-Getting-Up-Stairs	.. .. ..	2

The Chesterfield Handicap Stakes of 10 sovs each.

Mr Meldam's Philip	.. .. .. (Lye)	1
Mr. Meldam's Godfrey	.. .. ..	2

The Prince of Wales's Stakes of 10 sovs each, for two-year-olds.

Mr. Ramsay's Malcolm	.. .. .. (Lye)	1

The Nimrod Stakes were won by Agriculture, beating the Muley Moloch mare (fell).

The County Cup of 150 sovs; two miles.

Mr. Ramsay's Midlothian	.. .. .. (T. Lye)	1
Sir C. Monck's Castaway filly	.. .. ..	2

ISLE OF WIGHT REGATTA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The annual regatta of the Royal Yacht Squadron has this year been distinguished by many contests of great interest, but the most sporting match of the season took place on Wednesday. It was got up on the spur of the moment on the evening preceding the match, at the Royal Thames Yacht Club House, Cowes, on the Island, 70 guineas were subscribed for a piece of plate for the winner out of four yachts; the Belvedere, the Blue Belle, the Fawn, and the Secret.

The Belvedere, Lord Alfred Paget, is a new yacht this season, and had won already several cups in the Thames and elsewhere. The Blue Belle, Mr. Twisden Hodges, also of very high reputation, both being of iron, and built in the river. The Fawn, Mr. Sibley, was the property of the late Duke previous to Monday, when the Secret, Mr. Wathip, ran second. The two latter yachts are of wood, and built at Poole; the interest of the match mainly consisting in the opportunity afforded for trying the comparative merits of wood and iron, as the time for starting approached, the betting in front of the Squadron Club-house became very brisk, and varied as the wind, which had been all night a heavy gale from the west, appeared to freshen or slacken.

At length the signal-gun was fired, and away they started, staggering under topsails and double-reefed mainsails, which seemed rather inclined to impel them under the water, rather than through it, as they went. They were, however, in most gallant style, followed and attended throughout the course by most of the yachts in the harbour.

The competing yachts kept running before the wind from Cowes to the Nab Light—about eighteen miles. They rounded that point in the following order:—Belvedere, Secret, Blue Belle, and Fawn, but so close together that it was difficult to distinguish them came down the tide in a line back against a head-wind to Yarmouth at the other extremity of the island. The Belvedere maintained her position over the Cowes, when the Secret took the lead slightly, the Belvedere making the most desperate efforts to recover it, but the Blue Belle came upon her. The Fawn had already sprung her mast, and put back into Cowes Harbour, not, as a critical moment, when the Belvedere was making a desperate push for the lead, her mast broke short off about ten feet from deck, carrying with it over the side the whole rigging, sails and all. Instantly several yachts bore down to the dismantled vessel, and the Marquis of Argyesey's beautiful yacht, the Pearl, took her into tow, but shortly after handed her over to the Jobia, G. H. Whalley, Esq., by whom she was towed into harbour. The contest then lay between the Blue Belle and the Secret, and terminated at length, as the Secret coming in just two minutes before the Blue Belle. By a singular coincidence, at the same moment, a large vessel was bearing down under a press of canvas, which proved to be H.M.S. Fawn, 26, Capt. Lord Caresne Pagot, from foreign service; and no doubt an interesting meeting took place between the gallant old Marquis and his two gallant sons.

The Marylebone Club and Ground v. The West Herts Club.—This match was not commenced until Friday, nor concluded before a late hour on Saturday last. Marylebone were in a minority of 44 runs.

Royal Harwich Yacht Club.—By a letter from his Excellency the Baron Moncorvo, dated "Portuguese Legation, London, 18th August, 1845," the vessels of the Royal Harwich Yacht Club have received the privilege of being admitted into the harbours of Portugal free of port-charges. Holland and the Hanse Towns have granted the same boon.

Boat Regatta.—A very excellent rowing match, under the patronage of Earl Fitzhardinge, Admiral Stopford, and the nobility and gentry of the vicinity, amongst six young watermen of the place, came off on Monday, in the presence of some thousands of spectators. It was won, after five heats, by James Allen.

The Moors.—Tuesday se'nnight grouse shooting commenced all over the country, and since then, notwithstanding unfavourable weather, there has been an immense slaughter of game. On the fells and other preserves in the counties of Northumberland, Cumberland, and Westmoreland, grouse are pretty plentiful, the young being the strongest of the broods, especially the nests, are only small, and not so plump as they have been known in former years. The coveys are tolerably numerous; numbers of them are already packed together, and being wild and strong on the wing, as some moors, it was with difficulty that they were come within range of; but from the accounts hitherto received from the moors, the sport was excellent, especially on Wednesday, which was a most bright day, and the packs of birds were found basking on the sides of the hillocks.

Kirkcudbright Election.—Mr. Maitland, the Whig candidate, has been elected for this borough by a majority of 148 over Mr. M'Douall. The numbers being—For Mr. Maitland, 486; for Mr. M'Douall, 344.

Aristocratic Marriages.—The nuptials of Lord Macdonald with Miss Wyndham, daughter of Lord Egremont, of Petworth, were solemnised on Thursday morning, in the presence of a numerous and distinguished circle. The marriage of the Reverend Mr. Dalton, Chaplain to the Bishop of London, with Miss Bloomfield, the youngest reverend prelate's daughter, was also solemnised on that day, at the Palace, Fulham.

Superstition in the Nineteenth Century.—(From a Correspondent.)—In the back settlements of the parish of Margaret Roothing, Essex, a young man lives with his mother; he had been for some time grievously and sorely afflicted with intermittent fever and ague. Physicians had visited him in vain—he still remained ill, until a Cunning Woman was consulted, who resides near Epping Forest, and the Recate prescribed that "a small nut should be cut in two, the kernel extracted, and a live spider placed in the shell, which was to be worn right in a bag, and worn round his neck, and as the spider wasted so would the fever leave him." The charm was procured—he positively wore it, and (nothing like faith, galvanic rings to wit) the youth recovered, and is able to undertake his harvest. O tempora! O mores!

We learn from Vienna that her Royal Highness the Duchess d'Angoulême has resolved to make Frohsdorff her permanent residence, and that she has already received there the visits of several members of the Imperial Family of Austria.

POSTSCRIPT.

COLLIERY EXPLOSION AND LOSS OF FIFTY LIVES.

A colliery accident of a very serious description took place on Thursday afternoon at Yarrow Colliery, near Newcastle, on the Durham side of the Tyne. An explosion of fire damp occurred in the lower seam of the pit. The effect was terrific. Nearly one hundred men were in the pit at the time, and one half of them, being near the pit's mouth, readily escaped. Thirty five were in the lower seam, and it is certain, met with instantaneous death; and no attempt can be made to recover their bodies for several days. Fourteen more, it is ascertained, were in a part of the pit where the explosion must have been equally fatal, and of these no hope of rescue but to the mouth of the pit. Several attempts have been made to descend the pit, one of which has resulted in the death of an under-hewer belonging to the colliery.

PROTESTANT DEMONSTRATION AT LISBURN.—A Protestant or Orange "demonstration" took place at Lisburn, on Wednesday, for the avowed purpose of sympathising with James Watson, Esq., of Brockhill, on his late dismissal from the magistracy and deputy-lieutenancy of the county Antrim. The chair was occupied by the Marquis of Downshire, at which many magistrates were present. It is estimated that from 15,000 to 20,000 persons attended the meeting. After some excited speeches, the following Resolution was agreed to:—"That we witness with regret, approbation, and dissatisfaction, the system of policy which her Majesty's Ministers have for some time pursued, and appear resolved to continue, with reference to her Majesty's loyal and devoted subjects, the Protestants of Ireland; the disaffected and disloyal being the objects of confidence and favour, while the faithful and attached are treated with contempt and disregard, subjected to insult, and made the objects of unmerited persecution." The next resolution passed was this:—"That we consider the removal of James Watson, Esq., of Brockhill (a gentleman respected and venerated by all who know him), from the office recently and unjustly deprived of the county of Antrim, to be a wanton exercise of arbitrary power, unjustified by the letter or the spirit of the statutes which have been made to her Majesty's loyal and dutiful subjects, the Protestants of Ireland, the disaffected and disloyal being the objects of confidence and favour, while the faithful and attached are treated with contempt and disregard, subjected to insult, and made the objects of unmerited persecution." The next resolution passed was this:—"That we consider the removal of James Watson, Esq., of Brockhill (a gentleman respected and venerated by all who know him, from the deputy-lieutenancy and magistracy of the county of Antrim, to be a wanton exercise of arbitrary power, unjustified by the letter or the spirit of the statutes which have been made to her Majesty's loyal and dutiful subjects, the Protestants of Ireland, the disaffected and disloyal being the objects of confidence and favour, while the faithful and attached are treated with contempt and disregard, subjected to insult, and made the objects of unmerited persecution." The Rev. E. Leslie denounced Sir R. Peel in coarse terms, accusing him of having told a "lie" about Maynooth. Another speaker (Mr. Richardson) spoke of Sir R. Peel in the following terms:—"There could not be found an instance in history of any man's having betrayed such a high trust as that placed in the hands of Sir Robert Peel. (A voice, "Except Judas." which he had). We have not too high an opinion of the Protestants since he had been Secretary in Ireland, and in conjunction with the Duke of Wellington, who had come down to the house with eighty proxies in his pocket to pass measure most injurious to the Protestant interest. They ought to feel obliged to the large portion of the county magistrates who had favoured them with their noble, fearless, and straightforward support that day. The report in one of the Irish papers says—"At the close of one of the speeches, in support of a resolution which condemned the dismissal of Mr Watson from the deputy lieutenancy and magistracy of the county of Antrim, three groans were given for the traitor Peel, three cheers for Watson, and three cheers for the Marchioness of Downshire; all of which, but particularly the first, were responded to with great vigour." A petition to the Queen, praying for the restoration of Mr Watson, and also a resolution expressive of sympathy towards that gentleman, were agreed to

A SON OF LORD RANFURLY DROWNED.—On Monday last, about one o'clock, as the Hon. Granville Knox, accompanied by his friend Mr. Bryant, who are pupils of the Rev. Mr. Vallack, of Budeau, were bathing immediately under the little cottage on the Devonshire side of Saltash ferry, while walking into the water, lost his footing, owing to the sudden shelving of the bank, and got beyond his depth. Mr. Bryant rushed to his assistance, and held him up for some time by grasping the long hair of his head, but Mr Knox having suddenly caught hold of and clung to Mr. Bryant so closely as to endanger his safety, he was obliged to leave him, and he sank immediately. Mr. Bryant gave an alarm, and a boatman and man who was near the spot groped with his paddle to find the body, but could not discover it. and though perseverring exertions were made by the Saltash men they were unsuccessful until the next day, when they found the body, accidentally at low water, on an oyster bank, about three quarters of a mile from the spot of the melancholy casualty. The young gentleman, who was a son of Lord Ranfurly, was between fifteen and sixteen years of age, and was much beloved for his amiable disposition. He had only just returned from visiting his friends.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE.—The latest Paris papers discuss the recent religious disturbances in Germany. A correspondent of the Journal des Débats, whose communication is dated the 18th inst., states, that although the agitation had not wholly subsided, no further collision between the citizens and the military had taken place. the funeral of the parties who were killed in the émeute having passed off more quietly than was anticipated. The excitement, however, still has ceased to manifest itself by acts of violence, still continues, and begins to occasion considerable uneasiness to the Continental Governments. A violent hurricane did much damage in Paris and its neighbourhood on Tuesday. At the Tuileries the Pavilion Marsan was completely unroofed, and large trees were torn up by the roots in all directions In the neighbourhood of Rouen three manufactories had been blown down, and upwards of 100 bodies had been taken out of the ruins.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

THE LATE ACT FOR THE RECOVERY OF SMALL DEBTS.—Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque sat, on Monday, at the Court of Bankruptcy, to hear summonses under the Act just passed for the Recovery of Smal Debts. A number of shabby-looking wretches, who, by the operation of the Act, could aspired to the honour of appearing in the Court of Bankruptcy, were marshalled to answer the calls of their respective creditors, and, hanging on their rear, were the whole posse of forcgal street practitioners, who, with genteel spectability and professional skill have been immortalised in the "Pickwick Papers" There were fourteen summonses, all of which were dismissed for want of proper exception, in which a solicitor obtained an order against an unfortunate tailor for five shillings a week, in liquidation of a bill of costs incurred in carrying the said tailor recently through the Insolvent Court.

THE CASE OF MR. GIBBS.—REFUSAL OF A CERTIFICATE.—In the Court of Bankruptcy, on Wednesday, Mr. Commissioner Holroyd gave judgment in the case of Mr. Gibbs. The bankrupt had carried on business as a serivener, and was an attorney. The learned Commissioner said, the bankrupt had been for some years in a hopeless state of insolvency, and had borrowed money at a rate of interest nothing could justify. There had been an annual loss from 1839 to 1845, which had continued to advance, as from 1837 to 1843 it amounted to £38,000. At the time of the bankruptcy he owed £16,000, and liabilities, £41,000 more The assets have only realised about £5,000, and very little more was expected, so that after payment of the expenses, the probability was, that the dividend would be only 1s. in the pound. The bankrupt had altogether failed acting the part of an honest tradesman In 20 years his payments for discounts amounted to £90,000 The rate of discount ranged from 25 to 60 per cent., and most of the money was appropriated to his own use. The learned Commissioner alluded to several cases established against the bankrupt, particularly the one concerning that Lord Strathmore's estates were unencumbered, obtaining bills from General Wyndham to the amount of £13 000., which he got discounted a few days after at 40 per cent., and appropriated the money to his own use. Reviewing the circumstances, he was bound to refuse the certificate.

THE OPERA HOUSE. His Honour also gave judgment in the case of Mr. Chambers. The principal point was, whether certain freeholders property, amongst which was the Opera House, and possessed before the bankruptcy by James Chambers, was to be applied for the benefit of the joint creditors. His Honour decided that it should be. The consequence of this decision is that there will ultimately be a dividend of 15s to 17s in the pound.

THE CASE OF COLONEL COFFRAND.—The case of this insolvent was again heard in the Court of Bankruptcy, on Thursday. At a former examination he entered debts in his schedule to the amount of £38,000, but which he stated were chiefly renewed debts, after certificate had been granted, and which certificate was then in the hands of a solicitor, who had a lien on it. The insolvent, late a colonel in the army, it will be recollected, had in some degree mixed himself up with Lord Hunting'ower, and having had the former examination adjourned to amend his schedule, he now appeared for his interim order, and was supported by Mr James and Mr. Sturgeon. The amended schedule had now reduced the whole to £10,000, as Mr. Dobson, who had claimed £23,500, had written to say that he had reduced the claim to £1800.—After considerable discussion, his Honour granted the bankrupt his interim order, gave the protection, and adjourned the case to an indefinite period.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.

ACTION AGAINST THE ARGUS INSURANCE OFFICE.—At Liverpool, on Monday, an action was tried "Schwabe, administratrix, v. Clift." The plaintiff sought to recover from the Argus Insurance Office the sum of £999, being the amount of a policy effected in that office on the life of Lonz Schwabe, deceased The payment of the policy was resisted on the ground that Mr. Schwabe had committed suicide, in which case it was, by the terms of the policy, provided that it should be void. The Solicitor General stated the case, and examined witnesses to prove the circumstances of the death of the deceased; and Mr. Knowles having been heard on the other side, Mr Justice Cresswell, in summing up, stated that the only question was that of insurance for the sum of £999, by the terms of which policy it was provided that if the insured should commit suicide, or die by duelling, or by the hand of justice, the policy should be void. He would direct that, to find for the defendants, they must be satisfied that Mr. Schwabe died by his own hand, and that he was then able to distinguish right from wrong, and able to appreciate the nature of his act as an account able moral agent. He used precise words, as possibly this ruling might be called in question. The terms of the exception in that policy were in case the party should die "by his own hand," and Mr. Justice Erskine and Chief Justice Tindal both treated the expression "suicide" as one of a different import—as an expression well known meaning a felonious taking away of one's own life; and from the judgment of those learned judges there seemed little doubt that if they had had in that case to consider a policy in the same terms as the present, they would have held that to bring the case within the terms of the exception, the party taking his own life must have been an accountable moral agent. He would direct them that, to find for the defendants, they must be satisfied that Mr. Schwabe died by his own voluntary act, and that at the time he was able to distinguish right from wrong. The burden of proof, so far as showing that the party died by his own voluntary act, lay upon the defendants, but, if that were proved, then it lay on the plaintiff to show that he was unable to distinguish right from wrong. Unless until he had proved, every man must be taken to be accountable for his actions.—The jury, after a few minutes' deliberation, returned a verdict for the plaintiff.

THE LATE MURDER AT THE NEW BAILEY, MANCHESTER.—William Clapham was placed at the bar to plead to a charge of having murdered Abraham Tweedle, a prisoner in the New Bailey, Manchester, on the 2nd of August instant, by striking him on the head with a bar of iron. We have already mentioned the circumstances under which the murder was committed. Mr. Wilkins, on the part of the prisoner, applied for the Court to have a jury empanelled to inquire whether he was in sane mind, and capable of pleading to the charge. This course was adopted, and evidence having been given, the jury found that the prisoner was insane, and not in a fit state to plead. Mr. Baron Rolfe The verdict must be recorded, and the prisoner kept in strict custody till her Majesty's pleasure be known.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

FIRE IN ALDERMANBURY, AND GREAT LOSS OF PROPERTY.

On Monday, night about 20 minutes to 8 o'clock, a destructive conflagration, involving the loss of property to the amount of nearly £300,000, broke out on the premises of Messrs. Bradbury, Greatorex, and Beale, French, Scotch, and Manchester warehousemen, of No. 6, Aldermanbury.

The premises in question are considered to be the largest in that line of business in the city of London, extending in the rear from Aldermanbury to the western end of the Guildhall, and abutting on Dyer's-court, on the northern side of the church of St. Lawrence Jewry.

The fire was first discovered by the porters employed in the basement or cellar of the building, and although an immediate alarm was raised, so rapid was consumption of the combustible nature of the stock—were the flames, that before any assistance could arrive, the whole of the lower portion of the premises was on fire, which speedily caught the warehouses above the basement floor, and extended to the upper stories. In less than a quarter of an hour the entire area of those extensive warehouses was in flames from the basement to the roof, and the light created thereby was such that the bridges were crowded with spectators.

So rapid was the progress of the fire that the whole building was one mass of flame before an engine arrived, the first being that of the parish of St. Lawrence Jewry. This was quickly followed by the engine from Watlingstreet and other stations, and also the County and West of England. Notwithstanding the exertions of the firemen, under the orders of Mr. Superintendent Braidwood, the fire continued to progress, and at one time the whole of Aldermanbury, Guildhall, and the church of St. Lawrence Jewry were considered in imminent danger, and but for the extraordinary exertions of the firemen, would have been destroyed.

A man named Diamond states that he was in the top floor at the time the alarm of fire was given, and so rapid were the flames that he was forced to escape without his coat, whilst another named bannuel, asserts that it was with no small degree of difficulty that those on the ground floor were enabled to escape. Mr. Beale, one of the firm, had only arrived from Glasgow that afternoon, and upwards of £10,000 worth of goods had been received during the day.

In consequence of the early period of the fire and the brilliancy of the flames, thousands of people were attracted to the spot.

The loss upon Messrs Bradbury, Greatorex, and Co.'s stock, it is computed by the firm, will exceed the amount insured by £100,000. The total loss by the fire, however, it is supposed by the house best competent to form a correct estimate, will amount to between £200,000 and £300,000.

It appears from the official report that the premises and stock of several houses in Aldermanbury are much injured by fire and water. The warehouse of Messrs. Bradbury, Greatorex, and Co., was totally destroyed. Besides the premises facing Aldermanbury, there were several houses at the rear some 200 feet to the western extremity of the Guildhall, the whole of which were thrown into one, and were literally crammed with merchandise of every description. Not a vestige remains of any of the buildings, excepting the walls.

Messrs Coster and Co., the extensive warehousemen at the corner of Dyer's-court, Aldermanbury, have suffered very much from the fire. The bank part of their warehouse has sustained much injury. A large portion of their valuable merchandise was saturated with water, part of the roof on the back warehouse burnt off, and several bed-rooms burnt out. They are insured.

The third important damage is that of Messrs. Oliver and Co., Manchester warehousemen, whose premises adjoined Messrs. Bradbury and Co.'s. In Aldermanbury the stock is injured by water and removal, part of the roof carried away, and several apartments at the top of the building seriously burnt. We understand the insurances effected on this property to be—Sun Fire Office, Royal Exchange, and Phœnix; total £35,000.

During the fire, a young man named Stephen Gundrick, twenty-seven years of age, sustained a serious injury. It seems that Gundrick, who was on his way home, and had reached the church in Aldermanbury, around which the crowd had become exceedingly dense, and in order to avoid the latter he tried to enter the churchyard, by climbing over the railings; in his attempting this, however, he missed his footing, and fell heavily upon the spikes, one of which entered the thick part of his right thigh, and he became literally impaled: he was conveyed in a deplorable state to St. Bartholomew's Hospital.

ATTEMPTED MURDER AND ROBBERY.—A person who gave his name Edward Long, and who represented himself as the son of a laundress in Bayswater, was, on Saturday, examined before Mr. Harris, at Uxbridge, on a charge of attempted robbery and murder. On Friday week he entered the house of Solomon Harris, Esq., Uxbridge, where he attempted first to commit robbery, and afterwards to murder Mrs. Harris by means of a bludgeon.—Mrs. Harris, who appeared to be still in a very weak state, and suffering severely from the injuries the prisoner had inflicted on her, deposed that she was the wife of Mr. Solomon Harris, an inhabitant of Uxbridge. On Friday, the 8th inst., she observed from an upper window a man, who afterwards appeared to be the prisoner, in the back yard of the premises. He seemed to be begging, but she did not take much notice of him at the time. About ten minutes afterwards she went into the front parlour, when she was thunderstruck at seeing the same man whom she had before seen in the back yard standing in the room, having, as must have got through one of the windows. That man was the prisoner. She immediately demanded what he did there, when the prisoner passed her, and directly shut the room door, and told her that his object was plunder or even murder. Witness, being dreadfully alarmed, began screaming violently, upon which the prisoner instantly pulled out a large bludgeon, and commenced beating her over the head, arms, and body most dreadfully, breaking her. Witness's screams brought one of her women servants into the room, and she had very little recollection of what afterwards took place.—He was committed for trial. As the prisoner was being taken to the station-house, he pulled a silver fork and ornament out of his pocket, which the constable took, and he said, "There, that is enough for you." The prisoner also said he was sorry he was taken. He had no wanted money, and finding the window open, he took off his shoes and got in, and at first sat himself down in a chair. The prisoner was convicted at the Central Criminal Court on Wednesday last, and sentenced to fifteen years transportation.

ANOTHER RAILWAY COLLISION.—Another serious railway collision took place, owing to the gross carelessness of one of the company's servants, on the line between Shenfield and Brooking Stations, by which many were injured. A gentleman who was present gives this account of the accident:—"We started from Sunderland by the half-past three o'clock P M. mail train, which was preceded above half an hour by a luggage train, in connection with the three o'clock train from Newcastle, both proceeding at a quick pace at the time. The collision was most fearful, and the consequences very serious to the passengers in the passenger-train, which included Mr. Charles Fox, a great railway proprietor, of Barnsley; Mr. Brunton, town clerk of Sunderland; Mr. Richardson and Mr. Scotch, two highly respectable solicitors of York, who had been canvassing in the election of Mr. Hudson; Mr. Palmy, of the Anti Corn law League; several other gentlemen, and about half a-dozen ladies. Not a single person travelling by our train escaped injury. Mr. Richardson and Mr. Grinch were both badly bruised, and especially the latter gentleman, whose face was painfully disfigured. He was rendered very feeble, owing to loss of blood. Our stoker had, I believe, his arm broken by the engine driver, seeing his danger, saved himself by leaping off the engine. A boy, about 14 years of age, had his eyes frightfully bruised and cut. Mr. Palmy sustained a contusion on the leg. All the women were severely stunned, but more particularly two of them, one of whom had an infant at the breast in her arms, at the time. The child did not seem to be much worse. Having only one carriage with our train, it is miraculous that any life was not sacrificed. The massive iron of our engine and tender was shattered to pieces, and our escape from certain death can only be ascribed to a strong truck which was placed between our carriage and the engine. That coming from Newcastle was a larger train. Its engine was likewise much broken, and many of the passengers injured, but less seriously than those of the other train. When the engine-driver of that train saw danger, he was asked why he did not stop, his only reply was, that he was aware he ought to have stopped, and did not know why he did not do so."

SERIOUS OMNIBUS ACCIDENT.—On Wednesday morning, about nine o'clock, a serious affair occurred to one of Brewer's omnibuses, which plies between Notting-hill and Mile-end gate. The omnibus had just passed Waterloo-bridge, going eastward, when one of the fore-wheels came off, and the passengers on the top were thrown to the ground. Assistance was immediately rendered. One gentleman was placed up bleeding dreadfully from the forehead, and had his leg or thigh broken; another was also seriously injured. The others escaped unhurt. One gentleman was promptly conveyed to Charing-cross Hospital, and the other to his residence. The gentleman who is so much injured is a Mr. Mordaunt, a linen factor, who was going to his offices, situate at No. 1, Sambrook-court, Basinghall-street, and the nature of his injuries is a compound fracture of the leg, besides several internal bruises

ACCIDENT TO MR. GREEN, THE AERONAUT.—It is with extreme pleasure that we are enabled to contradict the rumour that prevailed in town on Thursday, relative to the death of that daring and adventurous aeronaut, Mr. Charles Green, who, it was reported, had lost his life by the destruction of his balloon (with which he ascended from Vauxhall Gardens on Wednesday night), occasioned, as it was stated, by a spark from the fireworks attached to the car igniting with the gas. The following account of the occurrence, noted down by Mr. T. R. Lewis, at the request of Mr Green, will best explain the nature of the accident:—"At the time I left the Gardens the wind was blowing west by south, consequently the balloon took a direction of almost due east. The wind continued in the same quarter during the whole of my voyage. I crossed the Surrey Zoological Gardens, and then got away towards Greenwich, Charlton, and Woolwich. The balloon then bore off across the river to the opposite shore, in the direction of Purfleet. I could have then effected a landing several times had the wind permitted me, and had I had assistance; but knowing that if I attempted a descent with such a boisterous gale, and no help at hand, I should have been carried on to the river, the balloon continued its course till it arrived at the Essex Marshes. I kept it a very low altitude, in fact, at times I was close to the shore, and near to the water's edge. On arriving at a place which, I think, is marked in my map as Osterland, I endeavoured to descend, but the balloon dragged along the land for at least three or four miles, the wind still blowing with great violence from the west, the car at length got into a deep dyke, and I thought that I should be enabled to empty it of the gas. I opened the valve and then got out of the car, but no sooner had I set my feet on the bank of the dyke, than I became entangled in the netting. A gust of wind suddenly drove the balloon out of the ditch, and I was dragged along the ground, till at length the car became secured in another and deeper dyke, I endeavouring the whole of the time to disengage myself from the netting. I for the first time in my life have become alarmed for my safety. I thought of my knife, and happily found it in my pocket. I then commenced cutting away with the greatest vigour, but from the cordage being of peculiar fabric, I experienced the greatest difficulty in liberating myself. The oscillation of the balloon now became frightful, but I held on it firmly, well knowing from the escape of gas, that its ascending power was gone, and that it could only drift by the wind. At length, becoming exhausted, I let go my hold, and the balloon went away. car, grapnel, barometer, and other meteorological instruments, apparently in the direction of Queenborough. It was very dark at the time, but I could distinctly discern the balloon make three or four halts before it became invisible. I then made my way along the banks of the river towards Gravesend without meeting a soul or finding a house open, a distance from the spot where I left the balloon of at least eleven or twelve miles. I arrived at Gravesend about half-past six o'clock, and, to prevent being annoyed by the questions of strangers, I preserved a strict incognito."

COUNTRY NEWS.

SUNDERLAND ELECTION. We were enabled to state the result of the Sunderland Election last week. The official declaration was made on Friday, from which it appears that the majority for Mr. Hudson was 128. A large crowd assembled to witness the proceedings, but the greatest order prevailed. Colonel Thompson did not make his appearance on the hustings, but left the town for London by an early train. Mr Cobden went away on Thursday morning, without waiting the result of the poll. Mr. Bright left on Friday morning, and in the afternoon Mr. Wilson and his friend followed. Mr. Hudson and his friends mustered strong at his committee room in the morning, and accompanied him to the hustings. The Mayor, accompanied by the Town clerk, addressed the assembly as follows: Gentlemen, I now declare to you the state of the poll, the numbers being—for Mr. George Hudson, of the city of York, and alderman of the same city, 926. (Great cheering. For Colonel Thomas Perronet Thompson, 798. (Renewed cheering.) Mr. Hudson duly elected to represent this borough in the Commons' House of Parliament. (Great uproar from Colonel Thompson's friends, and loud cheering from those of Mr. Hudson.) Mr. Hudson returned thanks in appropriate terms, amid much enthusiasm.

DREADFUL EXPLOSION NEAR DUDLEY.—On Monday morning last, a most dreadful accident from fire damp took place at the coal-pits belonging to messrs. Worgastaff and Skidmore, at Tividale, about a mile from Dudley, and between that town and Oldbury, by which twenty men were most dreadfully hurt, and four of whom have since died. The remaining sixteen are in much torment, that but slight hopes are entertained of their being able to survive. Most of the unfortunate men have wives and numerous families, some persons that worked in the pit were also killed at the same time by the fire-damp.

ALARMING ACCIDENT ON THE MIDLAND RAILWAY.—On Monday evening the express train from Leeds to Bradford, which leaves Leeds at six o'clock p.m., ran off the line near Methley, a station on the Midland Railway, about eight miles from Leeds The engine ran down an embankment of some 30 feet in depth, and the coming carriages were broken to pieces. The only carriages attended to it were one of the first and one of the second class, the former being next to the engine. This was broken away from the engine, and the latter was thrown down the embankment, presenting a fearful crash. The second-class carriage was not propelled off the permanent road, but merely overturned on the line, with very slight injuries to the passengers in it. The total number of passengers in the train were only about eight, and three of these were in the first-class carriage. They were a gentleman, who is a millowner, with his wife and daughter, proceeding to Scarborough. The carriage was a new one, beautifully fitted up, consisting only of one apartment, and intended for the accommodation of parties taking summer excursions. This carriage must have rolled over several times in the embankment, and it was shattered to atoms. The only perfect portion of the carriage was the floor—the seats, doors, blinds, &c., being splintered or torn into mere fragments. Very fortunately, the three persons we have mentioned escaped without being hurt in a manner sufficient to give cause for alarm. The lady was more harmed than either husband or her child. They were all cut about the head, and they bled freely for a short time after the scene of the accident. It is exceedingly probable that they were thrown from the carriage when it was broken by the first fall over, as it is impossible they could have remained so completely injured if they had remained inside the carriage, when completely demolished by its rebounding down the embankment. They and the other passengers were removed to Leeds, and medical treatment was procured for those whose attention required it. We are happy to state that from the last accounts there was no cause to apprehend any more serious results than those we have already described. It appears that one of the keepers had noticed that the train had not properly been switched out of the place, the engine ran off its usual course. Another account says: "Amongst the passengers were Mr. Thomas Clegg, cotton-spinner, Manchester, with Mrs. and Miss Clegg, who were proceeding to Scarborough, at which they had been for the benefit of Mrs. Clegg's health. All three were much cut and bruised, and when extricated were bleeding profusely; they were not only wounded, but the lady had received a severe injury about the shoulder, and cut about the head. The two ladies were injured chiefly about the head. Another passenger was Mr. Firth, of the firm of Messrs. Alexander Firth and Co., solicitors, Leeds, who resides in Hanover-crescent, Leeds. He received some severe bruises and contusions, from the effects of which he is still suffering. Amongst the passengers who were less severely injured were Mr. E. Hudson, solicitor; Mr. Charles Hudson, of Leeds, Mr Hirst; and another commercial traveller, who is staying at the Royal Hotel, Leeds. The guard, whose name is Kinnerly; the engineman, named Joseph Kay; and the stoker, named John Lutty, were all considerably hurt."

ANOTHER ACCIDENT ON THE NORTHERN AND EASTERN RAILWAY.—Another serious portion of the Northern and Eastern Railway, on which the late appalling accident took place, was the scene of another frightful occurrence on Tuesday afternoon, of a somewhat similar character, although it was not attended with such a deplorable loss of life as marked the previous one. Yet several of the passengers have received serious contusions, and their escape with life may be truly considered miraculous. It is necessary to state that, since General Pasley's visit, at the recent Coroner's inquiry concerning the death of the stoker who lost his life by the engine running off the line a few weeks since, that it was highly dangerous for the engines to pass over the newly-constructed part of the road—viz., between Bishops Stortford and Ely—at the rate of 30 miles an hour, until it was properly consolidated, the company very properly lessened the speed, and which has been found to turn up contrary, with the tender, into a kind of ditch, pretty full of water. The whole train was then brought to a stand still. The alarm that immediately ensued among the passengers, some were much knocked about by the concussion, may be well conceived. Fortunately, however, with the exception of one who was slightly hurt, they all escaped unmured. Active measures were immediately adopted by the guard to place the carriages on the line, which in the course of two hours was accomplished, and at four o'clock the train resumed its journey to Norwich. To remove the engine and tender from the ditch, by the means then available, however, was perfectly impossible.

ACCIDENT ON THE SOUTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.—As the 8h. 30m. train on the railway was at Walton Station on Wednesday, upon its down journey, the engine then taking in water, the fire-box was rent open by the pressure of the steam, and the engineer much scalded. The fireman was unhurt; so were the passengers; but a man who had just got out of the train was struck by a piece of coke, propelled by the force of the steam, and sustained a slight cut at the back of his head. His escape was a very narrow one. The train, was taken on, after a detention of twenty minutes, by another engine.

GRAND ENTREE OF HER MAJESTY INTO COLOGNE.

(Continued from page 117.)

monstre, retired within the Palace, and the Royal party soon after dined. We now take up the narrative—

(From our own Correspondent.)

COLOGNE, August 13.

The most interesting incident of her Majesty's sojourn in the Prussian dominions occurred yesterday. The Inauguration of the Statue of Beethoven took place at Bonn, in the presence of an immense multitude—her Majesty being present, with the King and Queen of Prussia, and the brilliant suite of both Royalties. The ceremony of uncovering the Statue of the great Composer was to be the chief event of the Musical Festival. The general expectation was not disappointed; everything was conducted most successfully; even the weather relented, and the sunshine gave a brilliancy to the scene; but, soon after the close of the proceedings, again turned to "storm and cloudiness." The "little pearl" of towns, as a lively French authoress calls Bonn, was never so gay or so crowded. It was filled before the fête commenced, and the announcement that the Queen of England would be present at the Inauguration, attracted so many more, that the influx became an overflow.

A peculiar feature of the Festival to the eye of a stranger was the costume of many of the students of the University. Though not general—for the Burschen now are inclined to eschew the eccentricity of manners and costume which marked them of old—they were numerous enough to give a character to the throng; the jaunty cap, the graceful plume, the sash of the colours of his "house," the high boots, and the sabre swinging by his side, give him a "smashing and a martial" air, formerly supported by dissolute manners, drinking, and duelling—all of which are disappearing; the costume still lingers, and it is very picturesque.

GREAT MILITARY CONCERT AT BRUHL

THE CITY OF COLOGNE, FROM DEUTZ.

After the ceremony her Majesty gave receptions to several of the Professors of the University. The Royal party then returned to Bruhl, and prepared for the display of the evening—the illumination of the Rhine and the Cathedral. Cologne still preserves many traces of having been a strongly fortified city; along the river front, runs a line of wall, only broken by the façades of houses or large hotels; between this wall and the water, is a tolerably wide space, serving as a quay, or wharf, where vessels discharge their cargoes.—(See the Engraving.)

On this occasion, the edge of the city quay, above and below the bridge for a line of about two miles, was occupied by a body of infantry in single file; a similar line was drawn up on the opposite, or Deutz bank of the river; they took their stations at an early hour in the evening. The Rhine is here as wide as the Thames at Westminster. Behind the soldiery, crowds of people lined the quay, and above them rose the walls, the gables, the towers, the spires of old "Colona." Passage across the Bridge of Boats was prohibited, and the navigation of the river was

(Continued on page 124.)

ILLUMINATIONS OF COLOGNE.

OTELLO.

A TALE OF THE OPERA.

(Continued from page 93.)

II.

The Duchess received the Stranger with especial courtesy; she introduced him herself to the Princess Sophia, and the name of the Baron Laurun seemed as if it sounded familiarly to her—as if this was not the first time it had struck her ear; she blushed slightly, as she said she believed she had heard that he had served in the French army

Laurun but too well knew that no one save Zronovelski could have told her; he was the more certain of it, that her eyes met his with a certain kind of consciousness, as if they rested on an acquaintance, and that she appeared glad to enter into conversation with him

"You are a stranger here," said the Duchess; "you have not yet been a day in the city; you can have heard nothing, and are therefore impartial I will appeal to you to decide a question between me and Sophia. Do you not think there may be some mysterious agents or powers, which, if we summon them in mockery, may bring down upon us some real disaster ?"

"That is my fair, mother," said the Princess, gaily; "you are trying by your question to entrap the Baron into an answer. Ask him, supposing there was a certain house, from which, at intervals of years, it has happened that six tiles have fallen, always killing some one in the street—whether he would willingly pass it ?"

"Why not ? It can only be because the fastenings decayed with time; the only mysterious power in the matter was the law of gravitation; the tiles were heavy, and—fell !"

"It will not do, Baron. Sophia's comparison is not quite perfect."

"Well then, I will tell the Baron all the controversy. The case is this," said the Princess; "we have here a very good theatre, and a clever company of artists; they can perform all the pieces of the best masters, old and new, and do play them to the delight of the city. But there is one opera that is never performed, and that the most beautiful work of the greatest of living composers. I heard it first at a foreign Court, and the first thing I did on my return was to ask to have it performed here, but my wish has never been gratified; not because the music is too difficult, not because the singers are unequal to it—no, the reason is truly ridiculous."

"And what opera may it be ?" said the Stranger.

"The Otello !"

"Otello ! Certainly it is Rossini's masterpiece," said the Baron; " I know no music that so much affects me. That song which Desdemona sings to her harp, has haunted me for whole days together !"

"Do you hear him, mother ? He comes from Berlin, from Warsaw, from Petersburg, from—I know not where ; but everywhere he can hear 'Otello'! Why should it not be performed here ? For the sake of a tradition that no one now believes."

"Do not make a jest of it," said the Duchess. "There are facts known to me connected with the story that make me shudder whenever I think of it But we speak to our umpire in riddles. Imagine, Baron,—would it not be frightful if, every time Otello was performed, the theatre should be burned down ?"

"Another comparison !" said Sophia, impatiently; " but the tale itself is still more irrational."

"Otello," said the Duchess, "the tragedy of Shakspeare was first acted here fifty years ago, and the theatre was burned. The story goes, that whenever 'Otello' is acted, the same calamity happens. The experiment was made ; for a long period the play was not performed. A new and admirable translation of it was published ; it was acted again, and again the unfortunate occurrence did certainly happen. I remember well when 'Otello' was taken as the subject of an opera, that we laughed over the story, and when it was given here for the first time, we said that the fatal Moor would lose his spell of misfortune since he was made musical. A few days after the opera was played, and 'Otello' had another unlucky sequel. The same thing occurred yet more often after that, and about then the piece has never been played at all. The story seems foolish enough, but it is true. What think you of it Baron ? speak sincerely; what is your opinion of our controversy ?"

"Your Highness is quite right," said the Baron, in a tone between earnest and irony, " and if you will permit me, I will confirm your belief of such things by an example taken from my own experience. I had once an unmarried aunt—of a gloomy and mystical character; we used to call her aunt Feathers, from her always wearing a large black plume in her bonnet. As in the case of your Otello, there was also a firm belief in our family that whenever our aunt paid us a visit, some of us was sure to be taken ill. We used to laugh and joke about it with one another; but, nevertheless, in the train of our aunt there always came disease, and we were so accustomed to it, and so certain it would appear that directly the great black feather was visible in the court-yard, every preparation was made for the coming sickness, and even the doctor was told to keep himself in readiness "

"A rare figure must your Aunt Feathers have been," said the Princess; " I think I see, as she stepped out, how all the household was put in a bustle, and hid themselves, as if the plague had come ; how a messenger was sent directly for drugs and the doctor; all because your Aunt Feathers had called ! Why you had a real and living Otello in your family "

"Do not talk so, Sophia, I beg," said the Duchess imploringly; " such things ought not to be treated so lightly, when they cannot be denied, or explained, or accounted for. So it is here, Baron Laurun, in the train of our aunt there always came disease, and we were so accustomed to it, and so certain it would appear that directly the great black feather was visible in the court-yard, every preparation was made for the coming sickness, and even the doctor was told to keep himself in readiness "

"A rare figure must your Aunt Feathers have been," said the Princess; " I think I see, as she stepped out, how all the household was put in a bustle, and hid themselves, as if the plague had come ; how a messenger was sent directly for drugs and the doctor; all because your Aunt Feathers had called ! Why you had a real and living Otello in your family "

"Do not talk so, Sophia, I beg," said the Duchess imploringly; " such things ought not to be treated so lightly, when they cannot be denied, or explained, or accounted for. So it is here, Baron Laurun, in the train of our aunt there always came disease, and we were so accustomed to it, and so certain it would appear that directly the great black feather was visible in the court-yard, every preparation was made for the coming sickness, and even the doctor was told to keep himself in readiness "

"Yourself!" said the Baron, astounded ; " I thought you said Otello only burned the theatre, not that he killed his audience !"

"Alas ! it was only a simile of my mother's; the real tradition is far more dread and frightful !"

The second act began and the Stranger rose to take his leave; but he looked round him in vain for Le Ambesadeur ; he had long since returned to his box. The Baron was standing in the lobby, uncertain whether he should turn right or left, when he felt the warm pressure of a hand on his own; he looked up, it was Count Zronovelski.

III.

"So my eyes did not deceive me, then," said the Count, "It is you my brave Major ! At the sight of you how old times seem to come back again. The last thirteen unhappy years for me and I am again the free lance as of old ! Vive Pontinowski ! Vive L'Empe "

"In Heaven's name, Count ! think where we are," said the Stranger. Why call up these shadows of the past; They are gone with the years that bore them, leave the dead to their rest "

"Rest !" said the Count, "Rest ! Happy are the dead—for it is a blessing denied to the living. Oh ! that I were with the dead myself, and could share the deep, deep slumber of the grave ! You sleep my brave comrades, and no waking, however loud, may awaken ye ! Why is it that I alone am cursed with consciousness ?"

A dark, restless fire glowed in the eyes of the young Count, and his lips were compressed, as if by inward anguish ; his friend looked at him with sorrow she saw no more the gay and gallant soldier, as he appeared at the head of his men on the battle field; the heartsome and winning smile was changed to a sinister and bitter expression ; the open and careless glance was now distrustful and suspicious, and his cheek bore only too plainly that dim complexion which in the saloons of Paris had gained him the name of the " handsome Pole," and yet, notwithstanding the effects of sorrow and anxiety, the Stranger thought that the Princess might easily be forgiven for her prediction

"You look at me, Major," said the Count after a pause, "as if you would read our old times again in my countenance! It is in vain ! When so much has altered, why should not that change with destiny ?"

"You are not so very much changed, Count, after all, for I know you again at the first glance. One thing I do miss in you—your eye has lost the trustfulness that once so often gladdened all around you. Alexander Zronovelski seems to me as if he could confide in another no more ; and yet I think I read the inmost thought of his heart."

"It is my poor heart," said the Count, "I should scarcely know I had one, but for the frequency with which it beats in sorrow ! And what thought have you read in it save one that has kept an unchanged friendship for yourself ? Blame not the eyes that are bright no more—they looked back too often on a past, for which there is little to gladden them. Come ! my confidence is in my hand, let its grasp tell you that I am still what I was of old !"

"Thanks, thanks, Count ! But why should you read your heart, as I said I can ? and it beats only in sorrow ? What has a certain Princess done, then, that its pulse is so heavy ?"

The Count turned deadly pale, and grasped his friend's hand almost convulsively : " For God's sake, Major, silence ! Do not breathe a syllable on that subject ! know what you mean ; you have guessed truly, and the Demon himself must have sharpened your wits. But why should I not tell you ? I need no flattery to silence ? No one of the Eighth Regiment ever yet betrayed a comrade."

"True ! Count ; but are you as sure that one of the Eighth has never betrayed himself"

"Come into this recess," whispered the Count, as several persons approached them. " Heavens ! does any one but yourself suspect ?

"Give secrets for secrets Count, and I will confess."

"Do not jest with me Major ; another time I will tell you all, but does any but yourself know—?

Major Von Laurun told him that he had only that day arrived, that his dispatches were already in a forward state at the Embassy, and that the Ambassador had that evening brought him to the opera, where, attracted by the beauty of the Princess, he had remained in the Ambassador's box ; that on first entering the Princess Sophia had formed an attachment for some one far beneath her rank. "You say that from the moment entered the Princess' box, and one glance told me you were th t loved one "

"And the Ambassadress ?" said the Count with a tremulous voice.

"Confirmed it," said the Major. "If I do not mistake she spoke also of a lady of the Princess' suite as her informant "

The Count stood for some minutes in deep silence, gazing on vacancy ; he appeared agitated by an inward conflict of feelings—looked up at last almost timidly at the Major and abruptly said—"Can you lend me a hundred Napoleons ?"

The Major was astounded at such a question—and his look denoted it.

"I am a fugitive," said the Count; " I thought I had at last found a place of refuge and peace—and there I have loved—am beloved—oh how deeply !" The tears stood in his eyes, but by an effort he conquered his emotion, and continued in a firmer voice, "It is a strange request I make of you after so long a separation, yet I do not blush in making it, comrade,—do you not remember the day of Mosaisk ?"

"I remember it," said the Major, and his eye flashed and the colour mounted to the cheek

"Do you remember how the Russian artillery was mowing down our ranks, and that moment when the traitor Polsky sounded the retreat "

"Ha !" exclaimed the Major, with the hoarse voice of passion —" too well, too well—a soldier's curse upon his name ! I remember also Count, how you shot the villain down—cried forward ! forward ! Lancers of the Eighth ! and in five minutes the guns were ours "

"You remember ! good. Suppose me in the front of a battery again, a comrade needing support, ay rescue, will you help him in his need ?"

"I will" said the Major

Count Zronovelski paused his hand with emotion, took his arm in silence, hurried him along the corridor, and in a few moments they were in the street

IV.

"Luckily met," said the Count, as he saw his friend next morning in the great square, " I was hurrying to you to ask a small favour—"

"Which I have already rendered you,—the amount is ready if you will return to my hotel with me."

"Oh ! do not speak of it," said the Count, " name not anything so mean as money, for I am happy ! happy as I never knew earth and earthly things to be ! Oh ! have seen her I have told her we are betrayed, observed, that I must fly for ever, for that to be near her, and not to see, not to speak to her, is impossible !"

"And her answer "

"She is greater than the miserable beings who surround her. And what then ? she said ; none can speak evil of us ; if our intimacy is discovered, she knows nothing that I wish to conceal !"

"Sound philosophy" said the Major; "for what people take most pains to hide, it generally do them harm ; but, after so embracing praises, he said,

"You were coming to me, I think—in what way can I serve you ?"

"True" replied the Count; " Sophia knows you are my friend; I have frequently talked to her of you, especially of your saving my life at the passage of the Beresina You were speaking to her yesterday of "Othello," were you not ? The Duchess will not consent to its being acted, on account of some foolish tale or other."

"She was very mysterious on the subject," said the Major, "and, from what I could perceive, she, as you say, will scarcely consent to it."

"And yet," said the Count, " with three words I gained her over. Sophia prayed and entreated. I also assumed a rather serious demeanour, and pointed out how ridiculous such a refusal would appear to the Courts of the neighbouring States, which, if the affair got talked of here, it could not fail to reach : in eight days it would be the chief item of the Court scandal of her Highness' princely acquaintances. She granted there was some truth in my assertion, and she assented, though very unwillingly, to the performance of the opera ; yet, as she rose to leave the room, she said, she did not give up her part of the controversy as lost ; she did not believe it could be acted—for, as sure as 'Othello' is announced, Desdemona will be disabled ; by some donna's indisposition ? some fatality or other she has made up her mind to it"

"You managed it well," said the Major, laughing, "to fight one fear by another. It seems that the dread of ridicule has conquered the dread of ghosts, and the secret powers of nature she talks about are no match for the powers of sarcasm. But what is to be done next ?"

"Sophia is beside herself with joy at the idea that she has got her own way at last. I am now going to the Manager's house, with a sum of four hundred thalers, that there may be no obstacle known in the way of producing the opera, on the score of expense. I want you to accompany me "

"But will it not appear strange, if you give it him in the name of the Princess ?"

"I have thought of all that. It is to appear to be a subscription of a number of musical amateurs, and we must pretend to be dilettanti, or enthusiasts, or something of the sort. Come ! we have not far to go : that little white house, with the balcony, is the Manager's"

(To be continued.)

THE THEATRES

HER MAJESTY'S.

LAST NIGHT.—RETROSPECT OF THE SEASON.

The performances at this theatre, during the past week, have been peculiarly brilliant. The artists, on taking leave of the English public for a time, have exerted all their powers to the uttermost, which has drawn crowded audiences, and even so late in the season as this, have yet filled the house, have given the warmest testimonials of approbation. On Tuesday, the last subscription night, flowers strewed the stage as parting memorials to Grisi, Lucile Grahn, and Cerito. The grandest night in the world was presented on this occasion The National anthem was sung, and never was it delivered in greater perfection, or by a stronger company ; the three prime donne, Grisi, Lucile Grahn, and Rosati-Cacchi, alternately taking the lead with admirable effect. On Saturday the powers of the latter commenced the audience and great singer were tested to the uttermost. Grisi was taken ill just before the commencement of the opera, and was unable to appear. Madame Rosati-Cacchi took her place at this short notice, and converted the public dissatisfaction into unsurpassed admiration of the remarkable and excellent manner in which she rendered the character of Norma this B'nefit improvvisto. Her reading was different to that of " Le Diva," but certainly, in its way, not less perfect ; and Madame Rosati-Cacchi, on this occasion, made a more rapid advance to popularity than in any of her preceding performances. On Thursday the beautiful opera, "Lucia," was given. Mariani and Castellan appeared for the last time in the full sufficiency of their talent " La Prova d'un Opera Seria" changed the character of the scene, and the humour of the performers " From grave to gay," while " Ondine " and " La Bacchante," in which Lucile Grahn and Cerito each displayed the peculiarities of their appropriate styles of dancing, formed a fitting close to the evening's amusements and to the performances of the season.

This great establishment is now closed ; but, before taking leave of it, we must cast a retrospective glance at the performances, which form so important a feature of the London season. Such a retrospect in every respect redounds to the credit of the management, and to the high musical taste of the audiences by which, among all others in polished nations, takes the highest rank, and which seems destined to carry the arts of civilisation to the most remote nations of Europe. The great encouragement given to musical popularity is one whose works have been brought out at almost all the great continental theatres, and whose productions in his native country meet with the most enthusiastic admiration — Verdi. It cannot, then, be wondered at that the present able management of Her Majesty's Theatre should have fixed upon the works of this composer to bring before the English public. "Ernani" did full justice to its brilliant reputation. It grew in the favour of the public nightly, and, being finely done its appropriate expression in music. Musical judges allotted to it the palm of sterling merit, but the leading of public taste was against the probabilities of its obtaining here the high favour it has obtained abroad.

The meretricious, sentimental style of the modern school, to which of late years we have become so accustomed, was a bad preparation for the full appreciation of such a work as this. "Ernani," however, at first only half appreciated, it gradually worked its way into public favour, and was given a greater number of times than any opera of the season ; finally, it might be pronounced completely successful ; but yet, on the whole, the result of the production of this opera was not such as to encourage the management to substitute another work of this composer, " I Lombardi," for more established favourites. We are sorry for this ; we grieve to perceive in the English musical public so little encouragement for novelty in art, and an unwillingness to patronise works which have not received the sometimes questionable test of approbation from the audiences at former seasons, not a whit more infallible than the present. English audiences will rarely judge for themselves in matters of art. They wait that Fashion should have openly set her seal on works which should claim a fair and unbiassed judgment. It is to this we must think is owing the non-success of another work of high musical genius—among our Gallic neighbours the object of such intense enthusiasm, that a short time back, it was necessary, in order to witness its performance, to engage seats a month before the night of the first " Dessir," a composition which amongst musical judges has obtained, with a few exceptions of violent animosity, the most cordial admiration while its performances with the public in general are held off amongst the things unknown.

As to the other musical performances of the past season, the works of Mozart Rossini, Bellini, Donnezetti, and Mercadante, have monopolised them. As usual, these most familiar to our ears have been drawn to the most successful. "Don Giovanni," " Il Barbiere," " La Gazza Ladra," " I Puritani," have, as in former years, attracted crowded audiences, and elicited the loudest expressions of approbation. Those charming operas, " La Sonnambula," " Le Nozze di Figaro," " Le Pescatore," " L'Elisir d'Amore, " Lucrezia Borgia," " Anna Bolena," " Linda di Chamouni," " Otello," " Semiramide," &c. &c., have, without exception, maintained their ground in the estimation of the public. The novelties have been " Cosi fan Tutte," " I Guramento," " I Pirati, and " Rebecca Devereux." The former of these operas, a work of the highest merit, was adversely given, and did not deserved success. The three latter are, perhaps, some of the best amongst the ephemeral order of compositions, of which the Italian School has been lately so prolific They were admirably performed, and were consequently successful; but we foresee that perhaps are very long this class of operas will lose ground in public estimation, and give way before another more vigorous and original school of music, which is already beginning to rise in Italy. At present, Verdi is the only composer of real and sterling merit in that land of song; for though Rossini still lives, his pen is idle, or only occasionally employed on short compositions of a totally different order to those with which he has for years delighted the world, and which form a store of delightful recreation for future generations ; and Donizetti, his successor, is silent. Should "Ernani," or any other work of this young composer, be brought forward next year, its success will, probably, be far more decided ; for attention has become awakened on this point, and a purer musical taste is gradually forming in England, as elsewhere

We must now turn to the part of our subject to which we can re er with most gratified approbation. The company of her Majesty's Theatre during the past season has presented an unexampled combination of talent, and the works we have mentioned have been cast in such a manner as to give effect and brilliancy to the most common-place, as well as to enstil a mer's perfect appreciation of the chef d'œuvres of the great masters. Two or three prime donne, and an equal number of male performers, of such excellence that they have alone supported great comic and theatrical pieces, have not been unfrequently included in the same operas ; as, for example, " Don Giovanni," " Cosi fan Tutte," &c.—or else a still larger number of first-rate performers have appeared in different pieces on the same night. We have retained Grisi, who has for so long a time yearly returned her steps to this country the scene of her greatest triumphs ; but two new prime donne have put forth their claims to public admiration, and they have been most highly responded to. The first début of the young Italian lady, that of Madame Castellan—as brilliant a one as her warmest admirers could have hoped. We have often expressed our admiration of this lady's sweet voice, her perfect style, her truthful and unaffected acting—qualities so rare to which she adds the graces of look and manner so necessary for dramatic illusion ; and there are but few of the opera votaries who do not join in our appreciation of her talent. She is, indeed, an universal favourite, and a most valuable acquisition to the brilliant troupe

Later in the season arrived Madame Rossi-Caccia, a singer whom fame had preceded to our shores with most flattering announcements. She made her début in " Roberto Devereux," an opera in many respects unsuited for popularity in England, and, consequently, likely to be rather prejudicial than otherwise to the success of an unfavourable performance. The character of the Maiden Queen in this opera, which offends the loyal and reverential feeling while Englishmen unconsciously attach to the memory of " good Queen Bess " every glamour consistent with the unbecoming, was unfavourable to the débutante. It is certainly not too much to say that she triumphed over all these, for her reception was cordial and flattering ; but it must be owned that, with the talent she undoubtedly possesses, in any other part she would probably have met with a far more brilliant success

Another début, on the same occasion, was, from adverse circumstances, less triumphant. M. Barchiesi, a young tenor from Milan, made his first appearance some three years past, we have been in the habit of receiving the most brilliant reports, appeared in this opera as the Duke of Nottingham. Illness had, unfortunately, at the time we heard him, impaired his voice ; but we could discern that it was, however, perfect ; but his leave of absence from the " Academie," at Paris, was short, and we, therefore, had not the opportunity of witnessing his performance in another opera.

Rita Sorri was another new candidate for the favour of the most fastidious of critics, John Bull. She appeared at the open ng of the season in " Ernani." Her début appearance was highly favourable. She possesses a soprano voice of remarkable compass and sweetness, combining a good taste and method, and perhaps the only fault that can be urged against her, is a somewhat undramatic genius. She appeared but seldom during the season. Her execution of the part of Elvira in "Don Giovanni," and Everilda in " Cosi fan Tutte," was spirited and highly successful

Mdlle. Rosati, who appeared once last year, proved this season a valuable addition to the troupe. She has much power and compass of voice, though its tones are somewhat shrill, and much science ; but her acting is deficient in life and energy. Signora Brambilla, on the other hand, affords an example of the triumphs of what the Italians emphatically call soul in singing, over physical defects. This contralto, as her voice has become in parts more and more veiled and broken, has given additional grace and sweetness to her style, while she has carried the art of eluding faulty notes to an unexampled degree of perfection. In the present scarcity of contralto singers, she is a most valuable acquisition to some charming operas, such as " La Gazza Ladra," " Linda di Chamouni," &c., have been given in which nothing could have compensated for the want of her deep and touching tones, and simple, truthful acting.

Signor Marini, who appeared once last year, proved this season a valuable addition to the troupe. He tion of the subscribers at her Majesty's Theatre, for presenting to Mr. Lumley a testimonial of their high satisfaction at his persevering and zealous efforts. This fresh mark of approbation, we are glad to observe, representing the celebrated "Pas de quatre." Another offering, hardly less gratifying, testifies to Mr. Lumley's admirable management in matters that come less directly under public notice. A magnificent vase has just been presented to him by the artists, headed by Lablache and Tamburini, on the occasion of his purchasing this theatre. It bears the following inscription: — "Hommage à M. Lumley, par les artistes de l'théâtre de Sa Majesté, en commemoration de l'heureux événement qui assure à ce théâtre une continuation de la bienveillante et juste administration, 18 Juillet, 1845." All lovers of art will, we are convinced, re-echo the sentiment these words convey.

The continued wet weather has in some measure benefitted the theatres, a circumstance which has been very inimical to the interest of the different out-door places of amusement. Nevertheless, notwithstanding the hundreds, not only of individuals, but entire families, that have quitted town these last few weeks, of all degrees, from the highest to the lowest, and the scampering tourists of the Rhine and Switzerland, hybernators of Italy and the scampering tourists of the Rhine and Switzerland, hybernators of Italy and the scampering tourists of the Rhine and Switzerland, to the humble sojourners at Gravesend and Margate, the audiences at the different houses have been very fair; indeed, it is almost matter of wonder where so great a number of play-goers still come from. There has only of late been a somewhat change in the bills of the week, although several novelties are underlinen at these theatres now open. We cannot, however, expect any very great excitement until the commencement of the winter season, when every house will bring forward whatever enterprising managers have been able to light upon in their autumnal rambles.

The HAYMARKET has been doing well. On Wednesday evening Mr Mar-Lemon's comedy of "What will the World say?" was revived, under the title of "Captain Tarradiddle." This piece was, if we mistake not, first brought out in 1841, at Covent Garden, during the Vestris management. It did not then achieve any great success, and the few acts were subsequently cut down to three, in which state it was played on its reprise. Farren's Captain Tarradiddle is the part of the comedy, and he plays it to perfection. On Wednesday it went very well throughout, and the applause at the end was general.

Mr. John Parry is re-engaged for next week, but did not sing here the latter part of the present one, having engagements at Leamington and Birmingham, in company with the Grisi and Lablache party.

We must, in justice, say that "Mrs. Caudle" goes much better on each successive representation. Buckstone is unusually comical as the persecuted husband. The determination "that he will have a rushlight to sit up for him," is droll enough. Still, the lack of dramatic interest is against this sketch proving an entertaining as the adapter, without doubt, anticipated it would.

The management of the ADELPHI has been sadly upset by the severe indisposition of Mr. Wright, who is, we regret to say, suffering from inflammation of the brain, brought on by over-work and excitement. He was to have appeared on Monday, in a new version of "Mrs Caudle's Lectures," by Mr. Selby, but was too ill to act; and some other pieces were substituted at the eleventh hour, one or two of the Haymarket company lending their aid to the occasion, and Mr. Maynard playing Mr. Wright's characters. The latter gentleman, however, is so indispensable to a number of the Adelphi productions, that his absence must be of serious consequence to the theatre. We hope to hear, early next week, of the second peace, having engagements at Leamington and Birmingham, in company with the Grisi and Lablache party.

We must, in justice, say that "Mrs. Caudle" goes much better on each successive representation. Buckstone is unusually comical as the persecuted husband. The determination "that he will have a rushlight to sit up for him," is droll enough. Still, the lack of dramatic interest is against this sketch proving an entertaining as the adapter, without doubt, anticipated it would.

The management of the ADELPHI has been sadly upset by the severe indisposition of Mr. Wright, who is, we regret to say, suffering from inflammation of the brain, brought on by over-work and excitement. He was to have appeared on Monday, in a new version of "Mrs Caudle's Lectures," by Mr. Selby, but was too ill to act; and some other pieces were substituted at the eleventh hour, one or two of the Haymarket company lending their aid to the occasion, and Mr. Maynard playing Mr. Wright's characters. The latter gentleman, however, is so indispensable to a number of the Adelphi productions, that his absence must be of serious consequence to the theatre. We hope to hear, early next week, of the second peace being settled, and Libl or a time, suspended. It could only be traced across the river by the line of dim lamps, except a portion left open for the passage of two steamers, which slowly passed up the stream towards the landing place above the city, where her Majesty was to embark; a band of music was on board the first, and the sounds came softened over the water with a fine effect. After they had passed, all again was expectation and silence, save that here and there a rocket shot up into the darkness; the lighted windows of the lofty houses, rising over the river wall, and the lamps along the quay, gleamed faintly on the masses of people, the piled arms, and the uniforms of the soldiers.

THE SEVEN MOUNTAINS AND DRACHENFELS, FROM GODESBERG

(Continued from page 121.)

An hour or more wore away, when a salute of cannon from above the town announced that her Majesty was embarking, and soon afterwards the steamer appeared, coming slowly down the stream. As soon as she got opposite the city, the soldiers were ordered into line; a rocket was sent up as a signal, and at that moment a feu de joie commenced, on a scale rarely equalled; it extended for two miles, on both sides of the river, and was kept up for more than half an hour, the men loading and firing in rapid succession: at the same time, the Rhine was brilliantly lit up by port-fires, burnt in boats, in the middle of the stream: above the Thurm-markt showers of rockets were shooting up with boundless profusion. As the vessel glided down, the firing continued; and the constant rattle of the musketry, blending at intervals with the booming of cannon, gave the spectator some idea of a night attack. But the great spectacle was yet to come. As the steamer neared the opening of the Bridge, the whole structure —if so a Bridge of Boats can be called—was lighted up by a line of fireworks, throwing up showers of brilliant sparks, like fountains of brightness—the gleaming drops descending in a graceful form, and becoming quenched in the river, rolling darkly down beneath. At the same moment the exterior of the Cathedral, which towers grandly over the whole city, burst into light, like the dome of St. Peter's in Holy Week; every cornice, buttress, and pinnacle gleamed in the flood of light, and the effect of the whole scene was at that instant the grandest and most magnificent of its kind we ever beheld. The play of light and shade over the mass of Gothic architecture, and the roofs and towers in its vicinity, was perfectly magical. It was not the "dim religious light" which we associate with such structures, for which even the beams "of the garish day" are held unsuitable; nor was it the moon, which softens all imperfections,

THE ROYAL YACHT PASSING THE DRACHENFELS.

"Leaving that beautiful which still is so,
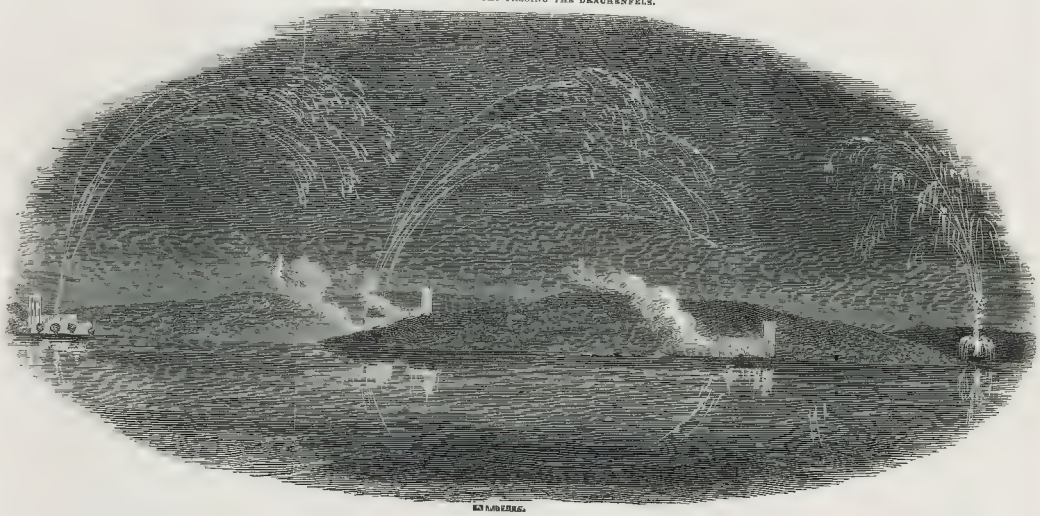
And making that which was not"—— an effect particularly favourable to the Cathedral of Cologne, which is at once unfinished and a ruin, and bears simultaneously the marks of incompleteness and decay. It was an artificial splendour—the brilliancy of a moment cast upon the dark pile on which rest the shadows of ages,



ILLUMINATION OF THE RHINE, FROM STOLZENFELS.

THE PALACE OF STOLZENFELS, ON THE RHINE.

chasing them with a fitful and transient splendour, and then leaving them in a deeper gloom than before. But for the time it was a spectacle of unequalled magnificence; the enormous scale of all the preparations, and the exactness and method with which all the proceedings were conducted, could only have been found in a country where there is an immense mass of organised force at the command of authority; it partook of that gigantic splendour which is found in the fêtes of the Court of Russia.—(See the Engraving.)

Below the city her Majesty again landed, and, attended by the suite and guards, drove through the old streets, which were full of unwonted life, and gay as such ancient and narrow ways could be with lights and flags. Her Majesty again passed the night at the Palace of Brühl.

The next day the Queen returned to Cologne, and visited the Cathedral. The committee of citizens who have undertaken the task of completing this enormous structure—without, it is to be feared, sufficiently considering the Horatian precept, that recommends a proportioning of the shoulders to the burden—the Dombauverein assembled at three o'clock, with banners and music, and marched in procession to the Church; the workmen employed formed another procession; and the children of the Charity Schools, male and female, formed a third. The latter, dressed in white, with wreaths in their hair, and bearing between them festoons and garlands, were the prettiest sight of the whole.

No one was admitted with the Royal party; but, on their departure, crowds of persons entered to see the throne erected in the choir on which her Majesty sat: no other preparation was made, and the interior presented its usual aspect.

EHRENBREITSTEIN AND COBLENTZ.

In the evening her Majesty attended the last Concert of the Beethoven Festival at Bonn, returned to Brühl to sleep; and on Thursday embarked, at Bonn, for the passage up the Rhine.

COBLENTZ, August 15.

Stolzenfels, where her Majesty arrived last night, was one of the thousand ruined castles with which both banks of the Rhine are studded. It is three German miles above Coblentz. It was purchased for the present King of Prussia some years ago, for a trifling sum, and he has restored it—not in the best taste—at an enormous expense, and it is a pleasant residence, but smaller than what is generally understood by the name of a castle. It is beautifully situated, on a thickly-wooded height, which slopes beneath to the river—other hills, still higher than that on which stands the Castle, rising in the background.

On the opposite bank, and within view from the terrace and windows, are the villages of Oberlahnstein, Niederlahnstein, Horcheim, and Lahneck.

On the occasion of her Majesty's visit, a spectacle similar in kind to the illumination of the Rhine at Cologne was got up, but not equal to it in effect. Several steamers, crowded with people, left Coblentz in the evening and were brought to above the Castle; it was a lovely night; the river here is deep and rapid, but now had not a ripple on its surface; it was literally as smooth as a mirror; the moon was up and shone clearly on the tree-clad mountains and the glossy stream, so that the two hours the spectators had to wait were well occupied, especially as the young men on board sang the "Rhine Song," and several national songs in good style. Soon after ten the church tower of St. John and the village of Niederlahnstein burst into light, which was beautifully reflected on the water; from the Castle a continued discharge of rockets was kept up, till, at a signal, the village of Oberlahnstein followed the example; and at the Castle of Rheneck a brilliant series of fireworks was discharged. The illumination of the villages had a beautiful effect, the lighting up being more like a conflagration of white and red flames than what an illumination is with us. The Castle of Rheneck was also in a blaze in the same manner, and the three points were the great features of the scene. The fireworks were not different from the usual pyrotechnical displays. An exception must be made of the rockets, which were far superior to anything of the kind ever seen in England; they throw a ball of fire, when they explode, of red, or green, or white, which floats in the air, without falling, for many minutes—sometimes appearing fixed like stars: they have been contrived to give duration to what is generally so evanescent. The length of time these starry fires burn, at an immense elevation, where they are suspended as if by magic, is extraordinary. For signals they will be invaluable, and are already appreciated in this military country: they are understood to be the invention of an artillery officer at Mayence. They would make the fortune of Vauxhall; and it might be worth the while of our artists in pyrotechny to try by what means a body, solid enough to support combustion for many minutes, remains suspended in the air, it seems a violation of the laws of gravity. It should be stated, however, that the night was very calm.—(See the Engraving.)

Two of the Engravings at page 124, illustrate most interesting points of the Rhine scenery—the Seven Mountains (Siebengebirge), and the Drachenfels, from Godesberg; and the Royal Yacht passing the Drachenfels. The village of Godesberg is one of the most charming places of summer residence on the Rhine; and its Castle Keep, on the summit of the hill, commands one of the most beautiful prospects on the river. The group of hills called the Seven Mountains, in reality, are more than seven in number, and form a grand commencement to the beautiful scenery of the Rhine; they are the highest and wildest hills on its banks, and are almost all crowned with the ruin of some ancient tower, chapel, or hermit's cell, which add much to their picturesqueness: the loftiest, Owelberg, is 1459 feet high. The most interesting of the whole group, from its shape and position, but more than all from the verses of Byron, is the famed Drachenfels (Dragon Rock), whose precipices rise abruptly from the river-side, crowned with a ruin:—

> The castled crag of Drachenfels
> Frowns o'er the wide and winding Rhine,
> Whose brast of waters broadly swells
> Between the banks which bear the vine,
> And hills all rich with blossom'd trees,
> And fields which promise corn and wine:
> And scatter'd cities crowning these,
> Whose far white walls along them shine,
> Have strew'd a scene which I would see
> With double joy wert thou with me.

From the summit of the Drachenfels, the view extends down the river as far as Cologne, 20 miles off; upwards, the Rhine is shut in by rocks, which, however, are very grand; whilst Bonn and its University, with old castles, villages, and farm houses, fill up the foreground of the landscape.

Ehrenbreitstein and Coblentz, engraved at page 125, are points of extreme beauty and interest. Coblentz lies on the left bank of the Rhine, and right of the Moselle. It received from the Romans the name of Confluentes, modernised into Coblentz, or Coblenz, from its being situated at the confluence of the above two rivers. Its fortifications connect with the citadel of Ehrenbreitstein on the opposite bank of the Rhine, and render Coblentz the bulwark of Germany and the Prussian dominions on the side of France. No town on the Rhine surpasses Coblentz in the beauty of its situation, from whatever side you approach, by land or water. But the most interesting object in its vicinity is Ehrenbreitstein (Broad Rock), the Gibraltar of the Rhine, connected with Coblentz by a bridge of boats. It commands a glorious view of the course of the Rhine and Moselle, and of the country for many miles around. Every reader of "Childe Harold" will remember "Ehrenbreitstein with her shatter'd wall." It is, however, now no longer a ruin. Since 1814, the Prussians have restored the fortress, and added new works, which have only recently been brought to a conclusion; and it is now considered to be stronger than ever.

The large Engraving upon our front page represents the Royal yacht passing Coblentz.

Stolzenfels is much resorted to, on account of the fine view which it commands. It is placed on a jutting rock, looking over the Rhine and the little village of Kapellen, and nearly opposite the confluence of the Lahn. Its picturesque outline and commanding position seem to justify its name of the Proud Rock, and render it one of the most imposing feudal ruins on the Rhine.

HER MAJESTY AT MAYENCE.

Her Majesty, who is understood to have been somewhat fatigued by her voyage, remained quietly on Sunday morning at the Hotel de l'Europe.

There was very little stir in Mayence on Sunday. A few people stood around the Hotel de l'Europe, during at the sentinels on duty, and hoping to catch a glimpse of the Queen. In other respects the town of Mayence was as quiet as so pretty and populous a place can be. But the ordinary habits of the people are those of an English holyday. The shops are not very inferior to those in the largest cities, and the buildings are on a magnificent scale. The new fortifications, too, which are now building along the left bank of the Rhine, are very fine specimens of workmanship. An additional air of gaiety was given to the streets by the presence of the Austrian and Prussian troops, whose glittering uniforms of mingled white and blue mixed prettily enough with the general costumes of the people.

DEPARTURE FROM MAYENCE, ARRIVAL AT FRANKFORT, AND PROGRESS TO WURZBURG.

Whilst her Majesty was at breakfast on Sunday, Mr. Durehns, the clergyman who performs divine service gratuitously to the English residents at Mayence, wrote to Lord Aberdeen to say that he would alter the usual hour of service to any time that would suit her Majesty, in case she should wish to attend at the English Protestant chapel. Her Majesty, though much fatigued, at once accepted Mr. Durehns' proposal, and appointed twelve o'clock, at which hour precisely, with her accustomed punctuality, she was at the church door.

Prince Albert, Lady Gainsborough, and Lady Canning accompanied her Majesty, and also several members of the suite. But few foreigners were present. Divine service was performed according to the forms of our Church, after which her Majesty returned to the Hotel de l'Europe.

At two o'clock, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Cambridge and suite arrived at the Hotel de l'Europe, in two carriages, from Frankfort. Her Royal Highness remained and dined with her Majesty and the Prince, and returned to Frankfort in the evening. The Prince of Hesse Darmstadt, the Prince Wilhelm of Prussia, and the members of her Majesty's suite also joined the Royal dinner-party; covers were laid for twenty-four. The Queen did not leave the Hotel again during the day, although the Duke of Nassau sent a pressing invitation for her Majesty to dine at his fine chateau at Biebrich.

On Monday morning, at eight o'clock, her Majesty and Prince Albert left Mayence for Frankfort, where she arrived at half-past ten; but, as her Majesty required no refreshment, she did not alight, nor make any stay in the town. Whilst post-horses were being put to the carriage, her Majesty received the congratulations of the Austrian and other Ambassadors, who were in attendance to receive her Majesty; but there was no reception of the municipal or military functionaries, as was expected. The people came flocking down in great numbers as soon as they heard of the arrival of the Queen and Prince Albert, and a general feeling of disappointment appeared to pervade all classes when the carriages drove on through the town, and it became known that her Majesty had determined not to remain.

Her Majesty did not remain more than five, or at the most ten minutes, in the town; and as soon as post-horses were put to the carriage, drove on towards Wurtzburg, where they were to arrive at about nine o'clock on Monday evening. Her Majesty was to sleep there, and on Tuesday to go on to Coburg.

THE KING OF PRUSSIA'S TOAST AT BRÜHL.—The Moniteur Belge contains the following, under date Cologne, 13th August:—"The following are the exact words of the toast which the King of Prussia gave yesterday at the dinner at Brühl, and which was received with the liveliest enthusiasm by the august guests:—'Sirs Fill your glasses to the brim! The burthen of the toast is a word (un cri) which resounds with an in expressible charm in all Britain and German hearts. One day it sounded as the sign of a fraternity of arms, triumphant upon a field of battle with diffi culty gained. This day, after a peace of thirty years' duration, the fruit of those arduous days, it resounds in the hands of Germans and Britons on the noble stream of the Rhine. That word is—Victoria! Sirs, empty your glasses to the bottom. The toast is her Majesty, the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland. Long live the Queen Victoria and her illustrious Consort.'"

SUMMARY OF RAILWAY FACTS.—It appears by an official return just published, that 2.8 Railway Bills have passed, or partially passed, through Parliament this session. All these bills were read a first time, with the exception of 36. Of the remainder, 38 have been read a first and second, but not a third time, owing to their having been rejected by the Select Committee on the merits. Those that have been read a third time, but without receiving Royal assent, are 5 in number. The number of Railway Bills are 16. The number passing intact through the various stages of petition, standing orders, first, second, and third readings, and ultimately receiving the Royal assent, amount to 115. These having received the Royal assent are in a position to commence operations. Several have already done so, and others are making preparations.—The works on the Waterford and Kilkenny line of railway commenced last week, with the ceremony of removing the "first sod," in which the Marquis of Ormonde and a large company assisted. It is mentioned as a proof of the security of railway travelling in Austria, that on the Vienna-Glognitz Railway four and a half million of people have been conveyed since its establishment, nearly six years ago, during which period only three of the employés were killed, and four more or less severely wounded. Of passengers, only one was killed, who jumped from one of the carriages, and two were wounded. This extraordinary scarcity of accidents is ascribed to the stringent regulations which Government enforces as to the construction of locomotives and carriages, the limited speed which is allowed.—The opening of the great line of railroad from Vienna to Prague was fixed for the 20th of this month (Wednesday last). It will be possible to accomplish the whole distance between Vienna to Prague in one day.—The Journal des Chemins de Fer announces, that the Tours and Orleans Railway was in a state forward a condition, that the directors expected to be able to make a trial of the road on the 1st of October next.

BELFAST ELECTION.—On Wednesday Lord John Chichester was elected for Belfast, without opposition, in the room of Sir Jas. Emerson Tennent.

A MAN STRUCK DUMB.—On Tuesday morning, between seven and eight o'clock, as a man named Benjamin Reynolds, residing in St. Andrew street, Seven Dials, was conversing with some of his companions, he suddenly exclaimed, "I am losing my speech," and the sentiment was unable to utter a word, though in full possession of all his other faculties.

SINGULAR CASE OF SOMNAMBULISM.—On Monday morning a singular, but serious, accident occurred at Shoreditch-end, to a man named John Cooke, a waggoner. It appears that Cooke and another man had been to London with their waggon, to fetch a load of grocery and other goods. On their return homewards Cooke's companion got into the waggon, and went to sleep, leaving him in charge of the horses. On arriving at Shoreditch Cooke himself also fell asleep, from fatigue, yet continued to walk mechanically by the side of the horses, as if he were awake, as he has often times, as he himself stated, done before. When, just as he had reached the village, he stumbled and fell in front of the waggon, both the near wheels of which passed over him. Loud cries awakened his companion, who hastened to his assistance, and found the poor fellow lying there in the rear, bleeding in a most profuse manner, and both his legs completely smashed. He was conveyed to a house adjacent, and a surgeon sent for, who advised his immediate removal to St. Thomas's Hospital, whither he was conveyed, and lies in a very precarious state.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED

THE VERY REV. WILLIAM BRUCE KNIGHT, DEAN OF LLANDAFF.

This exemplary dignitary, and truly excellent man, died at the Deanery of Llandaff on Friday, the 8th instant. For some time past, the sensible decay of his health—the sacrifice of a naturally robust constitution, to a life of unceasing labour on the part of his sacred calling—had excited his own anxiety and the apprehensions of his friends; but it was only within the last three weeks that his illness assumed a fatal character, and confined him to the bed from which he was doomed never more to rise.

The reverend gentleman was not actually born in the Principality, but from youth to manhood, from the cradle to the grave, he became so identified with Wales, and the spiritual interests of her children, that he must be ever considered one of the most accomplished of Welsh scholars and divines. The place of his birth was Ashburton, in Devon, and the period, Christmas Day, 1785. His education, commenced under Dr. Williams, at Cambridge, and continued at Sherborne School, Dorsetshire, was completed at Exeter College, Oxford, where he graduated and entered into Holy Orders. His first preferment was to Llantrithyd, in 1815, and during his brief sojourn of two years there, his earnestness and energy, his eloquence, and the winning gentleness of his manners, effected a complete revolution in that neglected parish.

In 1817 he succeeded Dr. Hunt in the perpetual curacy of Margam, and the consolidated rectory of Langan and St. John Baptist Church, and in the same year was appointed examining chaplain to the Bishop, the duties of which important charge he continued to perform until his death. He also received a prebendal stall at Landaff, and the Chancellorship of the Cathedral. In 1825 Bishop Van Mildert raised him to the office of Chancellor of the Diocese; and in 1840 he obtained his last earthly honour, when, upon the death of Archdeacon Probyn, he became First Dean of Landaff.

Such is a very slight outline of a life distinguished for all the virtues and accomplishments which adorn the Christian character. Never, perhaps, existed a more perfect example of the spiritual pastor—whether relieving the needy, or comforting the afflicted; whether speaking the words of hope to the dying, or reproving the sins of the living, his daily conversation was one of consecration to God.—As a preacher—eloquent, simple, and impressive, he will long survive in the memory of his flock; and his private life, we may, indeed, add, was "a living sermon of the truths he taught."

The Dean was interred on the 14th inst., under the centre of the altar of "Our Lady's Chapel," Llandaff Cathedral, to the restoration of which he had so mainly contributed.

The lamented divine was second son of the late John Knight, Esq., of Llanblethian, by Margaret, his wife, daughter of William Bruce, Esq., of the same place, and derived descent, maternally, from a scion of the Royal House of Bruce. He has left a widow and six children, Bryce, Esq., of Duffryn, in Glamorganshire, and the Right Hon. Sir James Knight-Bruce, the Vice-Chancellor. The Dean's wife was Maria Eleanor, second daughter of Llewellyn Traherne, Esq., of St. Hillary.

BENJAMIN WOOD, ESQ., M.P.

The respected member for Southwark died on Wednesday, the 13th instant, at his residence, Eltham Lodge, Kent. He had been suffering from indisposition for a considerable time, but within the last month appeared to be much recovered. He was younger brother of the late Alderman Sir Matthew Wood, Bart., and third son of Mr. William Wood, of Tiverton. The hon. gentlemen married in 1815, Miss Maria Michell, daughter of Samson Michell, Esq., Admiral in the Portuguese Navy, but has not, we believe, left any children. Like his brother, the Alderman, he was extensively engaged in business as a hop merchant in the Borough, for which he was first returned at the memorable election in which, after a very severe struggle, he defeated Mr. Walter.

REAR-ADMIRAL JAMES HALDANE TAIT.

To the recent numerous obituary of distinguished naval veterans, it is our melancholy task to add the name of Rear-Admiral James Haldane Tait, which took place at his residence, in Edinburgh, on the 7th instant, in his 73rd year. This gallant and well-known officer went to sea in 1782, at the age of eleven, and in the early period of his life was engaged on act.ve service in different parts of the world. He obtained his commission of Lieutenant, 6th July, 1796; was made Commander, 29th April, 1802; received Post rank, 5th September, 1806; and became a Flag-Officer, in 1841.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor and Manager, Mr. W. BATTY. Last Week of the Summer Season. Last Week of the Equestrian Drama of Mazeppa. Spectacle.—On MONDAY, AUGUST 25, and EVERY EVENING during the week, the New Grand Military Spectacle of the CONQUEST OF SCINDE, OR THE HEROINE OF THE INDUS AND THE SIEGE OF HYDERABAD. The SCENES IN THE CIRCLE will be more than usually attractive, consisting of the concert chef d'œuvres of the celebrated French Equestrians. The Entertainments will conclude with the popular Farce, written by J. Barber, Esq., called THE WEAVER OF LYONS.—Box-office open from Ten until Five.

MASQUERADE at VAUXHALL GARDENS and VENETIAN CARNIVAL, in honour of the natal day of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, on TUESDAY NEXT, the 26th inst. The arrangements will be on a similar scale to those which gave such universal satisfaction on the last masquerade. The Pavilion, Panopticon, Rotunda, and Illuminated Temple, with the great arena for dancing. 12 Masters of Ceremonies having been appointed to arrange the Quadrilles, Waltzes, and Galops. The Orchestra will be increased to 200 performers, and the compositions of Musard, Strauss, Jullien, and Labarsky, will be performed during the evening. Admission to the Masquerade, 5s. Tickets to be had at the Libraries; and at the Masquerade Warehouse, 3, Bow-street, Covent-garden, from 10 to 6 o'clock. On Monday, Wednesday, and Friday next, the Entertainments as usual.

COLOSSEUM.—Patronised by Her Most Gracious MAJESTY and His Royal Highness PRINCE ALBERT.—Open daily from 10 till 6. Equal to Six Exhibitions; another Colosseum of Works of the first Artists, Mont Blanc and Mountain Torrent, Valley of Chamouni, Rocks, Lake, Cascade, and Fountains, Panorama of London, recently painted by Mr. Parris, &c. Admission, 2s.; Children under 10 years of age, 1s. The Stalactite Caverns EVENING ENTERTAINMENTS open for the present season, commencing with a new Panorama 30,000 square [illegible] Mr. H. Bevan, and Mr. Parris, and Fountains, Panoramas of London, recently painted by Mr. Parris, &c. Admission, 2s.; Children under 10 years of age, 1s. The Stalactite Caverns [illegible] Rowe. [illegible] Admission at the door 3s. each; Family Tickets, to admit four persons, at 2 guineas each, to be had at the North Gallery Colosseum, and from 10 to 6 of Messrs. Mitchell, Old Bond-street; Mr. Andrews, Old Bond-street; Mr. Sams, St. James's-street; Messrs. Duff and Hodgson, Oxford-street; and Messrs. Jennings and Chandler, Regent-street. Children under 12 years of age, Half-price.

A MAGNIFICENT, EXTENSIVE, and UNIQUE COLLECTION of ARTISTS' SUBJECTS, modelled by Messrs. Grimaud during his long residence in [illegible] just exported at the ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION. The ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY, in lecture-room, from 11 to 6; Mr. Sutton Sharpe, Lecturer. Dr. Ryan's Apparatus for Warming and Ventilating Houses, Churches, &c

SUPERIOR FRENCH BEDDING.—HEAL AND SON'S MATTRESS of fine long wool and horse hair, are unequal in the best that are made in Paris. Also prices of every description of Bedding sent free on application to their Establishment HEAL and SON, Bedding Manufacturers, 196 Tottenham Court-road.

THE ONLY HATS impervious to GREASE, OIL, or PERSPIRATION, are those manufactured on "Gailbraith's" Patent Principle. To be had only at G. LOCK, No. 6, St. James's-street, Jacob Coln, No. 23, Bridge street, Westminster; and G. LOCK, No. 66, Strand street, Exeter and Dublin. Also at the Royal Victoria Hotel, No. 50, Regent-street, Regent and Oxford-streets, and G. S. Briggs, No. 98, Greechurch-street. For the protection of the Public, every Hat is to bear the name of the Patentee on the lining.

NUMBER ONE, SAINT PAUL'S CHURCHYARD.—It is the strength, fit and accuracy, and excellence of quality, combined with unparalleled smallness of profit, at recommend to all classes of society the old-fashioned tea TEA, 4s 4d per pound, sold by DARIN and Co., Tea Merchants, Number One, St. Paul's Church yard, and visitors to London may save a considerable portion of their railway carriages by purchasing Tea &c., Coffees at Number One, St. Paul's Churchyard. Orders from the Country delivered Carriage Free.

TO NOBLEMEN and GENTLEMEN wishing to TRAVEL. —A Respectable YOUNG MAN, 21 years of age, who speaks Turkish, Greek, Ithrian, Albanian, Italian, French, Polish, and English, also a little Russian would be glad to start as Courier, Valet, or Companion to a Gentleman, or with a Family for that purpose, from the circumstance that he has been a resident in the above places for length of time, and unquestionable references can be given. A good reference is given from his present master.—Apply, by letter, addressed—Mr. NORRIS PROVICK, Post-office, Hastings.

TEAS AT THE WHOLESALE PRICE.—Families, Hotel Keepers, and large Consumers supplied with Tea at the Wholesale Price, for Cash

	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.
Black	2 8	3 0	3 4	3 8	4 0	4 4 and 5 0
Green	3 4	3 8	4 0	4 4	5 0	6 0
Coffee	0 13	1 0	1 2	1 4	1 6	and 1 8

One pound and upwards sent to any part of town, carriage free. Mr. Barkleraby, Chocolate and Coffee manufacturer, 8 pounds of Tea and upwards delivered free of carriage to any part of the Kingdom.

PIANOFORTES.—WARREN'S 20 GUINEA COTTAGE PIANOFORTES, are selling at the Manufactory, 1, Liverpool street, Bloomsbury-street, opposite the Catholic Chapel. These 6-octave instruments are well manufactured, of the best materials, have a fine full tone, and possess the utmost regularity of touch; no order can be done at Cash Price, as it will not admit of the least possible loss by credit. A written warranty given with each instrument. A Second-hand 6 octave Cottage, with pillars, 16 guineas; ditto, 7 octave Grand Square, by Mott, 14 Guineas; and a 6-octave square, 11 Guineas.—WARREN, 1, Liverpool-street, Bloomsbury-square.

FOR CLEANING GOLD and SILVER PLATE, JEWELLERY, &c &c., without wearing the Precious Metals in the slightest degree.—This valuable curious discovery is now generally used in the Establishments of most of the Noblenobility in London, the CLUB HOUSES, and in the principal WEST END HOTELS. Testimonials of its value, signed by the first Physicians and Chemists, the eminent chemist, Andrew Ure, &c., may be seen; it has a pleasant smell, and does not injure the hands. The most reduced price can only be done at Cash Price, as it will not admit of the least possible loss by credit. A written warranty given with each instrument. A Second-hand 6 octave Cottage Pianoforte, with pillars, 16 guineas; a 6-octave Cottage, with pillars, 16 Guineas; a 6-octave Grand Square, by Mott, 14 Guineas; and a 6-octave square, 11 Guineas.—WARREN, 1, Liverpool-street, Bloomsbury-square.

LOSS OF TEETH SUPPLIED, without Springs, Clasps, or Wires.—Lone Teeth Fastened; and Stumps Rendered Useful.—The Natural Mineral Succedaneum, applied without pain, heat, or pressure, preventing and curing the Toothache, and rendering the operation of extraction unnecessary. They also Fasten Loose Teeth, whether arising from age, neglect, the use of calomel, or diseases of the gums. Incorrodible Artificial or Natural Teeth, set in the most delicate manner, and on the most reasonable terms, fixed, from one to a complete set, without extracting the roots, by giving any pain, at the following charges:—A single tooth, 10s; 8 set, £5 5s. Arranged on the most approved principles, and rendering perfect articulation and mastication. At home from Ten till Six.—Mons. Le Dray's "Treatise on the Diseases of the Gums and Teeth" may be had free, on application at their residence, 42, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

LONDON, EDINBURGH, and DUBLIN LIFE COMPANY, 3, Charlotte-row, Mansion-house, and 18, Chancery-lane, London.

DIRECTORS.

RICHARD SPOONER, Esq., M.P., Chairman.
BENJAMIN HALL, Esq., Deputy Chairman.

The Hon. Frederick Pennefather	Captain Bunbury
John Boyd, Esq., M.P.	F. Harrison, Esq.
Alex. Anderson, Esq.	James Hurry, Esq.
Joan Atkins, Esq.	Kennett Kingsford, Esq.
	Medical Advisers.—Marshall Hall, M.D., F.R.S.; Alex. Anderson, Esq., F.R.S.
	Solicitor.—J. Pemberton, Esq.
	Auditors.—R. F. Hanson, Esq.; H. R. Cannan, Esq.
	Solicitors.—Messrs. Palmer, Pearce, and Palmer.

The indisputability of the Policies granted by this Company; the obligation to pay the sum assured, although the debt for which the policy was taken out may have been paid before the decease; the World Policies not confined to the limits of Europe; the option of half-premium payment for the first seven years; an annual division of profits among the participating assured, applied to the reduction of annual premiums, or the addition of bonuses or advantages which can be obtained only from the London, Edinburgh, and Dublin Life Company. A Reduction of Twenty per Cent. has been declared upon the Premiums of all Participating Policies of five years' standing.

ALEX. ROBERTSON, Manager

LONDON, HOUNSLOW, AND WESTERN RAILWAY.—NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that no Applications for Shares in this Company will be received after Monday, the 1st of September. By order of the Committee

H. ROWE, Secretary.

7, Walbrook.

LONDON, HOUNSLOW and WESTERN RAILWAY. Limited.—£2,000,000, in 25,000 shares of £80 each. Deposit £1 7s 6d per share. No Shareholder will be liable beyond the amount of the Shares subscribed for by him. Provisionally registered.

PROVISIONAL COMMITTEE.

John Brightman, Esq., Regency-square, Brighton
Captain W. G. Reade, Porchester place
Charles Blunsell, Esq., Clewer, Windsor
Captain J. B. Carnegie, Somerset-street, Portman-square, and Seaforth Hall, near Inverness
A. W. Clarke, Esq., Queen-street, Cheapside
W. H. Cozens, Esq., Temple
Francis Chambers, Esq., St. Dunstan's-hill
Henry Clayton, Esq., Clarence Castle, Yorkshire
Henry Cornfoot, Esq., Copthall-court, and Old Kew Palace
H. C. Dupre, Esq., Quarry House, Boughton, Kent
George Fatin, Esq., Minsing-lane
R. A. Frockly, Esq., Hounslow
Henry Francis Dupre, Esq., Montague-place Bryanston-square
Captain Hodges, Connaught-terrace, Hyde Park
John Knight, Esq., Leicester
Lieut.-Colonel Maclean Lee, Esq., Surrey
Charles Mann, Esq., Woburn-square
R. C. Polhill, Esq., Brompton
Henry Penny, Esq., St. Petersburgh
Rev. D. Robinson, Brompton-row
Thomas Robinson, Esq., Charles-street, Middlesex Hospital
Thos. Stevenson, Esq., Upper Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square
George Thomas, Esq., Winchester House, Broad-street
Joseph Thompson, Esq., John-street, Bedford-row

With power to add to their number

Chief Engineer—Captain W. S. Moorsom, R.E., and Actuary and Secretary—Septimus F. Griffin, Esq., L.L.B.

Solicitors—Messrs. Harrison, 3, Walbrook; S. P. Hook, Esq., 11, Tokenhouse-yard; and others.

Bankers—The Commercial Bank of London

Detailed Prospectuses, with statement of Traffic (which is estimated on the lowest calculation to yield upwards of 12 per Cent. on the Capital), Maps of the Line, and Forms of Application for Shares, may be obtained at the Company's Offices, 7, Walbrook; of the Secretary, Mr. H. Rowe, 7, Walbrook; and of J. Hurlock, Esq., 7, Walbrook; Messrs. Harrison, 3, Walbrook; S. P. Hook, Esq.; or of the Shareholders, J. H. Gubbins, Esq., 19, Warnford court, Messrs. Tanner and Sons, 26, Austinfriars, and Messrs. Sherwell, Tokenhouse-yard, London; Mr. John Duncalf, and Mr. John O'Neil, Manchester; Messrs. W. Reynolds and Son, Liverpool; Messrs. H. and G. Bendelack, Leeds; Messrs. Pare and Son, Bristol; Mr. James Parsons, Birmingham; Messrs. Samuel Hargreave and Co., Sheffield; Mr. William Bates, Worcester; Mr. Prince, Edinburgh; Mr. William Gordon, Aberdeen; Mr. Andrew Brash, Glasgow; and Messrs. Moore and Symes, Dublin.

T. S. BROWN, Secretary, pro tem.

London, Hounslow, and Western Railway Offices, 7, Walbrook.

FORM OF APPLICATION.

To the Provisional Committee of the London, Hounslow, and Western Railway.

Shares, of Twenty-five Pounds each.

Gentlemen,—I request that you will allot to me ..... Shares in the above undertaking, and I undertake to accept the same, and to pay the deposit thereon, or such less number that may be allotted to me, and payment to be made within the time and upon any lesser number that may be allotted to me, and payment to be made within the time and upon the conditions prescribed by you, and I undertake to execute the agreement and parliamentary contract, when required.

Name in full
Trade or Profession
Residence
Place of Business (if any)
Date
Reference

SELF MEASUREMENT—GREAT ACCOMMODATION. The following Directions will ensure an exact Fit, and will be found a most convenient accommodation. The measure may be taken with a piece of tape, and each person can take another stating the Height of person, and if any particularity in figure, also whether tasten over a Coat

Coats, Vests, &c	Inches	Trousers.	Inches
From Neck-band, not including Collar, to the Hollow		From top of Trousers to bottom
From Hip Buttons to Bottom of Skirt		From outside of Legs to bottom of Trousers
From centre of Back to Elbow joint		Size round top of Thigh (tight)
Cow round the length of Sleeve at Wrist		Size round Calf
Size round top of Arm		Ditto Knee
Size round lower under the Coat		Ditto Hips
Size round Waist under the Coat
READY MADE.	£ s d	MADE TO MEASURE.	£ s d
Tweed Trousers, from	0 7 6	Tweed Coats, trimmed with silk	0 12 0
Ditto, superior quality, with silk collar, cuffs, and facings	0 13 6	Cashmerette ditto, or any fancy Coat, handsomely trimmed, made in the first style of fashion	1 5 0
Codrington Coats, Cashmerettes, in light and gentlemanly materials	0 16 6	Saxe Serina ditto, handsomely trimmed	1 15 0
Cashmerette Coats, finest style and make, including the greatest value	1 2 0	Quilting Vests, 6s 6d, or 7s 6d	0 19 0
Buckskin and Doeskin Drab and Fancy Cassimere Trousers	0 16 6	Cord Saxe ditto, in cache patterns	0 6 6
Ditto, superior quality	0 3 6	Satin ditto, plain or fancy	0 14 6
Spring Overcoats in great variety	0 2 6	Spring Overcoats in great variety	0 10 6
Cashmere and Persian ditto, in endless variety	0 4 6	Tweed ditto, in choice patterns	0 13 6
Black and Fancy Satins	0 4 6	Summer Millard Albert and Regent	0 15 0
Ditto, superior quality, with silk collar, cuffs, and facings	0 9 6	Trousers	0 19 0
Clerical Frocks, from	0 4 6	Real quality black or Dress coats	1 6 0
Tweed ditto	0 4 6	Saxe ditto	1 5 0
Spring ditto (woollen)	0 4 6	Ditto, ditto, best manufactured	1 15 0
Dress Coats	1 0 0	Frock Coats	1 15 0
Frock ditto	1 2 0	Satin ditto, best manufactured	2 2 0

Mourning to any part of the Kingdom or Country.

Observe.—E. Moses and Son, Tailors, Wholesale and Retail Drapers, Outfitters, and Gentlemen's Warehousemen.

Caution.—E. Moses and Son are obliged to guard the public against imposition, having learned that the extraordinary success which has attended their system has induced many persons in the trade to assume the same or a similar name in order to deceive the public. E. Moses and Son have no connexion with any other house in the trade, and those who desire genuine Clothing, should, to prevent disappointment, call at or send to 154, Minories, or 81, Aldgate, opposite the Church.

N.B. No business transacted at this Establishment from Friday at sunset until sunset on Saturday, when business is resumed until twelve o'clock.

TO PRINTERS.—V. and J. FIGGINS, beg to inform their Friends, and Printers generally, that the Series of Egyptian Fonts is now complete, Specimens of which, may be had on application at the Foundry.

17, and 18, West street, West Smithfield.

RICK CLOTHS, WITH POLES, MARQUEES, TENTS, and Temporary Rooms, superbly fitted up, in great variety, for Sale or Hire, at THOS. EGERTON and CO.'s, Makers to her Majesty, &c. &c., OLD KENT ROAD, and 17, SMITHFIELD BARS, LONDON.

GAS HYDRAULIC PENDANT LAMPS, FITTINGS, &c.—G. C. DEBAUFRE and SON have on sale a new assortment of Hydraulic Gas Pendants, Opal and Brass, newly designed, Gas Sconces, Chandeliers, Tubes, &c., at very moderate prices, at their Manufactory and Show Rooms, 19 and 11, Creed-lane, St. Paul's

JONES' £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at the Manufactory 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House. They comprise every modern improvement, are warranted to keep correct time half a minute per week. The great reduction of price at once sets aside all rivalry, either of the Swiss manufacturers, or any other house.—Read Jones' Sacrifice of Watches, are free for 5s 4d stamp

THE LARGEST STOCK IN EUROPE.—FURNISHING IRONMONGERY: Stoves, Grates, Kitchen Ranges, Fenders, Fire-irons, best Sheffield Plates, ornamental Iron and Wire Work, Garden Engines, Rollers, &c., Japan Tea Trays, &c.—PANELLISON IRON WORKS, adjoining Mount Pleasant, Exmouth-street, Coldbath-square.—N.B Every article is marked in plain figures, at the lowest cash prices.

THE NEW PATENT GRAND HARMONIUM.—MR. GREEN, 38, Soho-square, has just received from Paris Splendid Specimens of the Newly Invention of the principles of his ROYAL SERAPHINE, adapted especially for the Drawing-Room, producing the most pleasing and extensive variety, by the different combinations of his new TWELVE STOPS.

INGLIS'S MANUFACTORY, 26, CITY ROAD, LONDON.

INVALIDS' and CHILDREN'S CARRIAGES.—Children's Chairs, Nurse-chairs, and Perambulators, from Ten Shillings to Twenty Guineas. Invalids' Whirl Chairs of first class comfort from £3 to £35. New and Second-hand. Spinal Carriages. Any wish Hooks. On Sale, or Hire.

SILVER PLATE HORIZONTAL WATCHES, carefully finished, with engine turned cases, jewelled in four holes, going barrel to continue the action of the Watch while winding, are offered, price 40s, by Holmes, Arch, Thwaite, and Lancaster, 61, Strand, corner of Catherine-street, and a printed undertaking is given to keep them in order for twelve months. May be procured of nearly all respectable Watchmakers, &c., of Cornhill (corner of Gracechurch-street), London. N.B. Second-hand Watches purchased in exchange.

BAKER'S PHEASANTRY, Beaufort-street, King's-road, Chelsea. By Special Appointment to the QUEEN and H.R.H. PRINCE ALBERT and H.M. the King of the Belgians. Useful and Ornamental Poultry of every description, including Malay's Cochin China, Bronze, Spanish, and Polands, and a great variety of Ornamental Water Fowl, as follows—Black Swans, White Swans, Egyptian Geese, China, White-fronted, Bernicle, and Brent Geese; also Partridge, Quail, Peacock, Guinea, Canada river, was heart sickening. The families of at least fifty houses on Broadway, both sides of Greenwich street, on State, Whitehall, Stone, and Pearl streets, and Battery-place, had been turned into the street, with their furniture, through dread of their houses being burned over their heads. Broadway, at that part where both sides were burning, is at least one hundred and fifty feet wide, yet so intense was the heat in the middle of the street, that for a hundred yards, not even the daring firemen could venture upon the burning pavement.

BROAD-STREET NEW YORK, AFTER THE RECENT FIRE.

The district burnt is the most important portion of New York, it having been mostly composed of large buildings, filled with very costly merchandise. In this quarter, too, the French and German merchants chiefly congregated.

The loss by this public calamity is, as we have stated, estimated at from 5,000,000 to 6,000,000 dollars, most of which is covered by insurance, and panies; it is expected that nearly all will be paid, though several will have to wind up their concerns in consequence.

It appears a little uncertain how muchhuman life has fallen a sacrifice; but no fewer than ten or twelve persons are missing, and thought to have been lost.

In regard to the reported loss of life, the New York Inquirer says:—"There can be no doubt that the loss of life has been much more fearfully extensive than was at first supposed. We learn, through Mr. Oelrich, the Hamburg Consul, that in the store occupied by him and Mr. Cruger there were, at the time of the explosion, a large number of men; that, not believing the fire would reach his premises, he went out a moment before the explosion, leaving these unfortunate men within, every one of whom, he believes, perished. He thinks there were forty or fifty, but we hope he is in error as to that large number. Mr. Gronin, of the firm of Pavenstadt and Gronin, is known to be one of the victims, and two men, so burnt and mutilated as to put recognition out of the question, were dug from the burning rubbish Mr. Cowdrey, one of the firemen, is also known to be lost, and we fear there is no reason to doubt that a number of other firemen also lost their lives. Two women were killed by the explosion in No. 37, Broad-street, and a Mrs. Miller was carried to the hospital dreadfully injured. Nor is there any doubt that a considerable number of the unfortunate inmates of the houses destroyed lost their lives, and now lie buried beneath the ruins of their dwellings. A fireman, named Francis Hart, belonging to Engine No. 22, was standing on the roof of the house next to the one in which the explosion took place, and was thrown two whole squares, on to the Custom-House steps, but escaped with very slight injury. Peter Johnson, porter to Burrill and Johnson, besides keeping a porter-house in the lower part of Water-street, has been unseen since the explosion in New-street. Immediately before that event he was forcing his way through the crowd, and, when stopped by a policeman, he said, "You know me, I have business," and having a store key in his hand, he was permitted to pass. The policeman thinks he would have had just sufficient time to have brought him in front of the building which was demolished, and that he was then and there buried under the ruins in instant death."

THE BOWLING-GREEN, AND BROADWAY.

THE BOWLING-GREEN AND MARKETFIELD-STREET.

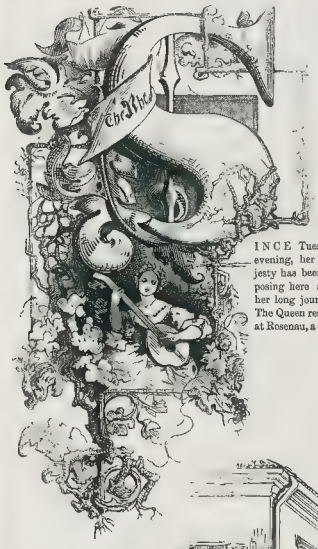
LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, AUGUST 23, 1845.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 174.—Vol. VII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, AUGUST 30, 1845. [Sixpence.

HER MAJESTY AT COBURG.

Coburg, August 21.



SINCE Tuesday evening, her Majesty has been reposing here after her long journey. The Queen resides at Rosenau, a chateau or seat of the Duke of Coburg, about four miles from the town; and a more lovely spot for "retired leisure" cannot be imagined. Its very name—which signifies the "Meadow of Roses"—is suggestive of pleasant images, and everything around is in keeping with its name. The residence is not large, but is beautifully situated; and, in style, partakes both of the castle and the mansion, with more of the last than the former. It was built for pleasure, not for state; and though it now lodges a Queen, there is scarce a sign of that state which generally accompanies Royalty; the old Saxon colours—red and white—floating from a tower, and an orderly or two in uniform lounging about, is all that is outwardly visible of the regal presence. The mansion and grounds are perfectly open to the country round—not a gate or enclosure shuts in the Ducal demesnes from the foot of the passer-by; there is neither sentinel nor guard to forbid approach; the terraces—rich with flowers and shrubs, and abounding with roses—are free to all. The contrast of all this with the exclusiveness of Royalty and Aristocracy in England, is very great, and not at all to our advantage, when we reflect that such exclusiveness is forced upon rank and greatness by the intrusion and impertinence of the mass of the people. Here the highest rank can walk among the lowest without inconvenience; with us, a Queen or Prince cannot venture beyond the Palace gate without being hustled and mobbed by a crowd of well-dressed vulgarity. Brighton, at all times, and the gay, pleasant little Rosenau, at this moment, are the representatives of two very different systems—the practice of the best of which we have yet to learn.

The route of her Majesty from Mayence to this place was marked by no incident of any importance; it laid through Frankfort and Wurzburg. At the former place the Queen staid only a few minutes; at the latter, the Royal party rested for the night in the Palace of the King of Bavaria—a splendid building in the style of the early part of the last century—erected by three Prince Bishops, on a scale of magnificence which no thirty Bishops of the present degenerate days of Church revenues could imitate if they clubbed for the purpose. The grand staircase is a marvel of construction and effect; the long suites of rooms are fitted up in the extreme of the mode of the day, and though a strict taste might not be pleased with much of it, there is still a gorgeousness of duration that reminds one of the "barbaric pearl and gold," in which Eastern Kings delight to display their magnificence. The Royal Hall, or Kaisersalle, is more than rich; it is stately and imposing, not always the result even where wealth has been lavished as unsparingly as here. The Royal apartments are, of course, the most elaborately decorated; and the excessive plainness of the furniture of the rest of the Palace forms a striking contrast with them, and the style of the whol building. Common wooden chairs and tables stand in apartments with inlaid and polished floors of exquisite workmanship, and walls rich with carving, paintings, and tapestry. The last is of itself worth a visit: the designs are bold and well drawn, while the colours are as vivid as if they had been finished but yesterday. Altogether, the Palace is a truly Regal one, and speaks far more vividly of the wealth and power of the Church, ere wars and revolutions like that of France had swept over Europe, than any page of any historian. It will be remembered, that our best Palace, though now unused, was erected by a churchman, and excited the envy of a King. Ecclesastic wealth was expended with taste and judgment, and the construction of a Palace was not made the job of a builder, or the design advertised for, that the very worst might be adopted by a "committee" of selection.

HER MAJESTY'S ENTREE INTO COBURG.

At Wurzburg, her Majesty was received by the Prince of Bavaria. The Royal party slept in the state apartments. Lord Aberdeen occupied the same bed, which, on one occasion, was used by Napoleon

There is much in the old city of interest to the historical antiquary; the bridge alone is a study. In every recess stands a colossal statue of a bishop or warrior, in robes or armour, executed with a boldness and spirit which our artists too rarely imitate when working in stone. Their attitudes are most expressive, and the large folds of the drapery seem actually to float on the wind. Seen by the uncertain light of the moon, the effect of these statues is something unearthly.

The rate, however, at which Royalty travels, leaves no time for dissertation on antiquities: the cortège quitted Wurzburg early the next morning, for Coburg; her Majesty was received at the frontier by the Reigning Duke (brother of Prince Albert), and at the gate of Coburg by the authorities of the town. The reception was not so much a state ceremonial, as a warm and affectionate family meeting; this same feeling seems to pervade the inhabitants of the place; they have decorated the town in every part; but it is with all the emblems of cheerfulness and festivity, rather than those of dignity and state. Every house, every street, is festooned with garlands and wreaths, disposed with exceeding taste; at some distance from the gate by which the Queen entered, a triumphal Gothic arch was thrown across the road, formed of evergreens, surmounted by flags, and bearing the word which is pleasing in all languages—"Welcome." From the arch to the gate, garlands and wreaths were suspended, and the old gate itself, with the tower surmounting it, was gaily decorated. These decorations have not been removed, and the whole place is now gay in holiday attire; the streets are like bowers with fir-trees—cut down at a premature stage of growth, and transferred from the forest to the town—planted along the pavements. In no partial display every house bears some token of the general good feeling; the difference being only in the variations of individual taste. The innkeepers have not been deterred by the old perverb, but, in flat defiance of it, have covered their "good wine" with "bushes" in profusion; and the quaint old buildings seem to bear decorations better than our square flat walls with holes in them, which we run up by the mile, and call houses and streets. The German towns have a character about them, the dwellings not being made all of one pattern like bricks, distinguished by nothing—not even by variety—which relieves the eye from wearying sameness. The play of fancy in such a scene would appear incongruous; here there is a "keeping" in the whole; and the irregularities of the "old and antique" style, wear the robe of festivity with a better grace than the characteriess creations of modern speculation that sacrifices all to cheapness.

The town of Coburg is admirably situated, at the foot of a range of hills, thickly wooded, and richly cultivated. On the highest point above the town stands the old fortress, still called the "Festung," once of considerable strength, for here the Swedes defended themselves successfully against Wallenstein in the Thirty Years War. The fortress was visited by Her Majesty the day after her arrival. On another height stands a residence of the Prince of Wurtemberg, brother of the Dowager Duchess of Coburg. The view from the terrace in front of this mansion is a most beautiful one; with its rest both on the town in the fore-ground along the foot of the hills, which rise above it majestically.

The country around is cultivated like a garden; the corn fields, orchards, and meadows, stretch along the plain, and over the sides of the hills, which are not here clothed with vines, but look all the more English for their absence; it is now the middle of harvest, and the corn is falling rapidly beneath the sickle, which is being plied by the women with great activity. It is quite a pastoral scene, for rural life exists here in its simplest form. Improvement has not yet transformed the ploughshare into things of new forms and more than old efficiency; the carts and vehicles are most rude and primitive; the oxen are still yoked, and may be met drawing homeward the loads of grain, much as they did when Virgil wrote his Eclogues; all is quiet labourousness—the fever and the fret of commercial life, with its wealth and uncertainties, have not penetrated here; but there is evidently abundance, and there seems to be content. If the goodness of a Government is to be estimated by the condition of the people, Englishmen have little right to sneer, as they are apt to do, at the Governments of Germany. It were well for England if, in proportion to her greatness and power, the mass of her people were as well fed and lodged as the subjects of the Duke of Coburg. Looking at the smiling landscape, the neat houses, and the patient industry of the people, that does not go without saying, it is natural to contrast with many an English county, and with nearly the whole of Ireland, that is by no means to our advantage. This applies only to the social state. Into political comparisons this is not the time or place to enter.

The "way of life" here is that which affords the most comparative quiet and repose. A visit to the Opera last evening—when the "Huguenots" was played—has been the only public appearance of her Majesty. The weather is perfectly beautiful, and the fine scenery of the country appears to the greatest advantage. That it is not the wish of her Majesty to render the visit an affair of state is evident from Rosenau being selected as the residence, instead of Ehrenberg, the Ducal Palace, which stands in the centre of the town. It is a handsome structure, with a front and wings enclosing a quadrangle, and has all the accessories of Royalty. But the little, bower-like retreat of Rosenau, with its flowers, and pleasant shades, and terraces, from which vistas are cut through the thick foliage, rendering visible the distant hills and vales beyond with almost magical effect—this has been her Majesty's choice. And, in addition to its beauty, it is invested with another interest. It is the birth-place of Prince Albert, and near it he must have passed his early years. The scenes around have exercised his pencil; and even now, when his destines have united him with the Crown of a great Empire, it is natural that he should feel a pleasure in returning to the home of his youth. To-day (the 21st) he is receiving, with his family, in receiving as a guest the Queen of England, the Sovereign of a people allied by blood and language to the German race. It is a meeting of kindred and affection—not a Congress of Monarchs; there is nothing of cold, calculating policy about it; there is no struggle of ambition with ambition in all this exercise of state-craft; it is a far more pleasing assemblage, and possesses an interest that can be appreciated by all.

COBURG, August 22.

The event of the day has been a pretty open air Festival, in a meadow, outside the town, near the Bamberg gate, at which the children of the town schools were entertained, according to annual custom, from funds left about three hundred years ago for that purpose. It used to be held on the feast of St. Gregory, but the exact day is not now observed. The opportunity is taken for a general holiday, for a holiday fair, and booths of all kinds are erected in the field, with the usual array of conjurors, strong men, and giants, and a roundabout on a magnificent scale, with sledges and horses, mounting a band of music.

A square space was enclosed for the children, the ground being marked out by wreaths of evergreens, in the same fanciful and tasteful style as the decorations of the town. Two pavilions, or open marquees, were pitched for the Royal party, who had announced their intention of being present; beneath these tents a collation was spread, with bands of music in attendance. The ground was kept by the military.

Shortly before three o'clock, the children marched on to the ground. It was a juvenile masquerade, on a small scale, fancy dresses being rather numerous: shepherds, postilions, Greeks, brigands, soldiers, courtiers of the olden time, with stupendous pigtails, were among the characters—to say nothing of a diminutive Napoleon, who excited much laughter. The girls' dress was generally plain white, with a wreath of ivy on top hair—the effect of it being at once simple and elegant; fancy costumes were not so numerous among them as among the boys. The weather was very fine, and the whole scene, with the expectant crowd, the half delighted, half frightened faces of the young children, and the strains of music—here always good—was a very gay one.

At half-past three, the Royal cortège arrived; on alighting, her Majesty and the Reigning Duke were received with a burst of cheering, quite English and hearty. The children had been drawn up in lines in front of the tents; and her Majesty, leaning on the arm of the Duke of Coburg, walked through them, to the infinite gratification of the youthful Saxons. Prince Albert escorted the Duchess of Kent, and the King of the Belgians walked with his Queen. Their Majesties and the rest of the illustrious party returned to the marquees, and partook of refreshment.

The crowd of spectators was very large, and gay with the varied colours of the costumes; there is little national peculiarity of dress, except among the peasant women, who wear on their heads a sort of compromise between a cap and a turban, of black silk, with eight or nine long black ribbons floating behind; it is very picturesque, with a touch of the Oriental about it.

The children have a small gift in money made to them on the occasion, and the day is looked forward to by them, of course, as the greatest of the year. A world of little vanities is awakened by it, and the greatest care is taken by the parents to send them out dressed to the best advantage. This was exclusively a school festival, but it seems a very common custom in Germany for children to form a part of processions on public occasions; at Cologne, the children of the schools marched to the Cathedral to receive the Queen on her visit to it, the girls dressed in white and green, as they have been here to-day; there is a fresco painting in the outer gallery at the Citadel, representing the entry of one of the Dukes of Coburg into the town, and the procession is closed by a number of girls in white, with the green wreath, precisely resembling those in the array just presented to her Majesty. The painting is a modern one; but the custom is old and recognised.

During the collation, the children danced on the green in excellent style; the precision with which the little waltzers marked the time, and the grace of their movements, were admirable.

The sum each of the children receives is about fourpence—about double the amount of former years; there is also a largesse of a peculiar kind of cracknel or cake distributed, the number to each being the greatest in the upper classes. The festival—which is called the Gregorius—is not always held on the same day, and was this year postponed beyond the usual time, in anticipation of her Majesty's visit.

Her Majesty remained about two hours on the ground, enjoying the animated scene; the Royal cortège then returned to the Palace. The merriment was kept up, however, during the whole evening—music, dancing, eating, drinking—with sleight of hand and feats of strength—at moderate rates, and smoking unlimited; and the sun never set on a merrier population than that of the good town of Coburg at this present time.

A levee was held at the Residence last night, at which her Majesty received the Grand Duke of Baden and his son, the Dowager Duchess of Coburg, the Princess Reuss, Count Neusdorf and his three sons, the Princes Ferdinand and Leopold of Coburg. To-night there is to be a Court Ball at the Palace.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

The absurd disquiet into which the Queen of England's visit to Germany threw innumerable of our quidnuncs, has become appeased; nothing more is heard of the political conclave which was to have taken place at Stolzenfels. The Congress of Victoria and Prussia, Aberdeen and Metternich, has dispersed, and the only thunder which it elected has fallen hurtless. Various and conflicting were the opinions started in the saloons. Some went so far as to state it was a conspiracy against the grande nation; others that it was a scene of the drama opened last year by the Autocrat of Russia, who was to play the second part. The coincident visit of the King of Holland, and the Queen's visit to the Chateau d'Eu, and the reciprocal voyage to Windsor of Louis Philippe, were all portions of a secret plot in which France was to suffer. Enchantement, which ring-ed a different vision re'ti al sorts of ridiculous consequences; but even this print has banished its terrors

The number of students in the Ecole de Droit of Paris, more than doubles the amount of Elysee of the eight other schools devoted to the same studies the pupils of the Faculty at Paris, which, at its creation, amounted to only 300, had increased to more than 2000, when some slight restrictions in different years, was reduced to 2400. During a few years, however, the numb r amounted to 3300. This, however, may be considered its apogee; for, since that period, it has ceased to exceed the number of students now scarcely reaches 2000. It is easy to account for the rise and fall of the legal market. Engineering is now considered in France as the main road to wealth, and consequently the choice of parents in selecting for their sons should be au courant to steam engines and railroads the mania exists here quite as strongly as in England—women, boys, and even girls talk of new lines, their several degrees of profit, and send letters to shares with a zeal and a madness equal to that which governed the period of the smashing South Sea scheme. It is quite dreadful to behold the first thoughts of young youth, the first aspirations of manhood, thus wholly absorbed, render the hearts of the coming generation as sterile and as indurated as the railroads themselves. It is said that the Government is at length deter mined to check the madness, and to confine the speculation within narrower limits than has hitherto marked the proceedings connected with these questionable improvements. It would be well that the example of the Emperor of Austria were followed, when he determined that no new authorisation should be suffered till the year 1850, at which period it has been commanded that all lines already commenced should be completed. The intention of this measure is to confine immoderate speculation; and a wiser measure assurely could not be contemplated.

The notion of erecting a sort of "Campo Santo" at one of the entrances to Paris, which formed the subject of so favourable letter some time since, has become now a matter of almost certainty. The glories of "Pere la Chaise" will be thus considerably eclipsed. The cemetery is to be covered, after the models of those of Pisa, Verona, Bologna, &c., which are now imitated in several cities of Germany. The cemetery will become, in a few years, a species of temple consecrated to the dead, and ornamented with all that art can imagine to harmonise the scenery with the sacredness of the spot. long vaulted galleries will be ranged sculptured tombs, as in the ancient charnels of the cemetery of the "Innocens;" in the superior stages, sepulchral chapels, for families, will be decorated with mural paintings. The grounds of this immense edifice will be planted with trees, shrubs, and flowers; the "Campo Santo" being covered will thus afford shelter to visitors, basil contrast, perhaps, from the degradations that the hand of time, and above all those of man, have visited on monuments which have been exposed to all the violences of atmosphere, the insults of the profane, and the severest "ills that stone is heir to." It is principally in an art point of view that the foundation of such a covered cemetery is to be considered. It will afford to architects, to sculptors, to painters, an added opportunity for the exercise of their gifts; and I have no doubt, if the scheme be fully carried out, it will ultimately become the most vast, the most curious, and the most magnificent museum in Europe.

The works of the pensioners of the Academy of France in Rome, in painting, sculpture, architecture, and music, which were publicly exhibited in the Holy City last April, have arrived at the School of the Fine Arts, and will be shown in the ensuing month.

The painters have sent:

M. Hebert, "Delphica," copy after the fresco of Michael Angelo in the Sistine Chapel. Original itself, which was painted for Julius II. by his architect Bramante.

M. Brasset. "Fragment of the Baths of Constantine," after the fresco of Raphael, and a painted sketch, representing "Orpheus Pursued by the Furies."

M. Lebouy, a painting representing "The Persecution of the Christians under Dioclesian."

M. Simmory, a Study, and a subject from the poetry of Ateman.

M. Damery, a study of the human figure.

These artists include from five to one years residence at Rome.

The Sculptors have sent

M. Gruyere. "Hyacinthus Scævola," figure in marble, and "A Nymph Pan, Surprised," figure in plaster.

M. Debuit, a sketch in plaster of "A Scene in the Massacre of the Innocents."

"Caveher, a basso relievo in plaster, of "Flaminius Quirinus and the Vestals Flying from Rome when attacked by the Gauls," and "Tragedy," study of a head in plaster.

M. Marchal, a copy in plaster of the "Venus of the Capitol." This statue, which belongs to the Government, is destined to become a part of the collection of "l'Ecole des Beaux Arts."

I was admitted to a view of the above, through the interest of our friend Though neither may boast of any striking genius, they all bear evidence of a good spirit, and great care. The "Nymph Surprised Bathing" is exceedingly graceful and modest—the latter quality being no characteristic element of modern French art. I doubt whether the forcing system of the Government has hitherto produced any extraordinary fruit, though I admit, the intention is worthy all praise and evinces a proper solicitude for the cultivation of art in its several phases.

I went to the races at Rouen; the weather was delightful, the course in capital condition, and the running would have pleased even Mr. Ashton or Yates. The races are under the patronage of the Jockey Club. The beauty of the site, its proximity to Paris, and the large number of horses engaged, which amounted to upwards of seventy, all united to render the affair one of the most dashing and attractive things in France. The prizes contested amounted, with the entrances, to forty thousand pounds; among which was a grand handicap of five thousand francs, which reached nearly ten thousand with the entrance fees, for which the best horses were engaged. Two capital races came off—eight nags starting, most of which were importations from dear old England. Though not quite equal to Epsom or Newmarket, taken altogether, it was the most sportsman like turn out I have seen on the continent.

FRANCE.

The papers are filled with details of the calamity at Rouen, which we give below.

The Moniteur Parisien having announced, as a report current on the Bourse, that the adjudication on the Northern Railroad would be postponed for another month, the Journal des Débats declares the statement to be without the least foundation.

On the evening of the 22nd, a destructive fire took place at Bordeaux in the warehouses of M Tastet, which contained large quantities of brandy and bottles of wine. The fire presently communicated to the neighbouring houses, and would have been far more extensive had not the authorities succeeded in saving several warehouses containing three thousand pieces of brandy and other spirits. The loss is estimated at 4,000,000. On the morning of the 23rd, a wall of one of the burnt houses fell and killed the commandant, adjutant, a lieutenant, and three privates of the Pompier corps.

The Moniteur publishes several Royal Ordinances, dated Eu, the 14th inst., elevating to the dignity of Peers of France, Generals Viscount Bonnemains, Baron Durrieu, and Baron Corbineau, Count de Montezon, Baron Tupinier, and Messrs. Fulchiron, Girot de l'Angiade, Hartmann, and Ragnat Lépine. All the new Peers were Members of the Chamber of Deputies.

It is announced that Marshal Bugeaud is to embark at Algiers for France on the 5th of September, in virtue of a leave of absence which he had received from the M inister of War

The Duke and Duchess de Nemours arrived at Bayonne on the 20th, at about five in the afternoon, having left Mont Marsan at nine in the morning, and been greeted at Tartas, Dax, and the other towns on their road with every mark of interest and respect. They immediately on their arrival went to visit the celebrated oak of St Vincent de Paul They were received at Bayonne with great ceremony. At Bayonne, they alighted at the Bishop's Palace, where they were received by the Prefect, the sub-prefect, and M de Chegaray, the deputy for Bayonne, and by a large group of young ladies, who presented a profusion of flowers to the Duchess, with a very pleasing address, affecting which was delivered with great grace and expression by one of them, whom the Princess afterwards embraced with the kindest cordiality. The Royal visitors were next greeted in a different manner. A troop of Basques, clothed in their typical costume, and executed their national dances, which, though perhaps not so elegant and courtly as those in the Palace of the Tuileries, were novel and interesting from their very grotesque originality. They then proceeded to the Princess's room to the grand saloon, where they received the addresses of the authorities, to which the Duke replied in a manner most gratifying to all. At half past seven o'clock there was a grand dinner of forty covers. On the 21st their Royal Highnesses went to the Cathedral, where, after hearing mass, at which the Bishop officiated, they viewed its numerous ancient monuments. The same evening they returned to Bayonne for Eu.

Some interest has been excited in Paris by an action which has been commenced against M Pepin Lehalleur and the other members of the Board of Administration of the Northern Railroad Company, by several persons to whom shares had been allotted, but to whom due delivery if the promises were refused when they tendered the instalment stipulated by the Committee of Management, and demanded by the conditions of the company to which they had subscribed. The case, after being argued at great length, was postponed by the court for a week, the President stating that in a case of so much importance it wished to have time before delivering judgment

M. Thiers was to leave Paris for Bayonne, on his way to Spain, on Wednesday.

GREAT LOSS OF LIFE AT ROUEN FROM A WHIRLWIND.

In part of our impression last week we gave an account of a serious accident, which took place on the premises of Mr. Priestley, at Rouen, in consequence of a whirlwind and now supply some melancholy details from the Memorial de Rouen, and other sources:—At thirty five minutes past twelve a furious wind arose in the valley beyond Deville, commencing at the Houme. It first carried away a part of the roof of the factory of M. Rouff, then, going force as it proceeded, it overthrew several small buildings, broke down trees, and hedges, and destroyed another range of buildings were shrouded, and others were literally crushed in. The scourge moving with the speed of lightning, carried to a distance some parts of the ruins, which covered the highest roads, and at last struck three of the principal factories of the valley. Lightning is in fact less rapid than was the destruction of these establishments. They have been literally reduced to dust. At that of Baudeal, and which was carried on by M Neveu; the two others were situated near Monville viz those of M. Picquet and M. Mare At M. Neveu's 120 persons were at work in the three walls of which fell before any person could escape At M Mare's the number of hands at work was 70; the calamity was not less sudden and complete. At M. Picquot's the number of workmen at work was 14 or 15. The roof being first carried away, all those within rushed to the doors, and they became so crowded that only a few comparatively could get out. This factory was literally scarcely a wreck. Those who were fortunate enough not to be crushing it in a more solid manner than any of the others of the valley. The chimney, which was 150 feet high, fell down to within a few yards of the ground, and the two brick walls of the lower floor, cut off with wonderful precision, was also carried into the water. The two other stories next gave way, and at last the ground floor was so completely demolished that scarcely two bricks remained in their place. All this was acc mplished in less than two minutes, people from all parts hurried to render assistance all the manufactories and workshops in the neighbourhood sent out their men, who began to clear the ruins to see if those who might be yet alive Machinery-looms and bars of iron were fractured, and enormous pieces of timber were broken as if they were mere straws, and all lying together in one confused mass. Torn fragments of clothing were seen among flocks of cotton wool with arms and legs protruding from the heap; pieces of flesh were adhering to the irons, and many parts were dyed with blood. Now and then piteous groans were heard, and some were discovered as if it were miraculously, by an overhanging beam, were taken out uninjured, but more frequently some severed limb or corpse, or a body so mutilated that death would have been desirable One head nothing was to be seen but hibers, or carts, carrying away the dead or the wounded. The master of the hotel of the Cheval Noir placed at the disposal of the family the largest room in his house, and with the nurse and every other useful thing which he had then at his command. Twenty six of the sufferers were laid in the ball room and in the orchestra. Men, women, and children were seen seeking their relations, many of whom were expiring in the most cruel agonies. At the guard house, at Monville, were placed all the bodies taken out of the factory of M. Neveu. We have seen there a young boy of about seven years old, one that of a woman, and the rest of men and boys. Among these last several had been taken out of the river, into which they had been precipitated from the windows. Some were without arms, others had their breasts and chests driven flat, and some had their heads severed from the trunks. When we withdrew from the seat of the catastrophe, at ten at night, we could hear M. Picquot's house, where seventy persons had been carried, and also a number of sheep and cows belonging to M Caron were killed. A gigantic tree was raised upwards of 40 yards and transported to a corn field on the opposite side of the road, where it remains broken and across them. A workman, who happened to be in the third story of M. Picquot's factory, was thrown into the meadow, where he fell without being hurt. As he got up and was endeavouring to recover from the shock of the ruins, he was knocked down by an apple-tree uprooted by the wind, but he was only slightly hurt. The mutilated remains of two young girls had been just taken from the ruins of M. Picquot's factory, when a tree was seen coming rapidly uprooted, and recognised them as her daughters. She immediately gave way to the wildest grief, and, rushing to the river, threw herself in and was drowned.

From a late account it appears that upwards of 70 dead bodies dug out from the ruins is 75. The number of the wounded is from 150 to 170. Besides the 75 dead bodies dug out from among the ruins, we have to add a considerable number of wounded who have died, and many others are so dangerously hurt that there is little hope of saving them

The examination having been most scrupulously made, it was found that at the moment of the misfortune there were 166 persons at the house of the disaster in M. Picquet's establishment. Among the details of this melancholy calculation are the following:—33 dead, three of whom were found on the night of the 22th, four on the 26th, and one on the 29th; 56 very severely wounded, and the rest saved, or at least few of them very seriously hurt. The wounded in this establishment were the most numerous, and, in general, the most severely injured.

The King and the Royal Family of France have sent to the Prefect of the Seine, towards the relief fund for the disasters of Malaunay and Monville, a sum of 15,000f. viz., 8000f. from the King and Queen, 2000f. from her Royal Highness Madame Adelaide, and 5000f. from the Duchess d'Orleans and the Count de Paris. The Minister of the Interior has placed 3000f. at the disposal of the Prefect of the Seine, for the same purpose.

SPAIN.

The doubtful calm which has for some time prevailed in Spain, has at length been succeeded by actual outbreak, and the dynasty of Narvaez is in danger. The Minister of Finance having refused to accede to the wishes of the merchants of Madrid, who had demanded some modification in the new tributary system, a great agitation ensued; numerous groups assembled in the streets and public squares; all the shops were immediately closed, and the authorities were obliged to call out the troops of the garrison. Several charges of cavalry and a discharge of musketry had been necessary to dispers the crowd. Two persons were said to have been killed, and two officers and a sergeant had been dangerously wounded.

When the courier left Madrid the entire garrison was under arms, and all the military posts had been doubled. Considerable reinforcements had arrived from Guadalajara and Cuenca, and the Captain General had been appointed with extraordinary powers by the Ministers present in Madrid.

A letter from Madrid, dated the 19th instant, says—

"Yesterday evening some disturbance took place in the Las Vistillas quarter. Several ex-Royalist volunteers appeared in the streets, uttering most seditious cries. A number of ex-National Guards responded to them in a hostile style. The police agents hastened up, and a struggle ensued, in which some persons are said to have been wounded, and some of the ring leaders were captured. This morning, at an early hour, the capital presented a strange aspect. In the morning, before the patroles appeared in the streets, two or three isolated officers, a sergeant, and some soldiers, had been surrounded and roughly treated. It is even said that, in these collisions, which preceded the great military demonstrations made this day, eight or ten soldiers were wounded. But two or three shots have, however, been fired to day, and it is not said that they have hurt anybody. It is, indeed, fortunate that a day that commenced so inauspiciously should have been saddened by no loss of life. The Political Chief, in order to restore to the capital its usual aspect, and prevent alarm from spreading, hastened to publish a bando in every part of the capital, ordering, on severe penalties, all the shops to be opened within four hours; such as should not obey this bando were to be considered and prosecuted 'as accomplices of the rebellion attempted against the execution of the laws passed by the Cortes, and sanctioned by the Crown.' It would appear that this resistance to the new system of taxation has been but a pretext. Such cries as 'Viva la Regina!' 'Viva la Constitution!' 'Mueran los tiranos!' were alone uttered, and 'Viva Espartero!' was distinct y heard in some parts. At half-past two this numerous and compact groups that thronged the Puerta del Sol began to disperse; some shops, and especially the coffeehouses, were opened, but most of the shops continued closed, despite the aforesaid severe bando."

The Espectador and Heraldo add to the reverturations that the Puerta del Sol latter print observing also that on the 18th the civil and municipal authorities had taken care to bring in a quantity of bread and other articles of the first necessary.

We find by accounts from Madrid of the 21st, that the dangers arising from the general opposition of the mercantile classes, and especially of the shopkeepers, to M. Mon's new taxes, has to some degree passed over. On the 20th, the greater number of the shops were opened, but not until a great number of tradesmen were arrested, and the others were obliged by the military to keep their doors open for three hours. It appears, however, how general the opposition is, that upwards of four thousand of the shops in the capital were closed on the 19th. So determined, indeed, were the shopkeepers to resist to the utmost, that many of them sent away their clerks and assistants, paying them a week's wages, and telling them that their services would not again be required for at least eight days. On the 20th, however, most of the young business men of the city had met the greater part of the masters had recalled their assistants. There were, however, considerable crowds of idle persons still in the streets, and the jewellers, drapers, and other shops that day were still closed, or were merely so far opened as to enable the owners to avoid the violent measures adopted by the authorities against those who still persisted in keeping them closed.

At eleven o'clock on the morning of the 21st, Manuel Gil, a young journeyman tailor, was shot outside the Toledo gate, having been sentenced to death by the court-martial, for stabbing an officer during the disturbances. The trapping of the city had remained undisturbed.

Madrid was full of troops, and every precaution was taken to prevent any further disturbance.

The Espectador announces that General Concha's resignation of the Captain Generalship of Catalonia has been accepted, and that he will be succeeded by General Breton. General Manso, who was Captain General of Old Castile, has been removed to Saragossa, and it was said would be succeeded in Old Castille by General Villalonga.

PORTUGAL.

We have letters from Lisbon to the 30th inst. Their contents relate chiefly to the elections for Deputies. The result in Lisbon was a complete triumph to the Government, the whole of the twenty four members returned for the province being Ministerialists, all of whom obtained 11 votes each, and the whole none of the Opposition candidates could get more than 29. The accounts from Oporto also mention that in the province of Minho the Government had gained a complete victory, the Opposition candidates having to a man been excluded.

The Portuguese Government have not come to any decision respecting the railway projects in agitation.

UNITED STATES.

The Cambria has arrived at Liverpool, after a very rapid passage of 9½ days from Halifax. This vessel brings the gratifying information of the arrival of the Great Britain steamer, which reached New York at noon of Sunday, the 16th inst., thus achieving her first outward passage in 15 days. The fact of the arrival of the colossal vessel in safety from the deep was the all exciting matter of interest with the New Yorkers, who were visiting her by thousands.

The New York Tribune chronicles her arrival—"The monster of the deep, a sort of mastodon of this age, the Great Britain, arrived on Sunday afternoon, the 16th. She was telegraphed precisely at noon. The announcement threw the city into a state of great excitement, and thousands rushed to the Battery, to the wharfs on the East River, to the Brooklyn Heights, and to the Atlantic steam ship pier at the foot of Clinton-street, to get a sight of her. All the sides of the river and the island, &c., one of the most curious scenes for a Sabbath was presented to our view.

"This magnificent steamer, under the skilful management of Captain Hoskins, made the bay in a beautiful style, after her passage of fifteen days over the Atlantic. She was gaily decorated with flags, and it was not a little singular that few or none saw the stars and stripes. This excited some surprise. Was the American flag among the flags displayed?

"The great problem, whether or not a steamer of the magnitude and construction of the Great Britain, and with her principle of propulsion, could make a successful trip across the ocean, is now satisfactorily and happily solved. The engines worked admirably all the way, and were never stopped until Captain H had occasion to sound on George's Bank. Arrived off Sandy Hook at one P.M., 10th of August, making the passage in fourteen days and twenty-one hours' running."

The Cambria's news from America is of the regular mail dates, the 15th from New York, and 16th from Boston.

The New York papers state that the city was gradually recovering from the effects of the fire. Most of the insurance offices are paying up promptly, and mercantile men are actively engaged in rebuilding. In six months from this time, it is believed that most of the stores in the burnt district will not only be re-built, but will be put up in a much more costly manner.

New troubles and disorders have sprung up in Philadelphia. It appears that great confusion prevails in that city, and that damage has been done in several parts thereof by a set of restless and mischievous characters, who have set at defiance the proceedings of the Board of Commissioners of the District, for cutting off some peaceful support to certain fire-engine companies. Nothing serious had occurred.

The Charleston papers mention that the drought continues very distressingly severe in Richland, Lexington, Orangeburgh, Barnwell, and other middle districts of the State, the most sanguine expectations do not look to make even half a crop.

The New Orleans papers of the 26th July, state that the weather was intensely hot, the thermometer at 97 deg., very many persons died from sunstroke.

The Ocean House Hotel, at Newport, Rhode Island, has been destroyed by fire. One of the principal proprietors lost his life.

Another steam boat explosion has occurred on the Missouri, and, as usual, attended with loss of human lives and horrible mutilations.

The advices from Mexico are dated Vera Cruz, July 21st; and the New Orleans papers of August 7th. Inform us that the Mexican Council at that port had received official instructions from the Mexican Secretary of State, informing him that the relations between that Government and the United States had undergone such a change as to render immediate recognition of all official intercourse, that their friendly relations were at an end, and that all Mexicans were to be directed to take such measures for the security of their persons and property, as they might deem expedient.

From Canada we learn that a melancholy accident happened at St. Genevieve on Sunday about six o'clock. Five respectable persons had met at a house in the village, when a hurricane, accompanied by thunder and lightning, passed over that place. Two of the company proceeded to the garret for the purpose of shutting a window, when they were instantly struck dead. The electric fluid passed down stairs, killing another person, and severely injuring the remaining two individuals—one of whom was so much hurt that it was expected he would soon be numbered with the dead. The deceased —whose names are Joseph Lazon, J. B. Labonde, and J. B. Roule—were highly respectable young men, much esteemed, and have each left a wife and children.

The railroad mania seems to have extended to Canada, and had the Canadians but the means, they would not be behind in such speculations. Due regard is paid to the western trade, which has become of such great importance, that a strong rivalry exists between the carriers of the St. Lawrence, and those on the American side, to secure it. There is a project talked of at present, of connecting Lake Champiain and Lake Ontario by railroad.

A trial, which caused much excitement, has ended in the acquittal of two young men charged with murder in the last election disturbances. Party feeling was keenly at work to procure a conviction, and also to secure an acquittal

THE RIVER PLATE.

The packet ship Ashburton had previously arrived at Liverpool, but the papers brought by that vessel were only to the 6th inst.

Considerable sales in the fall season extracted, the trade of New York begins to revive. Money continues abundant, but not quite much so as it has been. Good paper is taken freely at six, and, in some cases, at five per cent. The high rate of exchange, together with the news from Texas, has some influence to induce capitalists to be a little cautious. The prevailing impression is, that the cotton crop will be a good one. The grass and oat crop is deficient, and it is feared potatoes will be short of an average.

THE RIVER PLATE.

News is said to have been brought to Cadiz by a vessel which sailed from the River Plate about the middle of June last, according to which, General Rosas had accepted to the demands of the English and French Governments, and had consented to withdraw the Buenos Ayrean troops from the territory of Monte Video. The terms of the pacification are said to be, that both the rival candidates for the presidency of the republic of Uruguay, Generals Oribe and Rivera, should be passed over, and that a new election for president should take place immediately. The authenticity of this news is more probable, inasmuch as it agrees with the terms which England and France have proposed and insisted upon. It was also represented that the Government of Monte Video had issued a general amnesty to all parties who would come in and submit themselves within twenty days. The report further adds, that Government paper, which had been so much depressed, was rapidly rising in value.

NEW ZEALAND

News has reached us from Van Diemen's Land to the end of April, which confirms previous reports received in London of the disturbed state of New Zealand. A vessel had arrived at Hobart Town, bearing an application for military reinforcements, failing which, it was said that the New Zealanders would completely overpower the colonists. To this application Sir E. Wilmot had been compelled to reply by a refusal—the peculiar population of Van Diemen's Land requiring all the military force in the island. Sir Eardley Wilmot, Lieut. Wilmot, of the Royal Artillery, had, however, sailed to Auckland to command that corps of artillery, who had gone from Sydney to that place. Mr. Tuckett, one of the surveyors sent out by the New Zealand Company, and other persons, had arrived at Hobart Town, glad to escape with their lives.

COUNTRY NEWS.

COLLIERY EXPLOSION AND GREAT LOSS OF LIFE.

A colliery accident of a very serious description took place on Thursday morning at the Jarrow Colliery, near Newcastle, on the Durham side of the Tyne. An explosion of fire-damp occurred in the lower seam of the pit. The effect was terrific. Nearly one hundred men were in the pit at the time, and the half of them, being near the pit's mouth, readily escaped. Thirty-five were in the lower seam, and these, it is certain, met with instantaneous death. Fourteen more, it is ascertained, were in a part of the pit where the explosion must have been equally fatal

The above brief notice of the accident appeared in part of our impression last week. We have now to add, that an inquest was held, on Saturday, on the body of one of the persons killed by the explosion, and the verdict was that the deceased died from the effects of after damp.

The Coroner then proceeded to hear evidence as to the death of James Steward, but after the first witness had been examined as to the finding of the body, the Coroner adjourned the inquest till Monday morning.

The inquiry was resumed at ten o'clock on that morning, and lasted till five in the evening, when the jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death."

The inquest was begun by the examination Mr. Jobling, viewer of the colliery, who was observed frequently to shed tears as he detailed the proceedings that had occurred since the explosion, as soon as he received news of the occurrence, and informed the jury that, in his opinion, the fire had originated in the low main seam, at a spot denominated the West Flat Mothergate Board, and that the only reason for that opinion that he had, on the Saturday and Sunday, heard the gas issuing from the coal or stone—he could not tell which, seeing that he could not get to the spot, on account of some very large falls of stone. He gave testimony, also, as to the general safety and excellent ventilation of the pit previous to the explosion, which was corroborated by the subsequent witnesses.

At the inquest, Mr. Brown, the surgeon to the colliery, produced a complete list of the persons whose bodies had been found, with their families and other particulars, it is subjoined. W. Walker, thirty-nine years of age —wife, James Hall, twenty-four— wife; Robert Bird, thirteen; not found; Joseph Scrafton, twenty-one; John Charlton, eighteen; Thomas Wailes, forty four—wife and three sons; Thomas Wailes, jun., twenty; William Dunn, twenty-three—wife and two children; Joseph Musgrove, 30 —wife and one unmarried child; John Musgrove, jun., eighteen; Benjamin Robinson, nineteen—a wife; George Atkinson, eleven; John Foster, twenty one; Robert Burtree, twenty-two; Thomas Liddle, thirty-two—wife and children; William Charlton, forty-one—wife and child; John Elliott, twenty; William Elliott, fourteen; Thomas Love, forty-eight—wife and two sons, Joseph Murdoch, twenty-three—wife; Robert Bird, thirteen; not found; Peter Peel, fifty—wife and daughter; Joseph Bainbridge, forty-one—wife and three children; Robert Ramshaw, eighteen; John Hills, forty-four—wife and five children; Robert Fairgrieve, thirteen; John Arrowsmith, twenty-four—wife and child; James Steward, sixty-seven—a wife; Mark Wood, thirty four—wife and six children; John Burdis, fifty nine—three children; Thomas Wailes, Alexander, son of the above, twenty-one; forty one—wife and son; William Waddle, thirty-two—wife and three children; John Cockburn, thirty two—wife and four children; George Cockburn, twenty-nine—wife and three children; George Wood, twenty-two; Cuthbert Bell, twenty six wife; James Cockburn, twenty-seven; Jacob Defty, forty-six—wife and six children. The witness stated that some of these bodies were found in a dreadfully mutilated state, which was the reason they received them when brought to the surface, and they were conveyed to the churchyard in carts belonging to the colliery. Some of the surviving relatives of each, joined in the melancholy procession, and, as usual in the colliery districts of the North of England, the Old Hundredth Psalm was sung on the way to the burial-ground. The scene was exceedingly solemn, and many deeply affected persons were present. The unfortunate men who had been found were recovered on Saturday night, and fifteen others were found on Sunday, all sadly mutilated by the explosion. Indeed, many were so much disfigured, that it was impossible to identify them. There have been thirty eight lives lost by this explosion; thirty-four in the Low main, and four in the Bensham seam, including Defty, the over man.

REPRESENTATION OF EAST SUSSEX.—Mr. Darby, who has been recently appointed an Inclosure Commissioner, intends to retire from Parliament. It is said that Mr. Gorringe, a gentleman of large property in the eastern part in the county and highly respected, a staunch Conservative, who, it is hoped, will come forward as a candidate to supply the vacancy about to be created. The Conservative party is sanguine that Mr. John Villiers Shelley, who had the stood, polled 995 votes against the 2,998 of the Conservative Candidate, has declared his intention to stand on the Liberal interest. The writ for East Sussex will be moved for immediately on the re-assembling of Parliament.

MR RICHARD OASTLER'S RAILWAY SPECULATIONS AT LEEDS.—A provincial paper says:—"We have heard, from authority on which we have pretty good reason to rely, that Richard Oastler has made upwards of £30,000 upon the Leeds Stock Exchange, by legitimate business as a sharebroker. That, having in every instance exhibited the strictest integrity, and on repeated occasions disappointed many persons who had employed him, because the amount of profits that have been generally retained by the broker, but to which Mr. Oastler did not consider himself honest, y entitled, his fame spread as a faithful dealer and honourable man, and his business increased accordingly. Once, we are told, he saved to a speculator three or four thousand pounds, which, by the custom of the trade, might have gone into the broker's pocket. To crown all, we are assured that Mr. Oastler contemplates entering Parliament"

ELECTION CHANGES.—It is rumoured that it is the intention of W. H. Stanley, Esq., to retire from the representation of Stroud, and that George Paul, Esq., will be nominated to fill the vacancy. It is also said that the representation of Tewkesbury is to be contested by a Liberal candidate on the first vacancy

THE MINING DISTRICTS OF WORCESTERSHIRE AND STAFFORDSHIRE —The mining districts of the north of Worcestershire and Staffordshire are at present in a state of great excitement. At a meeting of the coal and iron masters at the Talbot Hotel, Stourbridge, last week, it was determined to blow out twenty furnaces, preliminary to a general resistance being made to the demands of the men. Other meetings have very lately been held at Stourbridge and Birmingham, but several of the masters have given the men the advance, contrary to the resolution come to amongst themselves last week; but there is every probability that the colliers and puddlers will resume their work at the old prices. The chair makers of Stourbridge have also resolved on forming a trades' union, and their meetings have been attended by delegates from the stone-masons, wire drawers, and file cutters. The gun-lock fliers of Darlaston have agreed that a general meeting of the whole trade be called, to adopt measures to ensure the prosperity of the trade, and also to put an end to the truck system.

WORCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.—This festival commenced on Tuesday under favourable auspices. Nearly nine hundred persons were present at the Cathedral, including many fashionables. The service was opened by Handel's grand concerto (No. 1), which was played through smoothly and with great precision. The "Dettingen Te Deum" was given with great effect. Dr Croten's anthem, "The Lord is King," followed. The anthem passed off in superb style, after which, the Rev. Canon Wood (chaplain to the Queen Dowager) ascended the pulpit, and preached an excellent sermon. The choirs were led by Lady Beauchamp, Lady Lechmere, Lady Darrell, Mrs. Pepys, Lady Key, Mrs. Pakington, Mrs. Holland, Miss Lechmere, Mrs. Rafford, Mrs. J. W. Isaac, Miss Vernon, Miss King, and Mr. G. H. Clifton, supported by the stewards. The sum collected was £261 13s. 6d. The first concert was given on Tuesday night, at the fine old hall of the College, the ancient refectory of the monks. The company numbered at least six or seven hundred, including the élite of the city and county. Handel's "Acis and Galatea" formed the principal feature of the evening. On Wednesday, the performance at the Cathedral consisted of a chronological selection of anthems, and Spohr's great oratorio of "The Last Judgment;" the anthems were by various composers. The collection at the doors in the morning amounted to £231 16s. 9d.

A SNOW STORM IN AUGUST.—On Wednesday week, about one o'clock, the town of Framlingham, Suffolk, was visited with a snow storm, which lasted about ten minutes, with intervals

DREADFUL ACCIDENT AT BLACKBURN.—On Sunday afternoon last the tall chimney at the Throstle nest Cotton Mill, Blackburn, fell to the ground, burying in the ruins a number of children and women in the street below. Several persons standing at their own doors were injured in a serious manner. A mother, seeing the chimney "topple," ran out, and had time to save her child; but, with a strange impulse, ran herself into the road, and was cover d by the ruins. The weight of the bricks, &c., broke in the boiler-house and destroyed the steam-pipes and the connecting machinery between the boiler and the engine. Immediately after the accident, Mr. Sheppard, the superintendent of police, was upon the spot, and hundreds of persons rendered their assistance, under his direction, to remove the rubbish. Six per sons were taken out of the ruins, viz., J. Ainsworth; Alice, his wife, who died on Monday morning; H. Ainsworth, their son, aged seven years, not expected to live. Nancy Ware, Ellen Whittle, and John Bolton. Several others were injured, but in a less degree. On Tuesday an inquest was held at the Turners' Arms, Bank Top, before Mr. Hargreaves, Coroner, to inquire into the death of J. Ainsworth, and was adjourned.

SCOTLAND.

SERIOUS RIOTS.

There have recently been rather serious local riots in Scotland, requiring the despatch of troops from Edinburgh in two different directions, viz., to Berwickshire and to Dunfermline. In the first instance, disturbances were threatened by the labourers engaged on the North British Railway in the vicinity of Cockburnspath. The periodical pay day had come to be the regular prelude to riot and confusion with this class—a disposition influenced by no cause save sheer profligacy, for they were earning excellent wages. Formidable by their numbers and their recklessness, the surrounding inhabitants became alarmed both for person and property when these hordes were let loose maddened with liquor. With the view of checking these scenes of violence and insubordination, the contractors had taken the spirited resolution of dismissing several hundred men, and replacing them by a more peaceable, better disposed class of labourers. Those about to be proscribed, accordingly, threatened vengeance against their employers and all who came in the way. This outbreak was, however, averted by the local authorities securing the aid of a company of dragoons, the contractors were thus enabled to carry their resolution into effect, and this rude, un civilised class were shown that their physical force came to be of very little avail when arrayed against the law.

The riots at Dunfermline have been, we regret to say, of a far more alarming character. They have arisen out of the ever-recurring contention be tween the employers and the employed, but have been marked by a degree of boldness and atrocity that has scarcely been paralleled in Scotland, or in England either. It appears that the manufacturing population of Dunfermline conceived a grudge against a Mr. Alexander, an extensive manufacturer, on the allegation that he had not adhered to the table of prices agreed to by the other manufacturers in 1843. This feeling at last ended in a design to take signal vengeance on this individual, by the destruction of his property, if not of himself. So secretly had the plot been concocted, that on Wednesday evening week, when the rioters assembled in a great multitude in the streets, being called forth by a drum, the magistrates and the respectable inhabitants had not the most remote suspicion of anything being in agitation. They, however, sallied forth to endeavour to disperse the mob, but the worthy chief magistrate, who appears to be a man of considerable intrepidity, was knocked down, and carried bleeding from the ground. An attack was then made upon the premises of Mr. Alexander, and as much destruction effected as the time would admit of, for it appeared that the rioters had a farther scheme of vengeance to be put in execution on the same night. Mr. Alexander had a residence about three and a h f miles from Dunfermline, where he was at the time with his family. It was resolved to burn the house to the ground! Thither, accordingly, the rioters repaired in the most deliberate, determined manner, marching three deep, and in profound silence, until they neared the spot, when, by a well-concerted movement, they so divided that the premises were surrounded ere the inmates were aware of the presence of this ruffianly crew. The result was, that Mrs. Alexander and her children, in their night attire, were suffered to escape from their dwelling after it had been fired, and had to flee across the fields. Mr. Alexander, the intended victim of their vengeance, had secretly sought refuge on the top of the dwelling, and thus eluded a contact with the rioters, which in all probability would have been fatal to him; from this state of perilous suspense this gentleman was rescued after being nearly suffocated with smoke, for the rioters left the place in the idea that the whole building was surely committed to the flames.

On Thursday evening great numbers of persons were seen in the streets, but they were soon dispersed by the police. It was rumoured that an attack was meditated on the property of some individuals in the employment of the Messrs. Alexander. However, the exertions of the police were such as to prevent any assembling, and Dunfermline since the riot has remained perfectly tranquil.

On Thursday forenoon Mr. and Mrs. James Alexander and their family crossed to Edinburgh

From the details given it is impossible to come to any other conclusion than that there is in the town of Dunfermline a regular band of conspirators, organised and disciplined with watchwords and signals, bound together under obligations of secrecy, and with hearts to conceive and hands to execute any enormities, however atrocious

There are other circumstances which will in future make military protection still more indispensably necessary than it is at present. In addition to the current population of Dunfermline, and the contiguous manufacturers of Crossgates, Halbeath, and Hell's Kitchen, and the numerous colleries around Dunfermline there is the prospect of a new village of 2000 or 3000 inhabitants, arising at once at the great iron works about to be opened at Oakley; and between this new population and the strangers whom the demand for railway labourers will bring into Fife, it is to be feared that the prevalence of peaceful and moral habits, and of good order and security to person and property, will not be in proportion to the increase of the census.

VISITORS TO THE HIGHLANDS.—A letter from a correspondent at Oban, dated AUG. 22, says.—"Never has there been so great a number of visitors to the Highlands as during this summer, and the number of persons who have visited Staffa and Iona exceeds that of any previous year. A splendid new steamer, the Dolphin, takes them from Oban on Wednesdays and Saturdays, leaving at six in the morning, and giving the passengers a sufficient time at Staffa and Iona to see both, gets back about five in the afternoon. Although there had been very little warm or sunny weather, there has not been much rain. The crops look remarkably well—the potatoes and turnips very abundant. For the last few days there have been gales from the S. W., and heavy rains, and the glass is very low. It is time that fine ripening weather should come, or the oat crops will suffer."

STORM AND LOSS OF LIFE.—The John O' Groat's Journal states that on Wednesday week there was a very heavy gale in the bay. Several boats hoisted their sails and bore away to the southward, but as one crow before a squall, in Sutherlandshire, was attempting to imitate the example, a heavy sea upset her not far from the harbour, and her hapless crew were thrown upon the mercy of wind and wave. As wave succeeded wave, many after man sunk, till four were buried in the waters. One poor fellow clung with surprising tenacity to the mast of the boat, afterwards to a plank, until a few humane individuals boldly manned a ship's boat, and at the imminent risk of their own lives, saved that of the remaining one of the hapless crew. While, however, they were returning with the man they had saved, a tremendous sea broke right over them, and threw the whole into the sea, a number of individuals immediately jumped over the quay, dashed forward into the waves, and assisted them in bringing the man ashore. By three o'clock, the sea had risen to a fearful height, and one by one, the boats that were riding at anchor were driven from their moorings, and upset. Out of about twenty that were riding at three o'clock, only three remained at seven. The scene at this period was truly affecting. Hundreds of people were standing on the beach, many of them seeing their property added to the general wreck. Wrecks of boats were floating over the bay in all directions—masts, spars, sails, oars, buoys, and nets, presented a sight of devastation, the like of which has never been witnessed on our northern shores. The number of the boats stranded and sunk in the bay, is seventeen, including one driven off the land. The value of property lost by each cannot. It is said, be less than £1000. Every fishing station along this coast, as far as Dunbeath, has been more or less visited, and at almost every few yards pieces of wreck are to be seen. Two lives were sacrificed at Whaligoe, six miles to the southward of Wick. Seven boats were driven to pieces, and the sloop Regina, Marwilliam, of the isle of Wh thorn, with 70 barrels of herrings, was totally lost at the same place. At Forse, out of 35 boats, 29 or 30 have been totally wrecked, with the whole of the fishing materials. At Clyth, a number of boats and two lives have also been lost.

WILL OF THE LATE LADY COWAN.—Lady Cowan, the widow and relict of the late Alderman Sir John Cowan, Bart., has by her will, made in 1844, bequeathed the whole of her estates, both real and personal, to her brother, John Mullett, Esq., of Brighton, for his absolute use, and appointed him sole executor. She executed a codicil the week before her death, leaving a legacy of £300 to Catherine, the daughter of Mr. Stevens, at the Bank of England. Why this exception, her brother takes the whole of her property. The personal estate sworn under £14,000. Her ladyship died on the 7th inst. at Forest-hill, Sydenham.

TORCH-LIGHT CONCERT AT MAYENCE.

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO GERMANY.

We resume our Illustrations of the Royal Route, with the Torchlight Concert played by the Austrian and Prussian bands, before the Hotel de l'Europe, at Mayence, her Majesty's head-quarters. This peculiarly effective scene was detailed at page 114 of our last week's Journal.

The next Engraving is, likewise, from Mayence, and was briefly referred to last week: it is a noble memorial to Gutemberg, the Inventor of Printing, or, at least, one of those to whom that invention is ascribed with the greatest probability—for there are many claimants of the honour.

The Statue is a colossal one, in bronze, cast by Crozatier, of Paris, from a model by Thorwaldsen. The pedestal is of marble, from the quarries of Lahn; the four faces bear bas-reliefs, in bronze; on the anterior one is the following inscription:—

JOANNEM GENSFLEISCH DE GUTEMBERG, PATRICIUM MOGUNTINUM.
AXEE PER TOTUM EUROPAM COLLATO
POSUERUNT CIVES,
MDCCCXXXVII.

"John Gensfleisch of Gutemberg, patrician of Mayence. The citizens of this city, aided by the contributions of all Europe, erected this statue, 1837."

On the opposite face are the following verses:

Artem, quæ Graecos latuit, latuit Latinos,
Germani solers extudit ingenium
Nunc, quidquid veteres sapiunt sapiuntque recentes
Non sibi, sed populis omnibus id sapiunt.

The Statue faces the theatre, and is on one of the best sites in Mayence. Gutemberg, for so he is called generally (his proper name, literally interpreted, is "Goosefiesh,") was born in 1398, in a house that yet exists at the corner of the street, called the Pfandhausgasse and Emmersangasse. That in which he worked his first presses bears the name of the "Hof zum Jungers," or the Farberhof. An inscription recalls the memory of the printer. Here he worked from 1448 to 1450. At a later period, his associates, Schoeffer and Faust, transferred their presses to a house called the Heinerhof, in the "street of the Shoemakers;" the dwelling is now called the House of the Three Kings.

STATUE OF GUTEMBERG, AT MAYENCE.

THE ROYAL PARTY CHANGING HORSES, DIE ZIEL, FRANKFURT.

We now present to our readers some interesting particulars of her Majesty's route to Coburg, from Mayence, gleaned from different sources.

After leaving the Hotel de l'Europe, at Mayence, about seven o'clock in the morning (of Monday, the 18th inst. (under a Royal salute), the Queen and suite proceeded in the Royal carriages to Frankfurt, where they only stopped to change horses, all ceremony being strictly dispensed with. Our Illustration shows this scene in the principal street (Zeil) of the New Town, where are many handsome houses, inhabited by rich merchants and bankers. We miss, however, the picturesque German costume, the dress at Frankfurt being similar to that worn in England.

In the adjoining page is engraved the House at Frankfurt in which resided Luther. It is a corner house in the Dom Platz, and is now converted into a grocer's shop; it is covered with slates, except the ground floor, and a short time before our artist made his sketch, the windows had been modernised. On one side of the doorway is a small square of wood, with a rudely-carved portrait of Luther.

The route taken by the Royal party is on the direct and shortest road to Vienna, although travellers generally prefer to make a detour, and go through Munich. On leaving Frankfort, the carriages proceeded through the flat, but not unprofitable, Hessian territory, to Seligenstadt, a distance of three German miles, where they changed horses: and between that place and the next stage—Aschaffenburg—the tall white posts, striped with light blue, introduced themselves to the notice of her Majesty as the representatives of the Bavarian kingdom, and in another quarter of an hour the four red towers of the King's palace at Aschaffenburg came in sight. After passing his Majesty's beautiful little villa of Schöne Busch, the carriages drove over the bridge which is thrown over the Maine at the entrance to the town, where her Majesty was received by a guard of honour of the Bavarian troops; and then the cortège drove on by the superb palace, which commands so noble and extensive a view of the yellow Maine, gliding tranquilly through the rich green valleys, and then on through the narrow, but clean streets of that quiet little town to the Post Haus, the inn where the relays of horses were waiting. Her Majesty alighted at the inn, and remained there for a quarter of an hour, but partook of no refreshment, except a glass of water. This was the first place at which her Majesty alighted since she left Mayence. The cortège consisted of six carriages and a fourgon, and as soon as the vehicles which brought up the rear guard had arrived at the inn, some members of the suite partook of some of the justly celebrated Bavarian beer; which, as many of our readers are aware, much resembles our India pale ale.

The Queen left Aschaffenburg at twelve o'clock, and went on at a rapid pace to Hessenthal, where a fresh relay of horses was in readiness. Between that place and the next stage, Essebach, the scenery is extremely beautiful

On leaving Essebach, the cortège proceeded through the rich woodlands down to the lovely valley, where the Maine flows embosomed among the hills At Langfort, where the road again crosses the Maine, there is no bridge, but a ferry, overlooked by the Castle of Count Liebenstein, once a nunnery. The view from and around this Castle is a very pretty specimen of river scenery. Here a special ferry-boat had been prepared for her Majesty's use, decorated with flags and flowers, and covered over from the air by a pavilion of tasteful construction. From Langfort to Hesseldach and Hesselthal, the road runs more or less within sight of the Main, of which some very beautiful views are obtained—those peaceful, swelling river views, with the dark purple mountains in the distance, which are to be met with in Germany in abundance. Where the road runs more inland, the scenery is in a high degree grand and romantic. Thick woods—crowning eminences that may almost be called mountains—ravines of awful, yet beautiful, aspect—towns embosomed in fertile valleys, and here and there a ruined tower crowning some height, and standing boldly out in the deep blue sky that arches the whole landscape—these succeed each other in ever changing variety and rich profusion.

The Royal carriage, with its precious freight, postilions, horses, and outriders (pioneers and all), were placed in the ferry-boat, whilst twelve Bavarian ferrymen, armed with long sticks, pushed the boat across the water to the opposite shore, where a bevy of Bavarian naiads, daughters of this aged stream, were gaping in astonishment at this unwonted spectacle

Again—"A boat! a boat! haste to the ferry!"—the lagging carriages, with the suite, have come up to the other bank, and find that their leader has crossed the Rubicon. The ferrymen having deposited our Queen upon terra firma, pushed back the boat to the other side, and thus the suite were landed They did not, however, come up with the Queen, who had already arrived at Rossbrun, and changed horses, and was instantly off for Wurrburg; and as her Majesty crossed the fine old bridge, with its quaint figures perched upon the stone pedestals, there was just sufficient light to see the towers of the fortung. Her Majesty was received at the fortified gates of the town by a guard of honour, headed by the King's third son, the Prince Luitpold of Bavaria, the King himself being at Munich, where he is unfortunately detained by important business, which prevents him from leaving his capital. His Majesty, however, deputed his son to receive our Sovereign, who was conducted to the King's splendid palace; and shortly after her arrival a sumptuous repast was served in the banqueting-hall of the fine baronial castle. In the evening the Queen received Lord Leveson, who has been staying here since Sunday, and also several Bavarian officers of distinction.

The entrance to Wurzburg is very striking. The road, which steals along the ridge of a high hill, but enclosed for some distance by high banks, suddenly breaks out and discloses the valley of the Maine, the river, now reduced to a somewhat shallow stream, stealing along at the foot of mountains on either side, and the fine old city of Wurzburg, with spires and towers in multitudes rising above its mass of houses; and the Palace of the King of Bavaria rising high on the right of the landscape, and looking down on the whole from the craggy eminence at the summit of which it is built. Our artist has sketched this interesting scene, with the quaint old bridge; the palace, with the Royal standard waving from one of its towers, and flags floating from various other edifices, to welcome the Royal visitors.

On Tuesday morning, (the 19th) at four o'clock, her Majesty left Wurzburg for Coburg. Although her Majesty paid but a flying visit to Wurzburg, she saw the Cathedral, the Julius Hospital, the Hofranger Church, &c.

The Royal party arrived at Coburg on Tuesday evening (the 19th), about half-past four. Immense crowds (comprising an extraordinary number of strangers) proceeded from Coburg in the direction of the Bamberg-road, in order to meet the Royal visitor. At that end of the town a magnificent triumphal arch had been raised, and profusely decked with evergreens and flowers, amidst which appeared the simple but significative word willkommen (welcome). From this arch to the town gate, a distance of nearly 300 yards, extended a row of garlands, attached at intervals to temporary posts, decked with streamers and covered with fir branches. The gate itself, a fine old piece of architecture, was decked out with English, Belgian, and Coburg flags and banners. From the tower of this gate, a magnificent view of the town and environs is obtained. An avenue of trees on the Bamberg side conceals the principal gate of Coburg in that direction until the road takes a gentle curve just opposite the Roman Catholic Church (a poor barn-like building, which, as well as the clergyman's residence, was, however, tastefully decorated with flags and evergreens), and at once opens a full view of the noble tower of the Cathedral, the city gates, the spires of two or three churches, and a very pretty tract of country on the right. On the left, just before entering the town, is a picturesque height, crowned by summer-houses and gardens, and immediately below it stand the noble mansions of Herr von Levenfells, of Herr von Lutz, of Herr von Paubel, and of Mr. Banner, an Englishman, who has been a resident of Coburg during the last two years. All these mansions displayed the English and Coburg flags and were very tastefully decorated, particularly the handsome dwelling of the last-named gentleman, which was ornamented with the richest and rarest flowers, with several gorgeous banners, with a transparency of the Royal Arms of England, and with the motto of "God save the Queen." This fine mansion attracted her Majesty's particular attention.

The Queen and Prince Albert entered the town, accompanied in the Royal carriage by the King and Queen of the Belgians, by the Duke of Saxe Coburg Gotha on horseback, and by all the authorities, and proceeded, amidst the thunder of the artillery in the fortress, up the Ketchen Strasse to the grand Market-place, one side of which is nearly occupied by the Town Hall, from the roof and windows of which about fifty flags were gaily flying. The Royal equipage and procession then proceeded, amidst the enthusiastic cheers of a dense crowd, and amidst the waving of hats and handkerchiefs from the thronged windows, to the Ducal Palace, which is apparently of modern construction, and which faces a magnificent square, nearly opposite the new theatre. After a short delay, and an affectionate interview with her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, the Queen and suite proceeded to the summer Palace of Rosenau, where Prince Albert was born, and which is situated about four miles from the town, on a delightful little eminence, sufficiently high to command a pleasing prospect, and sufficiently low to be sheltered by more commanding heights covered with shady trees. It is rather a small semi-castellated building, and is situated in a very pretty retired spot. A long alley of shady trees leads to it from one of the suburbs of Coburg, and just outside the private ground is a sort of tea-garden (a favourite place for the townspeople), in the house attached to which Colonel Wylde and some other of the Queen's suite were lodged.

THE QUEEN CROSSING THE MAINE, AT LANGFORT, BAVARIA.

LUTHER'S HOUSE, AT FRANKFURT.

The journey from Wurzburg to Coburg, except that the weather was not quite propitious, was not the least interesting part of the whole tour. There was much that was new in the scenery, the little incidents of the journey, and the picturesque costumes of the people. Bamberg, through which the route lay, was full of the inhabitants of the surrounding country, who gave the Queen a hearty reception during the few minutes she remained in the town. The distance from Bamberg to Coburg is about 38 miles, through a fertile and populous country. After passing Zapfendorf the road runs along the bank of the Maine—a river presenting, at some points, scenery scarcely inferior to that on Rhine—and passes Staffelberg—a hill of remarkable form and commanding aspect. On the other side of the road rises a height, on which stands the Palace of Prince Maximilian of Baravia, which was formerly the convent of Banz. Passing Lichtenfels—a town of some importance—the frontier of Bavaria and the Duchy of Saxe Coburg is soon reached.

As soon as her Majesty and Royal Consort entered the Coburg territory, near Lichtenfels, they were met by his Excellency Herr von Abramsleben, who congratulated the illustrious visitors in the name of his Serene Highness the Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha. In Obersiemau (where a triumphal arch was also erected) her Majesty was also addressed by the Head Minister of State ad interim, by the chief judges, the authorities of the Representative Chambers, and by other official personages, to whom a gracious answer was returned. A great number of peasantry had also assembled at the latter place, and they cheered most enthusiastically.

At Ketchendorf, where there is also a Ducal summer residence (situated about two miles from the town), the Royal visitors were met by the Reigning Duke and the King and Queen of the Belgians, and the interview was, as might be expected, a very affectionate one. His Serene Highness the Reigning Duke bears a strong resemblance to his Royal brother, Prince Albert, and is aged about twenty-eight. At the last-named place, the two Queens and their Royal husbands entered an open carriage, preceded by the Master of the Horse, the Post-office authorities, twelve postillions, and the Ducal huntsmen in brilliant costumes. The Reigning Duke rode alongside of the Royal carriage, closely followed by his military staff.

Our artist has engraved the highly-picturesque scene of the entrée of her Majesty and suite, upon the front page of our present Number

As soon as the Queen of England reached the triumphal arch, before the principal gate of the town already referred to, she was received by Court-Councillor Bergner, and briefly addressed by him in the name of all the citizens. This gentleman was accompanied by all the local authorities, by several deputies from the various trades, and by a number of handsome young females selected for the occasion, two of whom presented a poem to her Majesty, in commemoration of her auspicious visit. On their arrival at the Market-place, her Britannic Majesty, the Royal Consort, and Queen of the Belgians, and Prince Albert, were warmly congratulated by the Court chaplains, and the Protestant and Catholic clergy of the town.

The engraving at page 136, shows the Government House, with its gay floral decorations. Upon the opposite page is engraved Ehrenburg, the town palace of the Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha.

On Wednesday afternoon, the Queen, Prince Albert, the Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, the King of the Belgians, Lord Aberdeen (who looks very well), and others of the Royal suite, visited the fortress, which is constructed on a hill overlooking the town. This fortress, poetically designated the Crown of Francosia, is very ancient—its origin being traced by Höhn, the Coburg chronicler, to the fourth century. It is a very extensive pile, discernible at a great distance, from the evergreen mountain woods of Thuringia, from the river Rams, and from the valley of the Itz, and possesses numerous bastions, watch-towers, balconies, and walled-in terraces. Within it are establishments of a penal and charitable nature.

In the evening the Royal guests and the Ducal Court visited the theatre, which

(Continued on page 136.)

WURZBURG,—THE ROYAL PALACE.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

We have received several Sketches from our Artists at Coburg, though not in time for engraving in our present Number, with due regard to the picturesque beauty, and interesting character of the subjects. They will, therefore, appear next week, with several Views in the Duchy of Gotha, &c. &c.

We have the satisfaction to learn from our Correspondent, that Her Majesty and the Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha have been pleased to express their entire approbation of the accuracy of the Illustrations of the Royal Tour and Visit which have already appeared in our Journal. This gratifying communication has been made to our Correspondent by the courtesy of Mr. G. E. Anson, Private Secretary to His Royal Highness Prince Albert.

We are enabled to add, that no other Artists, besides those connected with our Journal, have been present on the occasion.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK

Sunday, August 31.—15th Sunday after Trinity.—St. Sebastian taken, 1813
Monday, September 1.—St. Giles—Partridge Shooting begins.
Tuesday, 2.—Great Fire of London, 1666, O. S.—Holiday at Bank, Customs, and Excise.
Wednesday, 3.—Cromwell died, 1658.
Thursday, 4.—Disturbances at Oxford, 1830.
Friday, 5.—Old St. Bartholomew—Bishop Bonner died, 1569.
Saturday, 6.—Shakspeare's Jubilee at Stratford, 1769.

High Water at London-bridge, for the Week ending September 6.

Monday.		Tuesday.		Wednesday.		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday.
M. h. m.	A. h. m.	M. h. m.	A. h. m.	M. h. m.	A. h. m.	M. h. m.	A. h. m.	M. h. m.	A. h. m.	M. h. m.	A. h. m.
1 49	2 2	2 38	2 50	3 25	3 37	4 11	4 22	4 55	5 6	5 39	5 51

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"T. P."—Southampton.—The "Grand Dictionnaire," by Professors Fleming and Tebbins, is published in two large quarto volumes, price 30*s. each; printed by Didot Frères, in Paris, and to be had, by order, of any London bookseller.*

"W. H.," King street, Covent-garden.—Marriages are solemnized according to the rites of the Church of England, after the publication of banns; by license, that is, dispensation from the obligation to publish banns, and by special license, to marry at any convenient time or place. Marriages may also be solemnized on production of the registrar's certificate, under the provisions of 6 and 7 William IV., c. 85, in like manner as after publication of banns.

"J. X. W.," Somers-town.—If there be neither agreement nor will in twss, H will not be liable.

"E. B. N.," Sunderland, will perceive, on reference, that in our Vol. 2, in place of folio 81 is misprinted 91, and 136 instead of 146. All the back numbers are in print.

"J. B.," Manchester, had better take the advice of the "two respectable attorneys."

"C. S. P."—We have not room.

"W. L."—"Hood's Magazine" is continued, assuredly, under the editorship of Mr. C. Rowcroft. Mr. C. Kean is on his passage to the United States.

"Fen."—We cannot clear up the doubts of our correspondent.

"S. T.," Boston.—"Upwards of 3000" is synonymous with over, above, or more than, 3000, though near that number.

"Seaford" should consult the "Oxford and Cambridge University Calendars."

"Lewisian."—Certainly not.

"Clotilda."—The Church Missionary Society is under the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and its operations are very very extensive and beneficial. In 1843-3 there was collected for the purpose of £115,000, a sum "unprecedented as a contribution within a single year in the history of any other Protestant religious society."

"L. A. A.," Walthamstow.—A navy agent would, probably, give the required information.

"A. C. B."—The Limes or "Supplication," though excellent in feeling, have not sufficient poetical merit for our columns.

"Sam Snap," Dublin.—The "Illustrated New Testament" is in active preparation.

"A New Subscriber," Stamford, should apply to an intelligent music seller.

"W. H. B.," Bungay.—Address Mr. Hastings, Publisher, Carey-street, Lincoln's inn.

"A Subscriber" —The charge of 6*d. each for our Census Supplements, and for other supplements, not stated to be "gratis," is correct.*

"X. Y. Z."—The entire expense of obtaining a grant of arms is £77 10*s. The Kings of Arms would grant the arms of a lord at a less sum, but are averse to any emigns already legalized, or, at all events, they would add but a trifling difference.*

"Chevron."—*The motto of the Tighe family (one of the first respectability in Ireland, is "Summum nec metuam diem nec aptem." The literal translation—"May I neither fear nor desire the last day."

"J. M'N.," Lunerick.—Whenever the rank of Lieutenant is prefixed to the names of masters or mates in the navy it must be simply by courtesy, as no master or mate has a lieutenant's commission.

"A. B. Z." Chester.—"The Encyclopædia of Agriculture," published by Messrs. Longman and Co., is a copious and accredited work.

"L. L. Q.," Dowlais.—A servant cannot be considered as an apprentice, unless he has signed an indenture.

"A Salop Subscriber."—The Treatise on Vegetable Physiology, in the "Library of Useful Knowledge," is a sound work. The centre arch of London Bridge is 152 feet span. Our correspondent is thanked for his good intentions.

"Tiro" "Taxidermy" (Longman,) is a complete work of its class

"M.," Islington.—"I Compose to Learn" and "Figure as of Euclid," by the Rev. J. Edwards, King's College, London, published by Parker, West Strand.

"M. B.," Southampton.—Pic-nic, or more properly Pique nique (French), is a repast, towards the expense of which each partaker pays his share.

"G. A. W."—We consider the refusal to be unjustifiable.

"H. A. S.," Sheffield.—"First Lessons in Astronomy and in Botany." (Parker, West Strand.)

"St. Helens."—We are not cognizant of the "solidity" of the establishment in question.

"An Aspirant," Spilsby.—"Tomlinson's Amusements in Chess," lately published

"A Constant Reader."—In the Instructions for the Order of the Administration of the Holy Communion, in the "Prayer Book," it is enjoined that intending communicants should signify their names, at least, "some time the day before."

"An Old Subscriber."—"If A. and B jointly take a house on lease, and, before it expires, A. wishes to leave the same, he can only get quit of the responsibility by the consent of the landlord and the remaining tenant, B.

"R. S.," Newcastle.—The Governor-General of Canada, Nova Scotia, &c., is Lord Metcalfe.

"C. B."—We do not understand the question as to the laws of Backgammon.

"P. L."—Barley, in the eighth edition of his "Dictionary," gives the derivation of Lukewarm, Luw, Teut Warmish, and Warm. Ash states the derivation to be uncertain.

"K. H.," Tenterden.—The term "normal" formerly meant simply perpendicular. (See the Dictionaries of Bailey, Martin, and Ash.) It is now generally used to mean a perpendicular drawn to the tangent line of a curve, or the tangent plane of a surface. The word has been used by the educationists of the day in another sense: thus, normal education is the training of schoolmasters.

"A.," Hampshire,—is thanked for his "critique" on our explanation of the Printers' Weigh goose, taken from "Savage's Dictionary of Printing." On referring to "Bailey's Dictionary," eighth edition, 1737, we find it explained, "an entertainment given to journeymen at the beginning of winter," which period corresponds better with the season of the wuyp-goose, or stubble goose. The time of such feasts has, however, since Bailey's time, been changed to June and July.

"C. M. P."—The Tuscan coin of two crazie is about equal to five farthings English.

"Locomotive," and "F. P.," Selborne, are thanked for their communication of suggestions for the prevention of railway accidents; which, however, we have not space for in our crowded columns.

"D. C.," Fobenham.—We thank our correspondent for his suggestion, but there seems to be some doubt about the authenticity of the statement to which he alludes.

"We have not room for the" "Lines by M. W. C.," or the "Song by P. L."

"Z. X."—The copyright in question has been presented to the publication for cheap re-issue. The second question may be answered in the negative.

"A Subscriber," Wednesbury.—The omission referred to has not been engraved in our journal.

"A Subscriber from the First."—Tools for engraving on wood may be purchased of Mr. Buck, or Mr. Fenn, Newgate-street.

"Eda" is thanked for the suggestion, but original subjects are too abundant.

"H. W. D."—Next week

"X. Y. Z."—"Linen," unlegible.

"A Constant Reader" is recommended to consult the "Post Office Directory" for the information as to the American packets, postage &c.

"A. Z."—A will in the hand-writing of the testator, if properly attested, will be valid.

"A. B.," Exeter—Baretti's "Italian and English Dictionary" is a standard work.

"An Original Subscriber," Gloucester. The Carlsbad waters are considered efficacious in the removal of chronic complaints in the liver and kidneys.

"Three Sweet Readers" may find some information on the mean duration of life in our edition of the Census of 1841.

"A Pawnbroker," Liverpool.—Our Journal is published in Parts, as usual, and back Numbers may be had, by order, of any bookseller.

"G. H."—"Dr. Lindley's School Botany" is a standard work; as are also "The Naturalist's Library" and "Mrs. Lee's Elements of Natural History."

"S." and "H "—The King of Hanover and the Duke of Cambridge.

"H. G."—"Hewitt's Rural and Social Life of Germany," probably, gives some details of its schools.

"J. R.," Wigton.—The name of Cerito is pronounced Cherryto.

"A Constant Reader."—Carlotta Grisi, the dancseuse, and Ernesta Grisi, the contralto, are both cousins of Gisita Grisi.

"An Inhabitant of Hastings."—We think not.

"W. F. M. R."—Under consideration.

Irreligible.—"Lines to Sybil;" "The Dream, by J. G.;" "A Father's Thoughts;" "The Toast;" &c.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 30, 1845.

Of all the various and useful institutions which the people of the British Empire enjoy, there is not one which is more in accordance with common sense, more conducive to security of the person, and more consonant with the true interests of society generally, than that of the "Coroner's Inquest." Hitherto, the investigations of the Coroner's Court have been confined to fatal disasters affecting the person of the subject; and the experience of all who have paid attention to the working of the system, will, we have no doubt, bear us out in the statement that those inquiries are usually attended with the most advantageous results to the public weal. It is not necessary to enlarge upon these; they are self-evident, and do not require to be specially indicated. Our object, then, in referring to the subject on the present occasion, is not to dilate upon the manifest and admitted benefits that flow from the system, but to direct public attention to an application of the principle of the "Crowner's 'Quest" which has been recently made in the City of London; and which, developing as it does the advantages of that system, ought, we would suggest, to be adopted universally throughout the empire.

The loss of property by fire, it will be freely admitted, is just as fit a subject for immediate investigation, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the calamity was caused by accident or design, as sudden loss of life; and we are only surprised that the idea did not occur before to some of the intelligent Coroners in our large towns, particularly as our criminal code takes especial cognizance of the crime of malicious burning, under the name of arson; and, also, as it was the Coroner's practice, in the olden time—according to the learned gentleman to whose proceeding we advert in the present instance, and to whom we gladly acknowledge ourselves indebted for the information—to inquire into all burnings that occurred in his district. This "good old practice," however, is now revived, and we trust it will not again be suffered to fall into disuse. The occasion to which we refer is the inquest held by Mr. W. Payne, the City Coroner, in the course of last week, into the cause of the late extensive fire in Aldermanbury; and the observations of the learned gentleman, on entering upon the investigation, are so just, and so explanatory of the proceeding, that we give them as we find them reported in a morning paper:—

The Coroner, on taking his seat, said, he would take the liberty of stating, as the present was rather a novel proceeding, why he had called them together. Latterly, the number of fires in London had greatly increased, and, when they took into consideration that nothing was so fearful as fire, they would be of opinion, with him, that, when they had the power to inquire into the causes of such fires, nothing could be more important to the public at large than that the cause should be closely investigated. The ancient authorities showed, that in olden times it was the practice of the Coroner to inquire into all burnings within his district, and that power as I belonging to the Coroner, although fallen into desuetude, he thought they would be of opinion with him, that it was most important that it should again be brought into force. In Hume's "Mirror of Justice" the duties of the Coroner were clearly laid down, and among those duties the Coroner was to inquire of all burnings, whether they were caused by felony or mischance. If they were of opinion that they had been set on fire with a felonious intent, then it was their duty to inquire and ascertain who the party was who was guilty of that felony. It was clear, therefore, in the olden time, that part of the Coroner's duty was to inquire into all burnings; and he need not say how necessary it was to revive it at the present time. No one had the power to inquire into the causes of a fire—not even a magistrate, unless a party was in custody charged with causing it. The persons living in the neighbourhood of a fire were always most anxious to know how it occurred, and he thought the public would think that he had one no more than his duty in causing a jury to be summoned to inquire into the circumstances of the late fire, who also might, by any suggestion thrown out, prevent, in a great measure, fires being so numerous. He had directed a number of persons to be summoned to give evidence as to the cause of the recent fire in Aldermanbury, so that they might come to a proper verdict, whether it was caused by accident or otherwise.

The report further goes on to state that "after a most patient investigation into all the circumstances of the case, the Jury returned a verdict that 'The fire was caused by accident.' " Here, then, a precedent is established; and if the public are alive to their own interest, they will take care that it shall be acted upon in future. The frequent occurrence of destructive and extensive fires in many of the principal towns of the United Kingdom, calls loudly for these investigations; and, for our own part, we cannot allow ourselves to doubt that if inquests had immediately followed upon the earlier fires, which within the last few years have destroyed so vast an amount of property—in Liverpool, for instance—many of the recent instances of burning which have taken place in that town would not have occurred.

On a late occasion, we adverted to the disorders in Syria, occasioned by the cruel conduct of the semi-barbarous tribes of the Druses and Maronites towards each other; and pointed out the reasons why we deemed the Government of England was called upon by justice and humanity to interfere in the Ottoman rule of that distracted povince. Since then, accounts have reached this country from Constantinople, which indicate a state of matters respecting the "Syrian Question" at the Porte, that is far from promising a settlement of the evils to which that unhappy country is a prey. Renewed discussions and fresh proposals have taken place between the Representatives of the Great Powers and the Ottoman Ministers, and the only result which is said to be arrived at, is, the obstinate refusal on the part of the Porte to admit of a territorial division, for the purposes of Government, of Mount Lebanon, between the Druses and the Maronites. Thus, from some cause or other (we do not wish to impute guilt to any of the parties who have to deal with the question), the Turkish Government has been permitted to set at nought the only feasible arrangement which the most competent parties could devise for the pacification and good government of Syria; and our Ambassador, instead of being instructed to use the only argument that will prevail with the Divan—viz., a peremptory demand for the immediate execution of the plan of Government agreed to between the Five Powers and the Turkish authorities, is suffered to waste time in discussing fresh proposals, which lead to nothing. Of what avail is it that British ships and troops fought successfully for the restoration of Syria to Turkey, if that restoration brings with it a rule as bad in every respect as that of Mehemet Ali, whom we expelled? Why should we have interfered, if it was not to effect some good? Our conduct in the whole affair is unsatisfactory and inexplicable; and, as far as the Syrians themselves are concerned, is calculated to draw down their bitterest execrations on the British name.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

EGHAM RACES.—Tuesday.

Match of 50 sovs each, p p, catch weights, both aged, with a whip added by Sir Felix Booth, Bart.; two miles.—Mr. Greville's Trump received from Mr. Whitehurst's Eleanor.

The New and Old Windsor Stakes of 5 sovs each, with 20 added.

Lord Rosslyn's ch g Elemi, 4 yrs, 8st 4lb	..	.. (Mann)	1
Mr. Thompson's Anna Perenna, 4 yrs, 8st 4lb	..	..	2

The Gold Cup, of 120 sovs, by subscription of 10 sovs each.

Lord G. Bentinck's John o'Gaunt, aged	..	.. (H. Bell)	1
Lord Exeter's Wee Pet, 5 yrs	..	..	2

The Plate of 50 sovs, given by the Members for the Western Division of the County of Surrey, added to a Sweepstakes of 5 sovs each. Heats.

Lord Glamis's Satyr, 4 yrs	..	.. (H. Bell)	1
Sir S. Spry's Soldier, 5 yrs	..	..	2

The Runnymede Stakes of 5 sovs each, with 25 added.

Mr. S. Scott's Flatfish, 3 yrs	..	.. (Mann)	1
Mr. Woodfield's b c Velox, 3 yrs	..	..	2

WEDNESDAY.

Fashion was not wanting to give eclat to the "grand day," the following noblemen and gentlemen having honoured the ground with their presence:—The Earl of Suffield, Earl of Rosslyn, Lord George Bentinck, Lord James Fitzroy, Lord Glamis, Lord Paget, Count Batthyany, Sir Felix Booth, Bart., Hon. Francis Villiers, Hon C. Forester, Colonel Knox, Hon. Captain Boyle, Captain Martyn, Captain Bulkeley, Captain Bastard, Captain Vyse, Mr. Gregory, Mr. Jaques, besides many others eminent in the fashionable and sporting world.

The Egham Stakes of 5 sovs each, with 25 added. Heats.

Lord G. Bentinck's b h The Devil-to-Pay, (80 sovs) (W. Abdale)			1
Count Batthyany's g g Alice Grey	..	..	2
Mr. Death's Isleworth	..	..	3

The Surrey and Middlesex Stakes of 25 sovs each.

Count Batthyany's Furgnilla	..	.. (Chapple)	1
Mr. Coleman's The Devil among-the-Tailors	..	..	2
Mr. Ramsbottom's Pine-apple	..	..	3

The Amateur Stakes of 10 sovs each, with 25 added.

Count Batthyany's Master Stephen, 3 yrs	..	.. (Gwner)	1
Lord G. Bentinck's Coal Black Rose, 4 yrs	..	..	2
Lord Glamis ns Miss Robinson (late Crocus), 5 yrs	..	..	3

The Queen's Plate of 100 gs

Duke of Richmond's b f Pic Nic, 3 yrs	..	.. (W. Abdale)	1
Lord Exeter's Wee Pet, 5 yrs	..	..	2
Lord G. Bentinck's John o'Gaunt, aged	..	..	3

A Sweepstakes of 25 sovs each, catch weights. Gentlemen riders.

Mr. Greville's Trump, aged	..	.. (Mr. Rolt)	1
Mr. Greville's Strike-a-light, aged	..	..	2
Mr. Hesketh's Canteen, aged	..	..	3

The Fern-hill Stakes of 5 sovs each, with 20 added.

Mr. Brettle's b m Woodbine (b h), aged	..	.. (Lord Glamis	1
Mr. Whitehurst's Eleanor (b f), aged	..	..	2
Mr. Satt's br m Kiss-me-now, aged	..	..	3

TATTERSALL'S.

Monday.—The betting on the St. Leger was exceedingly brisk, and, looking at the odds produced, not less brisk than important. The York running, from the dreadful state of the ground, is calculated to lead one astray as to the actual merits of the horses, some of whom, we imagine, still show in more favourable colours at Doncaster; still looking at it on paper, and believing that Lord George Bentinck, who has become one of Miss Sarah's staunchest supporters, to be the best judge whether Miss Ellis was in her form or not, we must admit that the appearance of "Sarah" at first favourite, was perfectly "correct;" she has been backed to win a great stake. Weatherbit, as a natural result of Miss Ellis's defeat, fell back to 8 to 1 at the moment, but rallied this afternoon, and left off decidedly in good odour. The Baron, Middleham, and Due an Durres were also in favour, and a few fifties were laid out on Mentor, the Merry Monarch, and the Red Robin, but without giving us reason to expect that their supporters will have much the best of it as they would. Old England has no friends and Old Ireland very few; the Pacha, Wood Pigeon, and Fitz-Allen, are but in small demand, and Annandale none at all

AT LYNCH.				AT EPSOM.
4 to 1 agst	J. Day's lot (t)	15 to 1 agst	Red Robin	25 to 1 agst	Due an Durres
7 to 1	Ferris's lot (t)	16 to 1	—— Baron	40 to 1	—— Kedger (t)
7 to 2	—— Major Yarburgh's lot (t)	20 to 1	—— The Pacha	40 to 1	—— Connaught Ranger
5 to 1	—— Miss Sarah (t)	25 to 1	—— Gold Ireland	40 to 1	—— Idas (t)
8 to 1	—— Weatherbit (t)	25 to 1	—— Worthless	40 to 1	—— Annandale
10 to 1	—— Mentor	28 to 1	—— Middleham	50 to 1	—— Clear-the-Way
10 to 1	—— The Merry Monarch	30 to 1	—— Fitz-Allen (t)	1000 to 15	—— June (t)
13 to 1	—— Old England (t)	30 to 1	—— Wood Pigeon	1000 to 10	—— Chertsey (t)

DERBY.

1500 to 30 agst the Peri colt (t)

Thursday.—A glance at Monday's betting will show that the betting this afternoon had very little influence on the prices. It was extremely flat, the only horses in demand being the Baron, Middleham, Mentor, The Merry Monarch, and Due an Durras, the first two and the last in good quarters, the others only with small parties; and, with several resolute, well-informed opponents, an attempt was made to talk Clear-the-Way into the market, but the folks will not have him. We subjoin the average prices of most of the favourites, omitting such as were not mentioned at "quotenight."

ST. LEGER.
2 to 1 on the field		12 to 1	agst The Merry Monarch (t)	30 to 1	agst Mid Lothian (t)
3 to 1	agst Major Yarburgh's lot (t)	15 to 1	—— Red Robin	40 to 1	—— Idas
7 to 1	—— Ferris's lot (t)	18 to 1	—— Pantasa	45 to 1	—— Connaught Ranger
7 to 1	—— Miss Sarah (t)	20 to 1	—— Gold Ireland	66 to 1	—— Miss Whip cot (t)
8 to 1	—— Weatherbit	25 to 1	—— Old England	80 to 1	—— Chertsey
9 to 1	—— Mentor	25 to 1	—— Due an Durras	80 to 1	—— Clear-the-Way (t)

Wood Pigeon is declared not to start.

AQUATICS.

Royal Academy Boat Race.—The gentlemen of this highly respectable Club rowed a pair-oared race on Tuesday evening, from Battersea to Putney, for a pair of silver cups, which were won by Messrs. Atkinson and Woodcock.

The Oriel Club match occurred at about the same time, and nearly over the same course, the start being at Battersea, but the race extending to Hammersmith. The prize was a pair of gold oars, and was gained by Messrs. Dodd and Botterell

Richmond Royal Regatta.—Eighteen free watermen of Richmond contended on Tuesday for a purse of sovereigns, subscribed by the ladies and gentlemen residing in the vicinity. The match was in honour of Prince Albert's natal day, and the exceeding fineness of the weather, and the prospect of good sport, induced a very large assemblage of highly respectable persons both on the shore and river. The race was won by Richard Messam and Thomas Ellard.

Cowes Regatta.—On Saturday last, Earl Fitzhardinge gave a cup, which was contended for by the following yachts:—Capt. Claxton's (R.N.) Jet, 19 tons; Mr. Milner Gibson's Seaflower, 36 tons; Mr. Pendlebury's Ariel, 29 tons; Hon. Augustus Berkeley's St. Margaret, 31 tons. The course was from Cowes Roads, round the Bell Light to the Brambles, round the light ship off Cudlist, the Lepe-buoy, back to a flag-vessel in the Solent, and home. The Jet and Seaflower represented the true trade, and the Ariel and St. Margaret the wooden walls. It was a running race, the Seaflower giving thirteen minutes to the Ariel, eleven to the St. Margaret, and five to the Jet. The yachts arrived at the winning vessel in the following order.—Jet, 29 minutes after four o'clock; Seaflower, 36½ minutes after four; St. Margaret, 41 minutes after four; Ariel, 42 minutes after four; the Jet thus winning by 6¾ minutes, independent of the time allowed to the handicap. The noble giver of the cup accompanied the yachts in his own vessel, the Dragon, on board of which were Lords George and William Lennox, and Colonel Radcliffe, Esq. The Duke of Beaufort in the Intrepid, and the Marquis of Conyngham in the Flower of Yarrow, also accompanied the yachts.

Marazion Regatta.—There is to be a great regatta in the beautiful Bay of Coverack, under the patronage of Sir Charles and Colonel Trevelyan, M.P., Y.C., called the Marazion and Mount Bay Regatta, on Wednesday, the 3rd of September next, when there will be about a dozen prizes ran for. The first prize, a £, Trinder Cup, for a class of 30 gallons, and ran for by vessels not exceeding 40 tons, and four prizes of less value for lesser yachts. A fine chance for yachts of the south coast to visit the Bay and its beautiful Mount. There is also a purse of 10 guineas for six-oared gigs.

Deptford Regatta. A match, possessing the novelty of the competitors being very aged men, or at any rate far more advanced in years than those who are generally to be found on the list of wagermen, came off on Monday at Deptford, for a purse of sovereigns, given by the residents of the vicinity. The contest was in five heats, with six pairs of sculls, and was exceedingly attractive. The prize was gained by Joan Beal, aged fifty-four.

